Perhaps the whole of this fable, which represents Phaeton, son of Apollo, requesting to drive the chariot of his father (the horses and chariot of fire) for one day, was borrowed from the request of Elisha, to his spiritual father Elijah, whom he afterward saw borne away by a whirlwind, in a chariot of fire, drawn by fiery steeds.

Verse 11. Elijah went up—into heaven] He was truly translated; and the words here leave us no room to indulge the conjecture of Dr. Priestley, who supposes that, as "Enoch, (probably Moses) Elijah, and Christ, had no relation to any other world or planet, they are no doubt in this:" for we are told that Elijah went up into heaven; and we know, from the sure testimony of the Scripture, that our blessed Lord is at the right hand of the Majesty on high, ever living to make intercession for us.

Verse 12. The chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof.] The Chaldee translates these words thus: "My master, my master! who, by thy intercession, wert of more use to Israel than horses and chariots." This is probably the sense.

In the book of Ecclesiasticus, chap. xlviii. 1, &c. the fiery horses and chariot are considered as an emblem of that burning zeal which Elijah manifested in the whole of his ministry. "Then stood up Elijah the prophet as fire: and his word burned as a lamp," &c.

And rent them in two pieces.] As a sign of sorrow for having lost so good and glorious a master.

Verse 13. He took—the mantle] The same with which he had been called by Elijah to the prophetic office; and the same by which Elijah divided Jordan. His having the mantle, was a proof that he was invested with the authority and influence of his master.

Verse 14. Where is the LORD God of Elijah] The Vulgate gives a strange turn to this verse:—Et percussit aquas, et non sunt divisæ, et dixit, Ubi est Deus Eliæ etiam nunc? Percussitque aquas, et divisæ sunt hic et illuc. "And he smote the waters, but they did not divide: and he said, Where is the God of Elijah even now? And he struck the waters, and they were divided hither and thither." The act of striking the waters seems to be twice repeated in the verse, though we get rid of the second striking by rendering the second clause, when he also had smitten the waters: which has the same Hebrew words as the first, and which we translate, he smote the waters. The Vulgate supposes he smote once in vain, perhaps confiding too much in his own strength; and then, having invoked the God of Elijah, he succeeded. This distinction is not followed by any of the other versions; nor is the clause, et non sunt divisæ, "and they divided not," expressed by the Hebrew text.

Verse 15. The spirit of Elijah doth rest on Elisha] This was a natural conclusion, from seeing him with the mantle, and working the same miracle. This disposed them to yield the same obedience to him they had done to his master: and, in token of this, they went out to meet him, and bowed themselves to the ground before him.

Verse 16. Fifty strong men] Probably the same fifty which are mentioned, ver. 7. and who saw Elijah taken up in the whirlwind.

Cast him upon some mountain] Though they saw him taken up toward heaven, yet they thought it possible that the Spirit of the Lord might have descended with him, and left him on some remote mountain or valley.

Ye shall not send.] He knew that he was translated to heaven; and that, therefore, it would be useless.

Verse 17. Till he was ashamed] He saw they would not be satisfied unless they made the proposed search: he felt, therefore, that he could not, with any good grace, resist their importunity any longer.

Verse 19. The water is naught, and the ground barren.] The barrenness of the ground was the effect of the badness of the water.

Verse 21. And cast the salt in there] He cast in the salt at the place where the waters sprang out of the earth. Jarchi well observes here, "Salt is a thing which corrupts water; therefore, it is evident that this was a true miracle." What Elisha did on this occasion, getting the new cruise, and throwing in the salt, was only to make the miracle more conspicuous. If the salt could have had any natural tendency to render the water salubrious, it could have acted only for a short time, and only on that portion of the stream which now arose from the spring; and in a few moments its effects must have disappeared. But the miracle here was permanent: the death of men and 21 And he went forth unto the spring of the waters, and cast the salt in there, and said, Thus saith the LORD, I have healed these waters; there shall not be from thence any more death or barren land.

22 So the waters were healed unto this day, according to the saying of Elisha which he spake.

23 ¶ And he went up from thence unto Beth-el: and as he was going up by the way, there came forth little children out of the city, and mocked him, and said unto him, Go up, thou bald head: go up, thou bald head.

cattle, which had been occasioned by the insalubrity of the waters, ceased; the land was no longer barren; and the waters became permanently fit for all agricultural and domestic uses.

Verse 23. There came forth little children out of the city] These were probably the school of some celebrated teacher: but, under his instruction, they had neither learned piety nor good manners.

Go up, thou bald head: go up, thou bald head.] אלה קרא קרא אלה aleh kareach; aleh kareach. Does not this imply the grossest insult? Ascend, thou empty skull, to heaven, as it is pretended thy master did! This was blasphemy against God; and their punishment, for they were Bethelite idolaters, was only proportioned to their guilt. Elisha cursed them, i.e. pronounced a curse upon them, in the name of the Lord, בשם יהוה beshem Yehovah; by the name or authority of Jehovah. The spirit of their offence lies in their ridiculing a miracle of the Lord: the offence was against him, and he punished it. It was no petulant humour of the prophet that caused him to pronounce this curse; it was God alone: had it proceeded from a wrong disposition of the prophet, no miracle would have been wrought in order to gratify it.

"But was it not a cruel thing to destroy forty-two little children, who, in mere childishness, had simply called the prophet bare skull, or bald head?"

I answer, Elisha did not destroy them: he had no power by which he could bring two she-bears out of the wood to destroy them. It was evidently either accidental, or a divine judgment; and if a judgment, God must be the sole author of it. Elisha's curse must be only declaratory of what God was about to do.

See on chap. i. 10. "But then, as they were little children, they could scarcely be accountable for their conduct; and, consequently, it was cruelty to destroy them." If it was a judgment of God, it could not be cruel nor unjust; and I contend that the prophet had no power by which he could bring these she-bears to fall upon them. But were they little children? for here the strength of the objection lies. Now I suppose the objection means children from four to seven or eight years old; for so we use the word: but the original קטנים nearim kelanim, may mean young men, for קטן katan, signifies to be young, in opposition to old, and is so translated in various places in our Bible. And נער naâr, signifies not only a child, but a young man, a servant, or even a soldier, or one fit to go out to battle; and is so translated in a multitude of places in our common English version. I shall mention but a few, because they are sufficiently decisive: Isaac was called נער naâr, when twenty-eight years old, Gen. xxi. 5—12. And Joseph was so called when he was thirty-nine, Gen. xli. 12. Add to these 1 Kings xx. 14. And Ahab said, By whom? [shall the Assyrians be delivered into my hand] Thus saith the Lord, By the YOUNG MEN (נערי beni- arey, of the princes of the provinces.) That these were soldiers, probably militia, or a selection from the militia, which served as a body-guard to Ahab, the event sufficiently declares; and the persons that mocked Elisha were perfectly accountable for their conduct. But is it not possible that these forty-two were a set of unlucky young men, who had been employed in the wood, destroying the whelps of these same she-bears, who now pursued them, and tore them to pieces, for the injury they had done? We have already heard of the ferocity of a bear robbed of her whelps. See at the end of 2 Sam. chap. xvii.

The mention of SHE-BEARS gives some colour to the above conjecture; and, probably, at the time when these young fellows insulted the prophet, the bears might be tracing the footsteps of the murderers of their young; and thus came upon them in the midst of their insults; God's providence ordering these occurrences, so as to make this natural effect appear as a divine cause. If the conjecture be correct, the bears were prepared, by their loss, to execute the curse of the prophet; and God's justice guided them to the spot, to punish the iniquity that had been just committed.

The reign and idolatry of Jehoram, king of Israel, 1—3. Mesha, king of Moab, rebels against Israel, 4, 5. Jehoram, Jehoshaphat, and the king of Edom, join against the Moabites, and are brought into great distress for want of water, 6—10. The three kings go to Elisha to inquire of the Lord; who promises them water, and a complete victory, 11—19. Water comes the next morning, and fills the trenches which these kings had made in the valley, 20. The Moabites arm against them; and suppose, when they saw the sun shining upon the waters, which looked like blood, that the confederate kings had fallen out, and slay each other; and that they had nothing to do but take the spoil, 21—23. The Israelites attack, and completely rout them, beat down their cities, and mar their land, 24, 25. The king of Moab, having made an unsuccessful attack on the king of Edom, he takes his eldest son, and offers him for a burnt-offering upon the wall; and there is great indignation against Israel, 26, 27.

Verse 2. He put away the image of Baal] He abolished this worship; but he continued that of the calves at Dan and Beth-el.

Verse 4. Was a sheep-master] The original is נקד nokd, of which the Septuagint could make nothing; and therefore retained the Hebrew word wasad: but the Chaldee has מרי marie githey, "a sheep-master:" Aquila has ποιμαστρος, and Symmachus τρεφαν βοσκματα, all to the same sense. The original signifies one who marks or brands, probably from the marking of sheep. He fed many sheep, &c. and had them all marked in a particular way, in order to ascertain his property.

Verse 9. They fetched a compass of seven days] By taking a circuitous route, to go round the southern part of the Dead sea, they probably intended to surprise the Moabites: but, it appears, their journey was ill planned, as they at last got into a country in which it was impossible to obtain water; and they were brought, in consequence, to the utmost extremity.

Verse 10. The LORD hath called these three kings together] That is, this is a divine judgment: God has judicially blinded us, and permitted us to take this journey to our destruction.

Verse 11. Is there not here a prophet of the LORD] The kings of Judah still acknowledged the true God, and him only.

It is very likely that some such words were spoken on the occasion: but these are the only versions which make this addition.

who played on the harp. The rabbins, and many Christians, suppose that Elisha's mind was considerably irritated and grieved by the bad behaviour of the young men at Beth-el, and their tragical end; and by the presence of the idolatrous king of Israel; and, therefore, called for divine psalmody, that it might calm his spirits, and render him more susceptible of the prophetic influence. To be able to discern the voice of God, and the operation of his hand, it is necessary that the mind be calm, and the passions all in harmony, under the direction of reason; that reason may be under the influence of the divine spirit.

The hand of the LORD came upon him.] The playing of the harper had the desired effect: his mind was calmed, and the power of God descended upon him. This effect of music was generally acknowledged in every civilized nation. Cicero, in his Tusculan Questions, lib. iv. says, that "The Pythagoreans were accustomed to calm their minds, and sooth their passions, by singing and playing upon the harp." Pythagoræi mentes suas a cogitationum intentione, cantu, fidibusque ad tranquillitatem trahebant. I have spoken elsewhere of the heathen priests who endeavoured to imitate the true prophets; and were as actually filled with the devil, as the others were with the true God. The former were thrown into violent agitations and contortions by the influence of the demons which possessed them; while the latter were in a state of the utmost serenity and composure.

Verse 16. Make this valley full of ditches.] The word נַחַל nachal, may be translated brook; as it is by the Vulgate and Septuagint. There probably was a river here, but it was now dry; and the prophet desires that they would enlarge the channel, and cut out various canals from it, and reservoirs, where water might be collected for the refreshment of the army, and of the cattle: and these were to be wide enough that the reflection of the sun's rays off this water might be the means of confounding and destroying the Moabites.

Verse 17. Ye shall not see wind] There shall be no wind to collect vapours, and there shall be no showers; and yet the whole bed of this river, and all the new-made canals, shall be filled with water.

Verse 19. Shall fell every good tree] Every tree by which your enemies may serve themselves for fortifications, &c. But surely fruit trees are not intended here: for this was positively against the law of God, Deut. xx. 19, 20. When thou shalt besiege a city—thou shalt not destroy the trees thereof—for the tree of the field is man's life—only the trees which thou knowest that they be not trees for meat thou shalt destroy and cut them down.

Stop all wells of water] In those hot countries this would lead sooner than any thing else to reduce an enemy.

Mar every good piece of land with stones.] Such a multitude of men, each throwing a stone on a good field as they passed, would completely destroy it.

on the other side as red as blood:

23 And they said, This ^{is} blood: the kings are surely slain, and they have smitten one another: now, therefore, Moab, to the spoil.

25 And they beat down the cities, and on every good piece of land cast every man his stone, and filled it; and they stopped all the wells of water, and felled all the good trees: ^zonly in ^aKir-haraseth left they the stones thereof; howbeit the slingers went about it, and smote it.

26 ¶ And when the king of Moab saw that the battle was too sore for him, he took with him seven hundred men that drew swords, to break through even unto the king of Edom: but they could not.

Verse 22. Saw the water on the other side as red as blood] This might have been an optical deception; I have seen the like sight when there was no reason to suspect supernatural agency. The Moabites had never seen that valley full of water, and therefore did not suspect that their eyes deceived them, but took it for the blood of the confederate hosts, who they thought might have fallen into confusion in the darkness of night, and destroyed each other, as the Midianites had formerly done, Judges vii. 22; and the Philistines lately, 1 Kings xiv. 22.

Verse 23. Therefore, Moab, to the spoil.] Thus they came on in a disorderly manner, and fell an easy prey to their enemies.

Verse 25. On every good piece of land] On all cultivated ground; and especially fields that were sown.

Only in Kir-haraseth] This was the royal city of the Moabites; and, as we learn from Scripture, exceedingly strong; see Isa. xvi. 7, 11: so that it is probable the confederate armies could not easily reduce it. The slingers, we are informed, went about the wall, and smote all the men that appeared on it: while, no doubt, the besieging army was employed in sapping the foundations.

Verse 26. Seven hundred men] These were, no doubt, the choice of all his troops; and, being afraid of being hemmed up, and perhaps taken by his enemies, whom he found on the eve of gaining possession of the city, he made a desperate sortie, in order to regain the open country; and, supposing that the quarter of the Edomites was weakest, or less carefully guarded, he endeavoured to make his impression there; but they were so warmly received by the king of Edom, that they failed in the attempt, and were driven back into the city. Hence he was led to that desperate act mentioned in the following verse.

Verse 27. Took his eldest son.] The rabbins account for this horrible sacrifice in the following way:

When the king of Moab found himself so harassed, and the royal city on the point of being taken, he called a council of his servants, and asked them how it was these Israelites could perform such prodigies, and that such miracles were wrought for them? His servants answered, that it was owing to their progenitor Abraham, who, having an only son, he was demanded by Jehovah as a sacrifice. Abraham instantly obeyed, and offered his only son for a burnt-offering: the Israelites, being his descendants, through his merits, the holy blessed God wrought such miracles in their behalf. The king of Moab answered, I also have an only son; and I will go and offer him to my god. Then he offered him for a burnt-offering upon the wall.

Upon the wall.] על החמה al ha-chamah. Rab. Sol. Jarchi says, that the letter vau is wanting in this word, as it should be written חומה chamah, to signify a wall:—but חמה chamah, signifies the sun, and this was the god of the king of Moab: “And he offered his first-born son for a burnt-offering unto the sun.” This is not very solid.

There was great indignation.] The Lord was displeased with them for driving things to such an extremity; or the surrounding nations held them in abomination on the account; and they were so terrified themselves at this most horrid sacrifice, that they immediately raised the siege, and departed. In cases of great extremity it was customary, in various heathen nations, to offer human sacrifices, or to devote to the infernal gods the most precious or excellent thing or person they possessed. This was frequent among the Phœnicians, Romans, and Greeks: and it was the natural fruit of a religious system, which had for the objects of its worship cruel and merciless divinities. How different the Christian system: Wilt thou that we shall bring down fire from heaven and destroy them? Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of; the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them.

Verse 1. Now there cried a certain woman.] This woman, according to the Chaldee, Jarchi, and the rabbins, was the wife of Obadiah.

Sons of the prophets.] תלמידי נביאי talmidey nebiyaa, “disciples of the prophets:” so the Targum here, and in all other places where the words occur; and properly too.

The creditor is come.] This, says Jarchi, was Jehoram, son of Ahab, who lent money on usury to Obadiah, because he had, in the days of Ahab, fed the Lord's prophets. The Targum says, he borrowed money to feed these prophets, because he would not support them out of the property of Ahab.

To take unto him my two sons to be bondmen.] Children, according to the laws of the Hebrews, were considered the property of their parents, who had a right to dispose of them for the payment of their debts. And, in cases of poverty, the law permitted them, expressly, to sell both themselves and their children, Exod. xxi. 7. and Lev. xxv. 39. It was by an extension of this law, and by virtue of another, which authorized them to sell the thief who could not make restitution, (Exod. xxii. 3,) that creditors were permitted to take the children of their debtors in payment. Although the law has not determined any thing precisely on this point; we see by this passage, and by several others, that this custom was common among the Hebrews. Isaiah refers to it very evidently, where he says, Which of my creditors is it, to whom I have sold you? Behold, for your iniquities ye have sold yourselves, chap. l. 1. And our Lord alludes to it, Matt. xviii. 25. where he mentions the case of an insolvent debtor, Forasmuch as he had not to pay, his lord commanded him to be sold, and his wife, and his children, and all that he had; which shows that the custom continued among the Jews to the very end of their republic. The Romans, Athenians, and Asiatics, in general, had the same authority over their children as the Hebrews had: they sold them in time of poverty; and their creditors seized them as they would a sheep or an ox, or 3 Then he said, Go, borrow thee vessels abroad of all thy neighbours, even empty vessels; ^c borrow not a few.

4 And when thou art come in, thou shalt shut the door upon thee and upon thy sons, and shalt pour out into all those vessels, and thou shalt set aside that which is full.

5 So she went from him, and shut the door upon her and upon her sons, who brought the vessels to her; and she poured out.

6 And it came to pass, when the vessels were full, that she said unto her any household goods. Romulus gave the Romans an absolute power over their children, which extended through the whole course of their lives, let them be in whatever situation they might. They could cast them into prison, beat, and employ them as slaves in agriculture, sell them for slaves, or even take away their lives!—Dionys. Halicarn. lib. ii. pp. 96, 97.

Numa Pompilius first moderated this law, by enacting that, if a son married with the consent of his father, he should no longer have power to sell him for debt.

The emperors Dioclesian and Maximian forbade freemen to be sold on account of debt: Ob æs alienum servire liberos creditoribus, jura non patiuntur. Vid. lib. ob. æs C. de obligat. The ancient Athenians had the same right over their children as the Romans; but Solon reformed this barbarous custom. Vid. Plutarch in Solone.

The people of Asia had the same custom, which Lucullus endeavoured to check, by moderating the laws respecting usury.

The Georgians may alienate their children; and their creditors have a right to sell the wives and children of their debtors, and thus exact the uttermost farthing of their debt. Tavernier, lib. iii. c. 9. And we have reason to believe that this custom long prevailed among the inhabitants of the British isles. See Calmet here.

In short, it appears to have been the custom of all the inhabitants of the earth. We have some remains of it yet in this country, in the senseless and pernicious custom of throwing a man into prison for debt, though his own industry and labour be absolutely necessary to discharge it; and these cannot be exercised within the loathsome and contagious walls of a prison.

Verse 2. Save a pot of oil.] Oil was used as aliment, for anointing the body after bathing, and to anoint the dead. Some think that this pot of oil was what this widow had kept for her burial: see Matt. xxvi. 12.

Verse 6. And the oil stayed.] While there was a vessel to fill, there was oil sufficient; and son, Bring me yet a vessel. And he said unto her, There is not a vessel more. And the oil stayed.

7 Then she came and told the man of God. And he said, Go, sell the oil, and pay thy ^e debt, and live thou and thy children of the rest.

8 ¶ And ^f it fell on a day, that Elisha passed to ^g Shunem, where was a great woman; and she ^h constrained him to eat bread. And so it was, that, as oft as he passed by, he turned in thither to eat bread.

9 And she said unto her husband, Behold now, I perceive that this is a holy man of God, which passeth by us continually.

it only ceased to flow when there was no vessel to receive it. This is a good emblem of the grace of God: while there is an empty, longing heart, there is a continual overflowing fountain of salvation. If we find in any place, or in any time, that the oil ceases to flow, it is because there are no empty vessels there; no souls hungering and thirsting for righteousness. We find fault with the dispensations of God's mercy; and ask why were the former days better than these? Were we as much in earnest for our salvation as our forefathers were for theirs, we should have equal supplies; and as much reason to sing aloud of divine mercy.

Verse 7. Go, sell the oil, and pay thy debt.] He does not inveigh against the cruelty of his creditor, because the law and custom of the country gave him the authority on which he acted: and, rather than permit a poor honest widow to have her children sold, or that even a Philistine should suffer loss who had given credit to a genuine Israelite, he would work a miracle to pay a debt, which, in the course of providence, it was out of her power to discharge.

Verse 8. Elisha passed to Shunem.] This city was in the tribe of Issachar, to the south of the brook Kishon, and at the foot of mount Tabor.

Where was a great woman.] In Pirkey, Rab. Eliezer, this woman is said to have been the sister of Abishag, the Shunammite, well known in the history of David.

Instead of great woman, the Chaldee has a woman fearing sin; the Arabic, a woman eminent for piety before God. This made her truly great.

Verse 9. This is a holy man of God.] That is, a prophet, as the Chaldee interprets it.

Which passeth by us continually.] It probably lay in his way to some school of the prophets that he usually attended.

Verse 10. Let us make a little chamber.] See the note on Judges iii. 20. As the woman was convinced that Elisha was a prophet, she knew for him there a bed, and a table, and a stool, and a candlestick: and it shall be, when he cometh to us, that he shall turn in thither.

11 And it fell on a day, that he came thither, and he turned into the chamber, and lay there.

12 And he said to Gehazi his servant, Call this Shunammite. And when he had called her, she stood before him.

13 And he said unto him, Say now unto her, Behold, thou hast been careful for us with all this care; what is to be done for thee? wouldest thou be spoken for to the king, or to the captain of the host? And she answered, I dwell among mine own people.

14 And he said, What then is to be done for her? And Gehazi answered, Verily she hath no child, and her husband is old.

15 And he said, Call her. And when he had called her, she stood in the door.

16 And he said, ⁱAbout this ^kseason, according to the time of life, thou shalt embrace a son. And she said, Nay, my that he must have need of more privacy than the general state of her house could afford; and, therefore, she proposes what she knew would be a great acquisition to him, as he could live in this little chamber in as much privacy as if he were in his own house. The bed, the table, the stool, and the candlestick, were really every thing he could need, by way of accommodation in such circumstances.

Verse 12. Gehazi his servant] This is the first time we hear of this very indifferent character.

Verse 13. Wouldest thou be spoken for to the king] Elisha must have had considerable influence with the king, from the part he took in the late war with the Moabites. Jehoram had reason to believe that the prophet, under God, was the sole cause of his success; and, therefore, he could have no doubt that the king would grant him any reasonable request.

Or to the captain of the host?] As if he had said, Wilt thou that I should procure thee and thy husband a place at court; or get any of thy friends a post in the army?

I dwell among mine own people.] I am perfectly satisfied and contented with my lot in life: I live on the best terms with my neighbours, and am here encompassed with my kindred, and feel no disposition to change my connexions or place of abode.

How few are there like this woman, on the earth! Who would not wish to be recommended to the king's notice, or get a post for a relative in the army, &c.? Who would not like to change the country for the town; and the rough manners of the inhabitants of the country for the polished conversation and amusements of the court? Who is so contented with what he has 17 And the woman conceived, and bare a son at that season that Elisha had said unto her, according to the time of life.

18 ¶ And when the child was grown, it fell on a day, that he went out to his father to the reapers.

19 And he said unto his father, My head, my head. And he said to a lad, Carry him to his mother.

20 And when he had taken him, and brought him to his mother, he sat on her knees till noon, and then died.

21 And she went up, and laid him on the bed of the man of God, and shut the door upon him, and went out.

22 And she called unto her husband, and said, Send me, I pray thee, one of the young men, and one of the asses, that I may run to the man of God, and come again.

23 And he said, Wherefore wilt thou go to him to-day? it is neither new as not to desire more? Who trembles at the prospect of riches? or believes there are any snares in an elevated state, or in the company and conversation of the great and honourable? How few are there that will not sacrifice every thing; peace, domestic comfort, their friends, their conscience, and their God, for money, honours, grandeur, and parade!

Verse 14. What then is to be done for her?] It seems that the woman retired as soon as she had delivered the answer mentioned in the preceding verse.

Verse 16. Thou shalt embrace a son.] This promise, and the circumstances of the parties, are not very dissimilar to that relative to the birth of Isaac, and those of Abraham and Sarah.

Do not lie] That is, let thy words become true: or, as the rabbins understand it, Do not mock me by giving me a son that shall soon be removed by death; but let me have one that shall survive me.

Verse 18. When the child was grown] We know not of what age he was, very likely four or six, if not more years: for he could go out to the reapers in the harvest field, converse, &c.

Verse 19. My head, my head.] Probably affected by the coup de soleil, or sun stroke; which might, in so young a subject, soon occasion death.

Verse 21. Laid him on the bed of the man of God] She had no doubt heard that Elijah had raised the widow's son of Sarepta to life; and she believed that he who had obtained this gift for her from God, could obtain his restoration to life.

Verse 23. Wherefore wilt thou go] She was a very prudent woman; she would not harass moon, nor sabbath. And she said, It shall be ^m well.

24 Then she saddled an ass, and said to her servant, Drive, and go forward; ⁿ slack not thy riding for me, except I bid thee.

25 So she went and came unto the man of God ^o to mount Carmel. And it came to pass, when the man of God saw her afar off, that he said to Gehazi his servant, Behold, yonder is that Shunammite;

26 Run now, I pray thee, to meet her, and say unto her, Is it well with thee? is it well with thy husband? is it well with the child? And she answered, It is well.

27 And when she came to the man of God to the hill, she caught ^p him by the feet: but Gehazi came near to thrust her away. And the man of God said, Let her alone; for her soul is ^r vexed within her; and the LORD hath hid it from me, and hath not told me.

28 Then she said, Did I desire a son of my lord? ^s did I not say, Do not deceive me?

29 Then he said to Gehazi, ^t Gird up the feelings of her husband by informing him of the death of his son, till she had tried the power of the prophet. Though the religion of the true God was not the religion of the state, yet there were, no doubt, multitudes of the people who continued to worship the true God alone; and were in the habit of going, as is here intimated, on new moons and sabbaths, to consult the prophet.

Verse 24. Drive, and go forward] It is customary in the East for a servant to walk along-side, or drive the ass his master rides. Sometimes he walks behind, and goads on the beast; and, when it is to turn, he directs its head with the long pole of the goad. It is probably to this custom that the wise man alludes, when he says, "I have seen servants on horses, and princes walking as servants on the earth;" [on the ground.]

Verse 26. It is well] How strong was her faith in God, and submission to his authority! Though the heaviest family affliction that could befall her and her husband had now taken place; yet, believing that it was a dispensation of providence, which was in itself neither unwise nor unkind, she said, It is well with me, with my husband, and with my child. We may farther remark that, in her days, the doctrine of reprobate infants had not disgraced the pure religion of the God of endless compassion. She had no doubts concerning the welfare of her child, even with respect to another world.

Verse 27. The LORD hath hid it from me, and hath not told me.] In reference to this point he had not now the discernment of spirits. This, and the gift of prophecy, were influences which God gave and suspended, as his infinite wisdom saw good.

Verse 28. Did I desire a son of my lord?] I expressed no such wish to thee: I was contented and happy; and when thou didst promise me a son, did I not say, Do not deceive me? Do not mock me with a child which shall grow up to be attractive and engaging; and of whom I shall soon be deprived by death.

Verse 29. Salute him not] Make all the haste thou possibly canst, and lay my staff on the face of the child: he probably thought that it might be a case of mere suspended animation, or a swoon; and that, laying the staff on the face of the child, might act as a stimulus to excite the animal motions.

Verse 30. I will not leave thee.] The prophet, it seems, had no design to accompany her; he intended to wait for Gehazi's return: but, as the woman was well assured the child was dead, she was determined not to return till she brought the prophet with her.

Verse 32. Behold, the child was dead] The prophet then saw that the body and spirit of the child were separated.

Verse 33. Prayed unto the LORD.] He had no power of his own by which he could restore the child.

Verse 34. Lay upon the child] Endeavoured to convey a portion of his own natural warmth to the body of the child; and probably endeavoured, by blowing into the child's mouth, to inflate the lungs, and restore respiration. He uses every natural means in his power to restore life, while praying to the Author of it to exert a miraculous influence. Natural means are in our power; those that are supernatural belong to God. We should always do our own work, and beg of God to do his.

Verse 35. Walked in the house to and fro] In order, no doubt, that he might recover that natural warmth which was absorbed by the cold body of the child; that he might again, by taking it in his arms, communicate more warmth. Caloric, or natural heat, when accumulated in any particular part, will diffuse itself to all bodies with which it comes in contact, till their temperature be equal; so a heated body will give out its caloric to the surrounding air, or to contiguous bodies, till the temperature of all be perfectly equalised. The body of the prophet gave out its natural heat, or caloric, to the cold body of the child: the prophet, no doubt, continued in contact with the child till he could bear it no longer; then covered up the child, rose up, and walked smartly on the floor, till, by increasing the circulation of the blood by activity, and strong and quick respiration, he could again afford to communicate another portion of his natural heat. This appears to be the reason of what is mentioned in the text.

Verse 35. The child sneezed seven times] That is, it sneezed abundantly. When the nervous influence began to act on the muscular system, before the circulation could be in every part restored, particular muscles, if not the whole body, would be thrown into strong contractions and shiverings; and stimulation or sneezing would be a natural consequence; particularly as obstructions must have taken place in the head and its vessels, because of the disorder of which the child died. Most people, as well as philosophers and physicians, have remarked how beneficial sneezings are to the removal of obstructions in the head. Sternau- tamenta, says Pliny, (in his Hist. Nat. lib. xxviii. cap. 6.) gravedinem capitis emendat; “Sneezing relieves disorders of the head.”

Verse 37. She went in and fell at his feet] Few can enter into the feelings of this noble woman. What suspense must she have felt during the time that the prophet was employed in the slow process referred to above: for slow in its own nature it must have been, and exceedingly exhausting to the prophet himself.

Verse 38. Came again to Gilgal] He had been there before, with his master, a short time prior to his translation.

Set on the great pot, and seethe pottage for the sons of the prophets.] It was a time of dearth, and all might now stand in need of refreshment: and it appears that the prophet was led to put forth the power he had from God to make a plentiful provision for those who were present. The father of the celebrated Dr. Young, author of The Night Thoughts, preaching a charity sermon for the benefit of the sons of the clergy, took the above words for his text; nor could they be said to be inappropriate.

Verse 39. Wild gourds] This is generally thought to be the coloquintida, the fruit of a plant of the same name, about the size of a large orange. It is brought hither from the Levant, and is often known by the name of bitter apple: both the seeds and pulp are intensely bitter, and violently purgative. It ranks among vegetable poisons, as all intense bitters do; but, judiciously employed, it is of considerable use in medicine.

Verse 40. There is death in the pot.] As if he had said, “We have here a deadly mixture; if we eat of it we shall all die.”

Verse 41. Bring meal.] Though this might, in some measure, correct the strong acrid and purgative quality; yet it was only a miracle which could make a lapful of this fruit shred in pottages salutary.

the prophet, who fed one hundred men with these twenty loaves, &c. This is something like our Lord's feeding the multitude miraculously. Indeed, there are many things in this chapter similar to facts in our Lord's history: and this prophet might be more aptly considered a type of our Lord, than most of the other persons in the Scriptures, who have been thus honoured.

CHAPTER V.

The history of Naaman, captain of the host of the king of Syria, a leper; who was informed by a little Israelitish captive maid that a prophet of the Lord, in Samaria, could cure him, 1—4. The king of Syria sends him with a letter, and rich presents, to the king of Israel, that he should recover him of his leprosy, 5, 6. On receiving the letter, the king of Israel is greatly distressed, supposing that the Syrian king designed to seek a quarrel with him, in desiring him to cleanse a leper, when it was well known that none could cure that disorder but God, 7. Elisha, hearing this, orders Naaman to be sent to him, 8. He comes to Elisha's house, in great state, 9. And the prophet sends a messenger to him, ordering him to wash in Jordan seven times, and he should be made clean, 10. Naaman is displeased that he is received with so little ceremony, and departs in a rage, 11, 12. His servants reason with him; he is persuaded, goes to Jordan, washes, and is made clean, 13, 14. He returns to Elisha; acknowledges the true God; and offers him a present, which the prophet refuses, 15, 16. He asks directions, promises never to sacrifice to any other god, and is dismissed, 17—19. Gehazi runs after him, pretends he is sent by his master for a talent of silver and two changes of raiment; which he receives, brings home, and hides, 20—24. Elisha questions him; convicts him of his wickedness; pronounces a curse of leprosy upon him, with which he is immediately afflicted; and departs from his master a leper, as white as snow, 25—27.

NOTES ON CHAPTER V.

Verse 1. Naaman, captain of the host] Of Naaman we know nothing more than is related here. Jarchi, and some others, say that he was the man who drew the bow at a venture, as we term it, and slew Ahab: see 1 Kings xxii. 34. and the notes there. He is not mentioned by Josephus, nor has he any reference to this history; which is very strange, as it exists in the Chaldee, Septuagint, and Syriac.

King of Syria] The Hebrew is מלך ארם melech Aram, king of Aram; which is followed by the Chaldee and Arabic. The Syriac has (סוד) Adom; but, as the Syriac ² dolath, is the same element as the Syriac ³ rish, differing only in the position of the diacritic point, it may have been originally Aram. The Septuagint and Vulgate have Syria; and this is a common meaning of the term in Scripture. If the king of Syria be meant, it must be Ben-hadad; and the contemporary king of Israel was Jehoram.

A great man] He was held in the highest esteem.

And honourable] Had the peculiar favour and confidence of his master; and was promoted to the highest trusts.

Had given deliverance unto Syria] That is, as the rabbins state, by his slaying Ahab, king of Israel; in consequence of which the Syrians got the victory.

A mighty man in valour] He was a giant, and very strong, according to the Arabic. He had, in a word, all the qualifications of an able general.

But he was a leper.] Here was a heavy tax upon his grandeur: he was afflicted with a disorder the most loathsome, and the most humiliating, that could possibly disgrace a human being. God often, in the course of his providence, permits great defects to be associated with great eminence, that he may hide pride from man; and cause him to think soberly of himself and his acquirements.

Verse 2. The Syrians had gone out by companies] גְּדוּדִים gedudim, troops. When one hundred, or two hundred men, go out by themselves to make prey of whatever they can get, that is called, says Jarchi, גְּדוּד, gedud, a troop. They had gone out in marauding parties; and, on such occasions, they bring away grain, cattle, and such of the inhabitants as are proper to make slaves.

companies, and had brought away captive out of the land of Israel a little maid; and she waited on Naaman's wife.

3 And she said unto her mistress, Would God my lord were ^h with the prophet that is in Samaria! for he would ^l recover him of his leprosy.

4 And one went in, and told his lord, saying, Thus and thus said the maid that is of the land of Israel.

5 And the king of Syria said, Go to, go, and I will send a letter unto the king of Israel. And he departed, and ^k took ^l with him ten talents of silver, and six thousand pieces of gold, and ten changes of raiment.

6 And he brought the letter to the king of Israel, saying, Now, when this letter is come unto thee, behold, I have therewith sent Naaman my servant to thee, that thou mayest recover him of his leprosy.

k 1 Sam. 9. 8. Ch. 8. 8, 9.

A little maid] Who, it appears, had pious parents, who brought her up in the knowledge of the true God. Behold the goodness and the severity of the divine providence: affectionate parents are deprived of their promising daughter by a set of lawless freebooters, without the smallest prospect that she should have any lot in life but that of misery, infamy, and wo.

Waited on Naaman's wife.] Her decent, orderly behaviour, the consequence of her sober and pious education, entitled her to this place of distinction; in which her servitude was at least easy, and her person safe.

If God permitted the parents to be deprived of their pious child by the hands of ruffians, he did not permit the child to be without a guardian. In such a case were even the father and mother to forsake her, God would take her up.

Verse 3. Would God my lord] אחלי achali, I wish; or, as the Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic have, "Happy would it be for my master if he were with the prophet," &c.

Here the mystery of the divine providence begins to develop itself. By the captivity of this little maid, one Syrian family at least, and that one of the most considerable in the Syrian empire, is brought to the knowledge of the true God.

Verse 4. Thus and thus said the maid] So well had this little pious maid conducted herself, that her words are credited; and credited so fully, that an embassy from the king of Syria to the king of Israel is founded upon them!

Verse 5. The king of Syria said] He judged it the best mode of proceeding to send immediately to the king, under whose control he supposed the prophet must be, that he would order the prophet to cure his general.

7 And it came to pass, when the king of Israel had read the letter, that he rent his clothes, and said, Am I ^m God, to kill and to make alive, that this man doth send unto me to recover a man of his leprosy? Wherefore consider, I pray you, and see how he seeketh a quarrel against me.

8 ¶ And it was so, when Elisha the man of God had heard that the king of Israel had rent his clothes, that he sent to the king, saying, Wherefore hast thou rent thy clothes? let him come now to me, and he shall know that there is a prophet in Israel.

9 So Naaman came with his horses and with his chariot, and stood at the door of the house of Elisha.

10 And Elisha sent a messenger unto him, saying, Go and ^a wash in Jordan seven times, and thy flesh shall come again to thee, and thou shalt be clean.

10*d*. the talent, would amount to 353*5l*. 18*s*. 9*d*. sterling.

Six thousand pieces of gold] If shekels are here meant, as the Arabic has it, then the six thousand shekels, at 1*l*. 16*s*. 5*d*. will amount to 10,925*l*.; and the whole, to 14,460*l*. 18*s*. 9*d*. sterling: besides the value of the ten caftans, or changes of raiment. This was a princely present, and shows us at once how high Naaman stood in the esteem of his master.

Verse 7. Am I God, to kill and to make alive] He spoke thus under the conviction that God alone could cure the leprosy; which, indeed, was universally acknowledged: and must have been as much a maxim among the Syrians as among the Israelites, for the disorder was equally prevalent in both countries; and in both equally incurable. See the notes on Levit. xiii. and xiv. And it was this that led the king of Israel to infer that the Syrian king sought a quarrel with him, in desiring him to do a work which God only could do; and then declaring war upon him because he did not do it.

Verse 8. Let him come now to me] Do not be afflicted; the matter belongs to me, as the prophet of the Most High: send him to me, and he shall know that I am such.

Verse 9. Came with his horses and with his chariot] In very great pomp and state. Closely inspected, this was preposterous enough; a leper sitting in state, and affecting it!

Verse 10. Sent a messenger] Did not come out to speak with him: he had got his orders from God, and he transmitted them to Naaman by his servant.

11 But Naaman was wroth, and went away, and said, Behold, ^o I ^p thought, He will surely come out to me, and stand, and call on the name of the LORD his God, and ^t strike his hand over the place, and recover the leper.

12 Are not ^a Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel? may I not wash in them, and be clean? So he turned and went away in a rage.

by which he would convey his healing power. He, who is the Author of life, health, and salvation, has a right to dispense, convey, and maintain them, by whatsoever means he pleases.

Verse 11. Naaman was wroth] And why? Because the prophet treated him without ceremony; and because he appointed him an expensive and simple mode of cure.

Behold, I thought] God's ways are not as our ways: He appoints that mode of cure which he knows to be best. Naaman expected to be treated with great ceremony; and, instead of humbling himself before the Lord's prophet, he expected the prophet of the Lord to humble himself before him! Behold, I thought; and what did he think? Hear his words, for they are all very emphatic:—1. I thought he would surely come out to me. He will never make his servant the medium of communication between me and himself. 2. And stand; present himself before me, and stand as a servant to hear the orders of his God. 3. And call on the name of Jehovah his God; so that both his God and himself shall appear to do me service and honour. 4. And strike his hand over the place; for can it be supposed that any healing virtue can be conveyed without contact? Had he done these things, then the leper might have been recovered.

Verse 12. Are not Abana and Pharpar] At present these rivers do not exist by these names: and where they are we know not; nor whether they were the Orontes and Chrysorroes. Mr. Maundrell, who travelled over all this ground, could find no vestige of the names Abana and Pharpar. The river Barrady, he accurately describes: it has its source in Antilibanus; and, after having plentifully watered the city of Damascus and the gardens, dividing into three branches, (one of which goes through the city, and the two others are distributed among the gardens,) it is lost in the marshy country about five or six leagues from Damascus. Two of these branches were, doubtless, called in the time of Elisha, Abana or Amana, as many copies have it; and Pharpar. And in the time in which the Arabic version was made, two of these branches were called done it? how much rather then, when he saith to thee, Wash, and be clean?

14 Then went he down, and dipped himself seven times in Jordan, according to the saying of the man of God: and ^t his flesh came again like unto the flesh of a little child, and ^u he was clean.

15 ¶ And he returned to the man of God, he and all his company, and came, and stood before him: and he said, Behold, now I know that there is ^v no God in all the earth, but in Israel: now therefore, I pray thee, take ^w a blessing of thy servant.

بردا و تورا Barda and Toura, for these are the names by which this version translates those of the text.

May I not wash in them, and be clean?] No, for God has directed thee to Jordan; and, by its waters, or none, shalt thou be cleansed. Abana and Pharpar may be as good as Jordan; and, in respect to thy cleansing, the simple difference is, God will convey his influence by the latter, and not by the former.

Verse 13. My father] A title of the highest respect and affection.

Had bid thee do some great thing?] If the prophet had appointed thee to do something very difficult in itself, and very expensive to thee, wouldest thou not have done it? With much greater reason shouldst thou do what will occupy little time, be no expense, and is easy to be performed.

Verse 14. Then went he down] He felt the force of this reasoning; and made a trial, probably expecting little success.

Like unto the flesh of a little child] The loathsome scurf was now entirely removed; his flesh assumed the appearance and health of youth; and the whole mass of his blood, and other juices, became purified, refined, and exalted! How mighty is God! What great things can he do by the simplest and feeblest of means!

Verse 15. He returned to the man of God] He saw that the hand of the Lord was upon him: he felt gratitude for his cleansing; and came back to acknowledge, in the most public way, his obligation to God and his servant.

Stood before him] He was now truly humbled, and left all his state behind him. It is often the case that those who have least to value themselves on are proud and haughty; whereas the most excellent of the earth are the most humble; knowing that they have nothing but what they have received. Naaman, the leper, was more proud and dictatorial than he was when cleansed of his leprosy.

There is no God in all the earth] Those termed gods are no gods; the God of Israel is sole God in all the earth.

Take a blessing] Accept a present: take an expiatory gift.—Arabic. He desired to offer something for his cleansing. He thought it 16 But he said, *As the LORD liveth, before whom I stand, I will receive none.

And he urged him to take it; but he refused.

17 And Naaman said, Shall there not then, I pray thee, be given to thy servant two mules' burden of earth? for thy servant will henceforth offer neither burnt-offering nor sacrifice unto other gods, but unto the LORD.

right thus to acknowledge the hand from which he had received his healing; and thus honour the Lord by giving something to his servant.

Verse 16. I will receive none.] It was very common to give presents to all great and official men; and, among these, prophets were always included: but, as it might have appeared to the Syrians that he had taken the offered present as a remuneration for the cure performed, he refused; for, as God alone did the work, he alone should have all the glory.

Verse 17. Shall there not then, I pray thee] This verse is understood two different ways. I will give them both in a paraphrase:—

1. Shall there not then be given unto thy servant, [viz. Naaman,] two mules' burden of this Israelitish earth, that I may build an altar with it; on which I may offer sacrifices to the God of Israel? For thy servant, &c.

2. Shall there not be given to thy [Elisha's] servant, [Gehazi,] two mules' burden of this earth? the gold and silver which he brought with him; and which he esteemed as earth, or dust, in comparison of the cure he received. For thy servant [Naaman,] will henceforth, &c.

Each of these interpretations has its difficulties. Why Naaman should ask for two mules' burden of earth, which he might have taken up any where on the confines of the land, without any such liberty, is not easy to see. As to the prophet's permission, though the boon was ever so small, it was not his to give; only the king of Israel could give such a permission: and, what sort of an altar could he build with two mules' burden of earth, carried from Samaria to Damascus? If this be really the meaning of the place, the request was exceedingly foolish, and never could have come from a person enjoying the right use of his reason. The second opinion, not without its difficulties, seems less embarrassed than the former. It was natural for Naaman to wish to give something to the prophet's servant, as the master had refused his present. Again, impressed with the vast importance of the cure he had received, to take away all feeling of obligation, he might call two, or ten talents of silver, by the name of earth, as well as Habakkuk, chap. ii. 6. calls silver and gold thick clay; and by terms of this kind it has been frequently denominated, both by prophets and heathen writers. "Tyros heaped up silver as the dust, and fine gold as the mire of the streets." Zech. ix. 3. And the king made silver and gold at Jerusalem as stones, 2 Chron. i. 15. Which is agreeable to the sentiments of the heathen: Χρυσος τις κοινος εστι, κατι αργυρος, Gold and silver are of a certain kind of earth. ARIST. Eth. Nicomach.

18 In this thing the LORD pardon thy servant, that when my master goeth into the house of Rimmon to worship there, and he leaneth on my hand, and I bow myself in the house of Rimmon, when I bow down myself in the house of Rimmon, the LORD pardon thy servant in this thing.

19 And he said unto him, Go in peace. So he departed from him a little way.

* Ch. 7. 2, 17.—a Heb. a little piece of ground, as Gen. 35. 16.

Should it be said, the gold and silver could not be two mules' burden; I answer, let the quantity that Naaman brought with him be only considered, and it will be found to be as much, when put into two bags, as could be well lifted upon the backs of two mules; or as those beasts could conveniently carry. The silver itself would weigh 233 lbs. 9 oz. 15½ dwts., and the gold 1140 lbs. 7 oz. 10 dwts.: in the whole 1374 lbs. 5 oz. 5½ dwts. Troy weight. Should it be objected that, taken in this sense, there is no visible connexion between the former and latter clauses of the verse; I answer, that there is as much connexion between the words, taken in this sense, as in the other; for something must be brought in to supply both; besides, this makes a much more complete sense than the other: "Shall there not, I pray thee, be given to thy servant two mules' burden of this silver and gold, [to apply it as he may think proper: I regard it not,] for thy servant will henceforth offer neither burnt-offering nor sacrifice unto other gods, [for the cure he has now received; or by way of worship at any time;] but unto Jehovah." The reader may choose which of these interpretations he pleases.

Verse 18. In this thing the LORD pardon thy servant] It is useless to enter into the controversy concerning this verse. By no rule of right reasoning, nor by any legitimate mode of interpretation, can it be stated that Naaman is asking pardon for offences which he may commit; or that he could ask, or the prophet grant, indulgence to bow himself in the temple of Rimmon; thus performing a decided act of homage, the very essence of that worship, which immediately before, he solemnly assured the prophet he would never practise. The original may legitimately be read, and ought to be read, in the past, and not in the future tense—"For this thing the Lord pardon thy servant, for that when my master HATH GONE into the house of Rimmon, to worship there, and he HATH LEANED upon mine hand, that I also HAVE BOWED myself in the house of Rimmon; for my worshipping in the house of Rimmon, the Lord pardon thy servant in this thing." This is the translation of Dr. Lightfoot, the most able Hebraist, in his time, in Christendom.

To admit the common interpretation is to admit, in effect, the doctrine of indulgences; and, that we may do evil that good may come of it; that the end sanctifies the means; and, for political purposes, we may do unlawful acts.

Verse 19. And he said unto him] There is a most singular and important reading in one

20 ¶ But Gehazi, the servant of Elisha the man of God, said, Behold, my master hath spared Naaman this Syrian, in not receiving at his hands that which he brought: but, as the LORD liveth, I will run after him, and take somewhat of him.

21 So Gehazi followed after Naaman. And when Naaman saw him running after him, he lighted down from the chariot to meet him, and said, ^b Is all well?

22 And he said, All is well. My master hath sent me, saying, Behold, even now there be come to me from mount Ephraim two young men of the sons of the prophets: give them, I pray thee, a talent of silver, and two changes of garments.

23 And Naaman said, Be content, take two talents. And he urged him, and bound two talents of silver in two bags, with two changes of garments,

^b Is there peace?—^c Or, secret place.—^d Heb. not hither, or of De Rossi's MSS. which he numbers 191. It has in the margin ק' אל that is, "read אל lo, not, instead of לו lo, to him." Now this reading supposes that Naaman did ask permission from the prophet to worship in Rimmon's temple; to which the prophet answers, NO; go in peace; that is, maintain thy holy resolutions, be a consistent worshipper of the true God, and avoid all idolatrous practices. Another MS. No. 380, appears first to have written לו to him, but corrected it immediately by inserting an א aleph after the ו vau; and thus, instead of making it אל No, it has made it אל loo, which is no word.

Verse 20. My master hath spared—this Syrian] He has neither taken any thing from him for himself, nor permitted him to give any thing to me.

Verse 21. He lighted down from the chariot] He treats even the prophet's servant with the profoundest respect, alights from his chariot, and goes to meet him.

Is all well?] השלום ha shalom; Is it peace; or prosperity?

Verse 22. And he said] שלום shalom. It is peace; all is right. This was a common mode of address and answer.

There be come to me from mount Ephraim] There was probably a school of the prophets at this mount.

Verse 23. He—bound two talents of silver] It required two servants to carry these two talents; for, according to the computation above, each talent was about 120 lbs. weight.

Verse 24. When he came to the tower] The Chaldee, Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic, understand the word ^אophel, which we translate tower, as signifying a secret, dark, or hiding-place. He was doing a deed of darkness, and he sought darkness to conceal it. He, no and laid them upon two of his servants; and they bare them before him.

24 And when he came to the ^c tower, he took them from their hand, and bestowed them in the house: and he let the men go, and they departed.

25 But he went in, and stood before his master. And Elisha said unto him, Whence comest thou, Gehazi? And he said, Thy servant went ^d no whither.

26 And he said unto him, Went not mine heart with thee, when the man turned again from his chariot to meet thee? Is it a time to receive money, and to receive garments, and oliveyards, and vineyards, and sheep, and oxen, and men-servants, and maid-servants?

doubt, put them in a place little frequented; or one to which few had access besides himself. But the prophet's discerning spirit found him out.

Verse 26. Went not mine heart with thee] The Chaldee gives this a good turn, By the prophetic spirit it was shown unto me, when the man returned from his chariot to meet thee.

Is it a time to receive money] He gave him farther proof of this all-discerning prophetic spirit, in telling him what he designed to do with the money: he intended to set up a splendid establishment; to have men and maid-servants; to have oliveyards and vineyards; and sheep, and oxen. This, as the Chaldee says, he had thought in his heart to do.

Verse 27. The leprosy of Naaman—shall cleave unto thee] Thou hast got much money, and thou shalt have much to do with it. Thou hast got Naaman's silver, and thou shalt have Naaman's leprosy. Gehazi is not the last who has got money in an unlawful way; and has got God's curse with it.

A leper as white as snow.] The moment the curse was pronounced, that moment the signs of the leprosy began to appear. The white shining spot, was the sign that the infection had taken place. See Levit. xiii. 2. and the notes there, and at the end of the same chapter.

1. Some have thought, because of the prophet's curse, The leprosy of Naaman shall cleave unto thee and thy seed for ever, that there are persons still alive who are this man's real descendants, and afflicted with this horrible disease. Mr. Maundrel, when he was in Judea, made diligent inquiry concerning this; but could not ascertain the truth of the supposition. To me, it appears absurd: the denunciation took place in the posterity of Gehazi, till it should become extinct; and, under the influence of this disorder, this must soon have taken place. The for ever implies as long as any of his posterity should remain. This is the import of the word לעולם le'olam. It takes in the whole extent or duration of the thing to which it is applied. The for ever of Gehazi was till his posterity became extinct.

2. The god Rimmon, mentioned ver. 13. we meet with nowhere else in the Scriptures, unless it be the same which Stephen calls Remphan. See Acts vii. 43. and the note there. Selden thinks that Rimmon is the same with Eliou, a god of the Phœnicians, borrowed undoubtedly from the מליך Eliou of the Hebrews, one of the names of the supreme God; which attribute became a god to the Phœnicians. Hesychius has the word Ράμας, Ramas, which he translates ὁ ὑψιστος Θεός, the most High God; which agrees very well with the Hebrew רמון rimmon, from רמה ramah, to make high, or exalt. And all these agree with the sun, as being the highest or most exalted, in what is called the solar system. Some think Saturn is intended, and others Venus. Much may be seen on this subject in Selden, De Diis Syris.

3. Let us not suppose that the offence of Gehazi was too severely punished. 1. Look at the principle, covetousness. 2. Pride and vanity: he wished to become a great man. 3. His lying, in order to impose on Naaman: Behold, even now there be come to me, &c. 4. He, in effect, sells the cure of Naaman for so much money: for, if Naaman had not been cured, could he have pretended to ask the silver and raiment? 5. It was an act of theft; he applied that to his own use, which Naaman gave him for his master. 6. He dishonoured his master, by getting the money and raiment in his name; who had before so solemnly refused it. 7. He closed the whole by lying to his master, denying that he had gone after Naaman, or that he had received any thing from him. But was it not severe to extend the punishment of his crimes to his innocent posterity? I answer, it does not appear that any of Gehazi's children, if he had any prior to this, were smitten with the leprosy: and as to those whom he might beget after this time, their leprosy must be the necessary consequence of their being engendered by a leprous father.

Reader, see the end of avarice and ambition: and see the truth of those words, "He that WILL be rich, shall fall into temptation, and a snare, and into divers hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition." St. Paul.

4. We have already remarked the apparently severe, and manifestly kind providence of God in this business. 1. A marauding party was permitted to spoil the confines of the land of Israel. 2. They brought away, to reduce to captivity, a little maid, probably the hope of her father's house. 3. She became Naaman's property, and waited on his wife. 4. She announced God and his prophet. 5. Naaman, on the faith of her account, took a journey to Samaria. 6. Gets healed of his leprosy. 7. Is converted to the Lord; and, doubtless, brought at least his whole family to believe to the saving of their souls! What was severe to the parents of the little maid, was most kind to Naaman and his family: and the parents lost their child only a little time, that they might again receive her with honour and glory for ever. How true are the words of the poet:—

"Behind a frowning providence, he hides a smiling face."

And see the benefits of a religious education! Had not this little maid been brought up in the knowledge of the true God, she had not been the instrument of so great a salvation.

CHAPTER VI.

The sons of the prophets wish to enlarge their dwelling-place, and go to the banks of Jordan to cut down wood, when one of them drops his axe into the water, which Elisha causes to swim, 1—7. Elisha, understanding all the secret designs of the king of Syria against Israel, informs the king of Israel of them, 8—10. The king of Syria, finding that Elisha had thus penetrated his secrets, and frustrated his attempts, sends a great host to Dothan, to take the prophet; the Lord strikes them with blindness, and Elisha leads the whole host to Samaria, and delivers them up to the king of Israel, 11—19. The Lord opens their eyes, and they see their danger, 20. But the king of Israel is prevented from destroying them; and, at the order of the prophet, gives them meat and drink, and dismisses them to their master, 21—23. Ben-hadad besieges Samaria, and reduces the city to great distress, of which several instances are given, 24—30. The king of Israel vows the destruction of Elisha, and sends to have him beheaded, 31—33.

6 And the man of God said, Where fell it? And he showed him the place. And he cut down a stick, and cast it in thither; and the iron did swim.

7 Therefore said he, Take it up to thee. And he put out his hand, and took it.

8 ¶ Then the king of Syria warred against Israel, and took counsel with his servants, saying, In such and such a place shall be my camp.

9 And the man of God sent unto the king of Israel, saying, Beware that thou pass not such a place; for thither the Syrians are come down.

10 And the king of Israel sent to the place which the man of God told him and warned him of, and saved himself there, not once nor twice.

11 ¶ Therefore the heart of the king of Syria was sore troubled for this thing; and he called his servants, and said unto them, Will ye not show me which of us is for the king of Israel?

12 And one of his servants said, None, my lord, O king: but Elisha, the prophet that is in Israel, telleth the king of Israel the words that thou speakest in thy bed-chamber.

was borrowed; and, therefore, I am the more afflicted for its loss; and, Jarchi adds, I have nothing to repay it.

Verse 6. He cut down a stick] This had no natural tendency to raise the iron: it was only a sign, or ceremony, which the prophet chose to use on the occasion.

The iron did swim.] This was a real miracle; for the gravity of the metal must have, for ever, kept it at the bottom of the water.

Verse 8. The king of Syria warred against Israel] This was probably the same Ben-hadad who is mentioned ver. 24. What was the real or pretended cause of this war, we cannot tell: but we may say, in numberless war cases, as Calmet says in this:—"An ambitious and restless prince always finds a sufficiency of reasons to colour his enterprises."

In such and such a place] The Syrian king had observed, from the disposition of the Israelitish army, in what direction it was about to make its movements; and, therefore, laid ambuscades where he might surprise it to the greatest advantage.

Verse 9. Beware that thou pass not such a place] Elisha must have had this information by immediate revelation from heaven.

Verse 10. Sent to the place] To see if it were so. But the Vulgate gives it quite a different turn: misit rex Israel ad locum, et 13 And he said, Go and spy where he is, that I may send and fetch him. And it was told him, saying, Behold, he is in Dothan.

14 Therefore sent he thither horses, and chariots, and a great host: and they came by night, and compassed the city about.

15 ¶ And when the servant of the man of God was risen early, and gone forth, behold, a host compassed the city both with horses and chariots. And his servant said unto him, Alas, my master! how shall we do?

16 And he answered, Fear not: for they that be with us are more than they that be with them.

17 And Elisha prayed, and said, LORD, I pray thee, open his eyes, that he may see. And the LORD opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw: and, behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha.

18 ¶ And when they came down to him, Elisha prayed unto the LORD, and said, Smite this people, I pray thee, with blindness. And he smote them with blindness, according to the word of Elisha.

præoccupavit eum. The king of Israel sent previously to the place, and took possession of it; and thus the Syrians were disappointed. This is very likely, though it is not expressed in the Hebrew text. The prophet knew the Syrians marked such a place: he told the king of Israel; and he hastened and sent a party of troops to preoccupy it; and thus the Syrians found that their designs had been detected.

Verse 13. Behold, he is in Dothan.] This is supposed to be the same place as that mentioned in Gen. xxxvii. 17. It lay about twelve miles from Samaria.

Verse 14. He sent thither horses] It is strange he did not think that he who could penetrate his secrets, with respect to the Israelitish army, could inform himself of all his machinations against his own life.

Verse 16. For they that be with us, are more, &c.] What astonishing intercourse had this man with heaven! It seems the whole heavenly host had it in commission to help him.

Verse 17. Lord,—open his eyes] Where is heaven? Is it not above, beneath, around us? And were our eyes open as were those of the prophet's servant, we should see the heavenly host in all directions. The horses and chariots of fire were there, before the eyes of Elisha's servant were opened.

Confound their sight, so that they may not know what they see; and so mistake one place for another.

Verse 19. I will bring you to the man whom ye seek.] And he did so: he was their guide to Samaria; and showed himself to them fully in that city.

Verse 20. Open the eyes of these men] Take away their confusion of vision, that they may discern things as they are, and distinguish where they are.

Verse 21. My father, shall I smite] This was dastardly: the utmost he could have done with these men, when thus brought into his hand, was to make them prisoners of war.

Verse 22. Whom thou hast taken captive] Those who in open battle either lay down their arms, or are surrounded, and their retreat cut off, are entitled to their lives; much more those who are thus providentially put into thy hand, without having been in actual hostility against thee. Give them meat and drink, and send them home to their master; and let him thus know that thou fearest him not, and art incapable of doing an ungenerous or unmanly action.

Verse 23. He prepared great provision for them.] These, on their return to their master, could tell him strange things about the power of the God of Israel, and the magnanimity of its king.

So the bands of Syria came no more] Marauding parties were no more permitted by the Syrian king to make inroads upon Israel. And it is very likely that, for some considerable time after this, there was no war between these two nations. What is mentioned in the next verse was more than a year afterward.

Verse 25. And, behold, they besieged it] They had closed it in on every side, and reduced it to the greatest necessity.

An ass's head was sold for fourscore pieces for them: and when they had eaten and drunk, he sent them away, and they went to their master. So ^o the bands of Syria came no more into the land of Israel.

24 ¶ And it came to pass after this, that Ben-hadad king of Syria gathered all his host, and went up, and besieged Samaria.

25 And there was a great famine in Samaria: and, behold, they besieged it, until an ass's head was sold for fourscore pieces of silver, and the fourth part of a cab of dove's dung for five pieces of silver.

26 ¶ And as the king of Israel was passing by upon the wall, there cried a woman unto him, saying, Help, my lord, O king.

27 And he said, ^p If the LORD do not help thee, whence shall I help thee?

^o Ch. 5. 2. Ver. 8, 9.—^p Or, Let not the Lord save thee.

of silver] I suppose we are to take the ass's head literally; and, if the head sold for so much, what must other parts sell for, which were much to be preferred? The famine must be great that could oblige them to eat any part of an animal that was proscribed by the law: and it must be still greater that could oblige them to purchase so mean a part of this unclean animal, at so high a price. The piece of silver was probably the drachm, worth about sevenpence three farthings of our money: the whole amounting to about two pounds nine shillings.

And the fourth part of a cab of dove's dung] The cab was about a quart or three pints. Dove's dung חריונים charyyonim. Whether this means pigeon's dung, literally, or a kind of pulse, has been variously disputed by learned men. After having written much upon the subject, illustrated with quotations from east, west, north, and south, I choose to spare my reader the trouble of wading through them; and shall content myself with asserting that it is probable a sort of peas are meant, which the Arabs to this day call by this name. “The garvanos, cicer, or chick-pea,” says Dr. Shaw, “have been taken for the pigeon's dung, mentioned in the siege of Samaria; and, as the cicer is pointed at one end, and acquires an ash colour in parching, the first of which circumstances answers to the figure, the second to the usual colour of dove's dung, the supposition is by no means to be disregarded.”

I should not omit saying, that dove's dung is of great value in the East, for its power in producing cucumbers, melons, &c. which has induced many learned men to take the words literally. Bochart has exhausted this subject, and concludes that a kind of pulse is meant. Most learned men are of his opinion.

Verse 27. If the LORD do not help thee] Some read this as an imprecation, May God save thee not! how can I save thee?

Verse 29. So we boiled my son] This is horrible: but, for the sake of humanity, we must allow that the children died through hunger, and then became food for their starved, desperate parents.

She hath hid her son.] He was already dead, says Jarchi; and she hid him, that she might eat him alone.

This very evil Moses had foretold should come upon them if they forsook God. See Deut. xxviii. 53, 57. The same evil came upon this wretched people, when besieged by Nebuchadnezzar. See Ezek. v. 10. And also, when Titus besieged Jerusalem. See Josephus De Bell. Judaic. lib. vi. cap. 3. and my notes on Matt. xxiv. 19.

Verse 30. He had sackcloth within upon his flesh.] The king was in deep mourning for the distresses of the people.

Verse 31. If the head of Elisha—shall stand on him] Either he attributed these calamities to the prophet; or else he thought he could remove them, and yet would not. The miserable king was driven to desperation.

Verse 32. This son of a murderer] Jehoram, the son of Ahab and Jezebel. But Ahab is called a murderer, because of the murder of Naboth.

The sound of his master's feet behind him] That is, king Jehoram is following his messenger, that he may see him take off my head.

more also to me, if the head of Elisha the son of Shaphat shall stand on him this day.

32 But Elisha sat in his house, and the elders sat with him; and the king sent a man from before him: but, ere the messenger came to him, he said to the elders, "See ye how this son of a murderer hath sent to take away mine head? Look, when the messenger cometh, shut the door, and hold him fast at the door: is not the sound of his master's feet behind him?"

33 And while he yet talked with them, behold, the messenger came down unto him: and he said, Behold, this evil is of the LORD; what should I wait for the LORD any longer?

¶ Ezek. 8. 1. & 20. 1.—Luke 13. 32.—1 Kings 18. 4. y Job 2. 9.

of this method for his personal safety, as the king was highly incensed.

Verse 33. Behold, this evil is of the LORD] It is difficult to know whether it be the prophet, the messenger, or the king, that says these words. It might be the answer of the prophet from within, to the messenger who was without, and who sought for admission, and gave his reason. To whom Elisha might have replied, "I am not the cause of these calamities, they are from the Lord; I have been praying for their removal: but why should I pray to the Lord any longer, for the time of your deliverance is at hand." And then Elisha said—See the following chapter, where the removal of the calamity is foretold in the most explicit manner; and, indeed, the chapter is unhappily divided from this. The viith chapter should have begun with ver. 24. of this chapter; as, by the present division, the story is unnaturally interrupted.

How natural is it for men to lay the cause of their sufferings on any thing or person but themselves! Ahab's iniquity was sufficient to have brought down God's displeasure on a whole nation; and yet he takes no blame to himself, but lays all on the prophet, who was the only salt that preserved the whole nation from corruption. How few take their sins to themselves; and till they do this, they cannot be true penitents; nor can they expect God's wrath to be averted, till they feel themselves the chief of sinners.

CHAPTER VII.

Elisha foretells abundant relief to the besieged inhabitants of Samaria. 1. One of the lords questions the possibility of it; but is assured that he shall see it on the morrow, but not taste of it, 2. Four lepers, perishing with hunger, go to the camp of the Syrians to seek relief, and find it totally deserted, 3—5. How the Syrians were alarmed and fled, 6, 7. The lepers begin to take the spoil; but at last resolve to carry the good news to the city, 8—11. The king, suspecting some treachery, sends some horsemen to scour the country, and see whether the Syrians were not somewhere concealed: they return, and confirm the report that the Syrians were totally fled, 12—15. The people go out and spoil the camp; in consequence of which provisions become as plenty as Elisha had foretold, 16. The unbelieving lord, having the charge of the gate committed to him, is trodden to death by the crowd.

THEN Elisha said, Hear ye the word of the LORD; Thus saith the LORD, ^a Tomorrow, about this time, shall a measure of fine flour be sold for a shekel, and two measures of barley for a shekel, in the gate of Samaria.

2 ^b Then ^c a lord, on whose hand the king leaned, answered the man of God, and said, Behold, ^d if the LORD would make windows in heaven, might this thing be? And he said, Behold, thou shalt see it with thine eyes, but shalt not eat thereof.

3 ¶ And there were four leprous men ^e at the entering in of the gate; and they said one to another, Why sit we here until we die?

4 If we say, We will enter into the city, then the famine is in the city, and we shall die there: and if we sit still here we die also. Now therefore come, and let us fall unto the host of the Syrians: if they save us alive, we shall live; and if they kill us, we shall but die.

5 And they rose up in the twilight, to go unto the camp of the Syrians: and when they were come to the uttermost part of the camp of Syria, behold, there was no man there.

6 For the LORD had made the host of the Syrians ^f to hear a noise of chariots, and a noise of horses, even the noise of a great host: and they said one to another, Lo, the king of Israel hath hired

7 Wherefore they ^h arose and fled in the twilight, and left their tents, and their horses, and their asses, even the camp as it was, and fled for their life.

8 And when these lepers came to the uttermost part of the camp, they went into one tent, and did eat and drink, and carried thence silver, and gold, and raiment, and went and hid it; and came again, and entered into another tent, and carried thence also, and went and hid it.

9 Then they said one to another, We do not well: this day is a day of good tidings, and we hold our peace: if we tarry till the morning light, ⁱ some mischief will come upon us: now therefore come, that we may go and tell the king's household.

10 So they came and called unto the porter of the city; and they told them, saying, We came to the camp of the Syrians, and, behold, there was no man there, neither voice of man, but horses tied, and asses tied, and the tents as they were.

11 And he called the porters; and they told it to the king's house within.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VII.

Verse 1. To-morrow about this time] This was in reply to the desponding language of the king; and to vindicate himself from the charge of being author of this calamity. See the end of the preceding chapter.

A measure of fine flour—for a shekel] A seah of fine flour: the seah was about two gallons and a half; the shekel, two shillings and fourpence, at the lowest computation. A wide difference between this and the price of the ass's head, mentioned above.

Verse 2. Then a lord] ששׁוּ shalish. This word, as the name of an office, occurs often; and seems to point out one of the highest offices in the state. So unlikely was this prediction to be fulfilled, that he thought God must pour out wheat and barley from heaven, before it could have a literal accomplishment.

But shalt not eat thereof] This was a mere prediction of his death, but not as a judgment for his unbelief; any person, in his circumstances, might have spoken as he did. He stated, in effect, that nothing but a miracle could procure the plenty predicted; and, by a miracle alone was it done: and any person, in his place, might have been trodden to death by the crowd in the gate of Samaria.

Verse 3. There were four leprous men] The Gemara, in Sota, R. Sol. Jarchi, and others, say, that these four lepers were Gehazi and his three sons.

At the entering in of the gate] They were not permitted to mingle in civil society.

Verse 5. The uttermost part of the camp] Where the Syrian advanced guards should have been.

Verse 6. The LORD had made the—Syrians to hear a noise] This threw them into confusion; they imagined that they were about to be attacked by powerful auxiliaries, which the king of Israel had hired against them.

Verse 12. The king arose in the night] This king had made a noble defence; he seems to have shared in all the sufferings of the besieged, and to have been ever at his post. Even in vile Ahab there were some good things!

They know that we be hungry] This was a therefore are they gone out of the camp to hide themselves in the field, saying, When they come out of the city, we shall catch them alive, and get into the city.

13 And one of his servants answered and said, Let some take, I pray thee, five of the horses that remain, which are left ^k in the city, (behold, they are as all the multitude of Israel that are left in it: behold, I say, they are even as all the multitude of the Israelites that are consumed:) and let us send and see.

14 They took therefore two chariot-horses; and the king sent after the host of the Syrians, saying, Go and see.

15 And they went after them unto Jordan: and, lo, all the way was full of garments and vessels, which the Syrians had cast away in their haste. And the messengers returned, and told the king.

very natural conclusion: The Syrians, by the closest blockade, could not induce them to give up the city; but, knowing that they were in a starving condition, they might make use of such a stratagem as that imagined by the king, in order to get possession of the city.

Verse 13. And one of his servants answered] This is a very difficult verse; and the great variety of explanations given of it cast but little light on the subject. I am inclined to believe, with Dr. Kennicott, that there is an interpolation here, which puzzles, if not destroys, the sense. "Several instances," says he, "have been given of words improperly repeated by Jewish transcribers, who have been careless enough to make such mistakes, and yet cautious not to alter or erase, for fear of discovery. This verse furnishes another instance in a careless repetition of seven Hebrew words, thus:

נשארו בה חנם ככל המון ישראל אשר חמו

The exact English of this verse is, And the servant said, Let them take now five of the remaining horses, which remain in it; behold they are as all the multitude of Israel, which [remain in it; behold they are as all the multitude of Israel which] are consumed; and let us send and see.

"Whoever considers that the second set of these seven words is neither in the Septuagint nor Syriac versions, and that those translators who suppose those words to be genuine, alter them to make them look like sense, will probably allow them to have been at first an improper repetition; consequently, to be now an interpolation, strangely continued in the Hebrew text." They are wanting in more than kel, and two measures of barley for a shekel, ¹ according to the word of the LORD.

forty of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. In some others they are left without points; in others, they have been written in, and afterward blotted out; and in others four, in others five, of the seven words are omitted. De Rossi concludes thus, Nec verba hæc legunt LXX., Vulg., Syrus simplex Syrus, Heptaplaris Parisiensis, Targum. They stand on little authority; and the text should be read, omitting the words enclosed by brackets, as above.

That are consumed] The words אשר חמו asher tamu, should be translated, which are perfect; i. e. fit for service. The rest of the horses were either dead of the famine, killed for the subsistence of the besieged, or so weak as not to be able to perform such a journey.

Verse 14. They took—two chariot-horses] They had, at first, intended to send five; probably they found, on examination, that only two were effective. But if they sent two chariots, each would have two horses; and probably a single horse for crossing the country.

Verse 15. All the way was full of garments and vessels] A manifest proof of the hurry and precipitancy with which they fled.

Verse 17. And the people trode upon him] This officer being appointed by the king to have the command of the gate, the people rushing out to get spoil, and in to carry it to their houses, he was borne down by the multitude, and trodden to death. This also was foreseen by the spirit of prophecy. The literal and exact fulfilment of such predictions must have acquired the prophet a great deal of credit in Israel.

Dr. Lightfoot remarks that, between the first and last year of Jehoram, son of Jehoshaphat, there are very many occurrences mentioned, which are not referred nor fixed to their proper year; and, therefore, they must be calculated in a gross sum, as coming to pass in one of these years. These are the stories contained in chapters iv, v, vi, and vii. of this book; and in 2 Chron. xxi. 6—19. They may be calculated thus:—In the first year of Jehoram, Elisha, returning out of Moab into the land of Israel, multiplies the widow's oil; he is lodged in Shunem, and assures his hostess of a child. The seven years' famine was then begun, and he gives the Shunammite warning of its continuance.

The second year, she bears her child in the land of the Philistines, chap. viii. 2. And Elisha resides among the disciples of the prophets at Gilgal, heals the poisoned pottage, and feeds one hundred men with twenty barley loaves and some ears of corn. That summer he cures Naaman of his leprosy, the only cure of this kind done till Christ came.

The third year, he makes iron to swim, prevents the Syrian's ambushments, strikes those with blindness who were sent to seize him, and sends them back to their master.

The fourth year, Jehoshaphat dies, and Edom rebels, and shakes off the yoke laid upon them by David: Libnah also rebels.

The fifth year, Samaria is besieged by Ben-hadad, the city is most grievously afflicted; and, after being nearly destroyed by famine, it is suddenly relieved by a miraculous interference of God, which had been distinctly foretold by Elisha.

The sixth year, the Philistines and Arabians oppress Jehoram, king of Judah, and take captive his wives and children, leaving only one son behind.

The seventh year, Jehoram falls into a grievous sickness, so that his bowels fall out, 2 Chron. xxi. 19. And in the same year the seven years' famine ends about the time of harvest; and, at that harvest, the Shunammite's son dies, and is restored to life by Elisha, though the story of his birth and death is related together; and yet some years must have passed between them. Not long after this the Shunammite goes to the king to petition to be restored to her own land, which she had left in the time of the famine, and had sojourned in the land of the Philistines.

This year Elisha is at Damascus; Ben-hadad falls sick; Hazael stifles him with a wet cloth, and reigns in his stead. All these things Dr. Lightfoot supposes happened between An. Mundi 3110 and 3117. See Lightfoot's Works, vol. i. p. 88. In examining the facts recorded in these books, we shall always find it difficult, and sometimes impossible, to ascertain the exact chronology. The difficulty is increased by a custom common among these annalists, the giving the whole of a story at once, though several incidents took place at the distance of some years from the commencement of the story: as they seem unwilling to have to recur to the same history in the chronological order of its facts.

CHAPTER VIII.

Account of the sojourning of the Shunammite, in the land of the Philistines, during the seven years' famine, 1, 2. She returns, and solicits the king to let her have back her land; which, with its fruits, he orders to be restored to her, 3—6. Elisha comes to Damascus, and finds Ben-hadad sick; who sends his servant Hazael to the prophet to inquire whether he shall recover, 7—9. Elisha predicts his death, tells Hazael that he shall be king, and shows him the atrocities which he will commit, 10—14. Hazael returns; stifles his master with a wet cloth, and reigns in his stead, 15. Joram, son of Ahab, becomes king over Israel: his bad reign, 16—19. Edom and Libnah revolt, 20—22. Joram dies, and his son Ahaziah reigns in his stead, 23, 24. His bad reign, 25—27. He joins with Joram against Hazael; is wounded by the Syrians, and goes to Jezreel to be healed, 28, 29.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VIII.

Verse 1. Then spake Elisha] As this is the relation of an event far past, the words should be translated, "But Elisha had spoken unto the woman whose son he had restored unto life; and the woman had arisen, and acted according to the saying of the man of God, and had gone with her family, and had sojourned in the land of the Philistines seven years." What is mentioned in these two verses happened several years before the time specified in the third verse. See the observations at the end of the preceding chapter.

Verse 4. The king talked with Gehazi] This is supposed to have happened before the cleansing of Naaman, for, is it likely that the king would hold conversation with a leprous man; or that, knowing Gehazi had been dismissed with the highest disgrace from the prophet's service, he could hold any conversation with him concerning his late master, relative to whom he could not expect him to give either a true or impartial account?

Some think that this conversation might have taken place after Gehazi became leprous; the king having an insatiable curiosity to know the private history of a man who had done such astonishing things: and from whom could he get this information, except from the prophet's own confidential servant? It agrees things that Elisha hath done.

5 And it came to pass, as he was telling the king how he had ^d restored a dead body to life, that, behold, the woman, whose son he had restored to life, cried to the king for her house and for her land. And Gehazi said, My lord, O king, this is the woman, and this is her son, whom Elisha restored to life.

6 And when the king asked the woman, she told him. So the king appointed unto her a certain ^e officer, saying, Restore all that was hers, and all the fruits of the field since the day that she left the land, even until now.

7 ¶ And Elisha came to Damascus; and Ben-hadad the king of Syria was sick, and it was told him, saying, The man of God is come hither.

8 And the king said unto ^f Hazael, ^g Take a present in thine hand, and go, meet the man of God, and ^h inquire of the LORD by him, saying, Shall I recover of this disease?

better with the chronology to consider what is here related as having taken place after the cure of Naaman. As to the circumstance of Gehazi's disease, he might overlook that, and converse with him, keeping at a reasonable distance, as nothing but actual contact could defile.

Verse 5. This is the woman, and this is her son, whom Elisha restored to life. This was a very providential occurrence in behalf of the Shunammite. The relation given by Gehazi was now corroborated by the woman herself; the king was duly affected, and gave immediate orders for the restoration of her land.

Verse 7. Elisha came to Damascus That he might lead Gehazi to repentance; according to Jarchi and some others.

Verse 8. Take a present in thine hand But what an immense present was this, forty camels' burden of every good thing of Damascus! The prophet would need to have a very large establishment at Damascus to dispose of so much property.

Verse 10. Thou mayest certainly recover: howbeit the LORD hath showed me that he shall surely die. That is, God has not determined thy death, nor will it be a necessary consequence of the disease by which thou art now afflicted: but this wicked man will abuse the power and trust thou hast reposed in him, and take away thy life. Even when God has not designed, nor appointed, the death of a person, he may nevertheless die, though not without the permission of God. This is a farther proof of the doctrine of contingent events: he might live for all his sickness, but thou wilt put an end to his life.

Verse 11. He settled his countenance steadfastly Of whom does the author speak? Of 10 And Elisha said unto him, Go, say unto him, Thou mayest certainly recover: howbeit the LORD hath showed me that ^k he shall surely die.

11 And he settled his countenance ^l steadfastly, until he was ashamed: and the man of God ^m wept.

12 And Hazael said, Why weepeth my lord? And he answered, Because I know ⁿ the evil that thou wilt do unto the children of Israel: their strong-holds wilt thou set on fire, and their young men wilt thou slay with the sword, and ^o wilt dash their children, and rip up their women with child.

Hazael, or of Elisha? Several apply this action to the prophet: he had a murderer before him, and he saw the bloody acts he was about to commit, and was greatly distressed; but he endeavoured to conceal his feelings; at last his face reddened with anguish, his feelings overcame him, and he burst out and wept.

The Septuagint, as it stands in the Complutensian, and Antwerp Polyglotts, make the text very plain: Και εση Αζηλ κατα προσοπον αυτου, και παρεθηκεν ενωπιον αυτου δαρα ιαυς ησχυνητο· και εκλαυσεν ο ανθρωπος του Θεου, And Hazael stood before his face, and he presented before him gifts till he was ashamed; and the man of God wept.

The Codex Vaticanus, and the Codex Alexandrinus, are nearly as the Hebrew. The Aldine edition agrees in some respects with the Complutensian; but all the versions follow the Hebrew.

Verse 12. I know the evil that thou wilt do We may see something of the accomplishment of this prediction, chap. x. 32, 33. and chap. xiii. 3, 7.

Verse 13. But what! is thy servant a dog, that he should do this great thing? I believe this verse to be wrongly interpreted by the general run of commentators. It is generally understood, that Hazael was struck with horror at the prediction; that these cruelties were most alien from his mind; that he then felt distressed and offended at the imputation of such evils to him; and yet, so little did he know his own heart, that, when he got power, and had opportunity, he did the whole with a willing heart and a ready hand. On the contrary, I think he was delighted at the prospect; and his question rather implies a doubt, whether a person so inconsiderable as he is, shall ever have it in his power to do such great, not such evil things; for, in his sight, they had no turpitude. The Hebrew text stands thus:—כי מה עבדו הכלב כי יעשה הרבה הגדול הזה ki ma ábdeca hakeleb, ki yaáseh ha-dabar ha-gadol hazzeh? But, what! thy servant, this dog! that he should do this great work! Or, "Can such a poor worthless fellow, such a dead dog, [ὁ νεκρὸς ὁ τεθνηὼς, Sept.] perform such mighty actions? thou fillest me with surprise." And, that this is the true sense, his immediate murder of his master, on his return, fully proves. Our common version of these words of Hazael, as Mr. Patten observes, has stood in the front of many a fine declamation utterly wide of his real sentiment. His exclamation was not the result of horror; his expression has no tincture of it, but of the unexpected glimpse of a crown! The prophet's answer is plainly calculated to satisfy the astonishment he had excited: a dog bears not, in Scripture, the character of a cruel, but of a despicable animal; nor does he who is shocked with barbarity call it a GREAT deed. David vindicated.

Verse 15. A thick cloth] The versions, in general, understand this of a hairy or woollen cloth. So that he died] He was smothered, or suffocated.

Verse 16. In the fifth year of Joram] This verse, as it stands in the present Hebrew text, may be thus read; "And in the fifth year of Joram, son of Ahab, king of Israel, [and of Jehoshaphat king of Judah,] reigned Jehoram son of Jehoshaphat king of Judah. The three Hebrew words יהורם מלך יהושפט [and of Jehoshaphat king of Judah,] greatly disturb the chronology in this place. It is certain that Jehoshaphat reigned twenty-five years, and that Jehoram his son reigned but eight; 1 Kings xxii. 42. 2 Kings viii. 17. 2 Chron. xx. 31. and xxi. 5. So that he could not have reigned during his father's life without being king twenty years, and eight years!" These words are wanting in three of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., in the Complutensian and Aldine editions of the Septuagint, in the Peshito Syriac, in the Parisian Heptaplar Syriac, the Arabic, and in many copies of the Vulgate, collated by Dr. Kennicott and De Rossi, both printed and manuscript; to which may be added, two MSS. in my own library, one of the 14th, the other of the 11th century, and what I judge to be the Editio Princeps of the Vulgate. And, it is worthy of remark, that in this latter work, after the 15th verse, ending with, Quo mortuo; regnavit Azahel pro eo: the following words are in a smaller character, Anno quinto Joram filii Achab regis Israel, regnavit Joram filius Josaphat rex Juda. Triginta, &c. We have already seen that it is supposed that Jehoshaphat associated his son with him in the kingdom; and that the fifth year in this place only regards Joram king of Israel, and not Jehoshaphat king of Judah. See the notes on chap. i. 17.

Verse 17. He reigned eight years in Jerusalem.] Beginning with the 5th year of Joram, king of Israel. He reigned three years with Jehoshaphat his father, and five years alone; i. e. from A. M. 3112 to 3119, according to Archbishop Ussher.

Verse 18. The daughter of Ahab was his wife] This was the infamous Athaliah: and, through this marriage, Jehoshaphat and Ahab were confederates; and this friendship was continued after Ahab's death.

Verse 19. To give him always a light] To give him a successor in his own family.

Verse 21. Joram went over to Zair] This is the same as Seir, a chief city of Idumea. So Isaiah xxi. 11. The burden of Dumah, (Idumea:) he calleth to me out of Seir. This city had its name from Seir, one of the sons of Ishmael, Gen. xxv. 14.

to his tent, for they were not able to make any farther head against these enemies; and therefore it is said, that Edom revolted from under the hand of Judah unto this day.

Verse 23. Are they not written in the book of the Chronicles? Several remarkable particulars relative to Joram, may be found in 2 Chron. xxi.

Verse 26. Two and twenty years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign. In 2 Chron. xxii. 2. it is said, forty and two years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign: this is a heavy difficulty, to remove which several expedients have been used. It is most evident that, if we follow the reading in Chronicles, it makes the son two years older than his own father! for his father began to reign when he was thirty-two years old, and reigned eight years, and so died, being forty years old: see ver. 17. Dr. Lightfoot says, "The original meaneth thus; Ahaziah was the son of two and forty years: namely, of the house of Omri, of whose seed he was by the mother's side: and he walked in the ways of that house, and came to ruin at the same time with it. This the text directs us to look after, when it calleth his mother the daughter of Omri, who was indeed the daughter of Ahab. Now, these forty-two years are easily reckoned, by any that will count back in the Chronicle to the second of Omri. Such another reckoning there is about Jehoniah or Jehoiahin, 2 Kings xxiv. 8. Jehoiakin was eighteen years old when he began to reign. But 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9. Jehoiachin was the son of the eight years; that is, the beginning of his reign fell in the eighth year of Nebuchadnezzar, and of Judah's first captivity." Works, vol. i. p. 87.

After all, here is a most manifest contradiction, that cannot be removed but by having recourse to violent modes of solution. I am satisfied the reading in 2 Chron. xxii. 2. is a mistake; and that we should read there, as

here, twenty-two instead of forty-two years: see the note there. And may we not say with Calmet, Which is most dangerous, to acknowledge that transcribers have made some mistakes in copying the sacred books; or to acknowledge that there are contradictions in them, and then to have recourse to solutions that can yield no satisfaction to any unprejudiced mind? I add, that no mode of solution yet found out has succeeded in removing the difficulty: and of all the MSS. which have been collated, and they amount to several hundred, not one confirms the reading of forty-two years. And to it all the ancient versions are equally unfriendly.

Verse 28. The Syrians wounded Joram.] Ahaziah went with Joram to endeavour to wrest Ramoth-gilead out of the hands of the Syrians, which belonged to Israel and Judah. Ahab had endeavoured to do this before, and was slain there: See 1 Kings xxii. 3, &c. and the notes there.

Verse 29. Went back to be healed at Jezreel.] And there he continued till Jehu conspired against and slew him there. And thus the blood of the innocents, which had been shed by Ahab and his wife Jezebel, was visited on them in the total extinction of their family. See the following chapters, where the bloody tale of Jehu's conspiracy is told at large.

I have already had to remark on the chronological difficulties which occur in the historical books: difficulties for which copyists alone are responsible. To remove them by the plan of reconciliation, is in many cases impracticable: to conjectural criticism we must have recourse. And is there a single ancient author of any kind, but particularly those who have written on matters of history and chronology, whose works have been transmitted to us free of similar errors, owing to the negligence of transcribers?

CHAPTER IX.

Elisha sends one of the disciples of the prophets to Ramoth-gilead, to anoint Jehu King of Israel, 1-3. He acts according to his orders, and informs Jehu that he is to cut off the whole house of Ahab, 4-10. Jehu's captains proclaim him king, 11-14. He goes against Jezreel; where he finds Joram, and Ahaziah king of Judah, who had come to visit him; he slays them both: the former is thrown into the portion of Naboth; the latter, having received a mortal wound, flees to Megiddo, and dies there, and is carried to Jerusalem, and buried in the city of David, 15-20. He commands Jezebel to be thrown out of her window; and he treads her under the feet of his horses, and the dogs eat her, according to the word of the Lord, 30-37.

NOTES ON CHAPTER IX.

Verse 1. One of the children of the prophets] The Jews say that this was Jonah the prophet, the son of Amittai.

Gird up thy loins] What thou hast to do requires the utmost despatch.

Verse 4. The young man—the prophet] This should be translated, The servant of the prophet; that is, the servant which Elisha now had in place of Gehazi.

Verse 6. King over the people of the LORD] This pointed out to Jehu that he was to rule that people according to God's law; and, consequently, that he was to restore the pure worship of the Most High in Israel.

Verse 7. Thou shalt smite the house of Ahab] For their most cruel murders, they have forfeited their own lives, according to that immutable law; "He that sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed." This, and the two following verses, contain the commission which Jehu received from the Lord against the bloody house of Ahab.

^k 1 Sam. 25. 22.—^l Deut. 32. 36.—^m 1 Kings 14. 10. & 15. 29. & 21. 22.—ⁿ 1 Kings 16. 3, 11.—^o 1 Kings 21. 23. Ver. 35. 36.—^p Jer. 29. 26. John 10. 20. Acts 25. 24. 1 Cor. 4. 10.

Verse 10. The dogs shall eat Jezebel] How most minutely was this prophecy fulfilled: see ver. 33, &c.

Verse 11. Wherefore came this mad fellow to thee?] Was it because he was a holy man of God, that he was reputed by a club of irreligious officers to be a madman? In vain do such pretend that they fight for religion, and are the guardians of the public welfare and morals, if they persecute religion, and scoff at holy men. But this has been an old custom with all the seed, the sons of the serpent. As to religious soldiers, they are far to seek, and ill to find, according to the old proverb.

Ye know the man, and his communication.] Ye know that he is a madman, and that his message must be a message of folly. Jehu did not appear willing to tell them what had been done, lest it should promote jealousy and envy.

Verse 12. They said, It is false] Or, as the Chaldee has it, thou liest. Or, perhaps, it might be thus understood. "We know he has said

13 Then they hasted, and took every man his garment, and put it under him on the top of the stairs, and blew with trumpets, saying, Jehu is king.

14 So Jehu, the son of Jehoshaphat, the son of Nimshi, conspired against Joram. (Now Joram had kept Ramoth-gilead, he and all Israel, because of Hazael king of Syria.)

15 But King Joram was returned to be healed in Jezreel of the wounds which the Syrians had given him, when he fought with Hazael king of Syria.) And Jehu said, If it be your minds, then let none go forth nor escape out of the city to go to tell it in Jezreel.

16 ¶ So Jehu rode in a chariot, and went to Jezreel; for Joram lay there. *And Ahaziah king of Judah was come down to see Joram.

17 And there stood a watchman on the tower in Jezreel, and he spied the company of Jehu as he came, and said, nothing but folly and lies; nevertheless, let us hear what he has said."

Verse 13. Took every man his garment] This was a ceremony by which they acknowledged him as king; and it was by such a ceremony that the multitudes acknowledged Jesus Christ for the Messiah and King of Israel, a little before his passion: see Matt. xxi. 7. and the note there. The ceremony was expressive: "As we put our garments under his feet; so we place every thing under his authority, and acknowledge ourselves his servants."

On the top of the stairs] The Chaldees, the rabbins, and several interpreters, understand this of the public sundial; which, in those ancient times, was formed of steps like stairs, each step serving to indicate, by its shadow, one hour, or such division of time as was commonly used in that country. This dial was, no doubt, in the most public place; and upon the top of it, or on the platform on the top, would be a very proper place to set Jehu, while they blew their trumpets, and proclaimed him king. The Hebrew maaloth מַעְלוֹת is the same word which is used chap. xx. 9, 10, 11. to signify the dial of Ahaz; and this was probably the very same dial on which that miracle was afterward wrought: and this dial, maaloth, from al אֵל, to go up, ascend, was most evidently made of steps; the shadows projected on which, by a gnomon, at the different elevations of the sun, would serve to show the popular divisions of time. See the notes on chap. xx. 9, &c. and the diagram at the end of that chapter.

Verse 14. Joram had kept Ramoth-gilead]

I see a company. And Joram said, Take a horseman, and send to meet them, and let him say, Is it peace?

18 So there went one on horseback to meet him, and said, Thus saith the king, Is it peace? And Jehu said, What hast thou to do with peace? turn thee behind me. And the watchman told, saying, The messenger came to them, but he cometh not again.

19 Then he sent out a second on horseback, which came to them, and said, Thus saith the king, Is it peace? And Jehu answered, What hast thou to do with peace? turn thee behind me.

20 And the watchman told, saying, He came even unto them, and cometh not again: and the driving is like the driving of Jehu the son of Nimshi; for he driveth furiously.

21 And Joram said, Make ready. And his chariot was made ready. And Joram king of Israel, and Ahaziah king of Judah, went out, each in his chariot, and they went out against

The confederate armies appear to have taken this city; but they were obliged to watch their conquest, as they perceived that Hazael was determined to retake it if possible.

Verse 16. Jehu—went to Jezreel; for Joram lay there.] From the preceding verse we learn, that Joram had been wounded in his attack on Ramoth-gilead, and had gone to Jezreel to be cured; and neither he nor Ahaziah knew any thing of the conspiracy in Ramoth-gilead, because Jehu and his captains took care to prevent any person from leaving the city; so that the two kings at Jezreel knew nothing of what had taken place.

Verse 17. A watchman on the tower] These watchmen, fixed on elevated places, and generally within hearing of each other, served as a kind of telegraphs, to communicate intelligence through the whole country. But, in some cases, it appears that the intelligence was conveyed by a horseman to the next stage, as in the case before us. At this time, when the armies were at Ramoth-gilead, they were, no doubt, doubly watchful to observe the state of the country, and to notice every movement. See on 2 Sam. xiii. 34.

Verse 18. What hast thou to do with peace] "What is it to thee whether there be peace or war? Join my company, and fall into the rear."

Verse 20. He driveth furiously.] Jehu was a bold, daring, prompt, and precipitate general. In his various military operations he had established his character; and now it was almost proverbial.

Verse 21. Joram—and Ahaziah—went out] They had no suspicion of what was done at Jehu, and ^c met him in the portion of Naboth the Jezreelite.

22 And it came to pass, when Joram saw Jehu, that he said, Is it peace, Jehu? And he answered, What peace, so long as the whoredoms of thy mother Jezebel and her witchcrafts are so many?

23 And Joram turned his hands, and fled, and said to Ahaziah, There is treachery, O Ahaziah.

24 And Jehu ^a drew a bow with his full strength, and smote Jehoram between his arms, and the arrow went out at his heart, and he ^e sunk down in his chariot.

25 Then said Jehu to Bidkar his captain, Take up, and cast him in the portion of the field of Naboth the Jezreelite: for remember how that, when I and thou rode together after Ahab his father, ^f the LORD laid this burden upon him;

Ramoth-gilead; else they would not have ventured their persons as they now did.

Verse 22. What peace, so long as the whoredoms] Though the words whoredom, adultery, and fornication, are frequently used to express idolatry, and false religion, in general; yet here they may be safely taken in their common and most obvious sense, as there is much reason to believe that Jezebel was the patroness and supporter of a very impure system of religion; and to this Jehu might rather refer than to the calves-worship, to which himself was most favourably disposed.

Verse 23. There is treachery, O Ahaziah.] This was the first intimation he had of it: he feels for the safety of his friend Ahaziah, and now they fly for their lives.

Verse 24. Drew a bow with his full strength] The marginal reading is correct; He filled his hand with a bow. That is, "He immediately took up his bow, set his arrow, and let fly." This is the only meaning of the passage.

Between his arms] That is, between his shoulders; for he was now turned, and was flying from Jehu.

Verse 25. Cast him in the portion of the field] This was predicted, 1 Kings xxi; and what now happened to the son of Ahab, is foretold in ver. 29. of that chapter.

Verse 26. The blood of Naboth, and the blood of his sons] We are not informed in 1 Kings xxi. that any of Naboth's family was slain but himself: but as the object both of Ahab and Jezebel was to have Naboth's vineyard entirely, and for ever; it is not likely that they would leave any of his posterity, who might, at a future time, reclaim it as their inheritance. Again, to secure this point, Jezebel had Naboth convicted of treason and atheism;

27 ¶ But when Ahaziah the king of Judah saw this, he fled by the way of the garden-house. And Jehu followed after him, and said, Smite him also in the chariot. And they did so at the going up to Gur, which is by Ibleam. And he fled to ^k Megiddo, and died there.

28 And his servants carried him in a chariot to Jerusalem, and buried him in his sepulchre with his fathers in the city of David.

in order that his whole family might be involved in his ruin.

Verse 27. Fled by the way of the garden] The account of the death of Ahaziah, as given in 2 Chron. xxii. 8, 9. is very different from that given here: When Jehu was executing judgment upon the house of Ahab—he sought Ahaziah; and they caught him, (for he was hid in Samaria) and brought him to Jehu; and when they had slain him, they buried him. "The current of the story at large is this," says Dr. Lightfoot, "Jehu slayeth Joram in the field of Jezreel, as Ahaziah and Joram were together; Ahaziah seeing this, flies, and gets into Samaria, and hides himself there. Jehu marcheth to Jezreel, and makes Jezebel dogs' meat: from thence he sends to Samaria for the heads of Ahab's children and posterity; which are brought him by night, and showed to the people in the morning. Then he marcheth to Samaria, and by the way slayeth forty-two of Ahab's kinsmen; and findeth Jehonadab, the father of the Rechabites. Coming into Samaria, he maketh search for Ahaziah: they find him hid, bring him to Jehu, and he commands to carry him up toward Gur, by Ibleam, and there to slay him. It may be, his father Joram had slain his brethren there, as Ahab had done Naboth, in Jezreel: They do so; smite him there in his chariot, and his charioteer driveth away to Megiddo before he dies. The story in the Book of Kings is short; but the Book of Chronicles shows the order." Lightfoot's Works, vol. i. p. 88.

Verse 29. In the eleventh year of Joram] The note in our margin contains as good an account of this chronological difficulty as can be reasonably required: Then he began to reign as viceroy to his father in his sickness, 2 Chron.

xxi. 18, 19. But in Joram's twelfth year he began to reign alone, chap. viii. 26.

Verse 30. She painted her face, and tired her head.] She endeavoured to improve the appearance of her complexion by paint; and the general effect of her countenance by a tiara, or turban head-dress. Jonathan, the Chaldee Targumist, so often quoted, translates this, וְהָחֵל וְהָחֵל vecachalath bitsdida eynaha; "She stained her eyes with stibium, or antimony." This is a custom in Asiatic countries to the present day. From a late traveller in Persia, I borrow the following account:—

"The Persians differ as much from us in their notions of beauty, as they do in those of taste. A large, soft, and languishing black eye, with them, constitutes the perfection of beauty. It is chiefly on this account that the women use the powder of antimony, which, although it adds to the vivacity of the eye, throws a kind of voluptuous languor over it, which makes it appear (if I may use the expression,) dissolving in bliss. The Persian women have a curious custom of making their eyebrows meet: and if this charm be denied them, they paint the forehead with a kind of preparation made for that purpose." E. S. Waring's Tour to Sheeraz, 4to. 1807. page 62.

This casts light enough on Jezebel's painting, &c. and shows sufficiently with what design she did it; to conquer and disarm Jehu, and induce him to take her for wife, as Jarchi supposes. This staining of the eye with stibium, and painting, was a universal custom, not only in Asiatic countries, but also in all those that bordered on them, or had connexions with them. The prophet Ezekiel mentions the painting of the eyes, chap. xxiii. 40.

That the Romans painted their eyes, we have the most positive evidence. Pliny says, Tanta est decoris affectatio ut tinguantur oculi quoque. Hist. Nat. lib. xi. cap. 37. "Such is their affection of ornament, that they paint their eyes also." That this painting was with stibium or antimony, is plain, from these words of St. Cyprian, De Opere et Eleemosynis, Inuange oculos tuos non stibio diaboli, sed collyrio Christi; "Anoint your eyes, not with the devil's antimony, but with the eye-salve of Christ." Juvenal is plain on the same subject. Men as well as women, in Rome, practised it:

34 And when he was come in, he did eat and drink, and said, Go, see now this cursed woman, and bury her: for ^p she is a king's daughter.

35 And they went to bury her: but they found no more of her than the skull, and the feet, and the palms of her hands.

36 Wherefore they came again, and told him. And he said, This is the word of the LORD, which he spake^r by his servant Elijah the Tishbite, saying, Attollens oculos.*

Sat. ii. ver. 93.
"With sooty moisture one his eyebrows dies;
And with a dookin paints his trembling eyes."

The manner in which the women in Barbary do it, Dr. Russel particularly describes:—"Upon the principle of strengthening the sight, as well as an ornament, it is become a general practice among the women, to black the middle of their eyelids, by applying a powder called ismed. Their method of doing it is by a cylindrical piece of silver, steel, or ivory, about two inches long, made very smooth; and about the size of a common probe. This they wet with water, in order that the powder may stick to it; and applying the middle part horizontally to the eye, they shut the eyelids upon it, and so drawing it through between them, it blacks the inside, leaving a narrow black rim all round the edge. This is sometimes practised by the men, but is then regarded as foppish." Russel's Nat. Hist. of Aleppo, page 102. See Parkhurst, sub. voc. מן.

Verse 31. Had Zimri peace, who slew his master?] Jarchi paraphrases this place thus:—"If thou hast slain thy master, it is no new thing; for Zimri also slew Elah, the son of Baasha:" which words were rather intended to conciliate than to provoke. But the words are understood by most of the versions thus:—Health to Zimri, the slayer of his master!

Verse 33. So they threw her down.] What a terrible death! She was already, by the fall, almost dashed to pieces; and the brutal Jehu trampled her already mangled body under his horse's feet!

Verse 34. She is a king's daughter.] Jezebel was certainly a woman of a very high lineage. She was daughter of the king of Tyre; wife of Ahab, king of Israel; mother of Joram, king of Israel; mother-in-law of Joram, king of Judah; and grandmother to Ahaziah, king of Judah.

Verse 35. The skull—the feet, and the palms of her hands.] The dogs did not eat those parts, say Jarchi and Kimchi, because in her festal dances she danced like a dog, on her hands and feet; wantonly moving her head. What other meaning these rabbins had, I do not inquire. She was, no doubt, guilty of the foulest actions; and was almost too bad to be belied.

How literally was the prediction delivered in the preceding book, (1 Kings xxi. 33.) The dogs shall eat Jezebel by the wall of Jezreel, fulfilled! And how dearly did she and her husband Ahab pay for the murder of innocent Naboth!

Verse 37. And the carcass of Jezebel shall be as dung] As it was not buried under the earth, but was eaten by the dogs, this saying was also literally fulfilled.

They shall not say, This is Jezebel.] As she could not be buried, she could have no funeral monument. Though so great a woman by her birth, connexions, and alliances, she had not the honour of a tomb! There was not even a solitary stone, to say Here lies Jezebel! Not even a mound of earth to designate the place of her sepulture! Judgment is God's strange work; but when he contends, how terrible are his judgments! and when he ariseth to execute judgment, who shall stay his hand! CHAPTER X.

Jehu sends an ironical letter to the elders of Samaria, telling them to choose one of the best of their master's sons, and put him on the throne: to which they return a submissive answer, 1-6. He writes a second letter, and orders them to send him the heads of Ahab's seventy sons: they do so; and they are laid in two heaps, at the gate of Jezreel, 7, 8. Jehu shows them to the people, and excuses himself, and states that all is done according to the word of the Lord, 9, 10. He destroys all the kindred of Ahab that remained in Jezreel, 11. He also destroys forty-two men, the brethren of Ahaziah, king of Judah, 12-14. He meets with Jehonadab, and takes him with him in his chariot, 15, 16. He comes to Samaria, and destroys all that were of the kindred of Ahab there, 17. He pretends a great zeal for the worship of Baal, and gathers all his priests together, under the pretence of a grand sacrifice, and slays them all, 18-25. He burns Baal's images, and makes his temple a dung-house, 25-28. But he does not depart from the sins of Jeroboam, and does not prosper, 29-31. Hazael vexes Israel, 32, 33. Jehu dies, having reigned over Israel in Samaria, twenty-eight years, 34-36.

NOTES ON CHAPTER X.

Verse 1. Ahab had seventy sons] As he had several wives, he might have many children. The Israelites, from the earliest part of their history, were remarkably fruitful. How amazingly did they multiply in Egypt, even under the hand of the severest oppression! And as to the individuals of whose families we have account, they are quite remarkable: Rehoboam had thirty-eight sons; Abdon had forty; Tola had thirty; Ahab seventy; and Gideon seventy-one.

Unto the rulers of Jezreel] It certainly should be, unto the rulers of Samaria: for, to them and to that city, the whole context shows us the letters were sent. See ver. 6.

To them that brought up Ahab's children] It appears that the royal children of Israel and Judah were entrusted to the care of the nobles, and were brought up by them; (see ver. 6.) and to these, therefore, Jehu's letters are directed. It is supposed Isaiah (xlix. 23.) alludes and said, Behold, two kings stood not before him; how then shall we stand?

5 And he that was over the house, and he that was over the city, the elders also, and the bringers up of the children, sent to Jehu, saying, We are thy servants, and will do all that thou shalt bid us; we will not make anyking: do thou that which is good in thine eyes.

6 Then he wrote a letter the second time to them, saying, If ye be mine, and if ye will hearken unto my voice, take ye the heads of the men your master's sons, and come to me to Jezreel by to-morrow this time. Now the

to this custom: kings shall be thy nursing fathers; and queens thy nursing mothers.

Verse 2. A fenced city also] All here seems to refer to Samaria alone; in it were the magazines and implements of war, &c. No reader need be told that these letters were all ironical. It was the same as if he had said, "Ye have no means of defence; Israel is with me: if you yield not up yourselves and the city, I will put you all to the sword."

Verse 4. Two kings stood not before him] That is, Joram and Ahaziah.

Verse 5. He that was over the house, &c.] Thus all the constituted authorities agreed to submit.

Will do all that thou shalt bid us] They made no conditions; and stood pledged to commit the horrid murders which this most execrable man afterward commanded.

Verse 6. Come to me to Jezreel] Therefore, the letters were not written to Jezreel, but from Jezreel to Samaria.

king's sons, being seventy persons, were with the great men of the city, which brought them up.

7 And it came to pass, when the letter came to them, that they took the king's sons, and slew seventy persons, and put their heads in baskets, and sent him them to Jezreel.

8 ¶ And there came a messenger, and told him, saying, They have brought the heads of the king's sons. And he said, Lay ye them in two heaps at the entering in of the gate until the morning.

9 And it came to pass in the morning, that he went out, and stood, and said to all the people, Ye be righteous: behold, ^d I conspired against my master, and slew him: but who slew all these?

10 Know now, that there shall ^e fall unto the earth nothing of the word of the LORD, which the LORD spake concerning the house of Ahab: for the LORD hath done that which he spake ^f by ^g his servant Elijah.

11 So Jehu slew all that remained of the house of Ahab in Jezreel, and all his great men, and his ^hkins-folks, and his priests, until he left him none remaining.

12 ¶ And he arose and departed, and came to Samaria. And as he was at the ⁱshearing-house in the way,

13 ^k Jehu ^l met with the brethren of Ahaziah king of Judah, and said, Who are ye? And they answered, We are the brethren of Ahaziah; and we go down ^m to salute the children of the king, and the children of the queen.

14 And he said, Take them alive. And they took them alive, and slew them at the pit of the shearing-house, even two and forty men; neither left he any of them.

15 ¶ And when he was departed thence, he ⁿ lighted on ^o Jehonadab the son of ^p Rechab coming to meet him: and he ^r saluted him, and said to him, Is thine heart right, as my heart is with thy heart? And Jehonadab answered, It is. If it be, ^s give me thine hand. And he gave him his hand; and he took him up to him into the chariot.

16 And he said, Come with me, and

Verse 7. Put their heads in baskets] What cold-blooded wretches were the whole of these people!

Verse 8. Lay ye them in two heaps] It appears that the heads of these princes had arrived at Jezreel in the night time: Jehu ordered them to be left at the gate of the city, a place of public resort, that all the people might see them, and be struck with terror, and conclude that all resistance to such authority and power would be vain.

Verse 9. Ye be righteous] Another irony; intended partly to excuse himself, and to involve them in the odium of this massacre; and, at the same time, to justify the conduct of both, by showing that all was done according to the commandment of the Lord.

Verse 11. Jehu slew all] So it appears that the great men, who had so obsequiously taken off the heads of Ahab's seventy sons, fell also a sacrifice to the ambition of this incomparably bad man.

Verse 12. The shearing-house] Probably the place where the shepherds met for the annual sheep-shearing.

Verse 13. The brethren of Ahaziah] The relatives of his family; for it does not appear that he had any brethren, properly so called: but we know that the term brethren, among the Jews, signified the relatives of the same family; and especially brothers' and sisters' children; and that these were such, see 2 Chron. xxii. 8.

We go down to salute, &c.] So promptly had Jehu executed all his measures, that even the nearest relatives of the murdered kings had not heard of their death; and, consequently, had no time to escape. They were all taken as in a net.

Verse 14. The pit of the shearing-house] Probably the place where they washed the sheep, previously to shearing; or the fleeces after they were shorn off.

Verse 15. Jehonadab the son of Rechab] For particulars concerning this man, his ancestry, and posterity, see the notes on Jerem. xxxv.

Is thine heart right] With me, in the prosecution of a reform in Israel; as my heart is with thy heart in the true religion of Jehovah, and the destruction of Baal.

It is.] I wish a reform in the religion of the country; I am his friend who shall endeavour to promote it.

Give me thine hand.] This has been generally considered as exacting a promise from Jehonadab;—but does it mean any more than his taking him by the hand, to help him to step into the chariot, in which Jehu was then sitting? Jehonadab was, doubtless, a very honourable man in Israel; and by carrying him about with him in his chariot, Jehu endeavoured to acquire the public esteem. "Jehu must be acting right; for Jehonadab is with him, and approves his conduct."

20 And Jehu said, ^y Proclaim a solemn assembly for Baal. And they proclaimed it.

derous hypocrite! Thou have zeal for Jehovah, and his pure religion! Witness thy calves at Dan and Beth-el, and the general profrigacy of thy conduct! He who can call another to witness his zeal for religion, or his works of charity, has as much of both as serves his own turn.

Verse 18. Ahab served Baal a little] Jehu had determined to have no worship in Israel, but that of the golden calves, at Dan and Beth-el; therefore, he purposes to destroy all the worshippers of Baal: and that he may do it without suspicion, he proclaims a great sacrifice; and that he may do it the more easily, he gathers them all together into one place.

Verse 19. Whosoever shall be wanting, he shall not live.] Because as he will thereby show himself without zeal for the service of his god, he will justly forfeit his life. All this was done in the very spirit of deceit.

Verse 22. He said unto him that was over the vestry] The word vestry comes from vestiarium, and that from vestes, garments, from vestio, I clothe; and signifies, properly, the place where the sacerdotal robes and pontifical ornaments are kept. The priests of Baal had their robes, as well as the priests of the Lord; but their garments were such that one could be easily distinguished from the other.

Verse 13. None of the servants of the LORD] Though he was not attached to that service, yet he would tolerate it: and as he was led to suppose that he was fulfilling the will of Jehovah in what he was doing, he would of course treat his worship and worshippers with the more respect.

Verse 25. As soon as he had made an end of offering.] Had Jehu been a man of any conscientious principle in religion, he would have finished the tragedy before he offered the burnt-offering. But, to a man of no religion, the worship of Jehovah and of Baal are alike. If, as a statesman, he prefers either, it is merely for political purposes.

For political purposes: To the guard and to the captains לְרִיזִים וְלִשְׁלָשִׁים leratzim u-le-shalashim; to the couriers, the runners, and the shalashim, the men of the third rank: those officers who were next to the nobles; the king and these being only their superiors. The runners were probably a sort of light infantry.

The city of the house of Baal.] Does not this mean a sort of holy of holies, where the most sacred images of Baal were kept? A place separated from the temple of Baal, as the holy of holies in the temple of Jehovah was separated from what was called The Holy Place.

Verse 27. Made it a draught-house] A place for human excrement: so all the versions understand it. Nothing could be more degrading than this; he made it a public necessary.

Verse 30. Thy children of the fourth generation] These four descendants of Jehu were Jehoahaz, Jehoash, Jeroboam the second, and Zechariah; see chap. xiv. and xv. This was all the compensation Jehu had in either world, for the recompense of his zeal for the Lord.

Verse 31. Jehu took no heed] He never made it his study: indeed he never intended to walk in this way; it neither suited his disposition nor his politics.

Verse 32. The Lord began to cut Israel short] The marginal reading is best: the Lord cut off the ends; and this he did, by permitting Hazael to seize on the coasts, to conquer and occupy the frontier towns. This was the commencement of those miserable ravages which Elisha predicted; see chap. viii. 12. And we find from the next verse, that he seized on all the land of Gilead, and that of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh; in a word, whatever Israel possessed on the east side of Jordan. The reader may see the extent of territory which Hazael had now conquered from Israel, by looking at the map at the end of Deuteronomy.

Verse 34. Are they not written in the book of the Chronicles] We have no chronicles in which there is any thing farther spoken of this bad man. His reign was long, twenty-eight years; and yet we know nothing of it but the commencement.

For barbarity and hypocrisy, Jehu has few parallels; and the cowardliness and baseness of the nobles of Samaria have seldom been equalled. Ahab's bloody house must be cut off:—but did God ever design that it should be done by these means? The men were, no doubt, profligate and wicked; and God permitted their iniquity to manifest itself in this way, and thus the purpose of God, that Ahab's house should no more reign, was completely accomplished: see 1 Kings xxii. 19, 21, 29. And, by this conduct, Jehu is said to have executed what was right in God's eyes, ver. 30. The cutting off of Ahab's family was decreed by the divine justice; the means by which it was done, or at least the manner of doing, were not entirely of this appointing: yet the commission given him by the young prophet, chap. ix. 7. was very extensive. Yet still many things seem to be attributed to God, as the agent, which he does not execute, but only permits to be done.

CHAPTER XI.

Athaliah destroys all that remain of the seed royal of Judah, 1. Jehoshaphat hides Joash, the son of Ahaziah; and he remains hidden in the house of the lord six years: and Athaliah reigns over the land, 2, 3. Jehoiaha, the high priest, calls the nobles privately together in the temple, shows them the king's son, takes an oath of them, arms them, places guards around the temple, and around the young king's person; they anoint, and proclaim him, 4—12. Athaliah is alarmed, comes into the temple, is seized, carried forth, and slain, 13—16. Jehoiaha causes the people to enter into a covenant with the Lord; they destroy Baal's house, priest, and images, 17, 18. Joash is brought to the king's house; reigns, and all the land rejoices, 29—31.

3 And he was with her hid in the house of the LORD six years. And Athaliah did reign over the land.

4 ¶ And ^f the seventh year Jehoiada sent and fetched the rulers over hundreds, with the captains and the guard, and brought them to him into the house of the LORD, and made a covenant with them, and took an oath of them in the house of the LORD, and showed them the king's son.

9 ^l And the captains over the hundreds did according to all things that Jehoiada the priest commanded: and they took every man his men that were to come in on the sabbath, with them that should go out on the sabbath, and came to Jehoiada the priest.

10 And to the captains over hundreds did the priest give King David's spears and shields, that were in the temple of the LORD.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XI.

Verse 1. Athaliah] This woman was the daughter of Ahab, and granddaughter of Omri, and wife to Joram king of Judah, and mother of Ahaziah.

Destroyed all the seed royal.] All that she could lay her hands on, whom Jehu had left; in order that she might get undisturbed possession of the kingdom.

How dreadful is the lust of reigning! it destroys all the charities of life; and turns fathers, mothers, brothers, and children, into the most ferocious savages! Who makes any conscience, who has it in his power,

"To swim to sovereign rule through seas of blood!"

In what a dreadful state is that land that is exposed to political revolutions: and where the succession to the throne is not most positively settled by the clearest and most decisive law! Reader, beware of revolutions; there have been some useful ones; but they are, in general, the heaviest curse of God.

Verse 2. Daughter of—Joram, sister of Ahaziah] It is not likely that Jehosheba was the daughter of Athaliah; she was sister, we find, to Ahaziah, the son of Athaliah, but probably by a different mother. The mother of Jehoash was Zibiah of Beer-sheba: see chap. xii. 1.

Verse 3. He was—hid in the house of the LORD] This might be readily done, because none had access to the temple but the priests: and the high priest himself was the chief manager of this business.

Verse 4. And the seventh year Jehoiada sent] He had certainly sounded them all, and brought them into the interests of the young king before this time: the plot having been laid, and now ripe for execution, he brings the chief officers of the army, and those of the body-guard, into the temple, and there binds them by an oath of secrecy; and shows them the king's son, in whose behalf they are to arise.

Verse 5. That enter in on the sabbath] It appears that Jehoiada chose the sabbath day to proclaim the young king, because, as that was a day of public concourse, the gathering together of the people who were in this secret would not be noticed: and it is likely that they all came unarmed, and were supplied by Jehoiada with the spears and shields which David had laid up in the temple, ver. 10.

The priests and Levites were divided into twenty-four classes by David, and each served a week by turns in the temple: and it was on the sabbath that they began the weekly service: all this favoured Jehoiada's design.

Verse 10. King David's spears and shields] Josephus expressly says, that David had pro-

12 And he brought forth the king's son, and put the crown upon him, and gave him the testimony; and they made him king, and anointed him; and they clapped their hands, and said, "God save the king."

13 ¶ And when Athaliah heard the noise of the guard and of the people, she came to the people into the temple of the LORD.

14 And when she looked, behold, the king stood by a pillar, as the manner was, and the princes and the trumpeters by the king, and all the people of the land rejoiced, and blew with trumpets: and Athaliah rent her clothes, and cried, Treason, Treason.

15 But Jehoiada the priest commanded the captains of the hundreds, the officers of the host, and said unto them, Have her forth without the ranges: and him that followeth her kill with the sword. For the priest had said, Let her not be slain in the house of the LORD.

vided an arsenal for the temple, out of which Jehoiada took those arms. His words are, Ανοίξας δὲ Ἰωαδὰς τὴν ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ ὀπλοθήκην, ἣν Δαβὶδ κατασκευασε, διέμερισε τοῖς ἐκατονταρχαῖς ἅμα καὶ ἱεροῖσι καὶ λευίταις ἀπὸ τοῦ ὅσα εὗρεν ἐν αὐτῇ, δοῦρα τε καὶ φαισάρια, καὶ εἰ τι ἕτερον εἶδος ὀπλοῦ κατελάβε. "And Jehoiada having opened the arsenal in the temple, which David had prepared, he divided among the centurions, priests, and Levites, the spears, (arrows,) and quivers, and all other kinds of weapons which he found there." Ant. lib. ix. c. 7. s. 2.

Verse 12. Put the crown upon him] This was a diadem, or a golden band, that went round the head.

And—the testimony] Probably the book of the law, written on a roll of vellum. This was his sceptre. Some think that it was placed upon his head, as well as the diadem. The diadem, the testimony, and the anointing oil, were essential to his consecration.

They clapped their hands] This, I believe, is the first instance on record of clapping the hands as a testimony of joy.

God save the king.] יהי חמ-מעלך Yechi ham-melech; May the king live! And so the words should be translated wherever they occur.

Verse 14. The king stood by a pillar] Stood on a pillar, or tribunal; the place or throne on which they were accustomed to put the kings when they proclaimed them.

Treason, Treason.] קשר קשר kasher, kasher; a conspiracy, a conspiracy! from kashar, to bind, unite together.

Verse 15. Have her forth] She had pressed in among the guards into the temple.

16 And they laid hands on her: and she went by the way by the which the horses came into the king's house: and there was she slain.

17 ¶ And Jehoiada made a covenant between the LORD and the king and the people, that they should be the LORD's people; between the king also and the people.

18 And all the people of the land went into the house of Baal, and brake it down; his altars and his images brake they in pieces thoroughly, and slew Mattan the priest of Baal before the altars. And the priest appointed officers over the house of the LORD.

19 And he took the rulers over hundreds, and the captains, and the guard, and all the people of the land; and they brought down the king from the house of the LORD, and came by the way of the gate of the guard to the king's house. And he sat on the throne of the kings.

¶ 2 Sam. 5. 3.—Ch. 10. 26.—Deut. 12. 3. 2 Chron. 12. 17.—2 Chron. 23. 18, &c.—Heb. officers.

And him that followeth] The person who takes her part, let him instantly be slain.

Verse 16. By the way—which the horses came] They probably brought her out near the king's stables. It has been supposed, from Ezek. xlv. 1, 2, that the east gate of the inner court was that by which the king entered on the sabbath day; whereas on all other days he entered by the south gate. And there was another gate, called the horse gate, in the wall of the city, Jer. xxxi. 39; this was for the king's horses to go out at from the stables at Millo, and is therefore called, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 15. The horse gate toward the king's house.

Verse 17. Jehoiada made a covenant] A general covenant was first made between the Lord, the Supreme King, the king his viceroy, and the people, that they should all be the Lord's people; each being equally bound to live according to the divine law.

Then, secondly, a particular covenant was made between the king and the people; by which the king was bound to rule according to the laws and constitution of the kingdom, and to watch and live for the safety of the public. And the people were bound, on their part, to love, honour, succour, and obey the king. Where these mutual and just agreements are made and maintained, there can be nothing else than prosperity in the church and the state.

Verse 18. His altars and images brake they in pieces] It is probable that Athaliah had set up the worship of Baal in Judah, as Jezebel had done in Israel; or, probably, it had never been removed since the days of Solomon. It was no wonder that Jehoiada began his reform

NOTES ON CHAPTER XII.

Verse 2. Jehoash did—right in the sight of the LORD] While Jehoiada the priest, who was a pious, holy man, lived, Jehoash walked uprightly: but it appears from 2 Chron. xxiv. 17, 18. that he departed from the worship of the true God, after the death of this eminent high priest; lapsed into idolatry; and seems to have had a share in the murder of Zechariah, who testified against his transgressions, and those of the princes of Judah. See above, ib. 20—22.

O how few of the few who begin to live to God, continue unto the end!

Verse 3. The high places were not taken away] Without the total destruction of these there could be no radical reform. The toleration of any species of idolatry in the land, whatever else was done in behalf of true religion, left, and in effect fostered, a seed, which, springing up, regenerated in time the whole infernal system. Jehoiada did not use his influence as he might have done; for, as he had the king's heart and hand with him, he might have done what he pleased.

Verse 4. All the money of the dedicated things] From all this account we find that the temple was in a very ruinous state: the walls were falling down, some had perhaps actually fallen; and there was no person so zealous for the pure worship of God, as to exert himself to shoar up the falling temple!

The king himself seems to have been the first who noticed these dilapidations, and took measures for the necessary repairs. The repairs were made from the following sources:—1. The things which pious persons had dedicated to the service of God. 2. The freewill-offerings of strangers, who had visited Jerusalem; the money of every one that passeth. 3. The half-shekel, which the males were obliged to pay from the age of twenty years, Exod. xxx. 12. for the redemption of their souls: which is here called the money that every man is set at. All these sources had ever been in some measure open; but, instead of repairing the dilapidations in the Lord's house, the priests and Levites had converted the income to their own use.

Verse 6. In the three and twentieth year] In what year Jehoash gave the orders for these repairs we cannot tell; but the account here the breaches of the house?

Now therefore receive no more money of your acquaintance, but deliver it for the breaches of the house.

8 And the priests consented to receive no more money of the people, neither to repair the breaches of the house.

9 But Jehoiada the priest took ^a a chest, and bored a hole in the lid of it, and set it beside the altar, on the right side as one cometh into the house of the LORD: and the priests that kept the ^o door put therein all the money that was brought into the house of the LORD.

10 And it was so, when they saw that there was much money in the chest, that the king's ^p scribe and the high priest came up, and they ^r put up in bags, and told the money that was found in the house of the LORD.

11 And they gave the money, being told, into the hands of them that did the work, that had the oversight of the house of the LORD: and they ^s laid it out to the carpenters and builders, that wrought upon the house of the LORD.

12 And to masons, and hewers of stone, and to buy timber and hewed stone to repair the breaches of the house of the LORD, and for all that was laid out for the house to repair it.

13 Howbeit ^t there were not made for the house of the LORD bowls of silver, snuffers, basins, trumpets, any vessels of gold, or vessels of silver, of the money that was brought into the house of the LORD:

14 But they gave that to the workmen, and repaired therewith the house of the LORD.

15 Moreover ^v they reckoned not with the men, into whose hand they delivered the money to be bestowed on workmen: for they dealt faithfully.

plainly intimates that they had been long given, and that nothing was done, merely through the inactivity and negligence of the priests: see 2 Chron. xxiv. 5.

It seems that the people had brought money in abundance; and the pious Jehoiada was over the priests, and yet nothing was done! Though Jehoiada was a good man, he does not appear to have had much of the spirit of an active zeal; and simple piety, without zeal and activity, is of little use when a reformation in religion and manners is necessary to be brought about. Philip Melancthon was orthodox, pious, and learned; but he was a man of comparative inactivity. In many respects Martin Luther was by far his inferior; but in zeal and activity he was a flaming and consuming fire: and by him, under God, was the mighty Reformation from the corruptions of Popery effected. Ten thousand Jehoiadas and Melancthons might have wished it in vain: Luther worked; and God worked by him, in him, and for him.

Verse 9. Jehoiada—took a chest] This chest was at first set beside the altar, as is here mentioned; but afterward, for the convenience of the people, it was set without the gate: see 2 Chron. xxiv. 8.

Verse 10. The king's scribe and the high priest] It was necessary to associate with the high priest some civil authority and activity, in order to get the neglected work performed.

Verse 13. Howbeit there were not made—bowls, &c.] That is, there were no vessels made for the service of the temple till all the outward repairs were completed; but, after this was done, they brought the rest of the money before the king and Jehoiada, whereof were made vessels of gold and silver; 2 Chron. xxiv. 14.

Verse 15. They reckoned not with the men] They placed great confidence in them, and were not disappointed, for they dealt faithfully.

Verse 17. Hazael—fought against Gath, and took it] This city, with its satrapy, or lordship, had been taken from the Philistines by David; see 2 Sam. viii. 1. and 1 Chron. xviii. 1. And it had continued in the possession of the kings of Judah till this time. On what pretence Hazael seized it we cannot tell: he had the ultima ratio regum, power to do it; and he wanted more territory.

Verse 18. Took all the hallowed things] He dearly bought a peace which was of short duration, for the next year Hazael returned; and Jehoash, having no more treasure, was obliged to hazard a battle, which he lost, and the principal part of his nobility, so that Judah was totally ruined, and Jehoash shortly after slain in his bed by his servants; 2 Chron.

Verse 19. The rest of the acts of Joash] We have already seen that this man, so promising in the beginning of his reign, apostatized, became an idolater, encouraged idolatry among his subjects, and put the high priest Zechariah, the son of Jehoiada, his benefactor, to death:
and now God visited that blood upon him by the hand of the tyrannous king of Syria, and by his own servants.

Verse 20. The house of Millo] Was a royal palace, built by Solomon; see 2 Sam. v. 9.
And Silla is supposed to be the name of the road, or causeway, that led to it. Millo was situated between the old city of Jerusalem and the city of David.

Verse 21. For Jozachar] This person is called Zabad, in 2 Chron. xxiv. 26; and *Shihouse of Millo, which goeth

as Jehozabad is said to be the son, not of Shomer, but of Shimrith a Moabitess.

They buried him with his fathers in the city of David] But they did not bury him in the sepulchres of the kings: this is supposed to express the popular disapprobation of his conduct.
Thus ended a reign full of promise and hope in the beginning, but profligate, cruel, and ruinous in the end. Never was the hand of God's justice more signally stretched out against an apostate king, and faithless people, than at this time. Now Hazael had a plenary commission:
the king, the nobles, and the people, were food for his sword; and, by a handful of Syrians, the mighty armies of Israel were overthrown:
For the army of the Syrians came with a small company of men, and the Lord delivered a very great host into their hand, because they had forsaken the Lord God, 2 Chron. xxiv. 24. Thus, as righteousness exalteth a nation, so sin is the disgrace and confusion of any people. Sin destroys both counsel and strength: and the wicked flee when none pursue.

and reigned seventeen years; fourteen alone, and three years with his son Joash: the fourteenth year was but just begun.

Verse 6. The grove also in Samaria] Asherah, or Astarte, remained in Samaria; and there was she worshipped, with all her abominable rites.

Verse 10. In the thirty and seventh year] Joash, the son of Jehoahaz, was associated with his father in the government, two years before his death. It is this association that is spoken of here. He succeeded him two years after, a little before the death of Elisha. Joash reigned sixteen years, which include the years he governed conjointly with his father. Calmet.

Verse 12. Wherewith he fought against Amaziah] This war with Amaziah may be seen in ample detail, 2 Chron. xxv; it ended in the total defeat of Amaziah, who was taken prisoner by Joash, and afterward slain in a conspiracy at Lachish. Joash took Jerusalem, broke down four hundred cubits of the wall, and took all the royal treasures, and the treasures of the house of God. See 2 Chron. xxv. 20—27.

Verse 14. Now Elisha was fallen sick] This is supposed to have taken place in the tenth year of Joash; and, if so, Elisha must have prophesied about sixty-five years.

O my father, my father] “What shall I do now thou art dying? thou art the only defence of Israel.” He accosts him with the same words which himself spoke to Elijah, when he was translated: see chap. ii. 12. and the note there.

Verse 15. Take bow and arrows] The bow, the arrows, and the smiting on the ground, were all emblematical things, indicative of the deliverance of Israel from Syria.

Verse 17. Open the window eastward] This was toward the country beyond Jordan, which Hazael had taken from the Israelites.

The arrow of deliverance from Syria] That is, as surely as that arrow is shot toward the lands conquered from Israel by the Syrians, so surely shall those lands be reconquered and restored to Israel: see ver. 25.

It was an ancient custom to shoot an arrow, or cast a spear, into the country which an army intended to invade. Justin says that, as soon as Alexander the Great had arrived on the coasts of Ionia, he threw a dart into the country of the Persians. Cum delati in continentem essent, primus Alexander jaculum velut in hostilem terram jecit.—Just. lib. ii.

The dart, spear, or arrow, thrown, was an emblem of the commencement of hostilities. Virgil, (Æn. lib. ix. ver. 51.) represents Tur- mus as giving the signal of attack, by throwing a spear:

Equis erit mecum, O Juvenes, qui primus in hostem? En, ait: et jaculum intorquens emittit in auras. Principium pugnae; et campo sese arduus infert.

"Who, first," he cried, "with me the foe will dare?"
Then hurl'd a dart, the signal of the war. Pitt.

Servius, in his note upon this place, shows that it was a custom to proclaim war in this way: the pater patratus, or chief of the Feciales, a sort of heralds, went to the confines of the enemy's country; and, after some solemnities, said, with a loud voice, I wage war with you, for such and such reasons; and then threw in a spear. It was then the business of the parties thus defied, or warned, to take the subject into consideration; and, if they did not, within thirty days, come to some accommodation, the war was begun.

Thou shalt smite the Syrians in Aphek] This was a city of Syria, and probably the place of the first battle; and there, it appears, they had a total overthrow. They were, in the language of the text, consumed, or exterminated.

Verse 18. Smite upon the ground] As he was ordered to take his arrows, the smiting on the ground must mean shooting arrows into it.

He smote thrice, and stayed] The prophet knew that this shooting was emblematical: probably the king was not aware of what depended on the frequency of the action; and perhaps it was of the Lord that he smote only thrice, as he had determined to give Israel those three victories only over the Syrians: Elisha's being wroth, because there were only three instead of five or six shots, does not prove that God was wroth; or that he had intended to give the Syrians five or six overthrows.

Verse 20. And Elisha died] The two prophets, Elisha and Elisha, were both most extraordinary men. Of the former it is difficult to say whether he was a man, or an angel in a human body. The arguments for this latter opinion are strong; the objections against it very feeble. His being fed by an angel, is no proof that he was not an angel incarnate; for God manifest in the flesh was fed by the same ministry. Of him the following, from Ecclesiasticus, chap. xlviii. 1—11, is a nervous character.

Ver. 1.—Then stood up Elias the prophet as fire, and his word burned like a lamp.

Ver. 2.—He brought a sore famine upon them, and by his zeal he diminished their number.

Ver. 3.—By the word of the Lord he shut up

Ver. 11.—Blessed are they that saw thee, and slept in love; for we shall surely live.

Elisha was not less eminent than Elijah: the history of his ministry is more detailed than that of his master; and his miracles are various and stupendous. In many things there is a striking likeness between him and our blessed Lord; and especially in the very beneficent miracles which he wrought. Of him the same author gives this character, ib. v. 12—14. Elisha was filled with his spirit: while he lived, he was not moved with the presence of any prince; neither could any bring him into subjection. Nothing could overcome him; and after his death his body prophesied: i. e. raised a dead man to life; as we learn from the following verse—He did wonders in his life; and at his death were his works marvellous: perhaps referring to his last acts with Joash.

The bands of the Moabites] Marauding parties; such as those mentioned chap. v. 2.

Verse 21. They spied a band] They saw one of these marauding parties; and, through fear, could not wait to bury their dead, but threw the body into the grave of Elisha, which chanced then to be open; and, as soon as it touched the bones of the prophet, the man was restored to life. This shows that the prophet did not perform his miracles by any powers of his own, but by the power of God: and he chose to honour his servant, by making even his bones the instrument of another miracle after his death. This is the first, and I believe the last, account of a true miracle performed by the bones of a dead man; and yet, on it and such like, the whole system of miraculous-working relics has been founded by the Popish church.

Verse 23. And the LORD was gracious unto them וַיַּיָּחֶם לָהֶם vaiyachon; he had tender affection for them, as a husband has for his wife, or a father for his own children.

And had compassion on them וַיִּרְחַם vairachamem, his bowels yearned over them; he felt for them, he sympathized with them in all their distress: Therefore are my bowels troubled; I will surely have mercy upon him, saith the Lord, Jer. xxxi. 20.

And had respect unto them וַיִּיָּחַץ vaiyipen, he turned his face toward them; he received them again into favour; and this because of his covenant with their fathers: they must not be totally destroyed; the Messiah must come from them; and through them must come that light which is to enlighten the Gentiles; and, therefore, he would not make an entire end of them.

Neither cast he them from his presence as yet. But now they are cast out from his presence; they have sinned against the only remedy for their souls. They sit in darkness, and the shadow of death: the veil is upon their face; but, if they yet turn to the Lord, the veil shall be taken away.

24 So Hazael king of Syria died; and Ben-hadad his son reigned in his stead.

Verse 25. Three times did Joash beat them The particulars of these battles we have not; but these three victories were according to the prediction of Elisha, ver. 19. That these victories were very decisive, we learn from their fruits; for Joash took from the Syrians the cities which Hazael had taken from Israel: viz. Gilead, the possessions of Reuben, Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh, and the country of Basan: see chap. x. 33.

Thus God accomplished his word of judgment, and his word of mercy. The Syrians found themselves to be but men, and the Israelites found they could do nothing without God. In the dispensations of his justice and mercy, God has ever in view, not only the comfort, support, and salvation of his followers; but also the conviction and salvation of his enemies; and by his judgments many of these have been awakened out of their sleep, turned to God, learned righteousness, and finally become as eminent for their obedience, as they were before for their rebellion.

and, therefore, he found it dangerous to bring them to justice, till he was assured of the loyalty of his other officers: when this was clear, he called them to account, and put them to death.

Verse 6. But the children of the murderers he slew not. Here he showed his conscientious regard for the law of Moses; for God had positively said, The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, neither shall the children be put to death for the fathers; every man shall be put to death for his own sin, Deut. xxiv. 16.

Verse 7. He slew of Edom in the valley of salt. This war is more circumstantially related in 2 Chron. xxv. 5, &c. The Idumeans had arisen, in the reign of Joram king of Judah, and shaken off the yoke of the house of David. Amaziah determined to reduce them to obedience; he therefore levied an army of three hundred thousand men in his own kingdom, and hired a hundred thousand Israelites, at the price of one hundred talents. When he was about to depart at the head of this numerous army, a prophet came to him, and ordered him to dismiss the Israelitish army, for God was not with them: and, on the king of Judah expressing regret for the loss of his hundred talents, he was answered, that the Lord could give him much more than that. He obeyed, sent back the Israelites, and, at the head of his own men, attacked the Edomites in the valley of salt; slew ten thousand on the spot, and took ten thousand prisoners, all of whom he precipitated from the rock, or Selah, which was afterward called Joktheel, a place or city supposed to be the same with Petra, which gave name to Arabia Petraea, where there must have been a great precipice; from which the place took its name of Selah, or Petra.

12 And Judah ^s was put to the worse before Israel; and they fled every man to their tents.

^m See Judges 9. 8.—ⁿ 1 Kings 4. 33.—^o Deut. 8. 14. 2 Chr. 32. 25. Ezek. 32. 2, 5, 17. Hab. 2. 4.—^p Heb. at thy house. ^r Josh. 19. 38. & 21. 16.—^s Heb. was smitten.

the ground of it is most evident from this circumstance: that the one hundred thousand men of Israel that had been dismissed, though they had the stipulated money, taking the advantage of Amaziah's absence, fell upon the cities of Judah, from Samaria to Beth-horon, and smote three thousand men, and took much spoil, 2 Chron. xxv. 10—13. Amaziah no doubt remonstrated with Jehoash, but to no purpose; and therefore he declared war against him.

Verse 9. Jehoash—sent to Amaziah—saying. The meaning of this parable is plain. The thistle that was in Lebanon, Amaziah, king of Judah, sent to the cedar that was in Lebanon, Jehoash, king of Israel, saying, Give thy daughter, a part of thy kingdom, to my son to wife: to be united to, and possessed by the kings of Judah. And there passed by a wild beast, Jehoash and his enraged army, and trode down the thistle, utterly discomfited Amaziah and his troops, pillaged the temple, and broke down the walls of Jerusalem: see verses 12—24. Probably Amaziah had required certain cities of Israel to be given up to Judah; if so, this accounts for that part of the parable, Give thy daughter to my son to wife.

Verse 10. Glory of this, and tarry at home. There is a vast deal of insolent dignity in this remonstrance of Jehoash: but it has nothing conciliatory; no proposal of making amends for the injury his army had done to the unfending inhabitants of Judah. The ravages committed by the army of Jehoash were totally unprovoked, and they were base and cowardly; they fell upon women, old men, and children, and butchered them in cold blood, for all the effective men were gone off with their king against the Edomites. The quarrel of Amaziah was certainly just, yet he was put to the rout: he did meddle to his hurt. He fell, and

Judah fell with him, as Jehoash had said:—but why was this? Why it came of God; for he had brought the gods of Seir, and set them up to be his gods, and bowed down himself before them, and burnt incense to them; therefore God delivered them into the hands of their enemies, because they sought after the gods of Edom, 2 Chron. xxv. 14, 20. This was the reason why the Israelites triumphed.

See the meaning of this word interpreted in the note on Gen. xxxviii. 17. It is likely that Amaziah gave some of the nobles or some of his own family as hostages, that he might regain his liberty; and they were to get their liberty when he had fulfilled his engagements: but of what kind these were we cannot tell; nor, indeed, how he got his liberty.

From the description that is here given, it appears that Jeroboam reconquered all the territory that had been taken from the kings of Israel, so that Jeroboam the second left the kingdom as ample as it was when the ten tribes separated, under Jeroboam the first.

Verse 26. The LORD saw the affliction of Israel] It appears that, about this time, Israel had been greatly reduced; and great calamities had fallen upon all, indiscriminately; even the diseased and captives in the dungeon had the hand of God heavy upon them, and there was no helper; and then God sent Jonah to encourage them, and to assure them of better days. He was the first of the prophets, after Samuel, whose writings are preserved: yet the prophecy delivered on this occasion is not extant; for what is now in the prophecies of Jonah relates wholly to Nineveh.

yoke they had not only shaken off, but they had conquered a considerable portion of the Israelitish territory, and added it to Syria. These latter Jeroboam now recovered; and thus the places which anciently belonged to Judah by David's conquest, and were repossessed by Syria, he now conquered, and added to Israel.

Verse 29. Jeroboam slept with his fathers] He died a natural death; and was regularly succeeded by his son Zachariah, who reigning badly, was, after six months, slain by Shallum, who succeeded him, and reigned but one month, being slain by Menahem, who succeeded him, and reigned ten years over Israel. Amos, the prophet, lived in the reign of Jeroboam; and was accused by Amaziah, one of the idolatrous priests of Beth-el, of having predicted the death of Jeroboam by the sword; but this was a slander: what he did predict, and which came afterward to pass, may be seen, Amos vii. 10—17. The interregnum referred to in the margin, cannot be accounted for in a satisfactory manner.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XV.

Verse 1. In the twenty and seventh year of Jeroboam] Dr. Kennicott complains loudly here, because of "the corruption in the name of this king of Judah, who is expressed by four different names in this chapter: Ovriah, Oziah, Ozrihu, and Ozihu. Our oldest Hebrew MS. relieves us here, by reading truly in verses 1, 6, 7, Uzziah, where the printed text is differently corrupted. This reading is called true—1. Because it is supported by the Syriac and Arabic versions in these three verses.

2. Because the printed text itself has it so in ver. 32 and 34. of this very chapter. 3. Because it is so expressed in the parallel place in Chronicles: and, 4. Because it is not Aζαριας Azariah, but Οζιας, Oziah, (Uzziah) in St. Matthew's genealogy."

There are insuperable difficulties in the chronology of this place. The marginal note says, "This is the twenty-seventh year of Jeroboam's partnership in the kingdom with his father, who made him consort at his going to the Syrian wars. It is the sixteenth year of Jeroboam's monarchy." Dr. Lightfoot endeavours to reconcile this place with chap. xiv. 16, 17, thus: "At the death of Amaziah his son and heir, Uzziah was but four years old, for he was but sixteen in Jeroboam's twenty-seventh year; therefore, the throne must have been empty eleven years, and the government administered by protectors while Uzziah was in his minority." Learned men are not agreed concerning the mode of reconciling these differences: there is probably some mistake in the numbers. I must say to all the contending chronologers:—

Non nostrum inter vos tantas componere lites.
When such men disagree, I can't decide.

Verse 3. He did that which was right] It is said, 2 Chron. xxvi. 5. that he sought the Lord in the days of Zechariah the prophet; and God made him to prosper: he fought against the Philistines; broke down the walls of Gath, Jabneh, and Ashdod; he prevailed over the Arabians and Meunims; the Ammonites paid him tribute; and his dominion extended abroad, even to the entering in of Egypt; that he built towers in Jerusalem, at the corner-gate, valley-gate, and turning of the wall; he built towers also in the desert, and digged many wells: that he had a very strong and well regulated military force, which he provided with a well stocked arsenal: and constructed many military engines to shoot arrows and project great stones; and that his fame was universally spread abroad.

Verse 5. The Lord smote the king, so that he was a leper] The reason of this plague is well told in the above quoted chapter, ver. 16. His heart being elated, he went into the temple to burn incense upon the altar, assuming to himself the functions of the high priest; that Azariah, the priest, with fourscore others, went in after him, to prevent him; and that while they were remonstrating against his conduct, the Lord struck him with the leprosy, which immediately appeared on his forehead; that they thrust him out as an unclean person; and that he himself hurried to get out, feeling that the Lord had smitten him; that he was obliged to dwell in a house by himself, being leprous, to the day of his death: and that during this time the affairs of the kingdom were administered by his son Jotham. A poet, ridiculing the conduct of those, who, without a call from God and his church, thrust themselves into the priest's office, expresses himself thus:—

But now, the warm enthusiast cries,
The office to myself I take;
Offering the Christian sacrifice, Myself a lawful priest I make;
To me this honour appertains,
No need of man when God ordains

[Some go into the contrary extreme, and in effect say—No need of God when man ordains.]

Tho' kings may not so far presume,
'Tis no presumption in a clown;
And, lo, without a call from Rome,
My flail or hammer I lay down
And if my order's name ye seek,
Come, see a new Melchisedek!
Ye upstart (men-made) priests, your sentence know;
The marks you can no longer hide;
Your daring deeds too plainly show
The loathsome leprosy of pride:
And if ye still your crime deny,
Who lepers live, shall lepers die. Charles Wesley.

This is very severe; but applies to every man, who, through pride, presumption, or the desire of gain, enters into the priest's office, though he have the utmost authority that the highest ecclesiastical officer can confer.

They were regained by Jeroboam the second; and now they are taken from Israel once more, by Tiglath-pileser. From 1 Chron. v. 26. we learn that Pul and Tiglath-pileser, kings of Assyria, carried away into captivity the two tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh; all that belonged to Israel, on the other side of Jordan. These were never restored to Israel.

Verse 30. Hoshea the son of Elah—in the twentieth year of Jotham] There are many difficulties in the chronology of this place. To reconcile the whole, Calmét says—"Hoshea conspired against Pekah, the twentieth year of the reign of this prince, which was the eighteenth after the beginning of the reign of Jotham, king of Judah. Two years after this, that is, the fourth year of Ahaz, and the twentieth of Jotham, Hoshea made himself master of a part of the kingdom, according to ver. 30. Finally, the twelfth year of Ahaz, Hoshea had peaceable possession of the whole kingdom, according to chap. xvii. 1."

Verse 36 Now the rest of the acts of Jotham] These acts are distinctly stated in 2 Chron. chap. xxvii. He built the high gate of the house of the Lord: and he built much on the wall of Ophel. He built cities in the mountains of Judah; and in the forests he built castles and towers. He overthrew the Ammonites; and obliged them to give him one hundred talents of silver, ten thousand measures of wheat, and ten thousand of barley, for three consecutive years. He was twenty-five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned sixteen years.

These are the particulars which we learn from the place in Chronicles quoted above; few of which are mentioned in this place. As to the higher gate of the house of the Lord, commentators are not well agreed: some think it was a gate which he then made, and which did not exist before, and is the same that is called the new gate, Jer. xxvi. 10. which is very likely.

Verse 37. In those days the LORD began to send] It was about this time that the Assyrian wars, so ruinous to the Jews, began; but it was in the following reigns that they arrived at their highest pitch of disaster to those unfaithful and unfortunate people. However much we may blame the Jews for their disobedience and obstinacy, yet we cannot help feeling for them under their severe afflictions. Grievously they have sinned; and grievously have they suffered for it. And if they be still objects of God's judgments, there is revelation to believe that they will yet be objects of God's goodness. Many think the signs of the times are favourable to this ingathering: but there is no evidence among the people themselves that the day of their redemption is at hand.

CHAPTER XVI.

Ahaz begins to reign, acts wickedly, and restores idolatry in Judea, 1-4. Rezin, king of Syria, besieges Jerusalem, but can not take it; he takes Elath and drives the Jews thence, 5, 6. Ahaz hires Tiglath-pileser against the king of Syria, and the king of Israel, and gives him the silver and gold that were found in the treasures of the house of the Lord, 7, 8. Tiglath-pileser takes Damascus, and slays Rezin, 9. Ahaz goes to meet him at Damascus; sees an altar there; a pattern of which he sends to Urijah the priest; and orders him to make one like it, which he does, 10-15. He makes several alterations in the temple; dies; and Hezekiah, his son, reigns in his stead, 16-20.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XVI.

Verse 2. Twenty years old was Ahaz] Here is another considerable difficulty in the chronology. Ahaz was but twenty years old when he began to reign, and he died after he had reigned sixteen years; consequently his whole age amounted only to thirty-six years. But Hezekiah his son was twenty-five years old when he began to reign; and, if this were so, then Ahaz must have been the father of Hezekiah when he was but eleven years of age! Some think that the twenty years mentioned here respect the beginning of the reign of Jotham, father of Ahaz: so that the passage should be thus translated, Ahaz was twenty years of age when his father began to reign; and consequently, he was fifty-two years old when he died, seeing Jotham reigned sixteen years: and, therefore, Hezekiah was born when his father was seventeen years of age. This, however, is a violent solution, and worthy of little credit. It is better to return to the text as it stands, and allow that Ahaz might be only eleven or twelve years old when he had Hezekiah: this is not at all impossible; as, in the Eastern countries, we in the high places, and ^eon the hills, and under every green tree.

5 ¶ Then Rezin king of Syria, and Pekah son of Remaliah king of Israel, came up to Jerusalem to war: and they besieged Ahaz, but could not overcome him.

6 At that time Rezin king of Syria ^arecovered Elath to Syria, and drove the Jews from ^bElath: and the Syrians came to Elath, and dwelt there unto this day.

7 ¶ So Ahaz sent messengers ⁱto ^kTiglath-pileser king of Assyria, saying, I am thy servant and thy son: come up, and save me out of the hand of the king of Syria, and out of the hand of the

know that the youth of both sexes are marriageable at ten or twelve years of age; and are frequently betrothed when they are but nine. I knew a woman, an East Indian, who had the second of her two first children when she was only fourteen years of age, and must have had the first when between eleven and twelve. I hold it, therefore, quite a possible case that Ahaz might have had a son born to him when he was but eleven or twelve years old.

Verse 3. Made his son to pass through the fire] On this passage I beg leave to refer the reader to my notes on Lev. xviii. 21. xx. 2, 14. where the subject is considered at large.

Verse 5. But could not overcome him.] It is likely that this was the time when Isaiah was sent to console Ahaz, see Isa. vii. 1; and predicted the death of both Rezin and Pekah, his enemies.

Verse 6. Recovered Elath to Syria] See the note on chap. xiv. 22.

Verse 7. I am thy servant and thy son] I will obey thee in all things, and become tributary to thee; only help me against Syria and Israel.

Verse 9. The king of Assyria hearkened unto him] It is said, 2 Chron. xxviii. 20. that Tiglath-pileser distressed him, but strengthened him not. Though he came against the Syrians, and took Damascus, and slew Rezin; yet he did not help Ahaz against the Philistines, nor did he lend him any forces to assist him against Israel; and he distressed him by taking the royal treasures, and the treasures of the temple, and did him little service for so great a sacrifice. He helped him a little, but distressed him on the whole.

It appears that, about this time, Pekah, king of Israel, nearly ruined Judea: it is said, 2 Chron. xxviii. 6. that he slew one hundred thousand valiant men in one day: and that he carried away captive to Samaria two hundred thousand women and children, and much spoil: but, at the instance of the prophet Obed, these were all sent back, fed and clothed, Ib. 8—15.

Verse 10. Ahaz went to Damascus] He had received so much help on the defeat of Rezin, that he went to Damascus to meet the king of Assyria, and render him thanks.

Ahaz sent to Urijah the priest the fashion of the altar] This was some idolatrous altar, the shape and workmanship of which pleased Ahaz so well that he determined to have one like it

14 And he brought also the brazen altar, which was before the LORD, from the forefront of the house, from between the altar and the house of the LORD, and put it on the north side of the altar.

15 And King Ahaz commanded Urijah the priest, saying, Upon the great altar burn^s the morning burnt-offering, and the evening meat-offering, and the king's burnt-sacrifice, and his meat-offering, with the burnt-offering of all the people of the land, and their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings; and sprinkle upon it all the blood of the burnt-offering, and all the blood of the sacrifice: and the brazen altar shall be for me to inquire by.

at Jerusalem. For this he had no divine authority; and the compliance of Urijah was both mean and sinful. That Ahaz did this for an idolatrous purpose is evident from 2 Chron. xxviii. 21—25. For he sacrificed to the gods of Damascus; and he said, Because the gods of the kings of Syria help them, I will sacrifice to them, that they may help me. And he made high places to burn incense to other gods in every city of Judah.

Verse 14. Put it on the north side] He seems to have intended to conform every thing in the Lord's house, as much as possible, to the idolatrous temples which he saw at Damascus; and to model the divine worship in the same way: in a word, to honour and worship the gods of Syria, and not the God of heaven. All the alterations specified here were in contempt of the true God. Thus he provoked to anger the Lord God of his fathers, 2 Chron. xxviii. 25.

Verse 18. And the covert for the sabbath] There are a great number of conjectures concerning this covert; or, as it is in the Hebrew, the מִשְׁכַּח musach of the sabbath. As the word, and others derived from the same root, signify covering, or booths, it is very likely that this means either a sort of canopy, which was erected on the sabbath days for the accommodation of the people who came to worship, and which Ahaz took away, to discourage them from that worship: or it was a canopy, under which the king and his family reposed themselves; and which he transported to some other place, to accommodate the king of Assyria when he visited him. Jarchi supposes that it was a sort of covert-way that the kings of Judah had to the temple; and Ahaz had it removed lest the king of Assyria, going by that way, and seeing the sacred vessels, should covet them. If that way had been open, he might have gone by it into the temple, and have seen the sacred vessels, and so have asked them from a man who was in no condition to refuse them, however unwilling he might have been to give them up. The removing of this, whatever it was, whether throne, or canopy, or covered-way, cut off the communication between the king's house and the temple: and the king of Assyria would not attempt to go into that sacred place by that other passage to which the priests alone had access.

Verse 20. Was buried with his fathers in the city of David] But it is expressly declared,

His reign was disastrous and impious; and it was disastrous because it was impious: he had been a scourge, not a blessing, to his people. He had not only made illegal alterations in the temple, and in the mode of worship prescribed by the true God; but he had polluted all the cities of Judah with idolatry, and brought ruin upon the nation. On the whole, a worse king than himself had not as yet sat on the Jewish throne; and yet he had many advantages: he had for counsellor one of the greatest men ever produced in the Jewish nation, ISAIAH the prophet: and God condescended to interpose especially for him, when grievously straitened by the kings of Israel and Syria; both of whom were cut off, according to the prediction of this prophet. But he would not lay it to heart; and, therefore, the wrath of God fell heavily upon him, and upon the stiff-necked and rebellious people whom he governed. He had sufficient warning, and was without excuse. He would sin; and, therefore, he must suffer.

Carried Israel away into Assyria] What were the places to which the unfortunate Israelites were carried, or where their successors are now situated, have given rise to innumerable conjectures, dissertations, discourses, &c. Some maintain that they are found on the coast of Guinea; others, in America; the Indian tribes being the descendants of those carried away by the Assyrians. In vol. i. of the supplement to Sir Wm. Jones' Works, we find a translation of the History of the Afghans, by Mr. H. Vansittart; from which it appears that they derive their own descent from the Jews. On this history Sir Wm. Jones writes the following note:—

"This account of the Afghans may lead to a very interesting discovery. We learn from *Esdra*s, that the ten tribes, after a wandering journey, came to a country called Arsarel, where, we may suppose, they settled. Now the Afghans are said, by the best Persian historians, to be descended from the Jews: they have traditions among themselves of such a descent, and it is even asserted that their families are distinguished by the names of Jewish tribes; although, since their conversion to the Islam, they studiously conceal their origin. The Pushtoo, of which I have seen a dictionary, has a manifest resemblance to the Chaldaic: and a considerable district under their dominion is called Hazarek, or Hazaret, which might easily have been changed into the word used by *Esdra*s. I strongly recommend an inquiry into the literature and history of the Afghans." Every thing considered, I think it by far the most probable that the Afghans are the descendants of the Jews, who were led away captives by the Assyrian kings.

Thus ended the kingdom of Israel, after it had lasted two hundred and fifty-four years, from the death of Solomon and the schism of Jeroboam, till the taking of Samaria by Shalmaneser, in the ninth year of Hoshea: after which the remains of the ten tribes were carried away beyond the river Euphrates.

The rest of this chapter is spent in vindicating the divine providence and justice: showing the reason why God permitted such a desolation to fall on a people who had been so long his peculiar children.

Verse 9. Did secretly those things] There was much hidden iniquity, and private idolatry, among them; as well as public and notorious crimes.

From the tower of the watchmen to the fenced city.] That is, the idolatry was universal; every place was made a place for some idolatrous rite, or act of worship: from the largest city to the smallest village; and from the public watchtower to the shepherd's cot.

Verse 10. Images and groves] Images of different idols, and places for the abominable rites of *Ashtaro*th or Venus.

Verse 13. Yet the LORD testified against Israel] What rendered their conduct the more inexcusable was, that the Lord had preserved among them a succession of prophets, who testified against their conduct, and preached

A. M. 3283. B. C. 721. Ol. XIV. 4. An. Hippomenis, Arch. Ath. decen. 2. he testified against them; and they followed ^xvanity, and ^ybecame vain, and went after the heathen that were round about them, concerning whom the LORD had charged them, that they should ^znot do like them.

16 And they left all the commandments of the LORD their God, and ^amade them molten images, even two calves, ^band made a grove, and worshipped all the host of heaven, ^cand served Baal.

17 ^dAnd they caused their sons and their daughters to pass through the fire, and ^eused divination and enchantments, and ^fsold themselves to do evil in the sight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger.

18 Therefore the LORD was very angry with Israel, and removed them out of his sight: there was none left ^gbut the tribe of Judah only.

19 Also ^hJudah kept not the commandments of the LORD their God, but walked in the statutes of Israel which they made.

20 And the LORD rejected all the seed of Israel, and afflicted them, and ⁱdelivered them into the hand of spoilers, until he had cast them out of his sight.

21 For ^khe rent Israel from the house of David; and ^lthey made Jeroboam the son of Nebat king: and Jeroboam drave Israel from following the LORD, and made them sin a great sin.

22 For the children of Israel walked in all the sins of Jeroboam which he did; they departed not from them,

23 Until the LORD removed Israel out of his sight, ^mas he had said by all his servants the prophets. ⁿSo was Israel carried away out of their own land to Assyria unto this day.

repentance to them, and the readiness of God to forgive, provided they would return unto him, and give up their idolatries.

Verse 17. Sold themselves to do evil] Abandoned themselves to the will of the devil; to work all iniquity with greediness.

Verse 18. Removed them out of his sight] Banished them from the promised land, from the temple, and from every ordinance of righteousness, as wholly unworthy of any kind of good.

None left but the tribe of Judah only.] Under this name all those of Benjamin, and Levi, and the Israelites, who abandoned their idolatries and joined with Judah, are comprised. It was the ten tribes that were carried away by the Assyrians.

Verse 24. The king of Assyria brought men from Babylon] He removed one people entirely, and substituted others in their place: and this he did to cut off all occasion for mutiny or insurrection; for the people, being removed from their own land, had no object worthy of attention to contend for, and no patrimony in the land of their captivity to induce them to hazard any opposition to their oppressors.

By men from Babylon, we may understand some cities of Babylonia, then under the Assyrian empire; for, at this time, Babylon had a king of its own; but some parts of what was called Babylonia might have been still under the Assyrian government.

From Cuthah] This is supposed to be the same as Cush, the Chaldeans and Syrians changing shin into tau: thus they make קוש Cush, into קוּח Cuth; and אַשּׁוּר Ashur, Assyria, into אַחַר Athur. From these came the Scythæ; and from these the Samaritans were called Cuthæans, and their language Cuthite. The original language of this people, or at least the language they spoke after their settlement in Israel, is contained in the Samaritan version of the Pentateuch, printed under the Hebræo-Samaritan, in vol. i. of the London Polyglott. This Cutha was probably the country in the land of Shinar, first inhabited by Cush.

From Ava] The Avim were an ancient people, expelled by the Caphtorim from Hazerim, Deut. ii. 23.

From Hamath] This was Hemath, or Emath, of Syria, frequently mentioned in the Sacred Writings.

From Sepharvaim] There was a city called Syphera, near the Euphrates; others think the Saspires, a people situated between the Colchians and the Medes, are meant. There is much uncertainty relative to these places: all that we know is, that the Assyrians carried away the Israelites into Assyria, and placed them in cities and districts called Halah and Habor, by the river Gozan; and in the mountains of the Medes, ver. 6. And it is very likely that they brought some of the inhabitants of those places into the cities of Israel.

their dwelling there, that they feared not the LORD: therefore the LORD sent lions among them, which slew some of them.

26 Wherefore they spake to the king of Assyria, saying, The nations which thou hast removed, and placed in the cities of Samaria, know not the manner of the God of the land: therefore he hath sent lions among them, and, behold, they slay them, because they know not the manner of the God of the land.

27 Then the king of Assyria commanded, saying, Carry thither one of the priests whom ye brought from thence; and let them go and dwell there, and let him teach them the manner of the God of the land.

28 Then one of the priests whom they had carried away from Samaria came and dwelt in Beth-el, and taught them how they should fear the LORD.

Verse 25. The LORD sent lions among them] The land being deprived of its inhabitants, wild beasts would necessarily increase, even without any supernatural intervention; and this the superstitious new-comers supposed to be a plague sent upon them, because they did not know how to worship him who was the God of the land; for they thought, like other heathens, that every district had its own tutulary deity. Yet it is likely that God did send lions as a scourge on this bad people.

Verse 26. The manner of the God of the land] מִשְׁפָּט mishpat, the judgment: the way in which the God of the land is to be worshipped.

Verse 27. Carry thither one of the priests] Imperfect as this teaching was, it, in the end, overthrew the idolatry of these people; so that soon after the Babylonish captivity they were found to be as free from idolatry as the Jews themselves; and continue so to the present day. But they are now nearly annihilated: the small remains of them is found at Naplouse and Jaffa; they are about thirty families; and men, women, and children, amount to about two hundred persons! They have a synagogue, which they regularly attend every sabbath; and they go thither clothed in white robes. The reader may find much curious information relative to this people, in a Memoire sur L'Etat actuel des Samaritains, by Baron Sylvestre de Sacy, 8vo. Paris, 1812.

Verse 29. Every nation made gods of their own] That is, they made gods after the fashion of those which they had worshipped in their own country.

Verse 30. The men of Babylon made Succoth-benoth] This, literally, signifies the tabernacles of the daughters, or young women; and most evidently refers to those public prostitutions of young virgins at the temple of Melitta, or Venus, among the Babylonians. See at the end of the chapter. From benoth it is probable that the word Venus came, the b being changed into v, as is frequently the case; and the th into t, benoth, Venos. The rabbins say that her emblem was a hen with her chickens: see Jarchi on the place.

The men of Cuth made Nergal] This is supposed to have been the solar orb, or light. According to the rabbins, his emblem was a cock. See at the end of the chapter.

The men of Hamath made Ashima] Perhaps the fire; from אֲשָׁם asham, to make atonement, or to purify. Jarchi says this was in the form of a goat. See below.

Verse 31. The Avites made Nibhaz] This was supposed to be the same as the Anubis of the Egyptians; and was in form partly of a dog, and partly of a man. A very ancient image of this kind now lies before me: it is cut out of stone, about seven inches high; has the body, legs, and arms, of a man; the head and feet of a dog; the thighs and legs covered with scales; the head crowned with a tiara; the arms crossed upon the breasts, with the fingers clenched. The figure stands upright, and the belly is very protuberant. See below.

And Tartak] This is supposed by some to be another name of the same idol: Jarchi says it was in the shape of an ass. Some think these were the representations of the sun in his chariot: Nibhaz representing the solar orb, and Tartak the chariot. See below.

Adrammelech] From אָדָר adar, glorious, and מֶלֶךְ melech, king. Probably the sun.

Anammelech] From אָנָה anah, to return, and מֶלֶךְ melech, king. Probably, the Molech of the Ammonites. Jarchi says, the first was in the form of a mule, the second in the form of a horse: this was probably the moon.

Verse 32. Of the lowest of them priests] One priest was not enough for this motley population: and, as the priesthood was probably neither respectable nor lucrative, it was only the lowest of the people who would enter into the employment.

Verse 33. They feared the LORD, and served their own gods] They did not relinquish their own idolatry, but incorporated the worship of the true God with that of their idols. They were afraid of Jehovah, who had sent lions among them; and therefore they offered him a sort of worship that he might not thus afflict them: but they served other gods, devoted themselves affectionately to them, because their worship was such as gratified their grossest passions, and most sinful propensities.

Verse 36. But the LORD] JEHOVAH, the supreme, self-existent, and eternal Being; Author of all being and life. This was to be the sole object of their adoration.

Who brought you up] This was a strong reason why they should adore him only: he had saved them from the hands of their enemies; and he did it in such a way as to show his power to be irresistible: and in such a being they might safely confide.

Him shall ye fear] Here is the manner in which he is to be worshipped. Him ye shall reverence as your lawgiver and judge; ye shall respect and keep all his commandments; doing what he has enjoined, and avoiding what he has forbidden.

Him shall ye worship] Before him ye shall bow the knee; living in the spirit of obedience, and performing every religious act in the deepest humility.

And to him shall ye do sacrifice.] Ye shall consider that, as ye have sinned, so ye deserve death; ye shall, therefore, bring your living victims to the altar of the Lord, and let their life's blood be poured out there, as an atonement for your souls. We see in this verse three important points:—1. The object of their worship. 2. The reasons of that worship. And, 3. The spirit and manner in which it was to be performed:—viz. 1. In fear—2. Humility—And, 3. By sacrifice.

Verse 41. So do they unto this day.] This and to him shall ye do sacrifice.

37 And the statutes, and the ordinances, and the law, and the commandment, which he wrote for you, ye shall observe to do for evermore; and ye shall not fear other gods.

38 And the covenant that I have made with you ye shall not forget; neither shall ye fear other gods.

39 But the LORD your God ye shall fear; and he shall deliver you out of the hand of all your enemies.

40 Howbeit they did not hearken, but they did after their former manner.

41 ^fSo these nations feared the LORD, and served their graven images, both their children, and their children's children: as did their fathers, so do they unto this day.

must have been written before the Babylonish captivity; because, after that time, none of the Israelites ever lapsed into idolatry. But this may chiefly refer to the heathenish people who were sent to dwell among the remains of the ten tribes.

On these nations, and the objects of their worship, I present my readers with the following extracts from Dodd and Parkhurst:—

Verse 30. The men of Babylon made Succoth-benoth—We have here an account of the idols which were consecrated by the different nations, transplanted by the king of Assyria to Samaria. It is difficult, however, (and has afforded a large field for conjecture,) to give any satisfactory account concerning them. The reader will find in Selden, Vossius, and Jurieu, much upon the subject. Succoth-benoth may be literally translated, The Tabernacles of the Daughters, or Young Women; or if Benoth be taken as the name of a female idol, from בנה, to build up, procreate children, then the words will express the tabernacles sacred to the productive powers feminine. And, agreeably to this latter exposition, the rabbins say that the emblem was a hen and chickens. But, however this may be, there is no room to doubt that these succoth were tabernacles, wherein young women exposed themselves to prostitution, in honour of the Babylonish goddess Melitta. Herodotus (lib. i. c. 199.) gives us a particular account of this detestable service. "Every young woman (says he) of the country of Babylon, must once in her life sit at the temple of Venus, (whom he afterward tells us the Assyrians called Melitta,) and prostitute herself to some stranger. Those who are rich, and so disdain to mingle with the crowd, present themselves before the temple in covered chariots, attended by a great retinue. But the generality of the women sit near the temple, having crowns upon their heads, and holding a cord, some continually

coming; others going. See Baruch vi. 43. The cords are held by them in such a manner as to afford a free passage among the women, that the strangers may choose whom they like. A woman who has once seated herself in this place, must not return home till some stranger has cast money into her lap, and led her from the temple, and defiled her. The stranger who throws the money must say, 'I invoke the goddess Melitta for thee.' The money, however small a sum it may be, must not be refused, because it is appointed to sacred uses. See Deut. xxiii. 18. The woman must follow the first man that offers, and not reject him; and after prostitution, having now duly honoured the goddess, she is dismissed to her own house. In Cyprus," adds the historian, "they have the same custom." This abomination, implied by Succoth-benoth, the men of Babylon brought with them into the country of Samaria; and both the name of the idol Melitta, and the execrable service performed to her honour, show that by Melitta was originally intended the procreative or productive power of nature, the Venus of the Greeks and Romans. See the beginning of Lucretius' first book De Rerum Natura. Mr. Selden imagines that some traces of the Succoth-benoth may be found in Sicca Veneria, the name of a city of Numidia, not far from the borders of Africa Propria. The name itself bears a near allusion to the obscene custom above taken notice of; and seems to have been transported from Phœnicia: nor can this well be disputed, when we consider that here was a temple where women were obliged to purchase their marriage-money, by the prostitution of their bodies. See Univ. Hist. vol. xvii. p. 295. and Parkhurst's Lexicon on the word ῥ.

The men of Cuth made Nergel—Cuth was a province of Assyria, which, according to some, lies upon the Araxis: but others rather think it to be the same with Cush, which is said by Moses to be encompassed with the river Gihon; and must, therefore, be the same with the country which the Greeks call Susiana, and which to this day is called by the inhabitants Chusesta. Their idol, Nergel, seems to have been the sun, as the causer of the diurnal and annual revolutions of the planets; for it is naturally derived from נ ner, light, and ג gel, to revolve. The rabbins say that the idol was represented in the shape of a cock; and probably they tell us the truth, for this seems a very proper emblem. Among the latter heathens we find the cock was sacred to Apollo, or the sun, (see Pierii Hieroglyph. p. 223.) "Because," says Heliodorus, speaking of the time when cocks crow, "by a natural sensation of the sun's revolution to us, they are incited to salute the god." Æthiop. lib. i. And perhaps under this name, Nergel, they meant to worship the sun, not only for the diurnal return of its light upon the earth, but also for its annual return or revolution. We may observe that the emblem, a cock, is affected by the latter as well as by the former, and is frequently crowing both day and night, when the days begin to lengthen. See Calmel's Dictionary under the word, and Parkhurst's Lexicon.

The men of Hamath made Ashima—There are several cities and countries which go under the name of Hamath; but what we take to be here meant is that province of Syria which lies upon the Orontes, wherein there was a city of the same name; which, when Shalmaneser had taken, he removed the inhabitants from thence into Samaria. Their idol, Ashima, signifies the atoner, or expiator, from אשם ashem. The word is in a Chaldee form, and seems to be the same as אשם שרן ashmet shamrun, the sin of Samaria, mentioned Amos viii. 14. where ashmet is rendered by the LXX. propitiation. It is known to every one who has the least acquaintance with the mythology of the heathens, how strongly and universally they retained the tradition of an atonement or expiation for sin, although they expected it from a false object, and wrong means. We find it expressed in very clear terms among the Romans, even so late as the time of Horace, lib. i. ode 2.

Jupiter?*

And whom, to expiate the horrid guilt,
Will Jove appoint?

The answer is, "Apollo," the god of light. Some think that as Asuman, or Suman, in the Persian language, signifies heaven, the Syrians might from hence derive the name of this god; who, they suppose, was represented by a large stone pillar, terminating in a conic or pyramidal figure, whereby they denoted fire. See Parkhurst on the word אשם ashem, Calmel's Dictionary, and Tennison on Idolatry.

Verse 31. The Avites made Nibhaz and Tartak—It is uncertain who these Avites were. The most probable opinion seems to be that which Grotius has suggested, by observing that there are a people in Bactriana, mentioned by Ptolemy, under the name of Avadia, who possibly might be those transported at this time into Palestine by Shalmaneser. Nibhaz, according to the rabbins, had the shape of a dog, much like the Anubis of the Egyptians. In Pierius' Hieroglyphics, page 53. is the figure of a scinocephalus, a kind of ape, with a head like a dog, standing upon his hinder feet, and looking earnestly at the moon. Pierius there teaches us that the scinocephalus was an animal eminently sacred among the Egyptians, hieroglyphical of the moon, and kept in their temples to inform them of the moon's conjunction with the sun, at which time this animal is strangely affected, being deprived of sight, refusing food, and lying sick on the ground; but, on the moon's appearance, seeming to return thanks, and congratulate the return of light both to himself and her. See Johnston's Nat. Hist. de Quadruped. page 100. This being observed, the word nebez (which may well be derived from נבך nebek, to bark, and חזק chezé, to see,) gives us reason to conclude that this idol was in the shape of a scinocephalus, or a dog looking, barking, or howling at the moon. It is obvious to common observation that dogs in general have this property; and an idol of the form just mentioned seems to have been originally designed to represent the power or influence of the moon on all sublunary bodies, with which the scinocephalus and dogs are so eminently affected. So, as we have observed upon Nergel, the influence of the returning solar light was represented by a cock; and the generative power of the heavens by Dagon, a fishy idol. See Parkhurst on נבך who is of opinion that Tartak תרתק is compounded of תר ter, to turn, go round, and רתק retek, to chain, tether; and plainly denotes the heavens, considered as confining the planets in their respective orbits, as if they were tethered. The Jews have a tradition that the emblem of this idol was an ass; which, considering the propriety of that animal when tethered to represent this idol, is not improbable; and from this idolatrous worship of the Samaritans, joined perhaps with some confused account of the cherubim, seems to have sprung that stupid story by the heathens, that the Jews had an ass's head in their holy of holies, to which they paid religious worship. See Bochart, vol. ii. page 221. Jurieu is of opinion, that as the word Nibhaz, both in the Hebrew and Chaldee, with a small variation, denotes quick, swift, rapid; and tartak, in the same languages, signifies a chariot, these two idols may both together denominate the sun mounted on his car, as the fictions of the poets and the notions of the mythologists were wont to represent that luminary.

The Sepharvites burned their children—to Adrammelech, and Anammelech—As these Sepharvites probably came from the cities of the Medes, whither the Israelites were carried captive, and as Herodotus tells us, that between Colchis, and Media, are found a people called Saspires; in all likelihood they were the same with those here named Sepharvites. Moloch, Milcom, and Melech, in the language of different nations, all signify a king, and imply the sun, which was called the king of heaven; and, therefore, the addition of oder, which signifies powerful, illustrious, to the one, and of onem, which implies to return, to answer, to the other, means no more than the mighty, or the oracular Moloch. And as the children were offered to him, it appears that he was the same with the Moloch of the Ammonites. See Univ. Hist. and Calmet. Mr. Locke is also of opinion that these two names were expressive of one and the same deity. What they were, or in what form, and how worshipped, we have not light from antiquity to determine.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Hezekiah begins to reign: he removes the high places, breaks to pieces the brazen serpent, and walks uprightly before God, 1—6. He endeavours to shake off the Assyrian yoke, and defeats the Philistines, 7, 8. Shalmaneser comes up against Samaria, takes it, and carries the people away into captivity, 9—12. And then comes against Judah, and takes all the fenced cities, 13. Hezekiah sends a message to him at Lachish to desist, with the promise that he will pay him any tribute he chooses to impose; in consequence of which, Shalmaneser exacts three hundred talents of silver, and thirty talents of gold: to pay which, Hezekiah is obliged to take all his own treasures, and those belonging to the temple, 14—16. The king of Assyria sends, notwithstanding, a great host against Jerusalem; and his general, Rab-shakeh, delivers an insulting and blasphemous message to Hezekiah, 17—35. Hezekiah and his people are greatly afflicted at the words of Rab-shakeh, 36, 37.

Verse 3. He did that which was right in the sight of the Lord] In chap. xxix. of the Second Book of Chronicles, we have an account of what this pious king did to restore the worship of God. He caused the priests and Levites to cleanse the holy house, which had been shut up by his father Ahaz, and had been polluted with filth of various kinds; and this cleansing required no less than sixteen days to accomplish it. As the passover, according to the law, must be celebrated the fourteenth of the first month, and the Levites could not get the temple cleansed before the sixteenth day, he published the passover for the fourteenth of the second month; and sent through all Judah and Israel, to collect all the men that feared God, that the passover might be celebrated in a proper manner. The concourse was great, and the feast was celebrated with great magnificence. When the people returned to their respective cities and villages, they began to throw down the idol altars, statues, images, and groves, and even to abolish the high places: the consequence was, that a spirit of piety began to revive in the land, and a general reformation took place.

Verse 4. Brake in pieces the brazen serpent] The history of this may be seen in Numb. xxi. 8, 9: see the notes there.

We find that this brazen serpent had become an object of idolatry; and, no doubt, was supposed to possess, as a telesm or amulet, extraordinary virtues; and that incense was burnt before it, which should have been burnt before the true God.

And he called it Nehushtan.] נחשטן. Not one of the versions has attempted to translate this word. Jarchi says, “He called it Nechustan, through contempt; which is as much as to say, a brazen serpent.” Some have supposed that the word is compounded of נחש nachash, to divine, and נחש ten, a serpent; so it signifies, the divining serpent: and the Targum states that it was the people, not Hezekiah, that gave it this name. נחש nachash, signifies to view, eye, attentively observe, to search, inquire accurately, augury. As a noun, it signifies brass or copper, filth, verdigris, and some sea animal, Amos ix.

3; see also Job xxvi. 13. and Isa. xxvii. 1.
It is also frequently used for a serpent; and most probably for an animal of the genus Si- mia, in Gen. iii., where see the notes. This has been contested by some, ridiculed by a few, and believed by many. The objectors, because it signifies a serpent sometimes, suppose it must have the same signification always! And one, to express his contempt, and to show his sense, has said, “Did Moses hang up an ape on a pole?” I answer, No; no more than he hanged up you, who ask the contemptible question.
But this is of a piece with the conduct of the people of Milan, who show you, to this day, the brazen serpent which Moses hung up in the wilderness, and which Hezekiah broke in pieces two thousand five hundred years ago!

were obliged to raise the siege; from which they went and sat down before Libnah. While Sennacherib was there with the Assyrian army, he heard that Tirhakah, king of Ethiopia, had invaded the Assyrian territories. Being obliged, therefore, to hasten in order to succour his own dominions, he sent a considerable force, under the aforementioned officers, against Jerusalem, with a most fearful and bloody manifesto, commanding Hezekiah to pay him tribute, to deliver up his kingdom to him, and to submit, he and his people, to be carried away captives into Assyria! This manifesto was accompanied with the vilest insults, and the highest blasphemies. God interposed, and the evils threatened against others fell upon himself.

Manifestos of this kind have seldom been honourable to the senders. The conduct of Rab-shakeh was unfortunately copied by the duke of Brunswick, commander in chief of the allied army of the centre, in the French revolution, who was then in the plains of Champagne, August 27, 1792, at the head of ninety thousand men, Prussians, Austrians, and emigrants, on his way to Paris; which, in his manifesto, he threatened to reduce to ashes! This was the cause of the dreadful massacres which immediately took place. And shortly after this time, the blast of God fell upon him; for, in Sept. 20, of the same year, (three weeks after issuing the manifesto,) almost all his army was destroyed by a fatal disease, and himself obliged to retreat from the French territories, with shame and confusion. This, and some other injudicious steps then taken by the allies, were the cause of the ruin of the royal family of France; and of enormities and calamities the most extensive, disgraceful, and ruinous, that ever stained the page of history. From all such revolutions God in mercy save mankind.

Shebna the scribe.] The king's secretary.

Joah—the recorder.] The writer of the public annals.

Verse 19. What confidence is this] מה הבטחה ma ha-bitachon hazzeh. The words are excessively insulting. What little, foolish, or unavailing cause of confidence is it, in which thou trustest? I translate thus; because I consider the word הבטחה ha-bitachon, as a diminutive, intended to express the utmost contempt for Hezekiah's God.

Verse 21. The staff of this bruised reed.] Egypt had been greatly bruised and broken, through the wars carried on against it by the Assyrians.

Verse 22. Whose high places and whose altars Hezekiah hath taken away.] This was artfully malicious: many of the people sacrificed to Jehovah on the high places; Hezekiah had removed them, ver. 4, because they were incentives to idolatry. Rab-shakeh insinuates that, by so doing, he had offended Jehovah, deprived the people of their religious rights, and he could neither expect the blessing of God, nor the co-operation of the people.

Verse 23. I will deliver thee two thousand horses.] Another insult. Were I to give thee two thousand Assyrian horses, thou couldst not find riders for them. How then canst thou think that thou shalt be able to stand against even the smallest division of his troops?

25 Am I now come up without the LORD against this place to destroy it? The LORD said to me, Go up against this land, and destroy it.

26 Then said Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, and Shebna, and Joah, unto Rab-shakeh, Speak, I pray thee, to thy servants in the Syrian language; for we understand it; and talk not with us in the Jews' language in the ears of the people that are on the wall.

27 But Rab-shakeh said unto them, Hath my master sent me to thy master, and to thee, to speak these words? hath he not sent me to the men which sit on the wall, that they may eat their own dung, and drink their own piss with you?

28 ¶ Then Rab-shakeh stood and cried with a loud voice in the Jews' language, and spake, saying, Hear the word of the great king, the king of Assyria:

29 Thus saith the king, Let not Hezekiah deceive you; for he shall not be able to deliver you out of his hand:

30 Neither let Hezekiah make you trust in the LORD, saying, The LORD will surely deliver us, and this city shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria.

31 Harken not to Hezekiah: for thus saith the king of Assyria, Make an agreement with me by a present, and come out to me, and then eat ye every man of his own vine, and every one of his fig tree, and drink ye every one the waters of his cistern;

32 Until I come and take you away to a land like your own land, a land of corn and wine, a land of bread and vineyards, a land of oil-olive and of honey, that ye may live, and not die: and hearken not unto Hezekiah, when he persuadeth you, saying, The LORD will deliver us.

33 ¶ Hath any of the gods of the nations delivered at all his land out of the hand of the king of Assyria?

34 Where are the gods of Hamath, and of Arpad? where are the gods of Sepharvaim, Hena, and Ivah? have they delivered Samaria out of mine hand?

35 Who are they among all the gods of the countries, that have delivered their country out of mine hand, that the LORD should deliver Jerusalem out of mine hand?

36 But the people held their peace, and answered him not a word: for the king's commandment was, saying, Answer him not.

37 Then came Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, which was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and Joah the son of Asaph, the recorder, to Hezekiah with their clothes rent, and told him the words of Rab-shakeh.

Verse 25. Am I now come up without the LORD] As Rab-shakeh saw that the Jews placed the utmost confidence in God, he wished to persuade them that by Hezekiah's conduct Jehovah had departed from them, and was become ally to the king of Assyria; and, therefore, they could not expect any help from that quarter.

Verse 26. Talk not with us in the Jews' language] The object of this blasphemous cañt was, to stir up the people to sedition, that the city and the king might be delivered into his hand.

Verse 27. That they may eat their own dung] That they may be duly apprised, if they hold on Hezekiah's side, Jerusalem shall be most straitly besieged, and they be reduced to such a state of famine as to be obliged to eat their own excrements.

Verse 28. Hear the word of the great king—of Assyria] This was all intended to cause the people to revolt from their allegiance to their king.

Verse 32. Until I come and take you away] This was well calculated to stir up a seditious spirit. Ye cannot be delivered; your destruction, if ye resist, is inevitable; Sennacherib will do with you, as he does with all the nations he conquers, lead them captive into another land: but, if you will surrender, without farther trouble, he will transport you into a land as good as your own.

Verse 34. Where are the gods of Hamath] Sennacherib is greater than any of the gods of the nations. The Assyrians have already overthrown the gods of Hamath, Arpad, Hena, and Ivah: therefore, Jehovah shall be like one of them, and shall not be able to deliver Jerusalem out of the hand of my master.

The impudent blasphemy of this speech is without parallel. Hezekiah treated it as he ought: it was not properly against him, but against the Lord; therefore he refers the matter to Jehovah himself, who punishes this blasphemy in the most signal manner.

Verse 36. Answer him not.] The blasphemy is too barefaced: Jehovah is insulted, not you; let him avenge his own quarrel. See the succeeding chapter.

Verse 37. Then came Eliakim—and Shebna

—and Joah—to Hezekiah with their clothes rent] It was the custom of the Hebrews, when they heard any blasphemy, to rend their clothes, because this was the greatest of crimes, as it immediately affected the Majesty of God: and it was right that a religious people should have in the utmost abhorrence every insult offered to the object of their religious worship. These three ambassadors lay the matter before the king, as God's representative: he lays it before the prophet, as God's minister; and he lays it before God, as the people's Mediator.

CHAPTER XIX.

Hezekiah is greatly distressed, and sends to Isaiah to pray for him, 1—4. Isaiah returns a comfortable answer, and predicts the destruction of the king of Assyria and his army, 5—8. Sennacherib, hearing that his kingdom was invaded by the Ethiopians, sends a terrible letter to Hezekiah, to induce him to surrender, 9—13. Hezekiah goes to the temple, spreads the letter before the Lord, and makes a most affecting prayer, 14—19. Isaiah is sent to him to assure him that his prayer is heard; that Jerusalem shall be delivered; and that the Assyrians shall be destroyed, 20—34. That very night a messenger of God slays one hundred and eighty-five thousand Assyrians, 35. Sennacherib returns to Nineveh, and is slain by his own sons, 36, 37.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIX.

Verse 2. To Isaiah the prophet] His fame and influence were, at this time, great in Israel; and it was well known that the word of the Lord was with him. Here both the church and the state unite in fervent application to, and strong dependence upon, God: and behold how they succeed!

Verse 3. The children are come to the birth] The Jewish state is here represented under the emblem of a woman in travail, who has been so long in the pangs of parturition, that her strength is now entirely exhausted, and her deliverance is hopeless, without a miracle. The image is very fine, and highly appropriate.

A similar image is employed by Homer, when he represents the agonies which Agamemnon suffers from his wound:

Οφρα οἱ αἰμ' ἐν ἑρμον ἀννοθεν ἐξ ὠτειλῆς.
Αὐταρεπὶ το μὲν ἔλκος ἐπερσσο, παυσάτο δ' αἶμα, Ὀξείαι ὀδυαὶ θυνον μένος Ἀτρεΐδαο.
Ἦρ' δ' ὅταν ἀδινεσαν ἐχρ' βελος ὀξυ γυναικα,
Δριμν, το τε προΐσισι μοχλοσχοὶ Εἰλειθυΐαι Ἦρ' ὀδυατρες, πικρὰς ἀδινὰς ἔχουσαι.
Ἦρ' ὀξυ ὀδυαὶ θυνον μένος Ἀτρεΐδαο. Il. xi. 266.

This, while yet warm, distill'd the purple flood;
But when the wound grew stiff with clotted blood,
Then grinding tortures his strong bosom rend, Less keen those darts the fierce Ilythiæ send,

The powers that cause the teeming matron's throes,
Sad mothers of unutterable woes. Pope.

Better translated by Macpherson; but in neither well. "So long as from the gaping wound gushed forth, in its warmth, the blood: but when the wound became dry; when ceased the blood to flow again; sharp pains pervade the strength of Atrides. Racking pangs glide through his frame; as when the Ilythiæ, who preside over births, the daughters of white armed Juno, fierce dealers of bitter pains, throw all their darts on hapless women, that travail with child. Such pains pervade the strength of Atrides."

Verse 4. The remnant that are left] That is, the Jews: the ten tribes having been already carried away captive by the kings of Assyria.

Verse 7. Behold, I will send a blast—and he shall hear a rumour] The rumour was, that Tirhakah had invaded Assyria. The blast was, that which slew one hundred and eighty-five thousand of them in one night.

Cause him to fall by the sword] Alluding to his death by the hands of his two sons, at Nineveh. See ver. 35—37.

Verse 8. Libnah—Lachish.] These two places were not very distant from each other: they were in the mountains of Judah, southward of Jerusalem.

9 And ^mwhen he heard say of Tirhakah king of Ethiopia, Behold, he is come out to fight against thee: he sent messengers again unto Hezekiah, saying,

10 Thus shall ye speak to Hezekiah king of Judah, saying, Let not thy God, ⁿin whom thou trustest, deceive thee, saying, Jerusalem shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria.

11 Behold, thou hast heard what the kings of Assyria have done to all lands, by destroying them utterly: and shalt thou be delivered?

12 ^oHave the gods of the nations delivered them which my fathers have destroyed; as Gozan, and Haran, and Rezeph, and the children of ^pEden which were in Thelasar?

13 ^rWhere is the king of Hamath, and the king of Arpad, and the king of the city of Sepharvaim, of Hena, and Ivah?

14 ^tAnd Hezekiah received the letter of the hand of the messengers, and read it: and Hezekiah went up into the house of the LORD, and spread it before the LORD.

15 And Hezekiah prayed before the LORD, and said, O LORD God of Israel, 'which dwellest between the cherubim, ^uthou art the God, even thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth; thou hast made heaven and earth.

16 LORD, ^vbow down thine ear, and hear: ^wopen, LORD, thine eyes, and see: and hear the words of Sennacherib, ^xwhich hath sent him to reproach the living God.

17 Of a truth, LORD, the kings of Assyria have destroyed the nations and their lands,

18 And have ^ycast their gods into the fire; for they were no gods, but ^zthe work of men's hands, wood and stone: therefore they have destroyed them.

19 Now therefore, O LORD our God, I beseech thee, save thou us out of his hand, ^athat all the kingdoms of the earth may know that thou art the LORD God, even thou only.

20 [†]Then Isaiah the son of Amoz sent to Hezekiah, saying, thus saith the LORD God of Israel, ^bThat which thou hast prayed to me against Sennacherib king of Assyria ^cI have heard.

21 This is the word that the LORD hath spoken concerning him; The virgin, ^dthe daughter of Zion, hath despised thee, and laughed thee to scorn; the daughter of Jerusalem ^ehath shaken her head at thee.

22 Whom hast thou reproached and blasphemed? and against whom hast thou exalted thy voice, and lifted up thine eyes on high? even against the ^fHoly One of Israel.

23 ^gBy ^hthy messengers thou hast reproached the LORD, and hast said, ⁱWith the multitude of my chariots I am come up to the height of the mountains, to the sides of Lebanon, and will cut down ^kthe tall cedar trees thereof, and the choice fir trees thereof: and I will enter into the lodgings of his borders, and into ^lthe forest of his Carmel.

With the sole of my feet] My infantry have been so numerous, that they alone have been sufficient to drink up the rivers of the places I have besieged.

Verse 25. Hast thou not heard] Here Jehovah speaks; and shows this boasting king that what he had done, was done by the divine appointment; and that of his own counsel and might he could have done nothing. It was because God had appointed them to this civil destruction that he had overcome them; and it was not through his might: for God had made their inhabitants of small power, so that he only got the victory over men whom God had confounded, dismayed, and enervated, ver. 26.

Verse 28. I will put my hook in thy nose] This seems to be an allusion to the method of guiding a buffalo; he has a sort of ring put into his nose, to which a cord or bridle is attached, by which he can be turned to the right, to the left, or round about, according to the pleasure of his driver.

Verse 29. This shall be a sign unto thee] To Hezekiah; for to him this part of the address is made.

Ye shall eat this year] Sennacherib had ravaged the country, and seed-time was now over, yet God shows them that he would so bless the land, that what should grow of itself that year would be quite sufficient to supply the inhabitants, and prevent all famine; and though the second year was the sabbatical rest, or jubilee for the land, in which it was unlawful to 30 ^y And ^z the remnant that is escaped of the house of Judah shall yet again take root downward, and bear fruit upward.

31 For out of Jerusalem shall go forth a remnant, and ^a they that escape out of mount Zion: ^b the zeal of the LORD of hosts shall do this.

plough or sow; yet even then the land, by an especial blessing of God, should bring forth a sufficiency for its inhabitants; and in the third year they should sow and plant, &c. and have abundance, &c. Now this was to be a sign to Hezekiah, that his deliverance had not been effected by natural or casual means: for as, without a miracle, the ravaged and uncultivated land could not yield food for its inhabitants; so not without miraculous interference could the Assyrian army be cut off, and Israel saved.

Verse 30. The remnant—shall yet again take root] As your corn shall take root in the soil, and bring forth, and abundantly multiply itself, so shall the Jewish people: the population shall be greatly increased, and the desolations occasioned by the sword soon be forgotten.

Verse 31. Out of Jerusalem shall go forth a remnant] The Jews shall be so multiplied as not only to fill Jerusalem, but all the adjacent country.

And they that escape out of mount Zion] Some think that this refers to the going forth of the apostles to the Gentile world, and converting the nations by the preaching of the Gospel.

Verse 32. He shall not, &c.] Here follow the fullest proofs that Jerusalem shall not be taken by the Assyrians. 1. He shall not come into this city. 2. He shall not be able to get so near as to shoot an arrow into it. 3. He shall not be able to bring an army before it. 4. Nor shall he be able to raise any redoubt or mound against it. 5. No; not even an Assyrian shield shall be seen in the country: not even a foraging party shall come near the city.

his army shall not return, yet he shall return to Assyria: for, because of his blasphemy, he is reserved for a more ignominious death.

Verse 35. That night] The very night after the blasphemous message had been sent, and this comfortable prophecy delivered.

The angel of the LORD went out] I believe this angel or messenger of the Lord was simply a suffocating or pestilential wind; by which the Assyrian army was destroyed, as in a moment, without noise, confusion, or any warning. See the note, 1 Kings chap. xx. ver. 30. Thus was the promise, verse 7, fulfilled, I will send a blast upon him; for he had heard the rumour that his territories were invaded; and on his way to save his empire, in one night, the whole of his army was destroyed, without any one even seeing who had hurt them. This is called an angel or messenger of the Lord: that is, something immediately sent by him to execute his judgments.

and probably a few associates, who were preserved as witnesses and relaters of this most dire disaster. Rab-shakeh, no doubt, perished with the rest of the army.

Verse 36. Dwelt at Nineveh.] This was the capital of the Assyrian empire.

Verse 37. Nisroch his god] We know nothing of this deity; he is nowhere else mentioned.

Smote him with the sword] The rabbins say, that his sons had learned that he intended to sacrifice them to this god; and that they could only prevent this by slaying him.

The same writers add, that he consulted his wise men how it was that such miracles should be wrought for the Israelites? who told him that it was because of the merit of Abraham, who had offered his only son to God; he then said, I will offer to him my two sons; which when they heard, they rose up and slew him. When a rabbin cannot untie a knot, he feels neither scruple nor difficulty to cut it.

CHAPTER XX.

Hezekiah's sickness, and the message of the prophet to him, to prepare for death, 1. His distress and prayer to God, 2, 3. The Lord hears, and promises to add fifteen years to his life, and Isaiah prescribes a means of cure, 4—7. Hezekiah seeks a sign; and, to assure him of the truth of God's promise, the shadow of the dial of Ahaz goes back ten degrees, 8—11. The king of Babylon sends a friendly message to Hezekiah, to congratulate him on his recovery; and to these messengers he ostentatiously shows all his treasures, 12, 13. Isaiah reproves him, and foretells that the Babylonians will come and take away all those treasures, and take the people into captivity; and degrade the royal family of Judah, 14—18. Hezekiah bows to the divine judgment, 19. His acts and death, 20, 21.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XX.

Verse 1. Set thine house in order] It appears from the text, that he was smitten with such a disorder as must terminate in death, without the miraculous interposition of God; and he is now commanded to set his house in order, or to give charge concerning his house; to dispose of his affairs; or, in our words, to make his will, because his death was at hand.

"This sickness," says Jarchi, "took place three days before the defeat of Sennacherib." That it must have been before this defeat, is evident: Hezekiah reigned only twenty-nine years, chap. xviii. 2. He had reigned fourteen years when the war with Sennacherib began, chap. xviii. 13: and he reigned fifteen years after this sickness, chap. xx. 6; therefore, 14+15=29, the term of his reign. Nothing can be clearer than this: that Hezekiah had reigned fourteen years before this time; and that he did live the fifteen years here promised. That Hezekiah's sickness happened before the destruction of Sennacherib's army is asserted by the text itself: see ver. 6.

Verse 3. I beseech thee, O Lord] Hezekiah knew that, although the words of Isaiah were delivered to him in an absolute form, yet they were to be conditionally understood; else he could not have prayed to God to reverse a purpose which he knew to be irrevocable. Even this passage is a key to many prophecies, and divine declarations: see chap. xviii. of Jeremiah.

Hezekiah pleads his uprightness and holy conduct in his own behalf. Was it impious to do so? No; but it certainly did not savour much either of humility, or of a due sense of his own weakness. If he had a perfect heart, who made it such?—God. If he did good in God's sight, who enabled him to do so?—God. Could he, therefore, plead in his behalf dispositions and actions which he could neither have felt nor practised but by the power of the grace of God? I trow not. But the times of this ignorance God winked at. The Gospel teaches us a different lesson.

Wept sore.] How clouded must his prospects of another world have been! But it is said that, as he saw the nation in danger from the Assyrian army, which was then invading it, and threatened to destroy the religion of the true God, he was greatly affected at the news of his death, as he wished to live to see the enemies of God overthrown. And, therefore, God promises that he will deliver the city out of the hands of the king of Assyria, at the same time that he promises him a respite of fifteen years, ver. 6. His lamentation on this occasion may be seen in Isaiah, chap. xxxviii.

Verse 4. Into the middle court] ^{אֶת־הַחֹמֶת} ha-tser, the court. This is the reading of the Masoretic Keri: but ^{אֶת־הָעִיר} ha-^hair, "of the city," is the reading of the text, and of most MSS.; but the versions follow the Keri.

Verse 6. I will add unto thy days fifteen years] This is the first and only man who ever was informed of the term of his life. And was this a privilege? Surely no. If Hezekiah was attached to life, as he appears to have been, how must his mind be affected to mark the sinking years! He knew he was to die at 8 ¶ And Hezekiah said unto Isaiah, ^m What shall be the sign that the LORD will heal me, and that I shall go up into the house of the LORD the third day?

9 And Isaiah said, ⁿ This sign shalt thou have of the LORD, that the LORD will do the thing that he hath spoken: shall the shadow go forward ten degrees, or go back ten degrees?

10 And Hezekiah answered, It is a light thing for the shadow to go down ten degrees: nay, but let the shadow return backward ten degrees.

11 And Isaiah the prophet cried unto the LORD: and ^o he brought the shadow the end of fifteen years; and how must he feel at the end of every year when he saw that so much was cut off from life! He must necessarily feel a thousand deaths in fearing one. I believe there would be nothing wanting to complete the misery of men, except the place of torment, were they informed of the precise time in which their lives must terminate. God, in his abundant mercy, has hidden this from their eyes.

Verse 7. Take a lump of figs—and laid it on the bile] We cannot exactly say in what Hezekiah's malady consisted. ^{שִׁחִין} shachin, signifies any inflammatory tumour, bile, abscess, &c. The versions translate it sore, wound, and such like. Some think it was a pleurisy; others, that it was the plague; others, the elephantiasis; and others, that it was the quinsy. A poultice of figs might be very proper to mature a bile, or to discuss any obstinate inflammatory swelling. This Pliny remarks, Omniibus quæ maturanda aut discutienda sunt, imponuntur. But we cannot pronounce on the propriety of the application, unless we were certain of the nature of the malady. This, however, was the natural means which God chose to bless to the recovery of Hezekiah's health: and, without this interposition, he must have died.

Verse 8. What shall be the sign] He wished to be fully convinced that his cure was to be entirely supernatural; and, in order to this, he seeks one miracle to prove the truth of the other, that nothing might remain equivocal.

Verse 11. He brought the shadow ten degrees backward] We cannot suppose that these ten degrees meant ten hours; they were ten divisions of time on this dial; and perhaps it would not be right to suppose that the sun went ten degrees back in the heavens, or that the earth turned back upon its axis from east to west, in a contrary direction to its natural course. But the miracle might be effected by means of refraction, for a ray of light we know can be varied or refracted from a right line, by passing ten degrees backward, by which it had gone down in the dial of Ahaz.

12 ¶ At that time Berodach-baladan, the son of Baladan, king of Babylon, sent letters and a present unto Hezekiah: for he had heard that Hezekiah had been sick.

13 And Hezekiah hearkened unto them, and showed them all the house of his precious things, the silver, and the gold, and the spices, and the precious ointment, and all the house of his armour, and all that was found in his treasures: there was nothing in his house, nor in all his dominion, that Hezekiah showed them not.

14 ¶ Then came Isaiah the prophet unto King Hezekiah, and said unto him, What said these men? and from whence came they unto thee? And Hezekiah said, They are come from a far country, even from Babylon.

15 And he said, What have they seen in thine house? And Hezekiah answered, All the things that are in mine house have they seen: there is nothing among my treasures that I have not showed them.

through a dense medium: and we know also, by means of the refracting power of the atmosphere, the sun, when near rising and setting, seems to be higher above the horizon than he really is; and, by horizontal refraction, we find that the sun appears above the horizon when he is actually below it, and literally out of sight; therefore, by using dense clouds, or vapours, the rays of light in that place might be refracted from their direct course len, or any other number of degrees: so that the miracle might have been wrought by occasioning this extraordinary refraction, rather than by disturbing the course of the earth, or any other of the celestial bodies.

The dial of Ahaz] See the note on chap. ix. 13. and the observations and diagram at the end of this chapter.

Verse 12. At that time Berodach-baladan] He is called Merodach-baladan, Isa. xxxix. 1. and by the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic versions; and by several of Kennicot's and De Rossi's MSS. and also by the Babylonian and Jerusalem Talmuds. The true reading seems to be Merodac: the p mem, and the u beth, might be easily interchanged, and so produce the mistake.

Sent letters and a present] It appears that there was friendship between the king of Babylon and Hezekiah, when the latter and the Assyrians were engaged in a destructive war.

16 And Isaiah said unto Hezekiah, Hear the word of the LORD.

17 Behold, the days come, that all that is in thine house, and that which thy fathers have laid up in store unto this day, shall be carried into Babylon: nothing shall be left, saith the LORD.

18 And of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away; and they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon.

19 Then said Hezekiah unto Isaiah, Good is the word of the LORD which thou hast spoken. And he said, Is it not good, if peace and truth be in my days?

20 ¶ And the rest of the acts of Hezekiah, and all his might, and how he made a pool, and a conduit, and brought water into the city, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah?

The king of Babylon had not only heard of his sickness, but he had heard of the miracle, as we learn from 2 Chron. xxxii. 21.

Verse 13. Hezekiah hearkened unto them] Instead of וַיִּשְׁמָע, vaiyeshma, he hearkened: וַיִּשְׂמָח, vaiyishmach, "he rejoiced," or "was glad," is the reading of twelve of Kennicot's and De Rossi's MSS. the parallel place, Isa. xxxix. 2. the Septuagint, Syriac, Vulgate, Arabic, some copies of the Targum, and the Babylonian Talmud.

All the house of his precious things] Interpreters are not well agreed about the meaning of the original כְּתֹכֶתֶךָ, necothet, which we here translate precious things; and in the margin spicery or jewels. I suppose the last to be meant.

There was nothing in his house] He showed them through a spirit of folly and exultation all his treasures, and no doubt those in the house of the Lord. And it is said, 2 Chron. xxxii. 31. that, in this business, God left him, to try him, that he might know all that was in his heart: and this trial proved that, in his heart, there was little else than pride and folly.

Verse 17. Behold, the days come] This was fulfilled in the days of the latter Jewish kings, when the Babylonians had led the people away into captivity, and stripped the land, the temple, &c. of all their riches: see Dan. i. 1—3.

Verse 18. They shall be eunuchs] Perhaps this means no more than that they should become household servants to the kings of Babylon. See the fulfilment, chap. xxiv. 13—15. and Dan. i. 1—3:

Verse 19. Good is the word of the LORD He has spoken right, I have done foolishly. I submit to his judgments.

Is it not good, if peace and truth be in my days? I believe Hezekiah inquires whether there shall be peace and truth in his days? And the question seems to be rather of an interested nature. He does not appear to deplore the calamities that were coming on the land, provided peace and truth might prevail in his days.

Verse 20. The rest of the acts of Hezekiah See the parallel places in Isaiah, and in 2 Chronicles. In this latter book, chap. xxxii. we find several particulars that are not inserted here; especially concerning his pride, the increase of his riches, his storehouses of corn, wine, and oil; his stalls for all manner of beasts; his cities, flocks, and herds, in abundance; and the bringing the upper water-course of Gihon to the west side of the city of David, by which he brought a plentiful supply of water into that city, &c. &c. &c.

On the subject of the Babylonian embassy, I may say a few words. However we may endeavour to excuse Hezekiah, it is certain that he made an exhibition of his riches and power in a spirit of great vanity; and that this did displease the Lord. It was also ruinous to Judea: when those foreigners had seen such a profusion of wealth, such princely establishments, and such a fruitful land, it was natural for them to conceive the wish that they had such treasures; and, from that, to covet the very treasures they saw. They made their report to their king and countrymen; and the desire to possess the Jewish wealth became general: and, in consequence of this, there is little doubt that the conquest of Jerusalem was projected. History is not barren in such instances: the same kind of cause has produced similar effects; take two or three notable instances.

When the barbarous Goth and Vandal nations saw the pleasant and fruitful plains and hills of Italy, and the vast treasures of the Roman people, the abundance of the necessities, conveniences, comforts, and luxuries of life, which met their eyes in every direction; they never were at rest till their swords put them in possession of the whole, and brought the mistress of the world to irretrievable ruin!

Vortigern, a British king, unhappily invited the Saxons, in 445, to assist him against his rebellious subjects: they came; saw the land that it was good, and in the end took possession of it; having driven out, or into the mountains of Wales, all the original Britons.

The Danes, in the ninth century, made some inroads into England, found the land better than their own, and never rested till they established themselves in this country; and, after having ruled it for a considerable time, were at last, with the utmost difficulty, driven out.

These nations had only to see a better land in order to covet it; and their exertions were not wanting in order to possess it.

How far other nations, since those times, have imitated the most foolish and impolitic conduct of the Jewish king, and how far their conduct may have been, or may yet be, marked with the same consequences, the pages of impartial history have shown, and will show: God's ways are all equal, and the Judge of all the earth will do right. But we need not wonder, after this, that the Jews fell into the hands of the Babylonians, for this was the political consequence of their own conduct: nor could it be otherwise, the circumstances of both nations considered, unless God, by a miraculous interposition, had saved them; and this it was inconsistent with his justice to do, because they had, in their pride and vanity, offended against him. To be lifted up with pride and vain-glory, in the possession of any blessings, is the most direct way to lose them; as it induces God, who dispensed them for our benefit, to resume them; because, that which was designed for our good, through our own perversity, becomes our bane.

I have intimated in the note on ver. 11. that the shadow was brought back on the dial of Abaz by means of refraction. On this subject some farther observations may not be improper.

2. Any person may easily convince himself of the effect of refraction by this simple experiment:—Place a vessel on the floor, and put a piece of coin on the bottom, close to that part of the vessel which is farthest off from yourself; then move back, till you find that the edge of the vessel next to yourself fairly covers the coin, and that it is now entirely out of sight. Stand exactly in that position, and let a person pour water gently into the vessel, and you will soon find the coin to reappear, and to be entirely in sight when the vessel is full; though neither it nor you have changed your positions in the least.

By the refracting power of the atmosphere we have several minutes more of the solar light each day than we should otherwise have. "The atmosphere refracts the sun's rays so as to bring him in sight, every clear day, before he rises in the horizon; and to keep him in view for some minutes after he is really set below it. For, at some times of the year, we see the sun ten minutes longer above the horizon than he would be if there were no refractions; and above six minutes every day at a mean rate." Ferguson.

And it is entirely owing to refraction that we have any morning or evening twilight: without this power in the atmosphere, the heavens would be as black as ebony in the absence of the sun; and, at his rising, we should pass in a moment from the deepest darkness into the brightest light; and, at his setting, from the most intense light, to the most profound darkness; which, in a few days, would be sufficient to destroy the visual organs of all the animals in air, earth, or sea.

That the rays of light can be supernaturally refracted, and the sun appear to be where he actually is not, we have a most remarkable instance from Kepler. Some Hollanders, who wintered in Nova Zembla, in the year 1596, were surprised to find that, after a continual night of three months, the sun began to rise seventeen days sooner than (according to computation deduced from the altitude of the pole, observed to be seventy-six degrees) he should have done; which can only be accounted for by a miracle, or by an extraordinary refraction.

tion of the sun's rays passing through the cold dense air in that climate. At that time the sun, as Kepler computes, was almost five degrees below the horizon when he appeared; and, consequently, the refraction of his rays was about nine times stronger than it is with us.

3. Now, this might be all purely natural, though it was extraordinary; and it proves the possibility of what I have conjectured, even on natural principles: but the foretelling of this, and leaving the going back, or forward, to the choice of the king, and the thing occurring in the place and time when and where it was predicted, shows that it was supernatural and miraculous, though the means were purely natural: Yet in that climate, LAT. thirty-one degrees fifty minutes north, and LONG. thirty-five degrees twenty-five minutes east, where vapours to produce an extraordinary refraction of the solar rays could not be expected, the collecting or producing them heightens and ascertains the miracle, "But why contend that the thing was done by refraction? could not God as easily have caused the sun (rather the earth) to turn back, as to have produced this extraordinary and miraculous refraction?" I answer, Yes. But it is much more consistent with the wisdom and perfections of God, to perform a work or accomplish an end by simple means, than by those that are complex; and, had it been done in the other way, it would have required a miracle to invert, and a miracle to restore; and a strong convulsion on the earth's surface to bring it ten degrees suddenly back, and to take it the same suddenly forward. The miracle, according to my supposition, was performed on the atmosphere, and without in the least disturbing even that; whereas, on the other supposition, it could not have been done without suspending or interrupting the laws of the solar system, and this without gaining a hair's breadth in credibility or conviction more by such stupendous interpositions than might be effected by the agency of clouds and vapours. The point to be gained was the bringing back the shadow on the dial ten degrees: this might have been gained by the means I have here described, as well as by the other; and these means, being much more simple, were more worthy the divine choice than those which are more complex, and could not have been used without producing the necessity of working at least double or treble miracles.

4. Before I proceed to the immediate object of inquiry, I shall beg leave to make some general observations on the invention and construction of DIALS in general.

SUNDIALS must have been of great antiquity, though the earliest we hear of is that of Ahaz: but this certainly was not the first of its kind, though it is the first on record. Ahaz began his reign about four hundred years before Alexander, and about twelve years after the foundation of Rome.

Anaximenes, the Milesian, who flourished about four hundred years before Christ, is said by Pliny to have been the first who made a sundial, the use of which he taught to the Spartans: but others give this honour to Thales, his countryman, who flourished two hundred years before him.

Aristarchus, of Samos, who lived before Archimedes, invented a plain horizontal disk, with a gnomon, to distinguish the hours; and had its rim raised all round, to prevent the shadow from extending too far.

Probably all these were rude and evanescent attempts; for it does not appear that the Romans, who borrowed all their knowledge from the Greeks, knew any thing of a sundial before that set up by Pappyrus Cursor, about four hundred and sixty years after the foundation of Rome; before which time, says Pliny, there was no mention of any account of time but by the rising and setting of the sun. This dial was erected near the temple of Quirinus, but is allowed to have been very inaccurate. About thirty years after, the consul Marcus Valerius Messala brought a dial out of Sicily, which he placed on a pillar near the rostrum, but, as it was not made for the latitude of Rome, it did not show the time exactly; however, it was the only one they had for a hundred years, when Martius Philippus set up one more exact.

Since those times the science of dialling has been cultivated in most civilized nations; but we have no professed treatise on the subject before the time of the Jesuit Clavius, who, in the latter part of the sixteenth century, demonstrated both the theory and practice of dialling; but he did this after the most rigid mathematical principles, so as to render that which was simple in itself exceedingly obscure. Though we have useful and correct works of this kind from Rivard, De Parcieux, Dom. Bedos de Celles, Joseph Blaise Garnier, Gravesande, Emerson, Martin, and Leadbetter; yet, something more specific, more simple, and more general, is a desideratum in the science of sciaterics, or dialling.

Observations on the nature and structure of the sundial of Ahaz; with a diagram of its supposed form.

5. When writing on the appointment of Jehu to be king of Israel, chap. ix. I was struck with the manner in which the subject of the 13th verse was understood by the Chaldee: "Then they hastened and took every man his garment, and put it under him, on the TOP OF THE STAIRS;" according to the Hebrew, על דרך המעלה, gerem ha-ma'alloth, which might be translated, on the bare (naked or uncovered) steps. This the Targumist has translated by לדרג שחאיה, ledereg sha'âiya, "at the HOUR-STEPS." The other versions, knowing nothing of what was intended, have endeavoured to guess, severally, at a meaning. On turning to chap. xx. 11. where the same word מעלה ma'alloth, is used, and most evidently, there, implies some kind of sundial, I found the Chaldee still more pointed, both in this and in the parallel place, Isa. xxxviii. 8. rendering the Hebrew words בְּצֵל שֶׁבַח שָׁמַיָא betsurath eben sha-âiya, "by the shadow of the stone of hours:" from which I was led to conclude that some kind of gnomonic figure, or sundial was intended; and that the hours, or divisions of time, were shown by a shadow, projected on stone steps, gradually ascending to a certain height. This thought I communicated to the Rev. Philip Garrett, one of the preachers among the people called Methodists; of whose rare knowledge in the science of gnomonics, and ingenuity in constructing every possible variety of dials, I had already indubitable proofs; and requested him, from the principle I had laid down, to try whether such an instrument could be constructed that might serve at once as a public tribunal, and as a dial, to ascertain all the inequalities of the Jewish division of time?

A more difficult problem in the science he was never called to solve. Though several had attempted to construct dials to show the mode by which different nations measured time, and among the rest the Jews; yet nothing properly satisfactory has been produced, although one nearly in the same form of outline with the present may be found in "Hutton's Mathematical Recreations," vol. iii. p. 337. projected on a plane superficies; which could not possibly show the ascending and descending of the shadow like that now before the reader, which the ingenuity of the above gentleman has brought to almost as great a degree of perfection as can reasonably be expected. And that the dial of Ahaz was constructed on a similar principle there can be but little doubt, as the words of the original seem to express this and no other form; and so the Chaldee appears to have understood it: nor is it easy to conceive, that one on any other principle could ascertain, in all seasons, the varying admeasurement of the Jewish time.

6. Having said thus much relative to the circumstances which gave birth to this dial, it may be deemed necessary to give a general view of the natural and artificial divisions of time, and then a description of the dial itself.

The most obvious division of time is, into day and night; these are marked out by the rising and setting of the sun. Modern writers call the time from sunrise to sunset, the natural day; the night is the time from sunset to sunrise: these days and nights are subject to great inequalities in every part of the earth, except under the equator. The most ancient division of the equatorial day was into the morning and evening; the night was divided into watches.

Hours are either equal or unequal: an unequal hour is the twelfth part of a natural day, or the twelfth part of the night. In summer, when the days are the longest, the diurnal hours are the longest, and the nocturnal hours shortest: in winter, on the contrary, when the days are shortest, the hours of the day are the shortest, and the hours of the night longest. The difference between the hours of the day and those of the night is greatest at the solstices, because then there is the greatest inequality between the length of the day and that of the night. At the equinoxes, when the days and nights are of an equal length, all hours, both of days and nights, are equal.

The ancient Jews made use of unequal hours: with them, sunrise was the beginning of the first hour of the day; noon was the end of the sixth hour; and the twelfth hour ended at sunset.

Doctor Long observes, "These times might be measured by an astronomer; but how unequal hours can be marked for common use is not easy to say." He farther observes, "That the ancients had sundials; but I think unequal hours could not be marked thereon exactly." And, in a note on this observation, he remarks, "The sundials of the ancients, to show unequal hours, were not made in the method used at present, with a gnomon parallel to the axis of the earth; but had a pin set upright upon a plane, rounded at the upper end, the shadow whereof marked their unequal hours in the following manner: by means of an analemma, or projection of the sphere, six curves were drawn upon the plane, to show where the shadow of the pin at the several hours terminated every month in the year; one curve served for two months, because the shadows are of the same length in January as December, in February as in November, in March as in October, &c.; each curve was drawn long enough to take in all the hours of the longest day in the respective months, and was divided into twelve equal parts. It is easy to see that a dial made by this method, in order to show the unequal hours exactly, ought to have half as many curves, (or parallel lines,) as there are days in the year; but this would require so many lines, as would make it all confusion: it is possible they had only one line for a month, and that for the middle of the month."

The Doctor is perfectly correct in observing, "That the sundials of the ancients, to show unequal hours, were not made in the method used at present, with a gnomon parallel to the axis of the earth;" because such a dial could not be of any use to those nations whose divisions of the solar hours were unequal, or more or less than sixty minutes to an hour. But the Doctor is mistaken in supposing the difficulty, or rather impossibility, of constructing a sundial to show these unequal hours; for eleven lines are all that is necessary to show the hours for every day in the year: and forty-four lines would show all the quarters: whereas, on his plan, it would require near eleven hundred calculations of the altitude of the sun, and the same number to show where the shadow of the gnomon at the several hours terminated. His dial would, therefore, require above one hundred and eighty parallel lines, and nearly eleven hundred marks for the hours only; but if the quarters are inserted, four thousand four hundred marks would be necessary. This would require the labour of six or eight months, whereas the plan here adopted would not require, in its calculations and construction, as many hours.

7. A description of the dial.—This dial consists of eleven steps, placed parallel to the horizon, with a perpendicular gnomon fixed in the upper or middle step, which step is placed exactly north and south, and forms the meridian, or sixth-hour line.

All the operations of this dial are determined by the point of the shadow projected from the gnomon on the steps of the dial.

Every day, for six months, the shadow from the point of the gnomon makes a different angle with the gnomon, which makes the hours of one day to differ in length from the hours of the preceding and following days. The same observations apply to the other six months in the year.

The shadow crosses each step of the dial every day in the year.

Each day in the year consists of twelve hours, from the time of sunrise to sunset; which makes a difference of twenty minutes between an hour in the longest day and an hour in the shortest. The longest day, consisting of twelve hours of seventy minutes to an hour; and the shortest of twelve hours, of fifty minutes to an hour; but, when the sun enters Aries, or Libra, each hour consists of sixty minutes.

To be able to understand this dial one example will be sufficient: on the 21st of March, or the 23d of September, the shadow from the point of the gnomon will enter or ascend the first step of the dial, at the first hour of the day, at the west side of the dial on the equinoctial line; eleven minutes afterward, the shadow comes in contact with the circle marked fifteen degrees, which is the altitude of the sun at that time; twenty-four minutes afterward, the shadow touches the shadow of twenty degrees; and, in twenty-five minutes, it ascends the second step, at the second hour of the day, when the altitude of the sun is twenty-five degrees eight minutes.

In twenty-four minutes the shadow comes to the circle of thirty degrees; and twenty-five minutes after it arrives at the circle of thirty-five degrees; and in eleven minutes it ascends the third step, at the third hour of the day, when the altitude is thirty-six degrees fifty-seven minutes. In sixteen minutes the point of the shadow intersects the circle of forty degrees; and in forty-four minutes it ascends the fourth step, at the fourth hour of the day, when the altitude of the sun is forty-seven degrees twenty-two minutes; and in eighteen minutes of time, it comes in contact with the circle of fifty degrees, &c. &c. until it arrives at the meridian step, or line, at the sixth hour of the day, when the altitude is fifty-eight degrees ten minutes: then the shadow descends the sixth step, and moves on to the seventh, &c. descending step after step, tracing the equinoctial line on the east side of the dial; intersecting the steps, or high lines, and the circles of altitude, until it leaves the dial at the eleventh hour of the day.

A dial of this construction is the most simple, useful, and durable, that can be made: and is exclusively and completely adapted to ascertain the ancient Jewish divisions of the solar hours.

The steps of this dial render the construction a little more difficult than it otherwise would be if the lines were drawn on a plane superficies, which would give exactly the same divisions of the hours.

N. B. A vertical south dial, in lat. thirty-one degrees fifty minutes, the latitude of Jerusalem, could be of little or no use to ascertain these divisions for several months in the year. The same remark may be made respecting a south vertical concave dial. The sun cannot shine upon a south vertical plane, in lat. thirty-one degrees fifty minutes in the longest day, before fifty-three minutes past eight, or nearly nine in the morning.

With respect to the dimensions of this dial, if we suppose the height of the stile from the bottom of the lowest step to be four feet, this would allow six inches for the thickness of each step, and twelve inches for the height of the stile above the upper step. According to this scale, the south end of the dial would be ten yards; the north end, sixteen yards; and the east and west sides, eight yards two feet. The ground-work might be eighteen yards by twelve, making an oblong square, facing the four cardinal points of the heavens.

N. B. All the lines upon a dial-plane are inverted, with respect to the cardinal points of the heavens.

The lines which show the hours from sunrise to the meridian, are on the west side of the dial-plane; and the lines which show the hours from the meridian to sunset, are on the east side of the dial-plane; the southern tropic, Capricorn, is on the north end of the dial-plane; and the northern tropic, Cancer, is on the south end of the plane.

The narrow end of the dial looks toward the south, and is marked the north; the wide end looks north, and is marked south; the side which looks west, is marked sunrise; and the side which looks east, is marked sunset.

8. In the annexed diagram, a transverse section of the dial is represented, where the steps are seen at one view, ascending and descending to and from the gnomon, or stile, on the upper or sixth step. These steps are all equal in their height, but unequal on their upper surface, as the diagram shows, and for the reasons alleged above. Each of these steps might have been divided into parts or degrees, to mark the smaller divisions of time; and to this sort of division there appears to be a reference in the text, where it is said, the shadow went back ten degrees. It seems the miracle was wrought in the afternoon, for it is said, The shadow was brought ten degrees backward, by which it had gone down; so it appears that the shadow had reascended ten degrees on the afternoon steps: and when this was done, so that all were fully convinced of the miracle, the shadow again descended to its true place on the steps; and this would be the immediate consequence of dissipating the vapours which I have supposed to be the agent which God employed to produce by refraction this most extraordinary phenomenon.

A dial constructed in this way, in the centre of a town, or some public place, would serve not only to give the divisions of time, but also as a place from which proclamations might be made; and especially from the upper step, where the speaker might stand by the gnomon, and be sufficiently elevated above the crowd below.

On such a place I have supposed Jehu to have been proclaimed king; and, to do him honour, his captains spread their garments on the steps; the first, second, third, fourth, and fifth, by which he ascended to the sixth step, on which the gnomon was placed, and where he was proclaimed and acknowledged the king of Israel: for it is said, the captains hastened, and took every man his garment, and put it under him on the top of the stairs, and blew with trumpets, saying, JEHU is KING! 2 Kings ix. 13. where see the note.

9. Pietro Nonius, or Nunnez, a celebrated Portuguese mathematician, about the middle of the sixteenth century, proved that the shadow on a stile in a sundial might go backward without a miracle; which was founded on the following theorem:

"In all countries, the zenith of which is situated between the equator and the tropic, as long as the sun passes beyond the zenith, toward the apparent or elevated pole, he arrives twice before noon at the same azimuth; and the same thing takes place in the afternoon."

This gave rise to the demonstration that a dial might be constructed for any latitude on which the shadow shall retrograde, or go backward. And it is effected in the following manner:

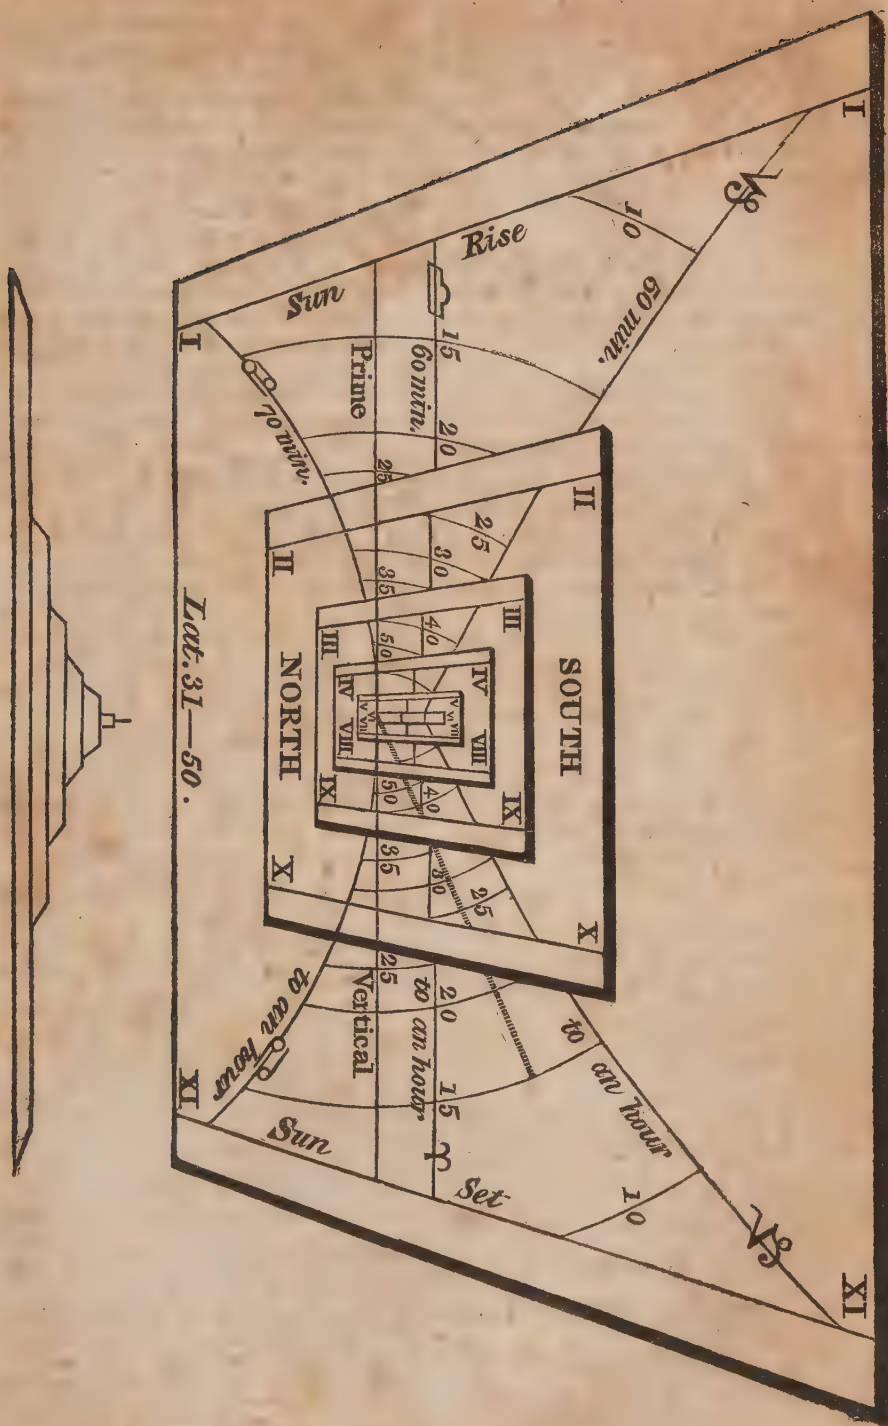

Incline a plane turned directly south, in such a manner that its zenith may fall between the tropic and equator; and nearly about the middle of the distance between these two circles. In the latitude of London, for example, which is fifty-one degrees, thirty-one minutes, the plane must make an angle of about thirty-eight degrees. In the middle of the plane fix an upright stile, of such a length that its shadow shall go beyond the plane; and, if several angular lines be then drawn from the bottom of the stile toward the south, about the time of the solstice, the shadow will retrograde twice in the course of the day, as mentioned above. This is evident, since the plane is parallel to the horizontal plane, having its zenith under the same meridian, at the distance of twelve degrees from the equator, toward the north: the shadows of the two stiles must, consequently, move in the same manner in both.

Of these principles some have endeavoured to make an unholy use: contending that, what the Holy Scriptures consider to be a miracle, in the case of the retrogradation of the shadow on the dial of Ahaz, was the effect of a mere natural cause, without any thing miraculous in it. On this subject Dr. Hutton very properly remarks: "It is very improbable, if the retrogradation which took place on the dial of that prince had been a natural effect, that it should not have been observed till the prophet announced it to him as the sign of his cure; for, in that case, it must have always occurred when the sun was between the tropic and the zenith." Hutton's Mathematical Recreations, vol. iii. page 323.

To this we may add that, if the dial of Ahaz had been thus constructed, the effect must have been generally known; and Hezekiah would never have taken that for a miracle which he and all his courtiers must have observed as an occurrence which, at particular seasons, took place twice every day. And, that the matter was known publicly to have been a miracle, we learn from this circumstance; that Merodach-baladan, king of Babylon, sent his ambassadors to Jerusalem, to inquire after the wonder that was done in the land, as well as after Hezekiah's health; see 2 Chron. xxxii. 31. But the miraculous interposition is so obvious, that infidelity must be driven to pitiful shifts when it is obliged to have recourse to the insinuation of imposture, in a case where the miraculous interference of God is so strikingly evident. Besides, such a dial could not be constructed for the latitude of Jerusalem without having the north end elevated twenty degrees seven minutes: which could not be used for the purpose which is indicated in the text. See No. 3. of the preceding observations.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXI.

Verse 1. Manasseh was twelve years old] He was born about three years after his father's miraculous cure; he was carried captive to Babylon; repented; was restored to his kingdom; put down idolatry; and died at the age of sixty-seven years: see 2 Chron. xxxiii. 1—20.

Verse 2. After the abominations of the heathen] He exactly copied the conduct of those nations which God had cast out of that land.

Verse 3. Made a grove] He made Asherah, the Babylonian Melitta, or Roman Venus: see chap. xvii. 10. and the observations at the end of that chapter; and see here on ver. 7.

Worshipped all the host of heaven] All the stars and planets; but particularly the sun and the moon.

Verse 4. Built altars] He placed idolatrous altars even in the temple.

Verse 6. Made his son pass through the fire] Consecrated him to Molech.

Observed times] וְעוֹנֵן veonen; he practised divination by the clouds; by observing their course at particular times, their different kinds, contrary directions, &c. &c.

Used enchantments] וְנֶחֱשׁ ve-nechesh; he used incantations, spells, and charms.

Dealt with familiar spirits] וְעָשָׂה רוֹאֵשׁ ro'ash

ob; he was a necromancer: was a raiser of spirits, whom he endeavoured to press into his service: he had a Python.

And wizards] וְעֵיִדִּים veyideonim: the knowing ones, the white witches, and such like: see on Lev. xix. 26—31. where most of these terms are particularly explained and illustrated.

Verse 7. He set a graven image of the grove that he had made in the house] Every one may see that Asherah here must signify an idol, and not a grove; and, for the proof of this, see the observations at the end of the chapter.

Verse 8. Neither will I make the feet of Israel] Had they been faithful to God's testimonies, they never had gone into captivity; and should, even at this day, have been in possession of the promised land.

Verse 9. Seduced them to do more evil] He did all he could to pervert the whole national character; and totally to destroy the worship of the true God: and he succeeded.

Verse 10. The LORD spake by—the prophets] The prophets were Hosea, Joel, Nahum, Habakkuk, and Isaiah. These five following verses contain the sum of what these prophets spoke. It is said that Isaiah not only prophesied in those days, but also that he was put to death by Manasseh, being sawn asunder by a wooden saw.

I am bringing such evil upon Jerusalem and Judah, that whosoever heareth of it, both ¹ his ears shall tingle.

13 And I will stretch over Jerusalem ^s the line of Samaria, and the plummet of the house of Ahab; and I will wipe Jerusalem as a man wipeth a dish, ^t wiping it, and turning it upside down.

14 And I will forsake the remnant of mine inheritance, and deliver them into the hand of their enemies; and they shall become a prey and a spoil to all their enemies;

15 Because they have done that which was evil in my sight, and have provoked me to anger, since the day their fathers came forth out of Egypt, even unto this day.

16 ^u Moreover Manasseh shed innocent blood very much, till he had filled Jerusalem ^v from one end to another; besides his sin wherewith he made Judah to sin, in doing that which was evil in the sight of the LORD.

17 ¶ Now ^w the rest of the acts of Manasseh, and all that he did, and his sin that he sinned, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah?

Verse 12. Both his ears shall tingle. צלצול tilsalnah: something expressive of the sound in what we call, from the same sensation, the tingling of the ears. This is the consequence of having the ears suddenly pierced with a loud and shrill noise; the ears seem to ring for some time after. The prophets spoke to them vehemently; so that the sound seemed to be continued even when they had left off speaking. This was a faithful and solemn testimony.

Verse 13. The line of Samaria] I will treat Jerusalem as I have treated Samaria. Samaria was taken, pillaged, ruined, and its inhabitants led into captivity: Jerusalem shall have the same measure.

And the plummet of the house of Ahab] The house of Ahab was totally destroyed, and not a man of his race left to sit upon the throne of Israel: so shall it be done to the house or royal family of Judah; they shall be all finally destroyed, and not a man of their race shall any more sit on the throne of Judah; nor shall Judah have a throne to sit on. Thus Jerusalem shall have the same weight, as well as it shall have the same measure of Samaria, because it has copied all the abominations which brought that kingdom to total destruction.

I will wipe Jerusalem as a man wipeth a dish] The Vulgate translates this clause as follows: Delebo Jerusalem, sicut deleri solent tabule; "I will blot out Jerusalem as tablets are wont to be blotted out." This is a metaphor taken from the ancient method of writing: they traced their letters with a stile on boards, thinly spread over with wax: for this purpose one end of the stile was sharp, the other end blunt and smooth, with which they could rub out what they had written, and so smooth the place, and spread back the wax so as to render it capable of receiving any other word. Thus the Lord had written down Jerusalem, never intending that its name or its memorial should be blotted out. It was written down The Holy City, The City of the Great King: but now God turns the stile, and blots this out: and the Holy Jerusalem, the city of the Great King, is no longer to be found! This double use of the stile is pointed out in this ancient enigma:

Versor utrique manu, diverso et munere fungor:
Altera pars revocat, quicquid pars altera fecit.*

"I am flat at the top, but sharp at the bottom;
I turn either end, and perform a double function;
One end destroys what the other end has made."

But the idea of emptying out, and wiping a dish, expresses the same meaning equally well. Jerusalem shall be emptied of all its wealth, and of all its inhabitants, as truly as a dish turned up is emptied of all its contents: and it shall be turned upside down, never to be filled again. This is true from that time to the present hour. Jerusalem is the dish turned upside down; the tablet blotted out, to the present day! How great are God's mercies! and how terrible his judgments!

Verse 14. I will forsake the remnant of my inheritance] One part, (the ten tribes,) was already forsaken, and carried into captivity; the remnant, (the tribe of Judah,) was now about to be forsaken.

Verse 16. Shed innocent blood very much] Like the deities he worshipped, he was fierce and cruel: an unprincipled, merciless tyrant; he slew innocent people, and God's prophets.

Verse 17. Now the rest of the acts] In 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11, &c. we read that the Assyrians took Manasseh, bound him with fetters, and took him to Babylon; that there he repented, sought God, and was, we are not told how, restored to his kingdom; that he fortified the city of David; destroyed idolatry; restored the worship of the true God, and died in peace.

In 2 Chron. xxxiii. 18, 19. his prayer unto God is particularly mentioned. What is called his prayer, is found in the Apocrypha, just before the first book of the Maccabees. There are some good sentiments in it; but whether it be that which was made by Manasseh, is more than can be proved. Even the Roman church has not received it among the canonical books.

Are they not written] There are several particulars referred to here, and in 2 Chron. chap. xxxiii. which are not found in any chronicles or books which now remain; and what the books of the seers were, (mentioned in Chronicles,) we cannot tell.

¶ 2 Chr. 33. 20.—[†] 2 Chr. 33. 21-23.—[‡] Ver. 2, &c.—[§] 1 Kings

Verse 18. In the garden of his own house] It was, probably, a burying-place made for his own family; for Amon, his son, is said to be buried in the same place, ver. 26.

Verse 19. He reigned two years in Jerusalem] The remark of the rabbins is not wholly without foundation:—That the sons of those kings who were idolaters, and who succeeded their fathers, seldom reigned more than two years. So Nadab, the son of Jeroboam, 1 Kings xv. 25; Elah, the son of Baasha, 1 Kings xvi. 8; Ahaziah, the son of Ahab, 1 Kings xxii. 51; and Amon, the son of Manasseh, as mentioned here, ver. 19.

Verse 23. The servants of Amon conspired] What their reason was for slaying their king we cannot tell. It does not seem to have been a popular act, for the people of the land rose up and slew the regicides. We hear enough of this man when we hear that he was as bad as his father was in the beginning of his reign, but did not copy his father's repentance.

Verse 26. The garden of Uzza] The family sepulchre, or burying-place.

It is said ver. 3 and 7. that "Manasseh made a grove; and he set a graven image of the grove," &c. וַיַּאֲסֶם אֶת-פֶּסֶל הָאֲשֵׁרָה אֲשֶׁר אָסָה vayasem et-pesel ha-asherah, asher asah; "And he put the graven image of Asherah, which he had made," into the house.

Asherah, which we translate grove, is undoubtedly the name of an idol; and probably of one which was carved out of wood.

R. S. Jarchi, on Gen. xii. 3. says, "that אשרה asherah, means a tree, which was worshipped by the Gentiles;" like as the oak was worshipped by the ancient Druids in Britain.

Castel, in Lex. Hept. sub voce אֲשֵׁרָה asherah, thus, Simulachrum ligneum Astarte dicatum; "A wooden image, dedicated to Astarte, or Venus."

The Septuagint render the words by αλσος; and Flamininius Nobilis, on 2 Kings xxiii. 4. says, Rursus notat Theodoretus το αλσος esse of his fathers, and walked not in the way of the LORD.

23 ¶ [‡]And the servants of Amon conspired against him, and slew the king in his own house.

24 And the people of the land slew all them that had conspired against King Amon; and the people of the land made Josiah his son king in his stead.

25 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Amon which he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah?

26 And he was buried in his sepulchre in the garden of Uzza: and [¶]Josiah his son reigned in his stead.

11. 33.—[‡] 2 Chron. 33. 24, 25.—[¶] Matt. i. 10, called Josias.

Astartem et Venerem, et ab aliis interpretibus dictum Ashtaroth: i. e. "Again, Theodoret observes, αλσος is Astarte and Venus; and by other interpreters called Ashtaroth."

The Targum of Ben Uzziel, on Deut. vii. 5. וַיִּסְרְרוּ אֶת-אֲשֵׁרֵיהֶם תְּגֵדֵדֵם; i. e. "Their groves shall ye cut down"—translates the place thus וַעֲלֵי טִירְוֹתָם וַעֲלֵי טִירְוֹתָם sigedeyhon hak atsetum; "And the oaks of their adoration shall ye cut down."

From the above it is pretty evident that idols, not groves, are generally intended where asherah, and its derivatives, are used.

Here follow proofs:—

In chap. xxiii. 6. it is said, "That Josiah brought out the grove from the house of the Lord." This translation seems very absurd; for what grove could there be in the temple? There was none planted there, nor was there room for any. The plain meaning of וַיֹּצֵא אֶת-הָאֲשֵׁרָה מִבֵּית יְהוָה vn-yotse et ha-asherah mibeyth Yehovah, is, "And he brought out the (goddess) Asherah, from the house of the Lord, and burnt it," &c.

That this is the true meaning of the place appears farther from ver. 7. where it is said, "He broke down the houses of the sodomites:" (וַיִּהְיוּ הַחֲכֵדֵשִׁים hakkedeshim, of the whoremongers;) "where the women wore hangings for the grove." בַּתִּים לְאֲשֵׁרָה battim la-ashera, "houses or shrines for Asherah." Similar, perhaps, to those which the silversmiths made for Diana, Acts xix. 24. It is rather absurd to suppose that the women were employed in making curtains to encompass a grove.

The Syriac and Arabic versions countenance the interpretation I have given above. In ver. 6. the former says, "He cast out the idol ܕܥܠܐܬܐ dechlotho, from the house of the Lord." And in ver. 7. "He threw down the houses, ܕܥܠܐܬܐ dazoino, of the prostitutes; and the women who wore garments, ܕܥܠܐܬܐ ledechlotho, for the idols which were there." The Arabic is exactly the same.

From the whole, it is evident that Asherah was no other than Venus; the nature of whose worship is plain enough, from the mention of whoremongers and prostitutes.

I deny not that there were groves consecrated to idolatrous worship among the Gentiles; but I am sure that such are not intended in the above cited passages: and the text, in most places, reads better, when understood in this way.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXII.

Verse 1. Josiah was eight years old] He was one of the best, if not the best, of all the Jewish kings since the time of David. He began well, continued well, and ended well.

Verse 4. That he may sum the silver] As Josiah began to seek the Lord as soon as he began to reign, we may naturally conclude that the worship of God that was neglected and suppressed by his father, was immediately restored; and the people began their accustomed offerings to the temple. Ten years, therefore, had elapsed since these offerings began; no one had, as yet, taken account of them; nor were they applied to the use for which they were given, viz. the repairing the breaches of the temple.

Verse 8. I have found the book of the law] Was this the autograph of Moses? It is very probable that it was, for in the parallel place, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 14. it is said to be the book of the law of the Lord by Moses: It is supposed

6 Unto carpenters, and builders, and masons, and to buy timber and hewn stone to repair the house.

7 Howbeit ⁱ there was no reckoning made with them of the money that was delivered into their hand, because they dealt faithfully.

8 ¶ And Hilkiah the high priest said unto Shaphan the scribe, ^k I have found the book of the law in the house of the LORD. And Hilkiah gave the book to Shaphan, and he read it.

9 And Shaphan the scribe came to the king, and brought the king word again, and said, Thy servants have ^l gathered the money that was found in the house, and have delivered it into the hand of them that do the work, that have the oversight of the house of the LORD.

10 And Shaphan the scribe showed the king, saying, Hilkiah the priest hath delivered me a book. And Shaphan read it before the king.

11 And it came to pass, when the king had heard the words of the book of the law, that he rent his clothes.

12 And the king commanded Hilkiah to be that part of Deut. chaps. xxviii. xxix. xxx. and xxxi. which contains the renewing of the covenant in the plains of Moab; and which contains the most terrible invectives against the corrupters of God's words and worship.

The rabbins say that Ahaz, Manasseh, and Amon, endeavoured to destroy all the copies of the law; and this only was saved by having been buried under a paving-stone. It is scarcely reasonable to suppose that this was the only copy of the law that was found in Judea; for, even if we grant that Ahaz, Manasseh, and Amon, had endeavoured to destroy all the books of the law, yet they could not have succeeded so as to destroy the whole. Besides, Manasseh endeavoured, after his conversion, to restore every part of the divine worship; and, in this, he could have done nothing without the Pentateuch: and the succeeding reign of Amon was too short to give him opportunity to undo every thing that his penitent father had rethe priest, and Ahikam the son of Shaphan, and Achbor the son of ^a Michaiah, and Shaphan the scribe, and Asahiah a servant of the king's, saying,

13 Go ye, inquire of the LORD for me, and for the people, and for all Judah, concerning the words of this book that is found: for great is ^o the wrath of the LORD that is kindled against us; because our fathers have not hearkened unto the words of this book, to do according unto all that which is written concerning us.

14 So Hilkiah the priest, and Ahikam, and Achbor, and Shaphan, and Asahiah, went unto Huldah the prophetess, the wife of Shallum the son of ^v Tikvah, the son of ^r Harhas, keeper of the ^a wardrobe; (now she dwelt in Jerusalem ^t in the college;) and they communed with her.

15 ¶ And she said unto them, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Tell the man that sent you to me, formed. Add to all these considerations that, in the time of Jehoshaphat, teaching from the law was universal in the land, for he set on foot an itinerant ministry, in order to instruct the people fully: for, "he sent to his princes to teach in the cities of Judah; and with them he sent Levites and priests; and they went about through all the cities of Judah, and taught the people, having the book of the law of the Lord with them: see 2 Chron. xvii. 7—9. And if there be any thing wanting to show the improbability of the thing, it must be this, that the transactions mentioned here took place in the eighteenth year of the reign of Josiah; who had, from the time he came to the throne, employed himself in the restoration of the pure worship of God: and it is not likely that, during these eighteen years, he was without a copy of the Pentateuch. The simple fact seems to be this, that this was the original of the covenant renewed by Moses with the people in the plains of Moab, and which he ordered to be laid up beside the ark, Deut. xxxi. 26. And now, being unexpectedly found, its antiquity, the occasion of its being made, the present circumstances of the people, the imperfect state in which the reformation was, as yet, after all that had been done: would all concur to produce the effect here mentioned, on the mind of the pious Josiah.

Verse 14. Went unto Huldah the prophetess] This is a most singular circumstance; at this time Jeremiah was certainly a prophet in Israel; but it is likely he now dwelt at Anathoth, and could not be readily consulted. Zephaniah also prophesied under this reign; but, proba-will bring evil upon this place, and upon the inhabitants thereof, even all the words of the book which the king of Judah hath read:

17 ^v Because they have forsaken me, and have burned incense unto other gods, that they might provoke me to anger with all the works of their hands; therefore my wrath shall be kindled against this place, and shall not be quenched.

18 But to ^w the king of Judah which sent you to inquire of the LORD, thus shall ye say to him, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, As touching the words which thou hast heard;

19 Because thine ^x heart was tender, and thou hast ^y humbled thyself before the LORD, when thou heardest what I spake against this place, and against the inhabitants thereof, that they should become ^z a desolation and ^a a curse, and hast rent thy clothes, and wept before me; I also have heard thee, saith the LORD.

bly, he had not yet begun. Hilkiah was high priest; and the priest's lips should retain knowledge. Shaphan was scribe, and must have been conversant in sacred affairs, to have been at all fit for his office: and yet Huldah, a prophetess, of whom we know nothing, but by this circumstance, is consulted on the meaning of the book of the law! for the secret of the Lord was neither with Hilkiah the high priest, Shaphan the scribe, or any other of the servants of the king, or ministers of the temple! We find from this, and we have many facts in all ages to corroborate it, that a pontiff, a pope, a bishop, or a priest, may, in some cases, not possess the true knowledge of God: and that a simple woman, possessing the life of God in her soul, may have more knowledge of the divine testimonies than many of those whose office it is to explain and enforce them.

On this subject Dr. Priestly, in his note, makes the following very judicious remark:—"It pleased God to distinguish several women with the spirit of prophecy, as well as other great attainments, to show that in his sight, and especially in things of a spiritual nature, there is no essential pre-eminence in the male sex, though in some things the female be subject to the male."

Verse 17. My wrath shall be kindled] The decree is gone forth; Jerusalem shall be delivered into the hands of its enemies; the people will revolt more and more; toward them longsuffering is useless; the wrath of God is kindled, and shall not be quenched. This was a dreadful message.

b Psal. 37. 37.

Because thou hast feared the Lord, and trembled at his word, and hast wept before me, I have heard thee, so far that these evils shall not come upon the land in thy lifetime.

Verse 20. Thou shalt be gathered into thy grave in peace. During thy life, none of these calamities shall fall upon the people; and no adversary shall be permitted to disturb the peace of Judea; and thou shalt die in peace with God. But was Josiah gathered to the grave in peace? Is it not said, chap. xxiii. 29. that Pharaoh-Necho slew him at Megiddo? On this we may remark, that the Assyrians and the Jews were at peace: that Josiah might feel it his duty to oppose the Egyptian king going against his friend and ally, and endeavour to prevent him from passing through his territories; and that in his endeavours to oppose him he was mortally wounded at Megiddo; but certainly was not killed there; for his servants put him in his second chariot, and brought him to Jerusalem, where he died in peace. See 2 Chron. xxxv. 24. So that, however we take the place here, we shall find that the words of Huldah were true: he did die in peace, and was gathered to his fathers in peace.

FROM the account in the above chapter, where we have this business detailed, we find that Josiah should not have meddled in the quarrel between the Egyptian and the Assyrian kings; for God had given a commission to the former against the latter; but he did it in error, and suffered for it. But this unfortunate end of this pious man does not at all impeach the credit of Huldah; he died in peace in his own kingdom. He died in peace with God; and there was neither war nor desolation in his land; nor did the king of Egypt proceed any farther against the Jews during his life: for he said, "What have I to do with thee, thou king of Judah? I come not against thee, but the house wherewith I have war; for God commanded me to make haste: forbear then from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not. Nevertheless, Josiah would not turn his face from him, and hearkened not to the words of Necho from the mouth of God. And the archers shot at King Josiah; and the king said, Bear me away, for I am sore wounded. And his servants took him out of that chariot, and put him in the second chariot, and they brought him to Jerusalem, and he died, and was buried in the sepulchre of his fathers, 2 Chron. xxxv. 21—24.

It seems as if the Egyptian king had brought his troops by sea to Caesarea, and wished to cross the Jordan, about the southern point of the sea of Tiberias, that he might get as speedily as possible into the Assyrian dependencies: and that he took this road, for God, as he said, had commanded him to make haste.

CHAPTER XXIII.

He destroys the vessels of Baal and Asherah, and puts down the idolatrous priests; breaks down the houses of the sodomites, and the high places; defiles Topheth; takes away the horses of the sun; destroys the altars of Ahaz; breaks in pieces the images; and breaks down and burns Jeroboam's altar at Beth-el, 4—15. Fulfills the word of the prophet, who cried against the altar at Beth-el, 16—18. Destroys the high places in Samaria, slays the idolatrous priests, and celebrates a great passover, 19—23. NOTES ON CHAPTER XXIII.

Verse 2. The king went up into the house of the LORD] Here is another very singular circumstance. The high priest, scribes, priests, and prophets, are gathered together, with all the elders of the people, and the king himself reads the book of the covenant which had been lately found! It is strange, that neither the high priest, Jeremiah, Zephaniah, or some other of the prophets, who were certainly there present, did not read the Sacred Book! It is likely that the king considered himself a mediator between God and them; and therefore read, and made the covenant.

Verse 3. Stood by a pillar] He stood, by מַעְדָּן אֶל הָאֹמֹד, "upon the stairs, or pulpit." This is what is called the brazen scaffold, or pulpit, which Solomon made; and on which the kings were accustomed to stand, when they addressed the people. See 2 Chron. vi. 13. and the parallel places.

Made a covenant] This was expressed—1. In general: To walk after Jehovah: to have no gods besides him. 2. To take his law for the

A. M. 3380. B. C. 624. Ol. XXXIX. 1. An. Anci Martii, Regis Romanorum, 17. to walk after the LORD, and to keep his commandments, and his testimonies, and his statutes, with all their heart, and all their soul, to perform the words of this covenant that were written in this book. And all the people stood to the covenant.

4 ¶ And the king commanded Hilkiah the high priest, and the priests of the second order, and the keepers of the door, to bring forth out of the temple of the LORD all the vessels that were made for Baal, and for ^e the grove, and for all the host of heaven: and he burned them without Jerusalem in the fields of Kidron, and carried the ashes of them unto Beth-el.

5 And he ^f put down ^g the idolatrous priests, whom the kings of Judah had ordained to burn incense in the high places in the cities of Judah, and in the places round about Jerusalem; them also that burned incense unto Baal, to the sun, and to the moon, and to the ^h planets, and to ⁱ all the host of heaven.

regulation of their conduct. 3. In particular: To bend their whole heart and soul to the observance of it; so that they might not only have religion without, but piety within. To this all the people stood up; thus giving their consent, and binding themselves to obedience.

Verse 4. The priests of the second order] These were, probably, such as supplied the place of the high priest, when he was prevented from fulfilling the functions of his office. So the Chaldee understood the place—the sagan of the high priests. But the words may refer to those of the second course or order, established by David; though it does not appear that those orders were now in use, yet the distinction was continued, even to the time of our Lord. We find the course of Abia, which was the eighth, mentioned Luke i. 5. where see the note.

All the vessels] These had been used for idolatrous purposes; the king is now to destroy them: for, although no longer used in this way, they might, if permitted to remain, be an incentive to idolatry at a future time.

Verse 5. The idolatrous priests] הכשרים ha-kemàrim. Who these were, is not well known. The Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic, call them the priests, simply, which the kings of Judah had ordained. Probably they were an order made by the idolatrous kings of Judah, and called cemarim, from כמר camar, which signifies to be scorched, shrivelled together, made dark, or black, because their business was constantly to attend sacrificial fires, and probably they wore black garments; hence the Jews, in derision, call Christian ministers cemarin, because of their black clothes and garon the high places, though it was to the true God; yet they were not thought proper to be employed immediately about the temple: but, as they were acknowledged to belong to the priesthood, they had a right to their support; therefore, a portion of the tithes, offerings, and unleavened bread, show-bread, &c. was appointed to them for their support. Thus they were treated as priests who had some infirmity, which rendered it improper for them to minister at the altar. See Levit. xxi. 17, &c. and particularly verses 22 and 23.

Verse 10. He defiled Topheth. St. Jerom says, that Tophet was a fine and pleasant place, well watered with fountains, and adorned with gardens. The valley of the son of Hinnom, or Gehenna, was in one part; here, it appears, the sacred rites of Molech were performed; and to this all the filth of the city was carried, and perpetual fires were kept up, in order to consume it. Hence it has been considered a type of hell; and in this sense it is used in the New Testament.

It is here said, that Josiah defiled this place, that no man might make his son or his daughter to pass through the fire. He destroyed the image of Molech, and so polluted the place where he stood, or his temple, that it was rendered in every way abominable. The rabbins say, that Tophet had its name from an toph, a drum; because instruments of this kind were used to drown the cries of the children that were put into the burning arms of Molech, to be scorched to death. This may be as true as the following definition:—"Tophet, or the valley of the son of Hinnom, was a place near Jerusalem, where the filth and offal of the city were thrown, and where a constant fire was kept up, to consume the wretched remains of executed criminals. It was a human shambles, a public chopping block, where the arms and legs of men and women were quartered off by thousands." Quere. On what authority do such descriptions rest?

Verse 11. The horses that the kings of Judah had given to the sun. Jarchi says, that those who adored the sun, had horses which they mounted every morning, to go out to meet the sun at his rising. Throughout the East, the horse, because of his swiftness and utility, was dedicated to the sun: and the Greeks and Romans feigned that the chariot of the sun was drawn by four horses, Pyrous, Eous, Aithon, and Phlegon. See the note on chap. ii.

Whether these were living or sculptured horses, we cannot tell: the latter is the more reasonable supposition.

Verse 12. On the top of the upper chamber. Altars built on the flat roof of the houses. Such altars were erected to the sun, moon, stars, &c.

Verse 13. Mount of corruption. This, says Jarchi, following the Chaldee, was the mount of Olives; for this is the mount הר הזנוה ha meshachah, of unclean: but because of the idolatrous purposes for which it was used, the Scripture changed the appellation to the mount הר הזנוה ha mishchith, of corruption.

Verse 14. Filled their places with the bones of—men. This was allowed to be the utmost defilement to which any thing could be exposed.

Verse 16. And as Josiah turned himself. This verse is much more complete in the Septuagint, and in the Hexaplar Syriac version at Paris. I shall give the whole, making a dis-

"And as Josiah turned himself, he spied the sepulchres that were there in the mount, and sent and took the bones out of the sepulchres, and burnt them upon the altar, and polluted it; according to the word of the Lord which the man of God proclaimed." [When Jeroboam stood by the altar at the feast. And turning about, he cast his eyes on the sepulchre of the man of God.] "Who proclaimed these words." See 1 Kings xiii. 2. where these things were predicted, and see the notes there.

Verse 17. What title is that] There was either a stone, an image, or an inscription here: the old prophet, no doubt, took care to have the place made sufficiently remarkable.

Verse 18. The prophet that came out of Samaria] See the note on 1 Kings xiii. 32.

Verse 19. That were in the cities of Samaria] Israel had now no king; and Josiah, of the blood royal of Judah, had certainly a direct right to the kingdom; he had, at this time, an especial commission from God, to reform every abuse through the whole land; all that ground that was given by the Lord as an inheritance

no use to try this fickle and radically depraved people any longer. They were respited merely during the life of Josiah.

Verse 29. In his days Pharaoh-nechoh] See the note on the death of Josiah, chap. xxii. 20.
Nechoh is supposed to have been the son of Psammiticus, king of Egypt; and the Assyrian king, whom he was going now to attack, was the famous Nabopolassar. What the cause of this quarrel was, is not known. Some say it was on account of Carchemish, a city on the Euphrates, belonging to the Egyptians, which Nabopolassar had seized. See Isa. x. 9.

Verse 30. Dead from Megiddo] The word meth, here should be considered as a participle, dying, for it is certain he was not dead :
he was mortally wounded at Megiddo, was carried in a dying state to Jerusalem, and there he died and was buried. See 2 Chron. xxxv. 24.

Herodotus, lib. i. c. 17, 18, 25. and lib. ii.
159, appears to refer to the same war which is here mentioned. He says that Nechoh, in the sixth year of his reign, went to attack the king of Assyria at Magdolum, gained a complete victory, and took Cadytis. Ussher and others believe that Magdolum and Megiddo were the same place. The exact place of the battle seems to have been Hadadrimmon, in the valley of Megiddo; for there, Zechariah tells us, chap. xii. 11. was the great mourning for Jo- siah. Compare this with 2 Chron. xxxv. 24, 25.

Verse 31. Jehoahaz was twenty and three years old] This was not the eldest son of Jo- siah, which is evident from this, that he was twenty-three years old when he began to reign ;

that he reigned but three months ; that, being dethroned, his brother Eliakim was put in his place, who was then twenty-five years of age.
Eliakim, therefore, was the eldest brother; but Jehoahaz was probably raised to the throne by the people, as being of a more active and martial spirit.

Verse 33. Nechoh put him in bands] But what was the cause of his putting him in bands?
It is conjectured, and not without reason, that Jehoahaz, otherwise called Shallum, raised an army, met Nechoh in his return from Carche- mish, fought, was beaten, taken prisoner, put in chains, and taken into Egypt, where he died, ver. 34. and Jer. xxii. 11, 12. Riblah, or Diblah, the place of this battle, was probably a town in Syria, in the land or district of He- math.

Verse 34. Turned his name to Jehoiakim]
These names are precisely the same in signification : ELIAKIM is, God shall arise : JEHOIA- KIM, Jehovah shall arise ; or, the resurrection of God ; the resurrection of Jehovah. That is, God's rising again to show his power, justice, &c. The change of the name was to show Nechoh's supremacy ; and that Jehoiakim was only his vassal or viceroy. Proofs of this mode of changing the name, when a person of greater power put another in office under himself, may be seen in the case of Mattaniah, changed into Zedekiah ; Daniel, Mishael, Ananiah, and Azariah, into Belteshazzar, Shadrach, Me- shach, and Abed-nego ; and Joseph, into Zaph- nath-paaneah. See Dan. i. 6, 7. Gen. xli. 45.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXIV.

Verse 1. Nebuchadnezzar] This man, so famous in the writings of the prophets, was son of Nabopolassar. He was sent by his father against the rulers of several provinces that had revolted; and he took Carchemish, and all that belonged to the Egyptians, from the Euphrates to the Nile. Jehoiakim, who was tributary to Nechoh, king of Egypt, he attacked and reduced; and he obliged him to become tributary to Babylon. At the end of three years he revolted; and then a mixed army of Chaldeans, Syrians, Moabites, and Ammonites, was sent against him, who ravaged the country, and took three thousand and twenty-three prisoners, whom they brought to Babylon, Jer. lii. 28.

He took away the greater part of those treasures when he took Jerusalem under Jehoiakim: and the vessels that he took then he placed in the temple of his god, Dan. i. 2. And these were the vessels which Belshazzar profaned, Dan. v. 2; and which Cyrus restored to Ezra, when he went up to Jerusalem, Ezra i. 2. It was at this time that he took Daniel and his companions. 2. He took the remaining part of those vessels, and broke them or cut them in pieces, when he came the second time against Jerusalem, under Jeconiah; as is mentioned here, ver. 13. 3. 18 ^h Zedekiah was twenty and one years old when he began to reign, and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem.

And his mother's name was ⁱ Hamutal, the daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah.

19 ^k And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, according to all that Jehoiakim had done.

20 For through the anger of the LORD it came to pass in Jerusalem and Judah, until he had cast them out from his presence, ^l that Zedekiah rebelled against the king of Babylon.

CHAPTER XXV.

Nebuchadnezzar besieges Jerusalem; it is taken, after having been sorely reduced by famine, &c. and Zedekiah, endeavouring to make his escape, is made prisoner, his sons slain before his eyes; then his eyes being put out, he is put in chains, and carried to Babylon, 1—7. Nebuzar-adan burns the temple, breaks down the walls of Jerusalem, and carries away the people captives; leaving only a few to till the ground, 8—12. He takes away all the brass, and all the vessels of the temple 13—17. Several of the chief men and nobles, found in the city, he brings to Nebuchadnezzar, at Riblah, who puts them all to death, 18—21. Nebuchadnezzar makes Gedaliah governor over the poor people that were left, against whom Ishmael rises, and slays him, and others with him; on which, the people in general, fearing the resentment of the Chaldeans, flee to Egypt, 22—26. Evil-merodach, king of Babylon, releases Jehoiachin out of prison; treats him kindly; and makes him his friend, 27—30.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXV.

Verse 1. In the ninth year of his reign] Zedekiah, having revolted against the Chaldeans, Nebuchadnezzar, wearied with his treachery, and the bad faith of the Jews, determined the total subversion of the Jewish state. Having assembled a numerous army, he entered Judea on the tenth day of the tenth month of the ninth year of the reign of Zedekiah; this, according to the computation of Archbishop Ussher, was on Thursday, January 30, A. M. 3414, which was a sabbatical year: whereon the men of Jerusalem, hearing that the Chaldean army was approaching, proclaimed liberty to their servants; see Jer. xxxiv. 8, 9, 10; according to the law, Exod. xxi. 2. Deut. xv. 1, 2, 12: for Nebuchadnezzar, marching with his army against Zedekiah, having wasted all the country, and taken their strong-holds, except Lachish, Azkah, and Jerusalem, came against the latter with all his forces; see Jer. xxxiv. 1—7. On the very day, as the same author computes, the siege and utter destruction of Jerusalem were revealed to Ezekiel the prophet, then in Chaldea, under the type of a seething-pot; and his wife died in the evening, and he was charged not to mourn for her, because of the extraordinary calamity that had fallen upon the land: see Ezek. xxiv. 1, 2, &c.

Jeremiah, having predicted the same calamities, (Jer. xxxiv. 1—7.) was, by the command of Zedekiah, shut up in prison, xxxii. 1—16.

7 And they slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes, and ^g put ^h out the eyes of Zedekiah, and bound him with fetters of brass, and carried him to Babylon.

8 ¶ And in the fifth month, ⁱ on the seventh day of the month, which is ^k the nineteenth year of King Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, ^l came Nebuzar-adan, ^m captain of the guard, a servant of the king of Babylon, unto Jerusalem:

Pharaoh Hophra, or Vaphris, hearing how Zedekiah was pressed, and fearing for the safety of his own dominions, should the Chaldeans succeed against Jerusalem, determined to succour Zedekiah. Finding this, the Chaldeans raised the siege of Jerusalem, and went to meet the Egyptian army, which they defeated and put to flight.—Joseph. Antiq. lib. x. c. 10. In the interim the Jews, thinking their danger was past, reclaimed their servants, and put them again under the yoke, Jer. xxxiv. 8, &c.

Verses 2—4. And the city was besieged, &c.] Nebuchadnezzar, having routed the Egyptian army, returned to Jerusalem, and besieged it so closely that, being reduced by famine, and a breach made in the wall, the Chaldeans entered it on the ninth day of the fourth month, (Wednesday, July 27.) Zedekiah, and many others, endeavouring to make their escape by night.

Verse 5. The army of the Chaldees pursued] Zedekiah was taken, and brought captive to Riblah in Syria, where Nebuchadnezzar then lay, who ordered his sons to be slain before his face, and then put out his eyes; and, having loaded him with chains, sent him to Babylon: see Jer. xxxix. 4, 7. lii. 7, 11; thus fulfilling the prophetic declarations, that his eyes should see the eyes of the king of Babylon, Jer. xxxii. 4. and xxxiv. 3; but Babylon he should not see, though he was to die there, Ezek. xii. 13.

Verse 8. In the fifth month] On the seventh day of the fifth month, (answering to Wednesinto the city; and, having spent two days in making provision, on the tenth day of the same month, (Saturday, Aug. 27.) he set fire to the temple, and the king's palace, and the houses of the nobility, and burnt them to the ground, the temple was destroyed in the eleventh year of Zedekiah, the nineteenth of Nebuchadnezzar, the first of the XLVIIIth Olympiad, in the one hundred and sixtieth current year of the era of Nabonassar, four hundred and twenty-four years, three months, and eight days, from the time in which Solomon laid its foundation stone.

same fifth month, Jer. 1. 3. the walls of Jerusalem being razed to the ground, all that were left in the city, and all that had fled over formerly to Nebuchadnezzar, and all the common people of the city, with all the king's treasures, those of the nobles, and the whole furniture of the temple, did Nebuzar-adan carry off to Babylon: see Jerem. xxxix. 8, 9. lii. 14, 23. And and ninety. And thus ends what is called the fifth age of the world. See USSHER'S Annals.

Verse 18. Seraiah the chief priest—Zephaniah] The person who is here called the second priest, was what the Jews call sagan, a sort of deputy, who performed the functions of the high priest, when he was prevented by any infirmity from attending the temple service. See on chap. xxxiii. 4.

Verse 19. And five men of them that were in the king's presence] These were principal counsellors, and confidential officers.

In Jerem. lii. 25. it is said he took seven men who were near the king's person, and the same number is found in the Arabic in this place; and the Chaldee has no less than fifty men: but in Jeremiah this, as well as all the rest of the versions, reads seven. Probably they were no more than five at first; or, perhaps Jeremiah reckoned, with the five, the officer that was set over the men of war, and the principal scribe of the host, mentioned here, as two with the five; and thus made seven in the whole.

Verse 21. The king of Babylon smote them]
He had, no doubt, found that these had counsellor Zedekiah to revolt.

ried away out of their land.
22 ¶ And as for the people that remained in the land of Judah, whom Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon had left, even over them he made Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, ruler.

23 And when all the captains of the armies, they and their men, heard that the king of Babylon had made Gedaliah governor, there came to Gedaliah to Mizpah, even Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and Johanan the son of Careath, and Seraiah the son of Tanhumeth the Netophathite, and Jaazaniah the son of a Maachathite, they and their men.

24 And Gedaliah sware to them, and to their men, and said unto them, Fear not to be the servants of the Chaldees: dwell in the land, and serve the king of Babylon; and it shall be well with you.

25 But it came to pass in the seventh month, that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, the son of Elishama, of the seed royal, came, and ten men with him, m Jer. 40. 5.—n Jer. 40. 7, 8, 9.—o Jer. 41. 1, 2.—p Heb. of the kingdom.—t Jer. 43. 4, 7.

Verse 22. Made Gedaliah—ruler.] This was no regal dignity; he was only a sort of hind, or overseer, appointed to regulate the husbandmen.

Verse 23. To Mizpah.] This is said to have been situated on the east side of the river Jordan, and most contiguous to Babylon; and, therefore, the most proper for the residence of Gedaliah, because nearest to the place from which he was to receive his instructions. But there were several places of this name; and we do not exactly know where this was situated.

Verse 24. Gedaliah sware to them.] He pledged himself, in the most solemn manner, to encourage and protect them.

Verse 25. Smote Gedaliah.] This was an entertainment which Gedaliah had made for them: see Jer. xli. 1, &c. He was not content with this murder, but slew fourscore more, who were coming with offerings to the temple, and took several as prisoners; and among them some of the king's daughters: and set off to go to the Ammonites. But Johanan, the son of Kareah, hearing of these outrages, raised a number of men, and pursued Ishmael: Ishmael's prisoners immediately turned, and joined Johanan; so that he, and eight of his accomplices, with difficulty escaped to the Ammonites: see Jer. xli. 1, &c. Baalis, king of the Ammonites, had sent Ishmael to murder Gedaliah; and of this he was informed by Johanan, who offered to prevent this, by taking away the life of this murderer. But Gedaliah could not believe that he harboured such foul designs: and, therefore, took no precaution to save his life: see Jer. xl. 13.—16.

and smote Gedaliah, that he died, and the Jews and the Chaldees that were with him at Mizpah.

26 And all the people, both small and great, and the captains of the armies, arose, and came to Egypt: for they were afraid of the Chaldees.

27 ¶ And it came to pass in the seven and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin king of Judah, in the twelfth month, on the seven and twentieth day of the month, that Evil-merodach king of Babylon, in the year that he began to reign, did lift up the head of Jehoiachin king of Judah out of prison;

28 And he spake kindly to him, and set his throne above the throne of the kings that were with him in Babylon;

29 And changed his prison-garments: and he did eat bread continually before him all the days of his life.

30 And his allowance was a continual allowance given him of the king, a daily rate for every day, all the days of his life.

* Jer. 52. 31, &c.—t See Gen. 40. 13, 20.—u Heb. good things with him.—v 2 Sam. 9. 7.

Verse 27. And it came to pass.] Nebuchadnezzar was just now dead; and Evil-merodach, his son, succeeded to the kingdom, in the thirty-seventh year of the captivity of Jehoiachin: and on the seven and twentieth day, [Jeremiah says five and twentieth,] of the twelfth month of that year, (Tuesday, April 15. A. M. 3442,) he brought the long captivated Jewish king out of prison; treated him kindly; and ever after, during his life, reckoned him among the king's friends. This is particularly related in the four last verses of the book of Jeremiah.

Verse 30. A continual allowance given him of the king.] He lived in a regal style, and had his court even in the city of Babylon; being supplied with every requisite by the munificence and friendship of the king. In about two years after this, Evil-merodach was slain in a conspiracy; and it is supposed that Jehoiachin, then about fifty-eight years of age, fell with his friend and protector. Thus terminates the catastrophe of the Jewish kings, people, and state, the consequence of unheard-of rebellions and provocations against the Majesty of heaven.

PREFACE

TWO BOOKS OF CHRONICLES.

ANCIENTLY, these two books were considered but as one: for this we have not only the testimony of St. Jerom, but also that of the Masoretes, who gave the sum of all the sections, chapters, and verses, under one notation at the end of the second book; without mentioning any division: and, although the modern Jews divide them, yet they give the Masoretic enumeration of sections, &c. as it was given of old; and all editors of the Masoretic Bibles, whether Jewish or Christian, follow the same plan.

These books have had several names. In Hebrew they are denominated דִּבְרֵי הַיָּמִים dibrei hayamim: literally, The Words of the Day; i. e. The Journals, particularly of the kings of Israel and the kings of Judah. But this name does not appear to have been given by the inspired writer.

The Syriac has, The Book of the Transactions in the days of the kings of Judah: which is called Dibré yamim; referring to the Hebrew title.

The Arabic has, The Book of the Annals, which is called in Hebrew, Dibré Hayamim.

The Septuagint has, παραλειπομένων, of the things that were left, or omitted; supposing that these books were a supplement either to Samuel, and to the books of Kings; or to the whole Bible. To this the Greek translators might have been led, by finding that these books, in their time, closed the Sacred Canon, as they still do in the most correct editions of the Hebrew Bible.

The Vulgate uses the same term as the Septuagint, referring, like the Syriac and Arabic, to the Hebrew name.

In our English Bible, these books are termed Chronicles, from the Greek χρονικά, from χρονος, time; i. e. A History of Times; or, as the matter of the work shows, "A History of Times, Kingdoms, States, Religion, &c. with an account of the most memorable Persons and Transactions of those Times and Nations."

Concerning the author of these books nothing certain is known. Some think they are the works of different authors; but the uniformity of the style, the connexion of the facts, together with the recapitulations and reflections, which are often made, prove that they are the work of one and the same person.

The Jews, and Christian interpreters in general, believe they were the work of EZRA, assisted by the prophets Haggai, Zachariah, and Malachi. That EZRA was the author, is, on the whole, the most probable opinion. That he lived at the conclusion of the Babylonish captivity, is well known; and the Second Book of Chronicles terminates at that period; barely reciting the decree of Cyrus to permit the return of the captivated Israelites to their own land; which subject is immediately taken up in the Book of Ezra, in which the operation of that decree is distinctly marked.

There are words and terms, both in the Chronicles and Ezra, which are similar; and prove that each was written after the captivity, and probably by the same person; as those terms were not in use previously to that time; and some of them are peculiar to Ezra himself. E. G. We have כִּפּוֹרֵי זָהָב kiporey zahab, "golden cups," Ezra i. 10; viii. 27; and in 1 Chron. xxviii. 17. And דַּרְכֵּמֹן darkemon, or drakmon, "a drachma," or dram, 1 Chron. xxix. 7. and Ezra ii. 69. Neh. vii. 70. And רַפְסֹדוֹת raphsodoth, "rafts," or floats, 2 Chron. ii. 16. widely differing from דְּבִירוֹת dobroth, 1 Kings v. 9. which we there translate in the same way. Calmet considers these words as strong evidence that these books were the work of Ezra, and penned after the captivity.

We are not to suppose that these books are the Chronicles of the kings of Judah and Israel, so often referred to in the historical books of the Old Testament: these have been long lost; and the books before us can only be abridgments either of such chronicles, or of works of a similar kind.

That the ancient Jews took great care to register their civil, military, and ecclesiastical transactions, is sufficiently evident from frequent reference to such works in the Sacred Writings; and that these registers were carefully and correctly formed, we learn from the character of the persons by whom they were compiled: they were in general prophets; and seem to have been employed by the kings under whom they lived, to compile the annals of their reigns; or, most likely, this was considered a part of the prophet's regular office.

Samuel, Nathan, and Gad, wrote under the reign of DAVID, 1 Chron. xxix. 29.

The acts of the reign of SOLOMON were written by Nathan, Ahijah, and Iddo, 2 Chron. ix. 29.

Shemaiah and Iddo wrote those of REHOBOAM, 2 Chron. xii. 15.

Iddo wrote also those of ABIJAH, 2 Chron. xiii. 22.

It is likely that Hanani the seer, wrote those of ASA, 2 Chron. xvi. 7.

Jehu, the prophet, the son of Hanani, 1 Kings xvi. 1, 7. wrote the acts of JEHOSHAPHAT, 2 Chron. xx. 34. Under this same reign, we find Jahaziel, the prophet, 2 Chron. xx. 14; and Eliezer, the prophet, Ibid. v. 37.

Preface to the two books of Chronicles.

Isaiah recorded the transactions of UZZIAH, 2 Chron. xxvi. 22; and those of HEZEKIAH, 2 Chron. xxxii. 32; and of AHAZ, of whose reign we find the principal facts in the viith, viiith, and ixth chapters of his prophecies. Under this reign also, we find Obed, the prophet, 2 Chron. xxviii. 9.

Hosea wrote the history of the reign of MANASSEH. See 2 Chron. xxxiii. 19. in the margin.

And Jeremiah wrote the history of JOSIAH and his descendants, the last kings of Judah.

This was such a succession of historians as no nation of the world could ever boast. Men, all of whom wrote under the inspiration of God's Holy Spirit; some of whom had minds the most highly cultivated, and of the most extraordinary powers. Whether the prophets who flourished in the reigns of the kings of Israel wrote the annals of those kings we know not, because it is not positively declared. We know that Ahijah, the Shilonite, lived under JEROBOAM, the son of Nebat, 1 Kings xi. 29; and xiv. 2; and Jehu, son of Hanani, under BAASHA, 1 Kings xvi. 7.

Elijah, and many others, flourished under the reign of AHAZ. Elisha, Jonah, and many more, succeeded him in the prophetic office.

Besides these prophets, and prophetic men, we find other persons whose office it was to record the transactions of the kings under whom they lived. These were called secretaries, or recorders; so, under DAVID and SOLOMON, Jehoshaphat, the son of Ahilud, was recorder; מִזְכֵּיר mazekir, "remembrancer," 2 Sam. viii. 16; and 1 Chron. xviii. 15. And under HEZEKIAH, we find Joah, the son of Asaph, 2 Kings xviii. 18. And under JOSIAH, Joah the son of Joahaz, who filled the same office, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 8.

The real object of the author of these books is not very easy to be ascertained. But it is evident that he never could have intended them as a supplement to the preceding books; as he relates many of the same circumstances which occur in them; and often in greater detail; and, except by way of amplification, adds very little that can be called new; and omits many things of importance, not only in the ancient history of the Israelites, but even of those mentioned in the preceding books of Samuel and Kings. Nine chapters of his work are occupied with extensive genealogical tables; but even these are far from being perfect. His history, properly speaking, does not begin till the tenth chapter; and then it commences abruptly, with the last unsuccessful battle of Saul, and his death; but not a word of his history.

Though the writer gives many curious and important particulars in the life of David, yet he passes by his adultery with Bath-sheba, and all its consequences. He says nothing of the incest of Amnon, with his sister Tamar; nor a word of the rebellion and abominations of Absalom. He says very little of the kings of Israel; and takes no notice of what concerned that state, from the capture of Amaziah, king of Judah, by Joash, king of Israel, 2 Chron. xxv. 17, &c. And of the last wars of these kings, which terminated in the captivity of the ten tribes, he says not one word!

The principal design of the writer appears to have been this; to point out from the public registers, which were still preserved, what had been the state of the different families previously to the captivity; that, at their return, they might enter on, and repossess, their respective inheritances. He enters particularly into the functions, genealogies, families, and orders, of the priests and Levites; and this was peculiarly necessary after the return from the captivity, to the end that the worship of God might be conducted in the same way as before; and by the proper legitimate persons.

He is also very particular relative to what concerns religion, the worship of God, the temple and its utensils, the kings who authorized or tolerated idolatry, and those who maintained the worship of the true God. In his distribution of praise and blame, these are the qualities which principally occupy his attention, and influence his pen.

It may be necessary to say something here concerning the utility of these books. That they are in this respect in low estimation, we may learn from the manner in which they are treated by commentators: they say very little concerning them, and suppose the subject has been anticipated in the books of Samuel and Kings. That the persons who treat them thus have never studied them is most evident, else their judgment would be widely different. Whatever history these books possess, in common with the books of Samuel and Kings, may, in a commentary, be fairly introduced, in the examination of the latter; and this I have endeavoured to do, as the reader may have already seen. But there are various details, and curious facts and observations, which must be considered in these books alone; nor will a slight mention of such circumstances do them justice.

St. Jerom had the most exalted opinion of the books of Chronicles. According to him, "They are an epitome of the Old Testament." He asserts, "That they are of such high moment and importance, that he who supposes himself to be acquainted with the Sacred Writings, and does not know them, only deceives himself; and that innumerable questions relative to the Gospel are here explained." Paralipomenon liber, id est, Instrumenti Veteris Επιστομης, tantus ac talis est; ut absque illo, si quis scientiam Scripturarum sibi voluerit arrogare, seipsum irrideat. Per singula quippe nomina, juncturasque verborum, et prætermissa in REGUM libris tanguntur historie; et innumerabiles explicantur Evangelii Questiones. Epist. Secund. ad Paulinum Presbyterum. OPER. Benedict. vol. iv. col. 574. And in another place he asserts, that "All Scripture knowledge is contained in these books;" Omnis eruditio Scripturarum, in hoc libro continetur. Prefat. in lib. Paral. juxta Septuaginta Interpret. OPER. Edit. Bened. vol. i. col. 1418. This may be going too far; but St. Jerom believed that there was a mystery and meaning in every proper name, whether of man, woman, city, or country, in the book. And yet he complains greatly of the corruption of those names, some having been divided, so as to make two or three names out of one; and sometimes names condensed, so as of three names to make but one. To cure this evil he laboured hard, and did much; but still the confusion is great, and in many cases past remedy. To assist the reader in this respect I wish to refer him to the marginal readings, and parallel texts, which are here carefully represented in the inner margin: these should be constantly consulted, as they serve to remove many difficulties, and reconcile several seeming contradictions. In addition to these helps I have carefully examined the different ancient versions, and the various readings in the MSS. of Kennicott and De Rossi, which often help to remove such difficulties.

There is one mode of exposition which I have applied to these books, which has not, as far as I know, been as yet used; I mean the Targum, or Chaldee Paraphrase, of Rabbi JOSEPH. It is well known to all oriental scholars that a Chaldee Targum, or Paraphrase, has been found and published in the Polyglotts, on every book of the Old Testament, purely Hebrew, the books of Chronicles excepted. Neither in the Complutensian, Antwerp, Parisian, nor London Polyglott, is such a Targum to be found; none having been discovered when these works were published. But shortly after the London Polyglott was finished, a MS. was found in the University of Cambridge, containing the Targum on these books: this, with several other pieces, Arabic, Persian, Syriac, &c. Dr. Samuel Clarke collected, and intended to publish as a supplementary volume to the Polyglott, but was prevented by premature death. The MS. was afterward copied by Mr. David Wilkins; and printed, with a Latin translation, at Amsterdam, 4to. 1715. Of this work the reader will find I have made a liberal use, as I have of the Targum of Jonathan ben Uzziel, on the preceding books. Rabbi Joseph, the author, lived about three hundred years after the destruction of the second temple, or about A. D. 400. The MS. in question formerly belonged to the celebrated Erpen, and was purchased by the duke of Buckingham, then Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, and by him presented to the public library of that University.

It is worthy of remark, that the term מֵימְרָא meymra, "word," and מֵימְרָא דַּיָּא meymra Daya, "the word of Jehovah," is used personally in this Targum; never as a word spoken, but as a PERSON acting: see the notes on John i. 1.

NOTES ON CHAPTER I.

Verse 1. Adam, Sheth, Enosh] That is, Adam was the father of Sheth or Seth, Seth was the father of Enosh, Enosh the father of Kenan, and so on. No notice is taken of Cain and Abel, or of any of the other sons of Adam. One line of patriarchs, from Adam to Noah, is what the historian intended to give: and to have mentioned the posterity of Cain or Abel would have been useless, as Noah was not the immediate descendant of either. Besides, all their posterity had perished in the deluge, none remaining of the Adamic family but Noah and his children; and from these all the nations of the earth sprang.

How learned must those men be who can take for a text "The first verse, of the first chapter, of the first book of CHRONICLES," and find a mystery in each name; which, in the aggregate, amounts to a full view of the original perfection, subsequent fall, consequent misery, and final restoration of MAN! O ye profound illustrators of the names of men and cities, why do ye not give us the key of your wisdom, write comments, and enlighten the world!

Verse 5. After Tiras, the Targum adds, And the names of their countries were Africa, and Germany, and Media, and Macedonia, Bithynia, and Mæsia, and Thrace. And in another

These came from the lineage of Joab, the son of Zeruiah; and some of them were priests, and they divided the residue of Verse 55. The families] “The families of the Rechabites, the sons of Eliezer, the son of Misco, the disciple of Jabez; he was Othniel, the son of Kenaz. And he was called Jabez; because, in his counsel, he instituted a school of disciples: they were called Terathim, because in their hymns their voice was like trumpets; and Shimathim, because in hearing they lifted up their faces, i. e. in prayer: and Suca-thim, because they were overshadowed by the spirit of prophecy. These Salmæi were the children of Zipporah, who were numbered among the Levites, who came from the stock of Moses, the master of Israel, whose righteousness profited them more than chariots and horses.”—T. See on chap. iv 9, 10.

In the above explanation of Terathites, Shimeathites, and Suchathites, the Targumist refers to the import of the Hebrew roots, whence these names are derived: see chap. iv. 10. In this chapter many names of cities are given as the names of men.

Verse 1. The second, Daniel] In 2 Sam. iii. 3. this person is called Chileab; he probably had two names. The Targum says, “The second Daniel, who was also called Cileab, because he was in every respect like to his father.” The Targumist refers here to the import of the word chileab, like to the father. Jarchi says the two names were given to this person, because David, having taken Abigail immediately after the death of Nabal, it could not be ascertained whether this child were the son of David, or of Nabal, therefore David called him Daniel, דניאל God is my Judge, and כלאב Chileab, he who is like to the father; probably from the striking resemblance he bore to David, his reputed father. "God is my judge, I have not fathered another man's child; this is entirely like unto myself."

Verse 3. By Eglah his wife.] The Targum, Jarchi, and others, maintain that this was Michal, the daughter of Saul: but this does not well agree with 2 Sam. vi. 23. Michal had no child to the day of her death. Yet she might have had a child before the time that is mentioned above.

Verse 5. Shimea, and Shobab] Solomon is mentioned last, though he was the eldest of these four sons, because the genealogy was to be continued from him. Bath-shua, בַּת שׁוּא is the same as Bath-sheba בַּת שֶׁבַע; the vau being put by mistake in the former, for a beth, in the latter.

Verse 6. Elishama, and Eliphelet] In this and the eighth verse these two names occur twice; some think this is a mistake, but others suppose that two persons of these names died young, and that the next born received the name of the deceased. See Jarchi.

Verse 8. Nine.] There are thirteen if we count the four sons of Bath-sheba, and nine without them; and in the second book of Samuel there are eleven, reckoning the above four, and without them only seven. In the book of Samuel probably only those who were alive were reckoned; while the author of the Chronicles comprises those also which were dead in his enumeration. Jarchi supposes that the duplicate Elishama and Eliphelet, are those which increase the regular number seven to nine; and that the dead without posterity, as well as the living, are mentioned to increase the number of David's descendants: for, says he, the whole book is written for the honour of David and his seed.

Verse 9. And Tamar their sister.] This is the only daughter of David whose name is on record; and yet he is said to have had both sons and daughters, 2 Sam. chap. v. 13.

Verse 15. Jehoiakim] For the difference of several names in these lists see the marginal readings and references.

Shallum] So called because the kingdom departed from the house of David in his days.—T.

Verse 16. Zedekiah his son.] If this be the same who was the last king of Judah, before the captivity, the word son must be taken here to signify successor; for it is certain that Zedekiah was the successor of Jeconiah, and that Zedekiah was the son of Josiah, and not of Jehoiakim.

Verse 17. The sons of Jeconiah] Jeremiah has said, chap. xxii. 30. that Jeconiah, or, as he calls him, Coniah, should be childless; but this must refer to his posterity being deprived of the throne, and indeed thus the prophet interprets it himself: for no man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David, and ruling any more in Judah.

Assir] Salathiel was not the son of Assir, but of Jeconiah, Matt. i. 12. Who then was Assir? Possibly nobody; for, as the Hebrew אַסִּיר asir, signifies a prisoner, it may be considered as an epithet of Jeconiah, who we know was a very long time prisoner in Babylon. See 2 Kings xxiv. 15. and Calmet.

Verse 18. Malchiram also] Calmet supposes we should read here, And the sons of Salathiel were Malchiram and Pedaiah, &c.

Verse 19. The sons of Pedaiah] Houbigant thinks these words should be omitted. Pedaiah is wanted in the Arabic and Syriac. If this be omitted, Zerubbabel will appear to be the son of Shealtiel, according to Matt. i. 12. and not the son of Pedaiah, as here stated.

Verse 22. The sons of Shemaiah—six] FIVE only are found in the text; and the versions give us no assistance: neither do the MSS. correct the place. If the father be not here included with his sons, some name must be lost out of the text.

Verse 24. And Anani] "This is the King Messiah who is to be revealed."—T. Jarchi says the same, and refers to Dan. vii. 13. Behold one like the son of man came with the clouds, (וְיָ אֲנָנִי) of heaven. For this application of the word he gives a fanciful reason, not worthy to be repeated. The Syriac and Arabic omit several names in this table; and make only twenty-three verses in the chapter: but such differences are frequent in the books of Chronicles.

NOTES ON CHAPTER IV.

Verse 1. The sons of Judah] A genealogy of this tribe has already been given in chapter the second. It is here introduced again, with some variations; probably there were different copies in the public registers; and the writer of this book, finding that this second one contained some remarkable particulars, thought proper to insert it in this place: and no reader will regret the insertion, when he carefully considers the matter.

Verse 3. These were of the father of Etam] "And these are the rabbins, (doctors.) living at Etam; Jezreel, Ishma, and Idbash."—T.

Verse 7. And Ethnan] After this word we should, with the Targum, read Coz, whose posterity is mentioned in the next verse. Coz was probably the same as Kennaz.

Verse 8. The son of Harum.] Jabez should be mentioned at the end of this verse; else he is as a consequent without an antecedent.

Verse 9. And Jabez was more honourable] This whole account is variously understood by some of the principal versions. I shall subjoin a translation of each.

SEPTUAGINT—"And Igabes was more glorious than his brethren; and his mother called his name Igabes, saying, I have brought thee forth as Gages. And Gages invoked the God of Israel, saying, If in blessing thou wilt bless me, and enlarge my borders, and thy hand be with me, and wilt give me understanding not to depress me: and God brought about all that he requested.”

SYRIAC—“And one of these was dear to his father and to his mother; and he called his name (ܐܝܢܐ ainai.) MY EYE. And he said to him, In blessing may the Lord bless thee, and enlarge thy boundary, and may his hand be with thee, and may he preserve thee from evil, that it may not rule over thee; and may he give to thee whatsoever thou shalt request of him!”

ARABIC—“And this one (Hastahar, or Harum), was beloved of his father and his mother; and they called his name (ܐܝܢܐ aina.) MY EYE; and they said unto him, May the Lord bless thee, and multiply thy people; and may his hand be present with thee, because thou wast born in Beth-lehem.”

These two latter versions seem to have copied each other; and the Vulgate is nearly, like ours, a literal rendering of the Hebrew: but the Chaldee is widely different from all the rest.

CHALDEE—“And Jabets also, he is Othniel, honourable and skilled in the law beyond his brethren; whose mother called his name Jabets, because she had borne him with sorrow. And Jabets prayed to the God of Israel, saying, O that in blessing thou wouldest bless me with children, and enlarge my borders with disciples; and that thy hand may be with me in business, that thou mayest make me like to my companions, that evil concupiscence may the less grieve me! And the Lord granted that which he prayed for.”

Of this honourable person we know nothing but what is here mentioned, nor does the name occur in any other part of Scripture except in chap. ii. 55. where it appears to be the name of a place; but is understood by the Chaldee to be the name of a person, as here. The Targum says here, “They called him Caleb, the son of Jephunneh, because he had purged his soul from the counsel of the spies.”

Verse 18. And his wife Jehudijah] The Targum considers the names in this verse as epithets of Moses: “And his wife Jehuditha educated Moses after she had drawn him out of the water; and she called his name Jered, because he caused the manna to descend upon Israel. computed the times from heaven in the days of Ruth, the mother of kingdoms, to the days of Solomon the king.”—T. I am afraid this paraphrase gives us as little light as the text itself, which speaks of potters, and those who dwelt among plants and hedges. They were probably brick-makers; perhaps potters also, who had their dwelling in low grounds, and fabricated the clay that was digged up in forming fences in the king's domains.

Verse 24. The sons of Simeon] This genealogy is very different from that given in Gen.
xvi. 10. and Numb. xxvi. 12. This may be occasioned by the same person having several names; one list taking one name, another list some other, and so on: to reconcile is impossible, to attempt it useless.

Verse 27. Neither did all their family multiply] In Numb. i. 23. the number of all the families of Simeon was fifty-nine thousand three hundred; and that of Judah was, ver. 27. not less than seventy-four thousand six hundred.
When the next census was made, Numb. xxvi.
the tribe of Judah amounted to seventy-six thousand five hundred, an increase of one thousand nine hundred; while the tribe of Simeon amounted only to twenty-two thousand two hundred, a decrease of thirty-seven thousand one hundred. It was at that time the smallest tribe in Israel.

Verse 31. These were their cities unto the reign of David.] It appears that David took 37 And Ziza the son of Shiphi, the son of Allon, the son of Jedaiah, the son of Shumri, the son of Shemaiah;

38 These ^f mentioned by their names were princes in their families: and the house of their fathers increased greatly.

39 ¶ And they went to the entrance of Gedor, even unto the east side of the valley, to seek pasture for their flocks.

40 And they found fat pasture and good, and the land was wide, and quiet, some of the cities of the Simeonites, and added them to Judah; Ziklag, for instance, 1 Sam. xxvii. 6.

As the tribe of Simeon had withdrawn their allegiance from the house of David, the kings of Judah extended their domination as far as possible into the territories of that tribe, so that they were obliged to seek pasture for their flocks at Gedor, and in the mountains of Seir, as we find ver. 39—42.

Verse 40. They of Ham had dwelt there of old.] These were probably either Philistines or Egyptians, who dwelt at Gedor, which was situated in the environs of Joppa and Samnia.

Those whom the five hundred Simeonites expelled from Seir were Amalekites, ver. 43.

Verse 43. They smote the rest of the Amalekites.] Those who had escaped in the war which Saul made against them; see 1 Sam. xiv. 48. And from David, who had attacked them afterward, 2 Sam. viii. 12.

THE expedition of the Simeonites, mentioned here, against Gedor and Seir, was in the days of Hezekiah; and, as Calmet conjectures, near about the time of the captivity of the ten tribes, when the remnant of Simeon would feel themselves obliged to retire more southward, into Arabia Petraea, for fear of the Jews. These may be probable conjectures: see Calmet.

There are several things in the account of Jabez that are very instructive:—

1. He appears to have been a child brought into the world with great difficulty, at the risk of his own life and that of his mother. So much seems to be implied in, she bare him with sorrow; i. e. with peculiar sorrow and danger.

2. To perpetuate the merciful interposition of God in her own and her son's behalf, she gave him a name that must recall to her and his remembrance the danger to which both their lives were exposed, and from which they could not have been extricated but by the especial help of God. She called his name Jabez, &c.

3. He was brought up in the fear of God: he was no idolater; he worshipped the God of Israel, and he showed the sincerity of his faith by frequent and earnest prayer.

and peaceable: for they of Ham had dwelt there of old.

41 And these written by name came in the days of Hezekiah king of Judah, and smote their tents, and the habitations that were found there, and destroyed them utterly unto this day, and dwelt in their rooms: because there was pasture there for their flocks.

42 And some of them, even of the sons of Simeon, five hundred men, went to mount Seir, having for their captains Pelatiah, and Neariah, and Rephaiah, and Uzziel, the sons of Ishi.

43 And they smote ^b the rest of the Amalekites that were escaped, and dwelt there unto this day.

4. His prayer was at once both enlightened and pious. He had piety toward God, and therefore he trusted in him: he knew that he was the fountain of all good, and therefore he sought all necessities both for body and soul from him. He prayed to the God of Israel.

5. Both the matter and manner of his prayer were excellent. His heart was deeply impressed with its wants, and therefore he was earnest and fervent; O that thou wouldest bless me indeed! אִם בָּרַךְ הוּא im barek tebarkeni; “O that in blessing, thou wouldest bless me!” Let me live under thy benediction! Do thou diligently and frequently bless me!

6. He prays for the things necessary for the body as well as for the soul:—and enlarge my coasts; grant me as much territory as may support my family. Let the means of living be adequate to the demands of life; let me have the necessaries, conveniences, and, (as far as they may be, safely intrusted with me,) the comforts of life! O that thou wouldest enlarge my coasts.

7. He is conscious that, without the continual support of God, he must fail; and, therefore, he prays to be upheld by his power. That thy hand might be with me! May I ever walk with thee, and ever feel the hand of thy power to support and cover me in all the trials, dangers, and difficulties of life: and the hand of thy providence to supply all my wants in reference to both worlds.

8. He dreads both sin and suffering, and therefore prays against both: O that thou wouldest keep me from evil, that it may not grieve me! Sin and misery are in every step of the journey of life: keep me from sin, that I grieve thee not; and keep me from sin, that I render not myself miserable! We can never offend God without injuring ourselves: he that sins must suffer. Thorns and scorpions are every where in the way to perdition; and he that walks in it must be torn and stung. He alone is happy who walks in the ways of God. Keep me from evil, that it may not grieve me.

9. Prayers that have a right aim will have a right answer: Jabez did not pray in vain, for God granted him that which he requested. He was continually blessed, his family was increased; the hand of God was upon him for good. He was saved from sin, and saved from the pangs and sufferings of a guilty conscience.

10. If we take up the character and conduct of Jabez in the view given by the Chaldee, we shall not only see him as a pious and careful man, deeply interested in behalf of himself and his family; but we shall see him as a benevolent man, labouring for the welfare of others; and especially for the religious instruction of youth. He founded schools, in which the young and rising generation were taught useful knowledge, and especially the knowledge of God. He had disciples, which were divided into three classes, who distinguished themselves by their fervour in the worship of God, by their diligence in obediently hearing and treasuring up the advices and instructions of their teachers; and, by their deep piety to God, in bringing forth the fruits of the spirit. The spirit of prophecy; that is, of prayer and supplication, rested upon them.

11. He did not do these things merely as a duty he owed to God and his fellows, but from the abundance of a generous and loving heart: in his counsel he erected a school of disciples. God had blessed him with temporal things; and he secures their continuance by devoting them to his service: he honours God with his substance, and God honours him with his especial blessing and approbation.

12. On these accounts he was more honourable than his brethren: he was of the same stock and the same lineage; he had neither nobility of birth, nor was distinguished by earthly titles; in all these respects he was on a level with his brethren: but God tells us that he was more honourable than them all—and why? Because he prayed, because he served his Maker, and because he lived to do good among men: therefore he received the honour that cometh from God. Reader, imitate the conduct of this worthy Israelite, that thou mayest be a partaker of his blessings.

The things added by the Targumist, he might have received from authentic tradition.

NOTES ON CHAPTER V.

Verse 1. The sons of Reuben, the first-born] As Reuben was the eldest son of Jacob, why was not his genealogy reviewed first? This verse answers the question: he lost the birthright because of the transgression mentioned Gen. xxxv. 22. and xlix. 4. and the precedence was given to Judah—from him, therefore, came the chief ruler. This appears to be the meaning of the place.

Verse 2. And of him came the chief ruler] This is, by both the Syriac and Arabic, understood of Christ. "From Judah the King Messiah shall proceed." The Chaldee paraphrases the verse thus: "Seeing Judah prevailed over his brethren, so the kingdom was taken from Reuben and given to Judah; and because he was strong, so was his kingdom. Levi also was godly, and did not transgress in the matter of the golden calf; therefore the high priesthood was taken away from the children of Reuben, and, on their account, from all the first-born, and given to Aaron and his sons. The custody of the sanctuary belonged to the Levites; but the birthright to Joseph."—T.

Verse 6. Beerah his son]. After their separation from the house of David, the ten tribes continued to have princes of the tribes; and this continued till the time that Tiglath-pileser carried them captives into Assyria. At that time Beerah was their prince or chief; and with him this species of dominion or precedence terminated. According to the Targum, Beerah was the same as Baruch the prophet.

Verse 8. Who dwell in Aroer] This town was situated on the river Arnon; and Nebo was both a city and a mountain in the same country. They both lay on the other side of Jordan.

11 ¶ And the children of Gad dwelt over against them, in the land of^p Bashan, unto Salcah:

12 Joel the chief, and Shapham the next, and Jaanai, and Shaphat in Bashan.

13 And their brethren of the house of their fathers were, Michael, and Meshullam, and Sheba, and Jorai, and Jachan, and Zia, and Heber, seven.

14 These are the children of Abihail the son of Huri, the son of Jaroah, the son of Gilead, the son of Michael, the son of Jeshishai, the son of Jahdo, the son of Buz;

15 Ahi the son of Abdiel, the son of Guni, chief of the house of their fathers.

16 And they dwelt in Gilead in Bashan, and in her towns, and in all the suburbs of^r Sharon, upon^s their borders.

17 All these were reckoned by genealogies in the days of^t Jotham king of Judah, and in the days of^u Jeroboam king of Israel.

Verse 10. And they dwell in their tents] The Hagarites were tribes of Nomade, or Scenite, Arabs; people who lived in tents, without any fixed dwellings, and whose property consisted in cattle. The descendants of Reuben extirpated these Hagarites, seized on their property and their tents, and dwelt in their place.

Verse 12. Joel the chief] “Joel, prince of the sanhedrim; and Shaphan, master of the college; and Jaani, and Shaphat, judges in Mathnan.”—T.

Verse 13. And their brethren] This verse is wanting both in the Syriac and in the Arabic.

Verse 16. The suburbs of Sharon] There were three places of this name: that mentioned here was a district in the country of Bashan, beyond Jordan; see Josh. xii. 18. There was another that lay between Cæsarea of Palestine and Joppa; and there was a third between mount Tabor and the sea of Tiberias. See Calmét.

Verse 19. They made war with the Hagarites] This is probably the same war that is mentioned ler and sword, and to shoot with bow, and skilful in war, were four and forty thousand seven hundred and threescore, that went out to the war.

19 And they made war with the Hagarites, with^w Jetur, and Nephish, and Nodab.

20 And^x they were helped against them, and the Hagarites were delivered into their hand, and all that were with them: for they cried to God in the battle, and he was entreated of them; because they^y put their trust in him.

21 And they^z took away their cattle; of their camels fifty thousand, and of sheep two hundred and fifty thousand, and of asses two thousand, and of^a men a hundred thousand.

22 For there fell down many slain, because the war was of God. And they dwelt in their steads until^b the captivity.

23 ¶ And the children of the half tribe of Manasseh dwelt in the land: they increased from Bashan unto Baalhermon and Senir, and unto mount Hermon.

24 And these were the heads of the house of their fathers, even Ephraim, and Ishi, and Eliel, and Azriel, and Jeremiah, and Hodaviah, and Jahdiel, mighty men of valour, famous men, and heads of the house of their fathers.

Verse 20. They put their trust in him.] Or, as the Targum says, “Because they trusted במֵימְרָא be-meymra, in his word.”

Verse 21. They took away their cattle] This was a war of extermination, as to the political state of the people, which nothing could justify but an especial direction of God; and this he could never give against any, unless the cup of their iniquity had been full. The Hagarites were full of idolatry: see ver. 25.

Verse 22. For there fell down many slain] The hundred thousand men, mentioned above, were probably made slaves, and were not slain. The Targum says, one hundred thousand souls of men.

The war was of God.] The Targum says, “the war was מִן מֵימְרָא מִן min meymra dayai,” from the word of the Lord.

Verse 25. The gods of the people of the land] We see the reason why God delivered the

NOTES ON CHAPTER VI.

Verse 1. The sons of Levi] It has been well remarked that the genealogy of Levi is given here more ample and correct than that of any of the others. And this is perhaps an additional proof that the author was a priest, felt much for the priesthood, and took care to give the genealogy of the Levitical and sacerdotal families, from the most correct tables; for, with such tables, we may presume he was intimately acquainted.

Verse 4. Eleazar begat Phinehas] As the high priesthood continued in this family for a long time, the sacred historian confines himself to this chiefly; omitting Nadab and Abihu, and even the family of Ithamar.

Verse 8. Ahitub begat Zadok] Through this person the high priesthood came again into the family of Eleazar.

Verse 10. Johanan] Supposed to be the same as Jehoiada.

Executed the priest's office] Probably this refers to the dignified manner in which Azariah opposed King Uziah, who wished to invade the priest's office, and offer incense in the temple. See 2 Chron. xxvi. 17, 18.

lost out of the text in this place; and veshsheni, which signifies the second, and which refers to Abiah, is made here into a proper name. The Septuagint, Vulgate, and Chaldee, copy this blunder; but the Syriac and Arabic read as in 1 Sam. viii. The MSS. have all copied the corrupted Hebrew in this place.
Jarchi labours to restore the true reading, and yet preserve the integrity of the text, by paraphrasing thus: "And the second, (וְשֵׁנִי vesheni), in respect of the first, he was Abiah; and the second, in respect of Abiah, he was Joel."

These, Joel and Abiah, were the two sons of Samuel, who administered justice so badly that the people, being oppressed, began to murmur, and demanded a king: see 1 Sam. viii. 1, &c.

Verse 31. After that the ark had rest.] The Targum says, "These are they whom David set over the service of the singing, in the house of the sanctuary, or tabernacle of the Lord, at the time in which the ark was brought into it."
That is, when it was brought from the house of Obed-Edom.

Verse 32. According to their order.] This order is specified below.

Verse 39. Asaph] This person, with Heman, the sons of Korah, Ethan, Jeduthun, &c. are celebrated in these books, and in the Psalms, for their skill in singing, and the part they performed in the public worship of God.

It is very likely that their singing was only a kind of recitative or chanting, such as we still find in the synagogues. It does not appear that God had especially appointed these singers, much less any musical instruments. (the silver trumpets excepted,) to be employed in his service. Musical instruments in the house of God are, at least under the Gospel, repugnant to the spirit of Christianity, and tend not a little to corrupt the worship of God. Those who are fond of music in the theatre are fond of it in the house of God, when they go thither: and some, professing Christianity, set up such a spurious worship in order to draw people to hear the Gospel! This is doing evil that good may come of it: and, by this means, light and trifling people are introduced into the church of Christ; and when in, are generally very troublesome, hard to be pleased, and difficult to be saved.

56 ^r But the fields of the city, and the villages thereof, they gave to Caleb the son of Jephunnéh.

Verse 50. These are the sons of Aaron] We have already had a list of these, see ver. 3—16. this is a second, but less extensive; and is a proof that the writer of this book had several lists before him, from which he borrowed as he judged proper.

Verse 54: Theirs was the lot.] All the tribes and families obtained their respective inheritance by lot; but to the sons of Aaron was the first lot; and so the Syriac and Arabic have understood this place. "The first lot," says Jarchi, "fell to Judah, that they might give to the priests and the Levites the cities marked below." See an account of the possessions of the priests and Levites, Joshua xx. xxi.

Verse 60. All their cities—were thirteen] But there are only eleven reckoned here, Gibeon and Juttah being omitted, and the names of some of the others changed. None of the versions give the full number of names, although they all give the whole sum thirteen.

Verse 2. Whose number was in the days of David] Whether this was the number returned by Joab and his assistants, when they made that census of the people with which God was so much displeased, we know not. It is worthy of remark, that we read here the sum of three tribes, Benjamin, Issachar, and Asher, under the reign of David, which is mentioned nowhere else ; and yet we have no account here of the other tribes, probably because the enumeration was recorded.

Verse 3. The sons of Izrahiah—five] There are, however, only four names in the text.
Instead of five, the Syriac and Arabic read four.
If five be the true reading, then Izrahiah must be reckoned with his four sons.

Verse 6. The sons of Benjamin ; Bela, and Becher, and Jediael] In Gen. xlv. 21. ten sons of Benjamin are reckoned ; viz. *Bela, Becher,

7 And the sons of Bela; Ezbon, and Uzzi, and Uzziel, and Jerimoth, and Iri, five: heads of the house of their fathers, mighty men of valour; and were reckoned by their genealogies twenty and two thousand and thirty and four.

8 And the sons of Becher; Zemira, and Joash, and Eliezer, and Elioenai, and Omri, and Jerimoth, and Abiah, and Anathoth, and Alameth. All these are the sons of Becher.

9 And the number of them, after their genealogy by their generations, heads of the house of their fathers, mighty men of valour, was twenty thousand and two hundred.

10 The sons also of Jediel; Bilhan: and the sons of Bilhan; Jeush, and Benjamin, and Ehud, and Chenaanah, and Zethan, and Tharshish, and Abishahar.

11 All these the sons of Jediel, by the heads of their fathers, mighty men of valour, were seventeen thousand and two hundred soldiers; fit to go out for war and battle.

12 ^e Shuppim also, and Huppim: the children of ^f Ir, and Hushim, the sons of ^g Aher.

Huppim, and Ard. In Numb. xxvi. 38, &c. five sons only of Benjamin are mentioned, Bela, Ashbel, Ahiram, Shupham, and Hupham: and Ard and Naaman are there said to be the sons of Bela; consequently, grandsons of Benjamin. In the beginning of the following chapter, five sons of Benjamin are mentioned, viz. Bela, Ashbel, Aharah, Nohah, and Rapha; where also Addar, Gera, Abihud, Abishua, Naaman, Ahoah, a second Gera, Shephuphan, and Huram, which are all represented as grandsons, not sons, of Benjamin: hence we see that, in many cases, grandsons are called sons, and both are often confounded in the genealogical tables. To attempt to reconcile such discrepancies would be a task as endless as it would be useless. The rabbins say that Ezra, who wrote this book, did not know whether some of these were sons or grandsons; and they intimate also that the tables from which he copied were often defective, and here we must leave all such matters.

Verse 21. Whom the men of Gath—slew] We know nothing of this circumstance but what is related here. The Targum paraphrases the whole thus: "These were the leaders of the house of Ephraim; and they computed their period, [or boundary, קצת kitsa,] from the time in which the word of the Lord of the Universe spake with Abraham between the divisions, [i. e. the separated parts of the covenant sacrifice, see Gen. xvi.] but they erred, for they should have counted from the time in which Isaac was born; they went out of Egypt therefore thirty years before the period: for, thirty years before the birth of Isaac, the Word of the Lord of the Universe spake with Abraham between the divisions. And when they went out of Egypt, there were with them two hundred thousand warriors of the tribe of Ephraim, whom the men of Gath, the natives of the land of the Philistines, slew, because they came down, that they might carry away their cattle. 22.—And Ephraim their father mourned for them many days, and all his brethren came to comfort him. 23.—And he went in to his wife, and she conceived and bare a son, and called his name Beriah, (בְּרִיָּה, in evil.)

begat of Hodesh his wife, &c. And then his children by Hushim are mentioned, but not a word of Baara! It is likely, therefore, that Hodesh was another name for Baara, and this is asserted by the Targum, And he begat of Baara, that is Chodesh his wife; so called because he espoused her anew. It is supposed that he had put her away before, and now remarried her.

Verse 12. Who built Ono, and Lod] The Targum adds, "Which the children of Israel ravaged and burnt with fire, when they made war on the tribe of Benjamin in Gibeon."

Verse 28. These were heads of the fathers].
On the following verses Dr. Kennicott has laboured hard to restore the true reading. See his detailed comparison of these and their parallel passages in his Hebrew Bible, vol. iii. p. 657.

Verse 29. And at Gibeon] This passage, to the end of the 38th verse, is found, with a little variety in the names, chap. ix. 35—44!

The rabbins say that Ezra, having found two books that had these passages with a variety in the names, as they agreed in general, he thought best to insert them both, not being able to discern which was the best.

His general plan was to collate all the copies he had, and to follow the greater number when he found them to agree: those which disagreed from the majority were thrown aside as spurious; and yet, in many cases, probably the rejected copies contained the true text.

If Ezra proceeded as R. Sol. Jarchi says, he had a very imperfect notion of the rules of true criticism; and it is no wonder that he has left so many faults in his text.

R. S. Jarchi says, that their allegorical expositions were sufficient to load thirteen thousand camels! No doubt these were reputed to be deeply learned men. There was a time when the allegorizers and metaphor men ranked very high among theologians, even in our own enlightened and critical country. At present they are almost totally out of fashion. May they never recover their footing!

NOTES ON CHAPTER IX.

Verse 1. Were reckoned by genealogies] Jarchi considers these as the words of Ezra, the compiler of the book. As if he had said, "I have given the genealogies of the Israelites, as I have found them in a book which was carried into Babylon, when the people were carried thither for their transgressions; and this book which I found, is that which I have transcribed in the preceding chapters."

Verse 2. Now the first inhabitants] This is spoken of those who returned from the Babylonish captivity; and of the time in which they returned: for it is insinuated here that other persons afterward settled at Jerusalem; though these mentioned here were the first on the return from the captivity. Properly speaking, the divisions mentioned in this verse, constituted the whole of the Israelitish people, who were, ever since the days of Joshua, divided into the four following classes:—1. The priests—2. The Levites—3. The common people, or, simple Israelites—4. The Nethinim, or slaves of the temple, the remains of the Gibeonites, who, having deceived Joshua, were condemned to this service, Josh. ix. 21, &c. In David's time it is probable that other conquered people were added, as the successors of the Gibeonites were not sufficient to perform all the drudgery of the temple service.

Verse 3. And in Jerusalem dwelt] Several of the tribes of Judah, Benjamin, Ephraim, and Manasseh, took advantage of the proclamation of Cyrus to return to Jerusalem, and so mingled with the Israelites, and those to whom Jerusalem had previously appertained; and this was necessary, in order to provide a sufficient population for so large a city.

Verse 4. Uthai the son of Ammihud] The list here is nearly the same with those found in Ezra and Nehemiah, and contains those who returned to Jerusalem with Zerubbabel: but the list in Nehemiah is more ample, probably because it contains those who came afterward. The object of the sacred writer here was to give the list of those who came first. Now, the first inhabitants, &c.

The high priest at this time was Joshua, the son of Jozadak, Ezra iii. 8. and Seraiah, (Neh.
xi. 11.) called here Azariah, was the ruler of the house ; the person next in authority to the high priest, and who probably had the guard of the temple, and command of the priests, Levites, &c. It is likely that the person here was the same as is called the second priest, 2 Kings
xxv. 18. who was the sagan, or high priest's deputy. See the note there.

Verse 13. And their brethren] What a prodigious number of ecclesiastics to perform the divine service of one temple, no less than one thousand seven hundred and eighty able bodied men ! and this number is reckoned independently of the two hundred and twelve porters, who served at the gates of the house of the Lord, ver. 22.

20 And ⁱ Phinehas the son of Eleazar was the ruler over them in time past, and the LORD was with him.

21 And Zechariah the son of Meshe-lemiah was porter of the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

22 All these which were chosen to be porters in the gates were two hundred and twelve. These were reckoned by their genealogy in their villages, whom ² David and Samuel ¹ the seer ^m did or-dain in their ⁿ set office.

23 So they and their children had the oversight of the gates of the house of the LORD, namely, the house of the tabernacle, by wards.

24 In four quarters were the porters, toward the east, west, north, and south.

25 And their brethren, which were in their villages, were to come ^o after seven days from time to time with them.

26 For these Levites, the four chief porters, were in their ^p set office, and were over the ^r chambers and treasu-

Verse 35. Whose wife's name was Maachah] Here our translators have departed from the original; for the word is מַחֲכָה achoto, his sis-TER: but the Vulgate, Septuagint, Syriac, Arabic, and Chaldee, have WIFE: to which may be added, chap. viii. 29. the parallel place. Almost all the early editions, as well as the MS. editions, have the same reading.
Of all the Polyglotts, the Complutensian alone has מַחֲכָה isheto, WIFE. There is most certainly a fault somewhere, for Maachah could not be both the sister and wife of Jehiel. Whether therefore, chap. viii. 29. has been altered from this, or this altered from that, who can tell?
A single letter makes the whole difference: if

38 And Mikloth begat Shi-if with שִׁין, it is WIFE. The latter is most probably the true reading.

Verse 41. And Ahaz.] This is added by our translators from chap. viii. 35; but such liberties should only be taken in a note; for, although the words are now sufficiently distinguished from the text by being printed in italics, yet it is too much to expect that every editor of a Bible will attend to such distinctions, and in process of time the words will be found incorporated with the text.

petition of what we find in chap. viii. 29—38.

4 Then said Saul to his armour-bearer, Draw thy sword, and thrust me through therewith; lest these uncircumcised come and abuse me. But his armour-bearer would not; for he was sore afraid. So Saul took a sword, and fell upon it.

5 And when his armour-bearer saw that Saul was dead, he fell likewise on the sword, and died.

6 So Saul died, and his three sons, and all his house died together.

7 And when all the men of Israel that were in the valley saw that they fled, and that Saul and his sons were dead, then they forsook their cities, and fled: and the Philistines came and dwelt in them.

8 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, when the Philistines came to strip the slain, that they found Saul and his sons fallen in mount Gilboa.

9 And when they had stripped him, they took his head, and his armour, and sent into the land of the Philistines round about, to carry tidings unto their idols, and to the people.

10 ¶ And they put his armour in the house of their gods, and fastened his head in the temple of Dagon.

11 ¶ And when all Jabesh-gilead heard all that the Philistines had done to Saul,

12 They arose, all the valiant men, and took away the body of Saul, and the bodies of his sons, and brought them to Jabesh, and buried their bones under the oak in Jabesh, and fasted seven days.

13 ¶ So Saul died for his transgressions which he committed against the LORD, even against the word of the LORD, which he kept not, and also for asking counsel of one that had a familiar spirit, to inquire of it;

14 And inquired not of the LORD: therefore he slew him, and turned the kingdom unto David the son of Jesse.

Verse 6. So Saul died—and all his house] Every branch of his family that had followed him to the war was cut off; his three sons are mentioned as being the chief. No doubt all his officers were slain.

Verse 14. When all Jabesh-gilead heard] For a general account of the principles of heroism and gratitude from which this action of the men of Jabesh-gilead proceeded, see the note on 1 Sam. xxxi. 11, 12.

By the kindness of a literary friend I am enabled to lay a farther illustration of this noble act before the reader, which he will find at the conclusion of the chapter.

Verse 13. Saul died for his transgression] See the concluding observations on the First Book of Samuel.

Verse 14. Inquired not of the LORD] On these two last verses the Targum speaks thus: "And Saul died for the transgression by which he transgressed against the Word of the Lord, and because he did not keep the commandment of the Lord when he warred against the house of Amalek; and because he consulted Pythons, and sought oracular answers from them. Neither did he ask counsel from before the Lord by Urim and Thummim, for he had slain the priests that were in Nob; therefore the Lord slew him, and transferred the kingdom to David the son of Jesse."

A literary friend furnishes the following remarks.

"The sacred writer, in the First Book of Samuel, chap. xxxi. 11—13. and 1 Chron. x. 11, 12. after relating the defeat and death of Saul, and the ignominious treatment of his remains, thus concludes:

"And when the inhabitants of Jabeshgilead heard of that which the Philistines had done to Saul, all the valiant men arose, and went all night, and took the body of Saul, and the bodies of his sons, from the wall of Bethshan, and came to Jabesh, and burnt them there; and they took the bones, and buried them under a tree at Jabesh, and fasted seven days."

"Often has this account been read with admiration of the bravery and devotedness of the men of Jabesh-gilead, but without considering that these men had any greater cause than others for honouring the remains of their sovereign: but, on reflection, it will be perceived that the strong impulse of gratitude prompted them to this honourable exertion. They remembered their preservation from destruction; and, what to brave men is more galling, from bearing marks of having been defeated, and being deprived of the honourable hope of wiping off disgrace, or defending their country at future seasons.

"Reading these verses in conjunction with the attack of Nahash, we perceive the natural feelings of humanity, of honourable respect, prompting the men of Jabesh to act as they did in rescuing the bones of Saul and his family."

This proclaims its reality:—

"The father of Grecian poetry relates in how great a degree the warriors of ancient days honoured the remains of their leaders; how severe were the contests for the body of the fallen chief; more determined oftentimes than the struggle for victory: this point of military honour was possibly excited or heightened by the religious idea so prevalent in his age, and afterwards, respecting the fate of the spirits of those who were unburied.

"Homer wrote of events passing at no distant period from these recorded in the first volume of Samuel; and these accounts mutually corroborate each other, being in unison not only with the feelings of humanity, but with the customs of ancient nations. These may be farther illustrated by comparing the conduct of the Philistines with regard to Saul and his sons, with that of the hero of the Iliad toward Hector, the most finished character of the poem. Saul had been a severe scourge to the Philistines throughout a long series of years; the illustrious chief of Troy had long ward off the ruin of his country, and destroyed the flower of her foes, independently of his last victory over Patroclus, which drew on his remains that dishonour which, however, fell only on his destroyer.

"Should the siege of Troy be considered a fable, it may then be concluded that Homer introduced into his poems the customs and manners known to those for whose perusal he wrote, if these customs were not prevalent among his readers; but anxiety for the body of the illustrious dead, or regret for his death, has often caused success when all exertions prior to this powerful stimulus have not availed; and this even in our days.

"The Philistines had long been confined to the southwest angle of the promised land, and in the earlier part of Saul's reign had suffered many and severe losses; yet it appears by this chapter that, alone or in conjunction with allies, they had been able to penetrate nearly to the banks of the Jordan, to fight the battle on mount Gilboa. This could only have been effected by a march through great part of the kingdom of Israel.

"Doubtless the attention of Saul in its defence might have been greatly distracted by his pursuit and fear of David, which appeared to have absorbed his whole mind; and it may account for the defenceless or weakened state of his forces.

"These circumstances appear to corroborate the authenticity of these books, independently of the many private transactions therein recorded, particularly the interesting and singular friendship of Jonathan and David, a transaction not likely to occur to a forger of a narrative.

On this, and some of the following verses, there is a judicious note of Dr. Kennicott, which I shall take the liberty to introduce, referring to his first Dissertation on the Hebrew text, for farther illustration and proof, pp. 128—144.

“Among the parallel places, a comparison of which may be of very considerable service, scarce any passages will appear more effectually to correct each other than the catalogue of David's mighty men of valour; as it now stands in 2 Sam. xxiii. 8—40. and in this chapter. About thirty-four Hebrew words have been lost out of this part of the passage in Chronicles, which are happily preserved in Samuel.

“The chief point of proof is this, that the catalogue divides these thirty-seven warriors into the captain-general, a first three, a second three, and the remaining thirty; and yet, that the third captain of the first ternary is now here omitted. The following juxta-position will show the whole deficiency, and properly sup-

one would give me drink of the water of the well of Beth-lehem, that is at the gate!

NOTES ON CHAPTER XII.

Verse 1. Came to David to Ziklag] Achish, king of Gath, had given Ziklag to David, as a safe retreat from the wrath of Saul.

Verse 3. And were as swift as the roes] That swiftness was considered to be a grand accomplishment in a warrior, appears from all ancient writings which treat of military affairs.

Verse 15. In the first month] Perhaps this was the month Nisan, which answers to a part of our March and April. This was probably before the snows on the mountains were melted, just as Jordan began to overflow its banks; or, if we allow that it had already overflowed its banks, it made their attempt more hazardous, and afforded additional proof of their heroism.

Verse 18. The spirit came upon Amasai] The spirit of fortitude clothed Amasai, the chief of the mighty men; and he answered, For thy sake, O David, are we come, that we may be with thee, thou son of Jesse. Prosperity be to thee by night and by day; and prosperity be to

Verse 32. Children of Issachar] According to the Targum they were all astronomers and astrologers: and the sons of Issachar, who had understanding to know the times, and were skilled in fixing the beginnings of years, the commencement of months, and the intercalation of months and years; skilful in the changes of the moon, and in fixing the lunar solemnities to their proper times; skilful also in the doctrine of the solar periods; astrologers in signs and stars, that they might show Israel what to do; and their teachers were two hundred chiefs of the sanhedrim: and all their brethren excelled in the words of the law, and were endowed with wisdom, and were obedient to their command.—T. It appears that in their wisdom, experience, and skill, their brethren had the fullest confidence; and nothing was done but by their direction and advice.

Verse 39. They were with David three days] These were the deputies of the different people mentioned here: it is not possible that all the thousands mentioned above could have feasted with David for three days; and yet it appears there was even of these a great number, for the men of Issachar, Zebulun, and

Verse 1. David consulted] Having taken the strong-hold of Zion from the Jebusites, organized his army, and got assurances of the friendly disposition of the Israelites toward him, he judged it right to do what he could for the establishment of religion in the land; and, as a first step, consulted on the propriety of bringing the ark from an obscure village, where it had remained during the reign of Saul, to the royal city, or seat of government.

18 And with them their brethren of the second degree, Zechariah, Ben, and Jaaziel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Unni, Eliab, and Benaiah, and Maaseiah, and Mattithiah, and Eliphele, and Mikneiah, and Obed-edom, and Jeiel, the porters.

19 So the singers, Heman, Asaph, and Ethan, were appointed to sound with cymbals of brass;

20 And Zechariah, and ^o Aziel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Unni, and Eliab, and Maaseiah, and Benaiah, with psalteries ^p on Alamoth;

21 And Mattithiah, and Eliphele, and Mikneiah, and Obed-edom, and Jeiel, and Azariah, with harps ^r on the Sheminith to excel.

22 And Chenaniah, chief of the Levites, ^s was for ^t song: he instructed about the song, because he was skilful.

23 And Berechiah and Elkanah were door-keepers for the ark.

24 And Shebaniah, and Jehoshaphat, and Nethaneel, and Ama-sai, and Zechariah, and Benaiah, and Eliezer, the priests, ^u did blow with the trumpets before the ark of God: and Obed-edom and Jehiah were door-keepers for the ark.

25 ¶ So ^v David, and the elders of Israel, and the captains over thousands, went to bring up the ark of the covenant of the LORD out of the house of Obed-edom with joy.

26 And it came to pass, when God helped the Levites that bare the ark of the covenant of the LORD, that they offered seven bullocks and seven rams.

27 And David was clothed with a robe of fine linen, and all the Levites that bare the ark, and the singers, and Chenaniah the master of the ^w song with the singers; David also had upon him an ephod of linen.

28 ^x Thus all Israel brought up the ark of the covenant of the LORD with shouting, and with sound of the cornet, and with trumpets, and with cymbals, making a noise with psalteries and harps.

29 ¶ And it came to pass, ^y as the ark of the covenant of the LORD came to the city of David, that Michal the daughter of Saul looking out at a window saw King David dancing and playing: and she despised him in her heart.

Verse 17. Heman—Asaph—Ethan] These were the three chief musicians in the time of David: see chap. vi. 31.

Verse 20. With psalteries on Alamoth] Some suppose that the word signifies virgins, or women-singers, the persons mentioned here being appointed to accompany them with psalteries, and preside over them.

The Vulgate says arcana cantabant; they sang secret things, or mysteries: probably prophetic hymns.

Verse 21. On the Sheminith] According to the Targum, this signifies an instrument that sounded an octave; or, according to others, an instrument with eight strings. The Syriac and Arabic have it, instruments to sing with daily, at the third, sixth, and ninth hour; the Vulgate, an octave, for a song of victory: some think the eighth band of the musicians is intended, who had the strongest and most sonorous voices; and that it is in this sense that shelomith, and lenatseach, should be understood.

Verse 22. Chenaniah—he instructed about the song] This appears to have been the master-singer; he gave the key and the time, for he presided, במסא במסא, in the elevation; probably meaning what is called pitching the tune, for he was skilful in music, and powerful in his voice, and well qualified to lead the band.

Verse 26. God helped the Levites] When they saw that God had made no breach among them, as he had in the case of Uzza, in gratitude for their preservation, and his acceptance of their labour, they sacrificed seven bullocks and seven rams.

Verse 27. A robe of fine linen] A robe made of בוי butis; probably the tuft, or beard, of the Pinna Magna, a species of muscle found every where on the shores of the Mediterranean, growing sometimes, as I have seen, to a foot and half in length. I have seen a pair of gloves made of this very rich stuff; the colour is a deep dark yellow, something inclining to what is called the lilac. The butis, or bysus, was not heard of in Israel before the time of David; after that it is frequently mentioned.

Verse 29. Michal—saw—David dancing—and she despised him] See this whole business explained 2 Sam. vi. 20, &c. where David's conduct is vindicated, and the nature of Michal's disgrace and punishment hinted at; but all left to the reader's determination.

SO^a they brought the ark of God, and set it in the midst of the tent that David had pitched for it: and they offered burnt-sacrifices and peace-offerings before God.

2 And when David had made an end of offering the burnt-offerings and the peace-offerings, he blessed the people in the name of the LORD.

3 And he dealt to every one of Israel, both man and woman, to every one a loaf of bread, and a good piece of flesh, and a flagon of wine.

4 ¶ And he appointed certain of the Levites to minister before the ark of the LORD, and to^b record, and to thank and praise the LORD God of Israel:

they had a regal and sacerdotal power in the order of God. In the behalf of the patriarchs God had often especially interfered: in behalf of Abraham, Gen. xii. 17. and xx. 3. and of Jacob, Gen. xxxi. 24. and xxxiv. 26. and xxxv. 5. But the title may be applied to all the Jewish people; who were the anointed, as they were the elect and peculiar people of God. See on Heb. xi. 26.

Verse 31. Let the heavens be glad] Let the supreme angels be glad, and the inhabitants of the earth rejoice.—T. In this place the Targumist uses the Greek word ἀγγελοι, angels, in Hebrew letters; thus אנגליי.

Verse 35. Save us, O God of our salvation] As he is the saving God, so, we may pray to him to save us. To pray to God under the attribute, the influence of which we need, serves and deliver us from the heathen, that we may give thanks to thy holy name, and glory in thy praise.

36 ^r Blessed be the LORD God of Israel for ever and ever. And all ^s the people said, Amen, and praised the LORD.

37 ^t So he left there, before the ark of the covenant of the LORD, Asaph and his brethren, to minister before the ark continually, as every day's work required:

to inspire much confidence. I am weak, Almighty God help me! I am ignorant, O thou Father of lights teach me! I am lost, O merciful God save me! &c. See the notes on Psa. xcvi. and cv.

Verse 39. Zadok the priest] Both Zadok and Abiathar were high priests at this time: the former David established at Gibeon, or Gibeon, where the ark had been all the days of Saul; and the latter he established at Jerusalem, where the ark now was: so there were two high priests, and two distinct services; but there was but one ark. How long the service at Gibeon was continued we cannot tell; the principal functions were no doubt performed at Jerusalem.

Verse 42. Musical instruments of God] Ad canendum Deo, to sing to God. Vulgate. T

אֲדָוָה רַבָּה of the songs of God. Septuagint. The Syriac is remarkable; "These were upright men, who did not sing unto God with instruments of music, nor with drums, nor with listra, nor with straight nor crooked pipes, nor with cymbals; but they sang before the Lord Almighty with a joyous mouth, and with a pure and holy prayer, and with innocence and integrity." The Arabic is nearly the same. None of the versions understand the words שִׁיר וְנָחֳמִים celey shir haelohim, as implying instruments of music of God, but instruments employed in the song of God; or to praise God: so also the Targum. Query, Did ever God ordain instruments of music to be used in his worship? Can they be used in Christian assemblies, according to the spirit of Christianity? Has Jesus Christ, or his apostles, ever commanded or sanctioned the use of them? Were they ever used any where in the apostolic church? Does the use of them at present, in Christian congregations, ever increase the spirit of devotion? Does it ever appear that bands of musicians, either in their collective or individual capacity, are more spiritual, or as spiritual, as the other parts of the church of Christ? Is there more pride, self-will, stubbornness, insubordination, lightness, and frivolity, among such persons, than among the other professors of Christianity, found in the same religious society? Is it ever remarked or known that musicians, in the house of God, have ever attained to any depth of piety, or superior soundness of understanding, in the things of God? Is it ever found that those churches and Christian societies which have and use instruments of music in divine worship are more holy, or as holy, as those societies which do not use them? And is it always found that the ministers, who affect and recommend them to be used in the worship of Almighty God, are the most spiritual men, and the most spiritual and useful preachers? Can mere sounds, no matter how melodious, where no word nor sentiment is or can be uttered, be considered as giving praise to God? Is it possible that pipes, or strings of any kind, can give God praise? Can God be pleased with sounds which are emitted by no sentient being, and have in themselves no meaning? If these questions cannot be answered in the affirmative; then, query, Is not the introduction of such instruments into the worship of God anti-christian, calculated to debase, and ultimately ruin the spirit and influence of the Gospel of Jesus Christ? And should not all who wish well to the spread and establishment of pure and undefiled religion, lift up their hand, their influence, and their voice, against them? The argument, from their use in the Jewish service, is futile in the extreme, when applied to Christianity.

any more, as at the beginning,

10 And since the time that I commanded judges to be over my people Israel. Moreover, I will subdue all thine enemies. Furthermore I tell thee, that the LORD will build thee a house.

11 ¶ And it shall come to pass, when thy days be expired that thou must go to be with thy fathers, that I will raise up thy seed after thee, which shall be of thy sons; and I will establish his kingdom.

and according to thine own heart, hast thou done all this greatness, in making known all these great things

20 O LORD, there is none like thee, neither is there any God besides thee, according to all that we have heard with our ears.

21 And what one nation in the earth is like thy people Israel, whom God went to redeem to be his own people, to make thee a name of greatness and terribleness, by driving out nations from before thy people, whom thou hast redeemed out of Egypt?

22 For thy people Israel didst thou make thine own people for ever; and thou, LORD, becamest their God.

23 Therefore now, LORD, let the thing that thou hast spoken concerning thy servant, and concerning his house, be established for ever, and do as thou hast said.

24 Let it even be established, that thy name may be magnified for ever, saying, The LORD of hosts is the God of Israel, even a God to Israel: and let the house of David thy servant be established before thee.

25 For thou, O my God, ^h hast told thy servant that thou wilt build him a house: therefore thy servant hath found in his heart to pray before thee.

26 And now, LORD, thou art God, and hast promised this goodness unto thy servant:

27 Now therefore ⁱ let it please thee to bless the house of thy servant, that it may be before thee for ever: for thou blessest, O LORD, and it shall be blessed for ever.

^h Heb. hast revealed the ear of thy servant.—ⁱ Or, it hath pleased thee.

Verse 25. Hath found in his heart to pray] The Targum expresses a full sense: "Therefore thy servant hath found an opening of mouth, that he might pray before thee."

Verse 27. For thou blessest, O LORD] "Thou beginnest to bless the house of thy servant; therefore, it shall be blessed for ever."—T.

NOW after this ^a it came to pass, that David smote the Philistines, and subdued them, and took Gath and her towns out of the hand of the Philistines.

² And he smote Moab; and the Moabites became David's servants, and brought gifts.

³ ¶ And David smote ^b Hadarezer king of Zobah unto Hamath, as he went to stablish his dominion by the river Euphrates.

⁴ And David took from him a thousand chariots, and ^c seven thousand horsemen, and twenty thousand footmen: David also houghed all the chariot horses, but reserved of them a hundred chariots.

⁵ And when the Syrians of ^d Damascus came to help Hadarezer king of Zobah, David slew of the Syrians two and twenty thousand men.

⁷ And David took the shields of gold that were on the servants of Hadarezer, and brought them to Jerusalem.

⁸ Likewise from ^e Tibhath, and from Chun, cities of Hadarezer, brought David very much brass, wherewith ^f Solomon made the brazen sea, and the pillars, and the vessels of brass.

⁹ ¶ Now when ^g Tou king of Hamath heard how David had smitten all the host of Hadarezer king of Zobah;

¹⁰ He sent ^h Hadoram his son to King David, ⁱ to inquire of his welfare, and ^k to congratulate him because he had fought against Hadarezer, and smitten him; (for Hadarezer ^l had war with Tou;) and with him all manner of vessels of gold, and silver, and brass.

¹² Moreover ^m Abishai the son of Zeruiah slew of the Edomites in the valley of Salt ⁿ eighteen thousand.

¹³ ¶ ^o And he put garrisons in Edom; and all the Edomites became David's servants. Thus the LORD preserved David whithersoever he went.

¹⁴ ¶ So David reigned over all Israel, and executed judgment and justice among all his people.

¹⁵ And Joab the son of Zeruiah was over the host; and Jehoshaphat the son of Ahilud, ^p recorder.

¹⁶ And Zadok the son of Ahitub, and ^r Abimelech the son of Abiathar, were the priests; and ^s Shavsha was scribe;

David sends a congratulatory message to Hanun, king of Ammon, 1, 2. He treats the messengers with great incivility, 3, 4. David is exasperated, but consoles with the degraded messengers, 5. The Ammonites prepare for war, and hire thirty-two thousand chariots, and besiege Medeba, 6, 7. David sends Joab to attack them; he defeats the Syrians and Ammonites, 8-15. The discomfited Syrians recruit their army, and invade David's territories beyond Jordan; he attacks them, kills Shophach, their general, seven thousand charioteers, and forty thousand of their infantry, 18. NOW ^ait came to pass after this, that Nahash the king of the children of Ammon died, and his son reigned in his stead.

2 And David said, I will show kindness unto Hanun the son of Nahash, because his father showed kindness to me. And David sent messengers to comfort him concerning his father. So the servants of David came into the land of the children of Ammon to Hanun, to comfort him.

3 But the princes of the children of Ammon said to Hanun, ^bThinkest thou that David doth honour thy father, that he hath sent comforters unto thee? are not his servants come unto thee for to search, and to overthrow, and to spy out the land?

4 Wherefore Hanun took David's servants, and shaved them, and cut off their garments in the midst, hard by their buttocks, and sent them away.

5 Then there went certain, and told David how the men were served. And he sent to meet them: for the men were greatly ashamed. And the king said, Tarry at Jericho until your beards be grown, and then return.

6 ¶ And when the children of Ammon saw that they had made themselves ^codious to David, Hanun and the children of Ammon sent a thousand talents of silver to hire them chariots and horsemen out of Mesopotamia, and out of Syria-maachah, ^dand out of Zobah.

7 So they hired thirty and two thousand chariots, and the king of Maachah and his people; who came and pitched before Medeba. And the children of Ammon gathered themselves together from their cities, and came to battle.

8 And when David heard of it, he sent Joab, and all the host of the mighty men.

9 And the children of Ammon came out, and put the battle in array before the gate of the city: and the kings that were come were by themselves in the field.

10 Now when Joab saw that ^ethe battle was set against him before and behind, he chose out of all the ^fchoice of Israel, and put them in array against the Syrians.

11 And the rest of the people he delivered unto the hand of ^gAbishai his brother, and they set themselves in array against the children of Ammon.

12 And he said, If the Syrians be too strong for me, then thou shalt help me: but if the children of Ammon be too strong for thee, then I will help thee.

13 Be of good courage, and let us behave ourselves valiantly for our people, and for the cities of our God: and let the LORD do that which is good in his sight.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XX.

Verse 1. After the year was expired, at the time that kings go out to battle] About the spring of the year: see the note on 2 Sam. xi. 1.

After this verse the parallel place in Samuel relates the whole story of David and Bath-sheba, and the murder of Uriah, which the compiler of these books passes over, as he designedly does almost every thing prejudicial to the character of David. All he states is, but David tarried at Jerusalem; and while he thus tarried, and Joab conducted the war against the Ammonites, the awful transactions above referred to, took place.

3 And he brought out the people that were in it, and cut them with saws, and with harrows of iron, and with axes. Even so dealt David with all the cities of the children of Ammon. And David and all the people returned to Jerusalem.

4 ¶ And it came to pass after this, that there ^g arose ^h war at ⁱ Gezer with the Philistines; at which time ^k Sibbechai the Hushathite slew ^l Sippai, that was of the children of ^m the giant; and they were subdued.

Verse 5. Elhanan the son of Jair] See the note on 2 Sam. xxi. 19. The Targum says, "David, the son of Jesse, a pious man, who rose at midnight to sing praises to God, slew Lachmi, the brother of Goliath, the same day

The compiler of these books passes by also the incest of Amnon with his sister Tamar; and the rebellion of Absalom; and the awful consequences of all these. These should have preceded the fourth verse. These facts could not be unknown to him, for they were notorious to all: but he saw that they were already amply detailed in books which were accredited among the people; and the relations were such as no friend to piety and humanity could delight to repeat. On these grounds the reader will give him credit for the omission: see on ver. 1.

CHAPTER XXI.

David is tempted by Satan to take the numbers of the people of Israel and Judah, 1, 2. Joab remonstrates, but the king is determined, and Joab pleads in vain, 3, 4. He returns, and delivers in the number to the king, but reckons not Levi and Benjamin, 5. The Lord is displeased, and sends Gad to offer David his choice of three great national calamities; famine, war, or pestilence, 6—12. David submits himself to God, and a pestilence is sent, which destroys seventy thousand, 13, 14. At David's intercession, the destroying angel is restrained at the thrashing-floor of Ornan, 15—17. He buys the piece of ground, builds an altar to the Lord, and offers sacrifices, and the plague is stayed, 18—30.

Should he ask, Why have you not numbered Benjamin? he would answer, Benjamin has been already sufficiently Verse 12. Three days—the pestilence in the land] In 2 Sam. xxiv. 13. seven years of famine are mentioned: see the note there.

Verse 13. David said—I am in a great strait] The Targum reasons thus: “And David said to Gad, If I choose famine, the Israelites may say, The granaries of David are full of corn; neither doth he care should the people of Israel die with hunger. And if I choose war, and fly before an enemy, the Israelites may say, David is a strong and warlike man, and he cares not though the people of Israel should fall by the sword. I am brought into a great strait; I will deliver myself now into the HAND of the WORD of the LORD, בִּיד מִסְרָא beyad meimra dayai, for his mercies are many; but into the hands of the children of men I will not deliver myself.”

Verse 15. And God sent an angel] Thus the Targum: “And the WORD of the LORD sent the angel of death against Jerusalem to destroy it; and he beheld the ashes of the binding of Isaac at the foot of the altar, and he remembered his covenant with Abraham, which he 17 And David said unto God, Is it not I that commanded the people to be numbered? even I it is that have sinned and done evil indeed; but as for these sheep, what have they done? Let thine hand, I pray thee, O LORD my God, be on me, and on my father's house; but not on thy people, that they should be plagued.

18 ¶ Then the ^rangel of the LORD commanded Gad to say to David, That David should go up, and set up an altar unto the LORD in the thrashing-floor of Ornan the Jebusite.

19 And David went up at the saying of Gad, which he spake in the name of the LORD.

20 ^s And Ornan turned back, and saw the angel; and his four sons with him hid themselves. Now Ornan was thrashing wheat.

21 And as David came to Ornan, Ornan looked and saw David, and went out of the thrashing-floor, and bowed himself to David with his face to the ground.

22 Then David said to Ornan, ^tGrant me the place of this thrashing-floor, that I may build an altar therein unto the

And the angel which was sent from the presence of the Lord, stood at the thrashing-floor of Araunah the Jebusite.”

Verse 20. Ornan turned back, and saw the angel] The Septuagint say, And Orna turned, και ειδε τον βασιλεα, and saw the king. The Syriac and Arabic say, David saw the angel; and do not mention Ornan in this place. Houbigant translates the same reading המלך ha-malek, the king, for המלך ha-malak, the angel; and vindicates his version from the parallel place, 2 Sam. xxiv. 20. where it is said, he saw David: but there is no word of his seeing the angel. But the seeing David is mentioned in ver. 21; though Houbigant supposes that the 20th verse refers to his seeing the king while he was at a distance; the 21st, to his seeing him when he came into the thrashing-floor. when they saw the king coming; and this caused them to hide themselves: but when he came into the thrashing-floor, they were obliged to appear before him. One of Kennicott's MSS. has חזק the king, instead of חזק the angel. Some learned men contend for the former reading.

Verse 24. For the full price] That is, six hundred shekels full weight of pure gold.

Verse 26. He answered him—by fire] In answer to David's prayers, God, to show that he had accepted him, and was now pacified toward him and the people, sent fire from heaven, and consumed the offerings.

Verse 30. Because of the sword of the angel] This is given as a reason why David built an altar in the thrashing-floor of Ornan: he was 27 And the LORD commanded the angel, and he put up his sword again into the sheath thereof.

28 ¶ At that time, when David saw that the LORD had answered him in the thrashing-floor of Ornan the Jebusite, then he sacrificed there.

29 ^w For the tabernacle of the LORD, which Moses made in the wilderness, and the altar of the burnt-offering, were at that season in the high place at ^x Gibeon.

30 But David could not go before it to inquire of God: for he was afraid, because of the sword of the angel of the LORD.

afraid to go to Gibeon because of the sword of the destroying angel; or he was afraid of delaying the offering so long as his going thither would require, lest the destroying angel should, in the mean while, exterminate the people; therefore, he hastily built an altar in that place, and on it made the requisite offerings; and by the fire from heaven God showed that he had accepted his act and his devotion. Such interventions as these must necessarily maintain, in the minds of the people, a full persuasion of the truth and divine origin of their religion.

For a more circumstantial account of these transactions see the notes on 2 Sam. xxiv. 1, &c. in which several difficulties of the text are removed.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXII.

Verse 1. David said, This is the house of the LORD] Till a temple is builded for his name, this place shall be considered the temple of God; and on this altar, and not on that at Gibeon, shall the burnt-offerings of Israel be made. David probably thought that this was the place on which God designed that his house should be builded; and perhaps it was this that induced him to buy, not only the thrashing-floor, but probably some adjacent ground also, as Calmet supposes, that there might be sufficient room for such a building.

Verse 2. The strangers that were in the land] Those who had become proselytes to the Jewish religion, at least so far as to renounce idolatry, and keep what were called the seven Noahic precepts. These were to be employed in the more servile and difficult parts of the work: see on 1 Kings ix. 21. For the account of building the temple see 1 Kings v.—ix. and the notes there.

3 And David prepared iron in abundance for the nails for the doors of the gates, and for the joinings; and brass in abundance ^c without weight;

4 Also cedar trees in abundance: for the ^d Zidonians and they of Tyre brought much cedar wood to David.

5 And David said, ^e Solomon my son is young and tender, and the house that is to be builded for the LORD must be exceeding magnifical, of fame and of glory throughout all countries: I will therefore now make preparation for it. So David prepared abundantly before his death.

6 ¶ Then he called for Solomon his son, and charged him to build a house for the LORD God of Israel.

7 And David said to Solomon, My son, as for me, ^f it was in my mind to build a house ^g unto the name of the LORD my God:

8 But the word of the LORD came to me, saying, ^h Thou hast shed blood abundantly, and hast made great wars: thou shalt not build a house unto my name, because thou hast shed much blood upon the earth in my sight.

Verse 3. Iron—for the nails, &c.] Iron for bolts, bars, hinges, &c. &c.

Verse 5. Solomon—is young and tender] He is, as yet, without complete knowledge and due experience; and it is necessary that I should make as much preparation for the work as I possibly can; especially as the house is to be exceedingly magnificent.

Verse 8. Thou hast shed blood abundantly] Heathens, Jews, and Christians, have all agreed that soldiers of any kind should have nothing to do with divine offices. Shedding of human blood but ill comports with the benevolence of God or the spirit of the Gospel.

Verse 9. His name shall be Solomon] שלמה Shalemoh, from שלם shalam, he was peaceable; and therefore says the Lord, alluding to the name, I will give peace, שלום shalom, in his days.

Verse 14. In my trouble I have prepared] Notwithstanding all the wars in which I have been engaged, all the treacheries with which I have been surrounded, all the domestic troubles with which I have been overwhelmed, I never lost sight of this great object, the building a house for God, that his worship might be established in the land. I have curtailed my expenses, and have lived in comparative poverty, that I might save all I possibly could for this building.

15 Moreover, there are workmen with thee in abundance, hewers and ^v workers of stone and timber, and all manner of cunning men for every manner of work.

would therefore amount to five hundred and seven millions, five hundred and seventy-eight thousand, one hundred and twenty-five pounds sterling.

A thousand thousand talents of silver] A talent of silver weighed three thousand shekels; and was worth three hundred and fifty-three pounds, eleven shillings, and tenpence. A thousand thousand, or a million, of such talents would amount to the immense sum of three hundred and fifty-three millions, five hundred and ninety-one thousand, six hundred and sixty-six pounds, thirteen shillings, and fourpence, sterling. Both sums amounting to eight hundred and sixty-one millions, one hundred and sixty-nine thousand, seven hundred and ninety-one pounds, thirteen shillings, and fourpence.

Verse 18. Is not the LORD your God with you? “Is not the WORD of the Lord your God your assistant?” Targum.

Hath he not given you rest on every side? David, at this time, was not only king of Judea, but had also subdued most of the surrounding nations.

Thus Solomon came to the Jewish throne with every possible advantage. Had he made a proper use of his state and of his talents, he would have been the greatest, as well as the wisest, of sovereigns. But alas! how soon did his pure gold become dim! He began with an unlawful matrimonial connexion; this led him to a commerce that was positively forbidden by the law of God: he then multiplied his matrimonial connexions with heathen women; they turned his heart away from God, and the once wise and holy Solomon died a fool and an idolater.

Verse 1. David was old and full of days] On the phrase full of days, see the note on Gen. xxv. 8.

Verse 3. Thirty years and upwards] The enumeration of the Levites, made in the desert, Numb. iv. 3. was from thirty years upwards to fifty years. In this place the latter limit is not mentioned; probably because the service was not so laborious now; for the ark being fixed, they had no longer any heavy burdens to carry; and, therefore, even an old man might continue to serve the tabernacle. David made another ordinance afterward: see on ver. 24. and 27.

8 The sons of Laadan; the chief was Jehiel, and Zetham, and Joel, three.

9 The sons of Shimei; Shelomith, and Haziël, and Haran, three. These were the chief of the fathers of Laadan.

10 And the sons of Shimei were Jahath, ^k Zina, and Jeush, and Beriah. These four were the sons of Shimei.

11 And Jahath was the chief, and Zizah the second; but Jeush and Beriah ¹ had not many sons; therefore they were in one reckoning, according to their father's house.

12 ¶ ^m The sons of Kohath; Amram, Izhar, Hebron, and Uzziel, four.

As to the instruments of music which he made, they are condemned elsewhere: see Amos vi. 5. to which this verse is allowed to be the parallel.

Verse 11. Therefore they were in one reckoning] The family of Shimei, being small, was united with that of Laadan, that the two families might do that work which otherwise belonged to one, but which would have been too much for either of these separately.

Verse 13. To bless in his name] To bless the people by invoking the name of the Lord.

Verse 14. Moses the man of God] "Moses the prophet of God." Targum.

Verse 24. Twenty years and upwards.] It appears that this was a different ordinance from that mentioned ver. 3. At first he appointed the Levites to serve from thirty years and upwards; now from twenty years. These were David's last orders: see ver. 27. They should begin at an earlier age, and continue later

27 For by the last words of David the Levites were numbered from twenty years old and above:

This was not a very painful task: the ark being now fixed, and the Levites very numerous, there could be no drudgery.

Verse 28. Purifying of all holy things] Keeping all the vessels and utensils belonging to the sacred service clean and neat.

Verse 29. Both for the show-bread] It was the priest's office to place this bread before the Lord; and it was their privilege to feed on the old loaves when they were replaced by the new. Some of the rabbins think that the priests sowed the grain, reaped, ground, kneaded, and baked that of which the show-bread was made. This appears to be a conceit; Jerom, in his comment on Mal. i. 6. mentions it in these words—Panes propositionis quos juxta traditiones Hebraicas, ipsi serere, ipsi dimetere, ipsi molere, ipsi coquere debebatis.

Verse 30. To stand every morning] At the offering of the morning and evening sacrifice, they sounded their musical instruments, and sang praises to God.

Verse 32. The charge of the sons of Aaron] It was the priest's business to slay, flay, and dress, as well as to offer the victims; but being few, they were obliged to employ the Levites to slay those animals. The Levites were, properly speaking, servants to the priests: and were employed about the more servile part of divine worship.

27 The sons of Merari by Jaaziah; Beno, and Shoham, and Zaccur, and Itri.

28 Of Mahli came Eleazar, who had no sons.

29 Concerning Kish; the son of Kish was Jerahmeel.

30 ¶ The sons also of Mushi; Mahli, and Eder, and Jerimoth. These were the sons of the Levites after the house of their fathers.

31 These likewise cast lots over against their brethren the sons of Aaron, in the presence of David the king, and Zadok, and Ahimelech, and the chief of the fathers of the priests and Levites, even the principal fathers over against their younger brethren.

able that not a word is here spoken of the family of Gershon.

Verse 31. These likewise cast lots] The Levites were divided into twenty-four orders; and these were appointed by lot to serve under the twenty-four orders of the priests; the first order of Levites to the first order of priests, and so on. The meaning is not very clear; both elder and younger, says Bishop Patrick, had their places by lot, not by seniority of houses. They who were of greater dignity drew lots against those who were of less; and were to take their courses according to the lot they drew. This may have been the case; but we are very little interested in the subject.

MOREOVER, David and the captains of the host separated to the service of the sons of ^aAsaph, and of Heman, and of Jeduthun, who should prophesy with harps, with psalteries, and with cymbals: and the number of the workmen, according to their service, was:

2 Of the sons of Asaph; Zaccur, and Joseph, and Nethaniah, and ^bAsarelah, the sons of Asaph, under the hands of Asaph, which prophesied ^caccording to the order of the king.

3 Of Jeduthun: the sons of Jeduthun; Gedaliah, and ^dZeri, and Jeshaiiah, Hashabiah, and Mattithiah, ^esix, under the hands of their father Jeduthun, who prophesied with a harp, to give thanks and to praise the LORD.

4 Of Heman: the sons of Heman; Bukkiah, Mattaniah, ^fUzziel, ^gShebuel, and Jerimoth, Hananiah, Hanani, Eliathah, Giddalti, and Romamticer, Joshbekashah, Mallothi, Hothir, and Mahazioth:

5 All these were the sons of Heman, the king's seer in the ^hwords of God, to lift up the horn. And God gave to Heman fourteen sons and three daughters.

6 All these were under the hands of their father for song in the house of the LORD, with cymbals, psalteries, and harps, for the service of the house of God, ⁱaccording ^kto the king's order to Asaph, Jeduthun, and Heman.

7 So the number of them, with their brethren that were instructed in the songs of the LORD, even all that were cunning, was two hundred fourscore and eight.

8 ¶ And they cast lots, ward against ward, as well the small as the great, ^lthe teacher as the scholar.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXV.

Verse 1. David and the captains of the host] The chiefs of those who formed the several orders: not military captains.

Should prophesy] Should accompany their musical instruments with prayer and singing.

Verse 2. Which prophesied] Sung hymns and prayed. But the Targum understands this of prophesying in the proper sense of the term, and therefore says, "Who prophesied by the Holy Spirit." Jarchi is of the same opinion; and quotes the case of Elisha, 2 Kings iii. 15. who, while the minstrel played, the hand of the Lord, i. e. the spirit of prophesy, was upon him.

Verse 3. The sons of Jeduthun—six] That is, six with their father; otherwise, there are but five. Hence it is said, they were under the hands of their father Jeduthun, who prophesied with the harp, &c.

Verse 5. To lift up the horn] "The horn of prophesy," says Jarchi; "to sound with the trumpet in the words of prophesy before the Lord." Targum.

Three daughters.] These also were employed among the singers.

Verse 7. Two hundred fourscore and eight.] That is, twelve classes of twenty-four Levites each; for two hundred and eighty-eight divided by twelve quotes twenty-four.

The second to Gedaliah] The first-born of Jeduthun.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXVI.

Verse 1. The divisions of the porters] There were of these four classes, each of which belonged to one of the four gates of the temple, which opened to the four cardinal points of heaven. The eastern gate fell to Shelemiah; the northern, to Zechariah, ver. 14; the southern, to Obed-edom, ver. 15; the western, to Shup-pim and Hosah, ver. 16. These several persons were captains of these porter-bands, or door-keepers, at the different gates. There were probably a thousand men under each of these sons born, that ruled throughout the house of their father; And Exod. Isr.

they, and their sons, and their brethren, able men for strength for the service, were threescore and two of Obed-edom.

9 And Meshelemiah had sons and brethren, strong men, eighteen.

10 Also ^d Hosah, of the children of Merari, had sons; Simri the chief, (for his father made him the chief;)

only sixty-two mentioned.

Verse 6. They were mighty men of valour.] They were not only porters, or door-keepers, sons and brethren of Hosah were thirteen.

12 Among these were the divisions of the porters, even among the chief men, having wards one against another, to minister in the house of the LORD.

13 ¶ And they cast lots, ^e as well the small as the great, according to the house of their fathers, for every gate.

14 And the lot eastward fell to ^f Shelemiah. Then for Zechariah his son, a wise counsellor, they cast lots; and his lot came out northward.

15 To Obed-edom southward; and to his sons the house of ^g Asuppim.

16 To Shuppim and Hosah the lot came forth westward, with the gate Shallecheth, by the causeway of the going ^h up, ward against ward.

17 Eastward were six Levites, northward four a day, southward four a day, and toward Asuppim two and two.

18 At Parbar westward, four at the causeway, and two at Parbar.

19 These are the divisions of the porters among the sons of Kore, and among the sons of Merari.

20 ¶ And of the Levites, Ahijah was ⁱ over the treasures of the house of God,

Verse 12. The rest of this chapter, with the whole of the xxviiith is wanting both in the Syriac and Arabic.

Verse 13. They cast lots—for every gate] None of these captains, or their companies, was permitted to choose which gate they would guard; but each took his appointment by lot.

Verse 15. The house of Asuppim] The house of the collections; the place where either the supplies of the porters, or the offerings made for the use of the priests and Levites, were laid up.

Verse 16. The gate Shallecheth] The gate of the projections: probably that through which all the offal of the temple was carried out.

Verse 17. Eastward were six Levites] It is supposed that there were more guards set at this eastern gate, because it was more frequented than the others. At each of the other gates were only four; at this six.

Verse 20. The treasures of the house of God] Where the money was kept, which was to be expended in oblations for the temple.—Jarchi.

Verse 27. The spoils won in battles did they dedicate] It seems these were intended for its repairs. This custom prevailed among almost all the people of the earth. All who acknowledged any supreme being, believed that victory could only come through him; and, therefore, thought it quite rational to give him a share of the spoils. Proofs of this exist in all ancient histories: thus Virgil—

*Inruinus ferro, et divos, ipsunque vocamus,
In partem prædamque Jovem.* Æn. iii. v. 222:

"With weapons we the welcome prey invade:
Then call the gods for partners of our feast,
And Jove himself the chief invited guest." Dryden.

On this passage, Servius observes—Ipsum vocamus. Ipsum, regem deorum—cui de prædâ debetur aliquid: nam Romanis moris fuit, ut bella gestari, de parte prædæ aliquid numinibus pollicerentur: adeo ut Romæ fuerit unum templum Jovis PRÆDATORIS: non quod prædæ præstet, sed quod ei, ex prædâ aliquid debeatur. care taken to preserve and ensure the peace of the church, and the safety of the state; without which the public welfare could neither be secured nor promoted. Whatever affects religion in any country, must affect the state, or government of that country: true religion alone can dispose men to civil obedience. Therefore it is the interest of every state to protect and encourage religion. It would certainly be ruinous to true religion, to make the state dependent on the church; nor should the church be dependent on the state. Let them mutually support each other; and let the state rule by the laws, and the church live by the Bible.

a 2 Sam. 23. 8.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXVII.

Verse 1. The chief fathers and captains of thousands] The patriarchs, chief generals, or generals of brigade. This enumeration is widely different from the preceding. In that, we have the orders and courses of the priests and the Levites in their ecclesiastical ministrations; in this, we have the account of the order of the civil service, what related simply to the political state of the king and the kingdom. Twenty-four persons, chosen out of David's worthies, each of whom had a second, were placed over twenty-four thousand men, who all served a month in turn, at a time; and this was the whole of their service during the year, after which they attended to their own affairs: Thus the king had always on foot a regular force of month by month throughout all the months of the year, of every course were twenty and four thousand.

2 Over the first course for the first month was ^a Jashobeam the son of Zabdiel: and in his course were twenty-four thousand, who served without expense to him or the state, and were not oppressed by the service, which took up only a twelfth part of their time; and by this plan he could at any time, when the exigency of the state required it, bring into the field twelve times twenty-four thousand, or two hundred and eighty-eight thousand fighting men, independently of the twelve thousand officers, which made in the whole an effective force of three hundred thousand soldiers; and all these men were prepared, disciplined, and ready at a call, without the smallest expense to the state or the king. These were, properly speaking, the militia of the Israelitish kingdom. See Calmet.

5 The third captain of the host for the third month was Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, a ^cchief priest: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

6 This is that Benaiah, who was ^dmighty among the thirty, and above the thirty: and in his course was Ammizabad his son.

7 The fourth captain for the fourth month was ^eAsahel the brother of Joab, and Zebadiah his son after him: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

8 The fifth captain for the fifth month was Shammuth the Izrahite: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

9 The sixth captain for the sixth month was ^fIra the son of Ikkesh the Tekoite: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

10 The seventh captain for the seventh month was ^gHelez the Pelonite, of the children of Ephraim: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

11 The eighth captain for the eighth month was ^hSibbecai the Hushathite, of the Zarhites: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

12 The ninth captain for the ninth month was ⁱAbiezer the Anetothite, of the Benjamites: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

13 The tenth captain for the tenth month was ^kMaharai the Netophathite, of the Zarhites: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

14 The eleventh captain for the eleventh month was ^lBenaiah the Pirathonite, of the children of Ephraim; and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

15 The twelfth captain for the twelfth month was ^mHeldai the Netophathite, of Othniel: and in his course were twenty and four thousand.

16 ⁿFarthermore, over the tribes of Israel: the ruler of the Reubenites was Eliezer the son of Zichri: of the Simeonites, Shephatiah the son of Maachah:

17 Of the Levites, ^oHashabiah the son of Kemuel: of the Aaronites, Zadok.

18 Of Judah, ^pElihu, one of the brethren of David: of Issachar, Omri, the son of Michael:

19 Of Zebulun, Ishmaiah the son of Obadiah: of Naphtali, Jerimoth the son of Azriel:

20 Of the children of Ephraim, Hoshea the son of Azaziah: of the half tribe of Manasseh, Joel the son of Pedaiiah:

21 Of the half tribe of Manasseh in Gilead, Iddo, the son of Zechariah: of Benjamin, Jaasiel the son of Abner:

22 Of Dan, Azareel the son of Jeroham. These were the princes of the tribes of Israel.

month, the Targum names them thus: first month, Nisan; second, Aiyar; third, Sivan; fourth, Tammuz; fifth, Ab; sixth, Elul; seventh, Tishri; eighth, Marchesvan; ninth, Cislei; tenth, Tebeth; eleventh, Shebat; twelfth, Adar. No mention is made of a vadar, or intercalary month.

Verse 5. Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, a chief priest]. Why should not this clause be read as it is in the Hebrew? "Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada the priest, a captain; and in his course," &c. Or, as the Targum has it, "The third captain of the host for the month Sivan was Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada the priest, who was constituted a chief." He is distinguished from Benaiah the Pirathonite, who was over the eleventh month. Some think that the original word ^{הַכֹּהֵן} ha-cohen, which generally signifies priest, should be translated here a principal officer: so the margin has it. But, in the Old Testament, ^{כֹּהֵן} cohen, signifies both prince and priest; and translating it by the former removes the difficulty from this place, for we well know that Benaiah never was a priest.

Verse 7. Asahel the brother of Joab]. This verse proves that the division and arrangement mentioned above were made before David was acknowledged king in Hebron: for Asahel, the brother of Joab, who was fourth captain, was slain by Abner, while Ishbosheth reigned over Israel, at Mahanaim, 2 Sam. ii. 19—23.

these has been lost from this register. These rulers appear to have been all honorary men, without pay, like the lords lieutenants of our counties.

Verse 24. Neither was the number put in the account] Joab did not return the whole number; probably the plague began before he had finished: or, he did not choose to give it in, as he had entered on this work with extreme reluctance; and he did not choose to tell the king how numerous they were.

Ver. 25—31. Over the king's treasures] We see from these verses in what the personal property of David consisted:—1. Treasures, gold, silver, &c. 2. Goods and grain in castles, cities, villages, and in the fields. 3. Vineyards, and their produce. 4. Olive trees, and their produce. 5. Neat cattle, in different districts. 6. Camels and asses; they had no horses. 7. Flocks, sheep, goats, &c.

28 And over the olive trees and the sycamore trees that were in the low plains, was Baal-hanan the Gederite :

and over the cellars of oil was Joash :

29 And over the herds that fed in Sharon was Shitrai the Sharonite: and over the herds that were in the valleys was Shaphat the son of Adlai :

30 Over the camels also was Obil the Ishmaelite: and over the asses was Jehdeiah the Meronothite :

31 And over the flocks was Jaziz the Hagerite. All these were the rulers of the substance which was King David's.

32 Also Jonathan, David's uncle, was a counsellor, a wise man, and a ^uscribe: and Jehiel the ^vson of Hachmoni was with the king's sons.

33 And ^wAhithophel was the king's counsellor: and ^xHushai the Archite was the king's companion :

Verse 34. And after Ahithophel] The Targum is curious: "When they went to war they asked counsel of Ahithophel; and, after the counsel of Ahithophel, they inquired by Urim and Thummim of Jehoia-da, the son of Benaiah, prince of the sanhedrim, and chief of the priesthood; and from Abiathar, the high priest. And after they had inquired by Urim and Thummim, they went out to battle, well armed with bows and slings; and Joab, the general of the king's troops, led them on." It is worthy of remark, that Obil, an Ishmaelite, or Arab, was put over the camels, which is a creature of Arabia; and Jaziz, a Hagarene, (the Hagarenes were shepherds by profession,) was put over the flocks: nothing went by favour; each was appointed to the office for which he was best qualified; and thus men of worth were encouraged, and the public service effectually promoted.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

David assembles the princes of Israel, and informs them that the temple was to be builded by Solomon; to whom God had given the most gracious promises, 1—7. He exhorts them and him to be obedient to God, that they might continue to prosper, 8—10. He gives Solomon a pattern of the work, 11, 12. Directs him concerning the courses of the priests and Levites, 13. Gives also gold by weight, for the different utensils of the temple, as God had directed him, 14—19. Encourages Solomon to undertake the work, 20, 21.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXVIII.

Verse 1. David assembled] This refers to the persons, the names and offices of whom we have seen in the preceding chapter.

Verse 2. David—stood up upon his feet] He was now very old, and chiefly confined to his bed, see 1 Kings i. 47. and, while he was addressing his son Solomon, he continued on the bed: but, when all the principal nobles of his kingdom came before him, he received strength to arise and address them, standing on his feet.

Verse 3. Thou shalt not build a house] See 2 Sam. vii. 5, 13. and the observations at the end of that chapter.

Verse 4. Over Israel for ever] The government may have no end, provided they continued to walk according to the commandments of God; see ver. 7. The government as referring to Christ, is, and will be, without end.

6 And he said unto me, ^t Solomon thy son, he shall build my house and my courts: for I have chosen him to be my son, and I will be his father.

7 Moreover, I will establish his kingdom for ever, ^u if he be ^v constant to do my commandments, and my judgments, as at this day.

8 Now therefore, in the sight of all Israel, the congregation of the LORD, and in the audience of our God, keep and seek for all the commandments of the LORD your God: that ye may possess this good land, and leave it for an inheritance for your children after you for ever.

9 ¶ And thou, Solomon my son, ^w know thou the God of thy father, and serve him ^x with a perfect heart, and with a willing mind: for ^y the LORD searcheth all hearts, and understandeth all the imaginations of the thoughts: ^z if thou seek him, he will be found of thee: but if thou forsake him, he will cast thee off for ever.

10 Take heed now; ^a for the LORD hath chosen thee to build a house for the sanctuary: be strong, and do it.

11 ¶ Then David gave to Solomon his son ^b the pattern of the porch, and of the houses thereof, and of the treasures thereof, and of the upper chambers thereof, and of the inner parlours thereof, and of the place of the mercy-seat,

Verse 10. The Lord hath chosen thee] “The word of the Lord hath chosen thee.” Targum.

Verse 11. David gave to Solomon—the pattern] He gave him an ichnograph of the building, with elevations, sections, and specifications of every part; and all this he himself received by inspiration from God himself; see ver. 12. and 19. just as Moses had received the plan of the tabernacle.

The treasures thereof גִּזְזֵי הַבַּיִת ganzaiv. The word גִּזְזֵי ganzac, is not Hebrew, but is supposed to be Persian, the same word being found in Ezra iii. 19. In this tongue we have the word گنج گنج, a granary, a hidden treasure, and گنج گنجoor, and گنج گنجineh, a treasure, treasury, or barn. Parkhurst supposes, that it is compounded of گنج ganaz, to

Verse 19. Understand in writing [In some vision or ecstasy, he had seen a regularly sketched-out plan, which had made so deep an impression on his mind, that he could readily describe it to his son.

“That the architecture of the temple,” says Dr. Delaney, “was of divine original I, for my part, am fully satisfied from this passage ; and am confirmed in this opinion by finding by Vitalpandus, that the Roman, at least the Greek architecture is derived from this, as from its

18 And for the altar of incense refined gold by weight ; and gold for the pattern of the chariot of the ^e cherubim, that spread out their wings, and covered the ark of the covenant of the LORD.

19 All this, said David, ^f the LORD made me understand in writing by his hand upon me, even all the works of this pattern.

20 ^g And David said to Solomon his son, ^h Be strong, and of good courage, and do it : fear not, nor be dismayed : for the LORD God, even my God, will be with thee ; ⁱ he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee, until thou hast finished all the work for the service of the house of the LORD.

21 And, behold, ^j the courses of the priests and the Levites, even they shall be with thee for all the service of the house of God : and there shall be with thee, for all manner of workmanship, ^k every willing skilful man for any manner of service : also the princes and all the people will be wholly at thy commandment.

fountain : and, in my humble opinion, even an infidel may easily believe these to be of divine original, inasmuch as they are (at least the latter is) found perfect in the earliest models ; nor hath the utmost reach of human wisdom, invention, and industry, been ever able to improve, or alter it, but to disadvantage, through the course of so many ages.”

Verse 20. The Lord God—my God, will be with thee [“The Word of the Lord my God will be thy assistant.” Targum.

Verse 21. Behold, the courses of the priests [The priests and the Levites, the cunning artificers, and the princes of the people, will be at thy command. Thus David having assigned him his work, and described the manner in which it was to be done, shows him who were to be his assistants in it ; and encourages him in the great undertaking.

Here we find piety, good sense, prudence, zeal for the public welfare, and God’s glory, the strongest attachment to the worship of Jehovah, and concern for the ordinances of religion, all united ; and Solomon has his danger, his duty, and his interest, placed before him in the truest and most impressive light, by his pious and sensible father.

CHAP. XXIX.

Verse 2. And marble stones.] אבני מרמור abney marmor, Parian marble. Paros was one of the Cyclade islands, and produced the whitest and finest marble; that of which most of the finest works of antiquity have been made. That the word shaish means marble is probable from the Chaldee, which has מרמוריה abney marmoraiyah, marble stones. Josephus says, that the temple was built of large blocks of white marble, beautifully polished, so as to produce a most splendid appearance. Jos. De Bell. Jud. lib. v. c. 5. s. 2.

Verse 5. To consecrate his service] ללמלאו lemaleath yado, to fill his hand; to bring an offering to the Lord.

If, with Dr. Prideaux, we estimate the golden talent at upwards of seven thousand pounds sterling, the value of these five thousand talents will be much more considerable. Our days on the earth are as a shadow They are continually declining, fading, and passing away. This is the place of our sojourning ; and here we have no substantial, permanent residence.

There is none abiding.] However we may wish to settle and remain in this state of things, it is impossible ; because every earthly form is passing swiftly away ; all is in a state of revolution and decay : and there is no abiding, מקו מיקוה, no expectation that we shall be exempt from those changes and chances to which our fathers were subjected. “ As the

And sacrifices] These were peace-offerings, offered for the people; and on the flesh of which they feasted.

Verse 22. They made Solomon—[king the second time] The first time of his anointing, and being proclaimed king, was when his brother Adonijah affected the throne; and Zadok, Nathan, and Benaiah, anointed and proclaimed him in a hurry, and without pomp. See 1 Kings i. 39. Now that all is quiet, and David his father dead, for he was probably so at the time of the second anointing, they anointed and proclaimed him afresh, with due ceremonies, sacrifices, &c.

To be the chief governor] To be the vice-governor or deputy of Jehovah; for God never gave up his right of King in Israel. Those called kings were only his lieutenants: hence it is said, ver. 23. that Solomon sat on the throne of the Lord, as king, instead of David his father.

Verse 24. Submitted themselves] נתנו יד חזקת natanu yad tachat Shelemoh. "They gave the hand under Solomon." They swore fealty to him. We have already seen that putting the hand under the thigh (super sectionem circumcisionis) was the form of taking an oath. See the note on Gen. xxiv. 9.

Verse 28. And he died] David at his death had every thing that his heart could wish. 1. A good old age; having lived as long as living could be desirable, and having in the main enjoyed good health. 2. Full of days; having lived till he saw every thing that he lived for either accomplished or in a state of forwardness. 3. Full of riches; witness the immense sums left for the temple. 4. Full of honour; having gained more renown than any crowned head ever did, either before his time or since. Laurels that are fresh to the present hour.

26 ¶ Thus David the son of Jesse reigned over all Israel.

27 ^bAnd the time that he reigned over Israel was forty years; ^cseven years reigned he in Hebron, and thirty and three years reigned he in Jerusalem.

28 And he ^ddied in a good old age, ^efull of days, riches, and honour : and Solomon his son reigned in his stead.

29 Now the acts of David the king, first and last, behold, they are written in the ^fbook ^gof Samuel the seer, and in the book of Nathan the prophet, and in the book of Gad the seer, eminent men, personally acquainted with him through the principal part of his life: these were Samuel and Gad, the seers, and Nathan, the prophet. These writings are all lost, except the particulars interspersed in the books of Samuel, Kings, and Chronicles; none of which are the records mentioned here.

30 With all his reign, and his might, ^band the times that went over him, and over Israel, and over all the kingdoms of the countries.

Verse 30. The times that went over him] The transactions of his reign; and the occurrences and vicissitudes in his own kingdom, as well as those which were over all the kingdoms of the countries, i. e. in the surrounding nations; in most of which David had a share, during his forty years' reign. Relative to the character of David, see a few remarks in the note on 1 Kings ii. 10. and see more at the end of the Psalms.

Dr. Delaney gives a just view of his character in a few words:—"To sum up all: David was a true believer, a zealous adorer of God, teacher of his law and worship, and inspirer of his praise! A glorious example, a perpetual and inexhaustible fountain of true piety. A consummate and unequalled hero; a skilful and fortunate captain; a steady patriot; a wise ruler; a faithful, generous, and magnanimous friend; and, what is yet rarer, a no less generous and magnanimous enemy. A true penitent, a divine musician, a sublime poet, and an inspired prophet. By birth a peasant; by merit a prince! In youth a hero, in manhood a monarch, and in age a saint!" The matter of Uriah and Bath-sheba is his great but only blot. There he sinned deeply; and no man ever suffered more in his body, soul, and domestic affairs, than he did in consequence. His penitence was as deep and as extraordinary as his crime; and nothing could surpass both but that eternal mercy that took away the guilt, assuaged the sorrow, and restored this most humbled transgressor to character, holiness, and happiness. Let the God of David be exalted for ever!

CHAPTER I.

Solomon, and the chiefs of the congregation, go to Gibeon, where was the tabernacle of the Lord, and the brazen altar; and there he offers a thousand sacrifices, 1—5. The Lord appears to him in a dream, and gives him permission to ask any gift, 7. He asks wisdom, 8—10. Which is granted; and riches, wealth, and honour, besides, 11, 12. His kingdom is established, 13. His chariots, horsemen, and horses, 14. His abundant riches, 15. He brings horses, linen yarn, and chariots, at a fixed price out of Egypt, 16, 17.

AND Solomon the son of David was strengthened in his kingdom, and the LORD his God was with him, and he magnified him exceedingly.

2 Then Solomon spake unto all Israel, to the captains of thousands and of hundreds, and to the judges, and to every governor of all Israel, the chief of the fathers.

3 So Solomon, and all the congregation with him, went to the high place that was at Gibeon; for there was the tabernacle of the congregation of God, which Moses, the servant of the LORD, had made in the wilderness.

4 But the ark of God had David brought up from Kirjath-jearim to the place which David had prepared for it; for he had pitched a tent for it at Jerusalem.

5 Moreover, the brazen altar, that

^b Bezaleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, had made, he put before the tabernacle of the LORD; and Solomon and the congregation sought unto it.

6 And Solomon went up thither to the brazen altar before the LORD, which was at the tabernacle of the congregation, and offered a thousand burnt-offerings upon it.

7 ¶ In that night did God appear unto Solomon, and said unto him, Ask what I shall give thee.

8 And Solomon said unto God, Thou hast showed great mercy unto David my father, and hast made me to reign in his stead.

9 Now, O LORD God, let thy promise unto David my father be established: for thou hast made me king over a people like the dust of the earth in multitude.

NOTES ON CHAPTER I.

Verse 1. And Solomon the son of David] The very beginning of this book shows that it is a continuation of the preceding, and should not be thus formally separated from it. See the preface to the First Book.

The LORD his God was with him] "The Word of the LORD was his support." Targum.

Verse 2. Then Solomon spake] This is supposed to have taken place in the second year of his reign.

Verse 4. But the ark] The tabernacle and the brazen altar remained still at Gibeon; but David had brought away the ark out of the tabernacle, and placed it in a tent at Jerusalem: 2 Sam. vi. 2. 17.

Verse 5. Sought unto it.] Went to seek the Lord there.

Verse 7. In that night] The night following the sacrifice. On Solomon's choice, see the notes on 1 Kings iii. 5—15.

Verse 9. Let thy promise] דבַּרְךָ debarcha, thy word. פִּתְגָמְךָ pithgamak, Targum. It is very remarkable, that when either God or man is represented as having spoken a word, then the noun פִּתְגָם pithgam, is used by the Targumist: but when word is used personally, then he employs the noun מִמְרָא meimra, which 12 Wisdom and knowledge is granted unto thee: and I will give thee riches, and wealth, and honour, such as ^t none of the kings have had that have been before thee, neither shall there any after thee have the like.

Verse 14. He had a thousand and four hundred chariots] For these numbers, see the notes on 1 Kings iv. 26.

Verse 15. Made silver and gold] See on 1 Kings x. 27, 28.

Verse 16. Linen yarn] See the note on 1 Kings x. 28. where this subject is particularly examined.

Verse 17. A horse for a hundred and fifty] Suppose we take the shekel at the utmost value at which it has been rated, three shillings; then the price of a horse was about twenty-two pounds ten shillings, sterling.

On Solomon's multiplying horses, Bishop Warburton has made some judicious remarks.

"Moses had expressly prohibited the multiplying of horses, Deut. xvii. 16; by which the future king was forbidden to establish a body of cavalry, because this could not be effected without sending into Egypt, with which people God had forbidden any communication, as this would be dangerous to religion. When Solomon had violated this law, and multiplied horses tabernacle of the congregation, and reigned over Israel.

14 ^u And Solomon gathered chariots, and horsemen: and he had a thousand and four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen, which he placed in the chariot cities, and with the king at Jerusalem.

15 ^v And the king ^w made silver and gold at Jerusalem as plenteous as stones, and cedar trees made he as the sycamore trees that are in the vale for abundance.

16 ^x And ^y Solomon had horses brought out of Egypt, and linen yarn: the king's merchants received the linen yarn at a price.

17 And they fetched up, and brought forth out of Egypt a chariot for six hundred shekels of silver, and a horse for a hundred and fifty: and so brought they out horses for all the kings of the Hittites, and for the kings of Syria, ^z by their means.

to excess, 1 Kings iv. 16. it was soon attended with those fatal consequences that the law foretold: for this wisest of kings having likewise, in violation of another law, married Pharaoh's daughter, (the early fruits of this commerce,) and then, by a repetition of the same crime, but a transgression of another law, had espoused more strange women, 1 Kings iv. 26. xi. 1; they first, in defiance of a fourth law, persuaded him to build them idol temples for their use; and afterward, against a fifth law, brought him to erect other temples for his own. Now the original of all this mischief was the forbidden traffic with Egypt for horses; for thither were the agents of Solomon sent to mount his cavalry. Nay, this great king even turned factor for the neighbouring monarchs, ver. 17; and this opprobrious commerce was kept up by his successors, and attended with the same pernicious consequences. Isaiah denounces the mischiefs of this traffic; and foretells that one of the good effects of leaving it would be the forsaking of their idolatries, Isa. xxxi. 1, 4, 6, 7." was, in these early times, carried on by con-

and insolent Greeks and Romans, barbarous nations. Nearly two thousand years after this we find a king on the British throne who could not sign his own name. About the year of our Lord 700, Withred, king of Kent, thus con-church:—*Ego Withredus rex Cantie hæc om-

NOTES ON CHAPTER III.

Verse 1. In mount Moriah] Supposed to be the same place where Abraham was about to offer his son Isaac: so the Targum—"Solomon began to build the house of the sanctuary of the Lord at Jerusalem, in the place where Abraham had prayed and worshipped in the name of the Lord. This is the place of the earth where all generations shall worship the Lord. Here Abraham was about to offer his son Isaac for a burnt-offering: but he was snatched away by the Word of the Lord, and a ram placed in his stead. Here Jacob prayed, when he fled from the face of Esau his brother:
and here the angel of the Lord appeared to David; at which time David built an altar

3 Now these are the things wherein Solomon was instructed for the building of the house of God. The length by cubits after the first measure was threescore cubits, and the breadth twenty cubits.

4 And the porch that was in the front of the house, the length of it was according to the breadth of the house, twenty cubits, and the height was a unto the Lord, in the thrashing-floor which he bought from Araunah the Jebusite."

Verse 3. The length—after the first measure was threescore cubits] It is supposed that the first measure means the cubit used in the time of Moses; contradistinguished from that used in Babylon, and which the Israelites used after their return from captivity; and as the Books of Chronicles were written after the captivity, it was necessary for the writer to make this remark, lest it should be thought that the measurement was by the Babylonish cubit, which was a palm, or one-sixth shorter than the cubit of Moses. See the same distinction observed by Ezekiel, chap. xl. 5, xliii. 13.

Verse 4. The height was a hundred and hundred and twenty: and he overlaid it within with pure gold.

5 And ¹ the greater house he ceiled with fir tree, which he overlaid with fine gold, and set thereon palm trees and chains.

6 And he ^k garnished the house with precious stones for beauty; and the gold was gold of Parvaim.

7 He overlaid also the house, the beams, the posts, and the walls thereof; and the doors thereof, with gold; and graved cherubim on the walls.

8 ¶ And he made the most holy house, the length whereof was according to the breadth of the house, twenty cubits, and the breadth thereof twenty cubits: and he overlaid it with fine gold, amounting to six hundred talents.

9 And the weight of the nails was fifty shekels of gold. And he overlaid the upper chambers with gold.

10 ¹ And in the most holy house he made two cherubim ^m of image work, and overlaid them with gold.

11 And the wings of the cherubim were twenty cubits long: one wing of the one cherub was five cubits, reaching to the wall of the house: and the twenty] Some think this should be twenty only; but if the same building is spoken of as in 1 Kings vi. 2. the height was only thirty cubits. Twenty is the reading of the Syriac, the Arabic, and the Septuagint, in the Codex Alexandrinus. The MSS. give us no help. There is probably a mistake here, which, from the similarity of the letters, might easily occur. The words, as they now stand in the Hebrew text, are מֵאָה וְעֶשְׂרִים meah ve-êsrîm, "one hundred and twenty." But probably the letters in meah, מֵאָה "a hundred," are transposed for אֵמָה amah, "a cubit:" if, therefore, the ¹ aleph, be placed after the ² mem, then the word will be מֵאָה meah, "one hundred;" if before it, the word will be אֵמָה amah, "a cubit;" therefore אֵמָה וְעֶשְׂרִים amah êsrîm, will be twenty cubits; and thus the Syriac, Arabic, and Septuagint, appear to have read. This will bring it within the proportion of the other measures; but a hundred and twenty seems too great a height.

Verse 6. Gold of Parvaim.] We know not what this place was: some think it is the same as Sepharvaim, a place in Armenia, or Media, conquered by the king of Assyria, 2 Kings xvii. 24, &c. Others, that it is Taprobanes, now the island of Ceylon, which Bochart de-other wing was likewise five cubits, reaching to the wing of the other cherub.

12 And one wing of the other cherub was five cubits, reaching to the wall of the house: and the other wing was five cubits also joining to the wing of the other cherub.

13 The wings of these cherubim spread themselves forth twenty cubits: and they stood on their feet, and their faces were ⁿ inward.

14 ¶ And he made the ^o veil of blue, and purple, and crimson, and fine linen, and ^p wrought cherubim thereon.

15 ¶ Also he made before the house ^r two pillars of thirty and five cubits high, and the chapter that was on the top of each of them was five cubits.

16 And he made chains, as in the oracle, and put them on the heads of the pillars; and made ^t a hundred pomegranates, and put them on the chains.

17 And he ^u reared up the pillars before the temple, one on the right hand, and the other on the left; and called the name of that on the right hand ^v Jachin, and the name of that on the left ^w Boaz.

rives from taph, signifying the border, and Parvan; i. e. "the coast of Parvan." The rabbins say that it was gold of a blood-red colour, and had its name from מֵיִם פָּרִים parim, "heifers," being like to bullock's blood.

The Vulgate translates the passage thus: Stravit quoque pavimentum templi pretiosissimo marmore, decore multo; porro aurum erat probatissimum.—"And he made the pavement of the temple of the most precious marble; and moreover the gold was of the best quality," &c.

Verse 9. The weight of the nails was fifty shekels] Bolts must be here intended, as it would be preposterous to suppose nails of nearly two pounds weight.

The upper chambers] Probably the ceiling is meant.

Verse 17. He reared up the pillars] The name of that on the right hand was Jachin, because the kingdom of the house of David was established; and the name of the left was Boaz, from the name of Boaz the patriarch, of the family of Judah, from whom all the kings of the house of Judah have descended." Targum. NOTES ON CHAPTER IV.

Verse 3. Under it was the similitude of oxen] In 1 Kings vii. 24. instead of oxen בקרים bakirim, we have knobs מקטפים pekaim; and this last is supposed by able critics to be the reading which ought to be received here. What we call knobs may signify grapes, mushrooms, apples, or some such ornaments placed round about under the turned-over lip or brim of this caldron. It is possible that בקרים bakirim, oxen, may be a corruption of מקטפים pekaim, grapes, as the pe, might be mistaken for a b beth, to which, in ancient MSS. it has often a great resemblance, the dot under the top being often faint and indistinct: and the yain, on the same account, might be mistaken for a r resh. Thus grapes might be turned into oxen. Houbigant contends that the words in both places are right; but that בקר bakar, does not signify ox here, but a large kind of grape, according to its meaning in Arabic: and thus both places will agree. But I do not find that بقر bakar, or בקرة bakarat, has any such meaning in Arabic. He was probably misled by the following, in the Arabic Lexicon, Camus, inserted under بقر bakara, both by Giggeus and Golinus عين البقر ain al bikri, "ox eye;" which is interpreted, Genus uve nigre, ac pregrandis, incredibilis dulcedinis. In Palestina autem pro prunis absolute usurpatur.—"A species of black grape, very large, and of incredible sweetness. It is used in Palestine for prune, or plum." What is called the Damascene plum is doubtless meant: but בקרים bakirim, in the text, can never have this meaning, unless indeed we found it associated with עין ayin, "eye;" and עין בקרים ayim bakirim might, according to the Arabic, be translated plums, grapes, sloes, or such like; especially those of the largest kind, which in size resemble the eye of an ox. But the criticism of this great man is not solid. The likeliest method of reconciling the two places is supposing a change in the letters, as specified above. The reader will at once see that what are called the oxen, ver. 3. said to be round about the brim, are widely different from those ver. 4. by which this molten sea was supported.

Verse 5. It—held three thousand baths.] In 1 Kings vii. 26. it is said to hold only two thousand baths. As this book was written after the Babylonish captivity, it is very possible that reference is here made to the Babylonish bath, which might have been less than the Jewish. We have already seen that the cubit of Moses, or of the ancient Hebrews, was longer than the Babylonish by one palm; see on chap. iii. ver. 2. It might be the same with the measures of capacity; so that two thousand of the ancient Jewish baths might have been equal to three thousand of those used after the captivity. The Targum cuts the knot by saying, "It received three thousand baths of dry measure, and held two thousand of liquid measure."

Verse 6. He made also ten lavers] The lavers served to wash the different parts of the victims in: and the molten sea was for the use of the priests. In this they bathed, or drew water from it for their personal purification.

Verse 8. A hundred basins of gold] These were doubtless a sort of paterae, or sacrificial spoons, with which they made libations.

Verse 9. He made the court of the priests] This was the inner court.

Verse 17. In the clay ground] See on 1 Kings vii. 46. Some suppose that he did not actually cast those instruments at those places, but that he brought the clay from that quarter, as being the most proper for making moulds to cast in.

That every thing in the tabernacle and temple was typical or representative of some excellence of the Gospel dispensation may be readily credited, without going into all the detail produced by the pious author of Solomon's temple spiritualized. We can see the general reference and the principles of the great design, though we may not be able to make a particular application of the knops, the flowers, the pomegranates, the tongs, and the snuffers, to some Gospel doctrines, such spiritualizing is in most cases weak, silly, religious trifling ; being ill calculated to produce respect for divine revelation.

Solomon, having finished the temple, brings in the things which his father had consecrated, 1. THEN ^asaid Solomon,
The LORD hath said that he would dwell in the thick darkness.

2 But I have built a house of habitation for thee, and a place for thy dwelling for ever.

3 And the king turned his face, and blessed the whole congregation of Israel; and all the congregation of Israel stood.

4 And he said, Blessed be the LORD God of Israel, who hath with his hands fulfilled that which he spake with his mouth to my father David, saying,

5 Since the day that I brought forth my people out of the land of Egypt, I chose no city among all the tribes of Israel to build a house in, that my name might be there; neither chose I any man to be a ruler over my people Israel:

6 ^cBut I have chosen Jerusalem, that my name might be there; and ^ahave chosen David to be over my people Israel.

7 Now ^eit was in the heart of David my father to build a house for the name of the LORD God of Israel.

8 But the LORD said to David my father, Forasmuch as it was in thine heart to build a house for my name, thou didst well that it was in thine heart;

9 Notwithstanding, thou shalt not build the house; but thy son, which shall come forth out of thy loins, he shall build the house for my name.

10 The LORD therefore hath performed his word that he hath spoken: for I am risen up in the room of David my father, and am set on the throne of Israel, as the LORD promised, and have built the house for the name of the LORD God of Israel.

11 And in it have I put the ark, wherein is the covenant of the LORD, that he made with the children of Israel.

12 ^t And he stood before the altar of the LORD in the presence of all the congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands;

13 For Solomon had made a brazen scaffold, of five cubits ^h long, and five cubits broad, and three cubits high, and had set it in the midst of the court; and upon it he stood, and kneeled down upon his knees, before all the congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands toward heaven;

14 And said, O LORD God of Israel, ⁱthere is no God like thee in the heaven, nor in the earth; which keepest covenant, and showest mercy unto thy servants, that walk before thee with all their hearts:

15 ^kThou which hast kept with thy servant David my father that which thou hast promised him; and spakest with thy mouth, and hast fulfilled it with thine hand, as it is this day.

16 Now therefore, O LORD God of Israel, keep with thy servant David my father that which thou hast promised him, saying, ^mThere shall not fail thee a man in my sight to sit upon the throne of Israel; ⁿyet so that thy children take heed to their way to walk in my law, as thou hast walked before me.

Verse 1. The LORD hath said that he would dwell] Solomon seeing the cloud descend, and fill the house, immediately took for granted that the Lord had accepted the place, and was now present. What occurred now was precisely the same with what took place when Moses reared the tabernacle in the wilderness: see Exod. xl. 34, 35. The cloud covered the tent—and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle. And Moses was not able to enter into the tent—because the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle.

THESE two last verses are not in the parallel place in 1 Kings viii. There are other differences between the two places in this prayer; but they are not of much consequence.

CHAPTER VII.

Solomon, having ended his prayer, the fire of the Lord comes down from heaven, and consumes the offerings, 1. The people and the priests see this, and glorify God, and offer sacrifices, 2—4. Solomon offers twenty-two thousand oxen, and one hundred and twenty thousand sheep; and the priests and Levites attend in their offices, 5, 6. He keeps the feast seven days, and the dedication of the altar seven days, and dismisses the people, 7—10. The Lord appears unto him by night, and assures him he has heard his prayer, 12—16. Promises him and his posterity a perpetual government if they be obedient, 17, 18. But utter destruction, should they disobey, and become idolaters, 19—22.

4 ¶ ^g Then the king and all the people offered sacrifices before the LORD.

5 And King Solomon offered a sacrifice of twenty and two thousand oxen, and a hundred and twenty thousand sheep: so the king and all the people dedicated the house of God.

6 ^h And the priests waited on their offices; the Levites also with instruments of music of the LORD, which David the king had made to praise the LORD, because his mercy endureth for ever, when David praised ⁱ by their ministry; and ^k the priests sounded trumpets before them, and all Israel stood.

7 Moreover, ^l Solomon hallowed the middle of the court that was before the house of the LORD: for there he offered burnt-offerings, and the fat of the peace-offerings, because the brazen altar which Solomon had made was not able to receive the burnt-offerings, and the meat-offerings, and the fat.

8 ¶ ^m Also at the same time Solomon kept the feast seven days, and all Israel with him, a very great congregation; from the entering in of Hamath unto ⁿ the river of Egypt.

9 And in the eighth day they made

Verse 4. The king and all the people offered sacrifices] They presented the victims to the priests; and they and the Levites slew them, and sprinkled the blood: or, perhaps, the people themselves slew them; and, having caught the blood, collected the fat, &c. presented them to the priests to be offered as the law required.

Verse 8. The entering in of Hamath] "From the entrance of Antioch to the Nile of Egypt." Targum.

Verse 10. On the three and twentieth day] This was the ninth day of the dedication of the temple; but in 1 Kings viii. 66. it is called the eighth day. The meaning is this, says Jarchi: he gave them liberty to return on the eighth day, and many of them did then return; and he dismissed the remainder on the ninth, what is called here the twenty-third, reckoning the

10 And ^p on the three and twentieth day of the seventh month he sent the people away into their tents, glad and merry in heart for the goodness that the LORD had showed unto David, and to Solomon, and to Israel his people.

11 Thus ^r Solomon finished the house of the LORD, and the king's house: and all that came into Solomon's heart to make in the house of the LORD, and in his own house, he prosperously effected.

12 ¶ And the LORD appeared to Solomon by night, and said unto him, I have heard thy prayer, ^s and have chosen this place to myself for a house of sacrifice.

13 ^t If I shut up heaven that there be no rain, or if I command the locusts to devour the land, or if I send pestilence among my people;

14 If my people, ^u which are called by my name, shall ^v humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; ^w then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land.

fourteen days for the duration of the two feasts; in all, twenty-three.

The Targum paraphrases this verse thus:—"The people departed with a glad heart, for all the good which God had done to David his servant, on whose account the doors of the sanctuary were open; and for Solomon his son, because God had heard his prayer, and the majesty of the Lord had rested on the house of the sanctuary; and for Israel, his people, because God had favourably accepted their oblations, and the heavenly fire had descended, and, burning on the altar, had devoured their sacrifices."

Verse 18. There shall not fail thee a man] This promise was not fulfilled, because the condition was not fulfilled: they forsook God, and he cut them off, and the throne also.

Verse 20. Then will I pluck them up by the roots] How completely has this been fulfilled! not only all the branches of the Jewish political tree have been cut off, but the very roots have been plucked up; so that the day of the Lord's anger has left them neither root nor branch.

21 And this house, which is high, shall be an astonishment to every one that passeth by it; so that he shall say, ^eWhy hath the LORD done thus unto this land, and unto this house?

22 And it shall be answered, Because they forsook the LORD God of their fathers, which brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, and laid hold on other gods, and worshipped them, and served them: therefore hath he brought all this evil upon them.

been destroyed is truly astonishing: no nation was ever so highly favoured, and none ever so severely and signally punished.

Verse 22. Because they forsook the LORD] While they cleaved to God, the most powerful enemy could make no impression on them; but when they forsook him, then the weakest and most inconsiderable of their foes harassed, oppressed, and reduced them to bondage and misery. It was by no personal prowess, genuine heroism, or supereminent military tactics, that the Jews were enabled to resist and overcome their enemies: it was by the divine power alone; for, destitute of this, they were even worse than other men.

Solomon probably bore the expenses; and his friend, the Tyrian king, furnished him with expert sailors; for the Jews, at no period of their history, had any skill in maritime affairs, their navigation being confined to the lakes of their own country, from which they could never acquire any nautical skill. The Tyrians, on the contrary, lived on and in the sea.

AND ^awhen the queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon, she came to prove Solomon with hard questions at Jerusalem, with a very great company, and camels that bare spices, and gold in abundance, and precious stones: and when she was come to Solomon, she communed with him of all that was in her heart.

2 And Solomon told her all her questions: and there was nothing hid from Solomon which he told her not.

Verse 1. The queen of Sheba] See all the particulars of this royal visit distinctly marked and explained in the notes on 1 Kings x. 1—10. The Targum calls her queen of Zemar-gad.

Verse 12. Besides that which he had brought unto the king] In 1 Kings x. 13. it is stated that Solomon gave her all she asked, besides that which he gave her of his royal bounty. It is not at all likely that he gave her back the presents which she brought to him; and which he had accepted. She had, no doubt, asked 9 And she gave the king a hundred and twenty talents of gold, and of spices great abundance, and precious stones: neither was there any such spice as the queen of Sheba gave King Solomon.

1. By the kindness of a learned friend, who has made these kinds of subjects his particular study, I am able to give a more correct view of the value of the talent of gold, and the talent of silver, than that which I have quoted 1 Kings x. 17. from Mr. Reynold's State of the greatest King.

1. To find the equivalent in British standard to an ounce Troy of pure gold, valued at eighty shillings; and to a talent of the same which weighs one thousand eight hundred ounces Troy.

The ounce contains four hundred and eighty grains; and the guinea weighs one hundred and twenty-nine grains, or five pennyweights, and one grain.

^t 1 Kings 10. 27. Chap. 1. 15.—^u Heb. gave.—^v 1 Kings 10. 28. Chap. 1. 16.—^w 1 Kings 11. 41.—^x Heb. words. ^y 1 Kings 11. 29.—^z Chap. 12. 25. & 13. 22.—^a 1 Kings 11. 42, 43.

1. As 129 grains : 21 shillings :: 480, the number of grains in an ounce : 78·1395348s. or 3l. 18s. 1d. 2·69767q. the equivalent in our silver coin to one ounce of standard gold.

2. As 78·1395348 shillings, the value of one ounce of standard gold, : 80 shillings the value of an ounce Troy of pure gold, :: 80 shillings : 81·9047619 shillings, the equivalent in British standard to one ounce of pure gold.

Instead of the preceding the following proportions may be used.

1. As 21·5 shillings : 21 shillings :: 80 shillings : 78·1395348 shillings. This multiplied by 1800, the number of Troy ounces in a Hebrew talent, gives 140651·16264s. or 7032l. 11s. 1d. 3 8q. the equivalent to one talent of standard gold.

2. As 21 standard : 21·5 pure :: 80 pure : 81·9047619 standard. This multiplied by 1800, gives 147428·57142s. or 7371l. 8s. 6d. 3·4q., the equivalent to one talent of pure gold.

2. To find the equivalent in British standard to a talent of pure silver, which is valued at four hundred and fifty pounds sterling, or five shillings the ounce Troy.

The pound Troy is 240 pennyweights; and our silver coin has 18 pennyweights of alloy in the pound. From 240 pennyweights take 18, and there will remain 222 pennyweights, the pure silver in the pound.

Now as 240 pennyweights : 222 pennyweights :: 20 pennyweights, the weight of a crown-piece, : 18½ pennyweights, the weight of the pure silver in the crown.

Then, as 18.5 pennyweights : 5 shillings :: 36000, the number of pennyweights in a talent : 9729.729729729 shillings, or £486. 9s. 8½d., the equivalent in our coin to a talent of pure silver.

Example I. To find the equivalent in British standard to the one hundred and twenty talents of gold which the queen of Sheba gave to King Solomon, 2 Chron ix. 9.

17691428.5704 = £884,571 8s. 6¾d., the equivalent to 120 talents.

Example 2. To find the equivalent in British standard to Solomon's two hundred targets of beaten gold, each six hundred shekels; and to his three hundred shields, each three hundred shekels, 2 Chron. ix. 15, 16.

A talent is three thousand shekels; therefore, six hundred shekels are one fifth, and three hundred are one tenth of a talent.

5)147428.57142s. equivalent to one talent.

29485.71428s. equivalent to one target.

2. I have referred in the note on ver. 17. to a curious account of Solomon's throne, taken from a Persian MS. entitled بیت المقدس beet al mukuddus, the Holy House, or Jerusalem. It has already been remarked in the account of Solomon, at the end of chap. xi of 1 Kings, article 12. that among the oriental writers Solomon is considered not only as the wisest of all men, but as having supreme command over demons and genii of all kinds; and that he knew the language of beasts, and birds, &c.; and, therefore, the reader need not be surprised if he find, in the following account, Solomon employing preternatural agency in the construction of this celebrated throne.

"This famous throne was the work of the Deev Sukkur; it was called Koubab al Jinna. The beauty of this throne has never been sufficiently described; the following are the particulars:—

"The sides of it were pure gold; the feet of emeralds and pearls, intermixed with other pearls, each of which was as large as the egg of an ostrich.

"The throne had SEVEN steps; on each side were delineated orchards full of trees, the branches of which were composed of precious stones, representing ripe and unripe fruits.

"On the tops of the trees were to be seen fowls of the most beautiful plumage; particularly the peacock, the etaub, and the kurgus: all these birds were artificially hollowed within, so as occasionally to utter a thousand melodious notes, such as the ears of mortals had never before heard.

"On the FIRST step were delineated vine-branches, having bunches of grapes, composed of various sorts of precious stones; fashioned in such a manner as to represent the different colours of purple, violet, green, and red, so as to exhibit the appearance of real fruit.

"On the SECOND step, on each side of the throne, were two lions of massive gold, of terrible aspect, and as large as life.

"The property of this throne was such, that when the prophet Solomon placed his foot upon the FIRST step, all the birds spread their wings, and made a fluttering noise in the air.

"On his touching the SECOND step, the two lions expanded their claws.

"On his reaching the THIRD step, the whole assembly of deers, peris, and men, repeated the praises of the Deity.

"When he arrived at the FOURTH step, voices were heard addressing him in the following manner:—Son of David, be grateful for the blessings which the Almighty has bestowed upon thee.

"The same was repeated on his reaching the FIFTH step.

"On his touching the SIXTH step, all the children sang praises.

"On his arrival at the SEVENTH step, the whole throne, with all the birds and other animals, became in motion, and ceased not till he had placed himself in the royal seat; and then the birds, lions, and other animals, by secret springs, discharged a shower of the most precious musk upon the prophet; after which two of the kurguses descending, placed a golden crown upon his head.

"Before the throne, was a column of burnished gold; on the top of which was placed a golden dove, which had in its beak a roll bound in silver. In this roll were written the Psalms of the prophet David: and the dove having presented the roll to King Solomon, he read a portion of it to the children of Israel.

"It is farther related, that on the approach of wicked persons to this throne for judgment, the lions were wont to set up a terrible roaring, and to lash their tails about with violence: the birds also began to erect their feathers; and the whole assembly of deers and genies uttered such loud cries, that for fear of them no person would dare to be guilty of falsehood, but instantly confess his crimes.

"Such was the throne of Solomon, the son of David."

Supposing even this splendid description to be literally true, there is nothing here that could not have been performed by ingenuity and art: nothing that needed the aid of supernatural influence.

In another MS. on which I cannot now lay my hand, the whole value of this throne, and its ornaments, is computed in lacs of rupees! The above description is founded in the main on the account given here, chap. ix. 17—19. The six steps, and the footstool of the sacred writer, make the seven steps, in the above description. The twelve lions are not distinguished by the Mohammedan writer. Other matters are added from tradition.

This profusion of gold and precious stones was not beyond the reach of Solomon when we consider the many millions left by his father; no less a sum than one thousand two hundred and twenty-three millions, six hundred and twenty-nine thousand, three hundred and forty-three pounds, eleven shillings, and eightpence halfpenny, besides what Solomon himself furnished.

CHAPTER X.

The people apply to Rehoboam to ease them of their burdens, 1—4. Rejecting the advice of the aged counsellors, and following that of the young men, he gives them an ungracious answer, 5—14. The people are discouraged, and ten tribes revolt, 15—17. They stone Hadoram, who went to collect the tribute, and Rehoboam but barely escapes 18, 19.

AND ^a Rehoboam went to Shechem: for to Shechem were all Israel come to make him king.

2 And it came to pass, when Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who was in Egypt, ^b whither he had fled from the presence of Solomon the king, heard it, that Jeroboam returned out of Egypt.

3 And they sent and called him: So Jeroboam and all Israel came and spake to Rehoboam, saying,

4 Thy father made our yoke grievous: now therefore ease thou somewhat the grievous servitude of thy father, and his heavy yoke that he put upon us, and we will serve thee.

5 And he said unto them, Come again unto me after three days. And the people departed.

6 ¶ And King Rehoboam took counsel with the old men that had stood before Solomon his father while he yet lived, saying, What counsel give ye me to return answer to this people?

7 And they spake unto him, saying, If thou be kind to this people, and please them, and speak good words to them, they will be thy servants for ever.

8 But he forsook the counsel which the old men gave him, and took counsel with the young men that were brought up with him, that stood before him.

9 And he said unto them, What advice give ye that we may return answer to this people, which have spoken to me, saying, Ease somewhat the yoke that thy father did put upon us?

10 And the young men that were brought up with him spake unto him, saying, Thus shalt thou answer the people that spake unto thee, saying, Thy father made our yoke heavy, but make thou it somewhat lighter for us; thus shalt thou say unto them, My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins.

11 For whereas my father ^c put a heavy yoke upon you, I will put more to your yoke: my father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

12 ¶ So Jeroboam and all the people came to Rehoboam on the third day, as the king bade, saying, Come again to me on the third day.

13 And the king answered them roughly; and King Rehoboam forsook the counsel of the old men,

14 And answered them after the advice of the young men, saying, My father

15 And he ordained him priests for the high places, and for the devils, and for the calves which he had made.

16 And after them, out of all the tribes of Israel, such as set their hearts to seek the LORD God of Israel came to Jerusalem, to sacrifice unto the LORD God of their fathers.

Verse 11. Store of victual] In these places he laid up stores of provisions, not only to enable them to endure a siege; but also that they might be able, from their situation, to supply desolate places.

Verse 14. The Levites left their suburbs] They and the priests were expelled from their offices by Jeroboam, lest they should turn the hearts of the people to the true God, and then they would revolt to Judah, 1 Kings xii. 26; and, therefore, he established a new worship, and made new gods.

Verse 15. And he ordained him priests—for the devils שרפים sheirim, the wairy ones; probably goats: for as the golden calves, or oxen, were in imitation of the Egyptian ox god, Apis, so they no doubt paid divine honours to the goat, which we know was an object of religious veneration in Egypt.

Verse 16. Such as set their hearts to seek the LORD] All the truly pious joined him out of every tribe: and the whole tribe of Levi, being deprived of their functions, joined him also. Thus he had Judah, Benjamin, and Levi, and probably a part of Simeon; for he had Etam, which was in that tribe, and the truly religious out of all the other tribes, for they could not bear Jeroboam's idolatry.

Verse 17. For three years they walked in the way of David] During this time he prospered;

but for fourteen years after this he and the people were unfaithful to the Lord, except at such intervals as the hand of God's judgments was upon them.

Verse 18. Took him Mahalath] By marrying thus in the family of David, he strengthened his right to the Jewish throne.

Verse 20. Maachah the daughter of Absalom] See the note on 1 Kings xv. 10. She is called Michaiah, the daughter of Uriel, chap. xiii. 2. For this the Targum gives the following reason: "Abijah reigned three years in Jerusalem; and his mother's name was Micaiah, daughter of Uriel of Gibeatha. She is the same as Micah, the daughter of Absalom: but, because she was an upright woman, her name was changed into the more excellent name Micaiah, and her father's name into that of Uriel of Gibeatha, that the name of Absalom might not be remembered."

Verse 21. Eighteen wives, and threescore concubines] Bad enough, but not so abandoned as his father. Of these marriages and concubinage the issue was twenty-eight sons and sixty daughters; eighty-eight children in the whole: to the education of the whole of them he could pay but little attention. Numerous families are often neglected; and children, by different women, must be yet in a worse state.

certainly was not the first-born of Rehoboam;
but, as he loved Maachah more than any of his wives, so he preferred her son, probably through his mother's influence. In Deut. xxi.
16, this sort of preference is forbidden: but Rehoboam had a sort of precedent in the preference shown by David to Solomon.

Verse 23. He dealt wisely] It was true policy to disperse his own sons through the differ-and Benjamin, unto every fenced city; and he gave league with Jeroboam against their father.

He desired many wives.] He was much addicted to women; yet we do not find that he formed any heathenish alliances of this nature.
And as no particulars are given, we do not know how far he indulged himself in this propensity. He probably strengthened his political connexions by these means.

them, Troglodytæ specus excavant, hæc illis domus; "The Troglodytes dig themselves caves: and these serve them for houses." This is not very different from the import of the original name סוּכִים Sukkim, from סָכָה sakah, to cover or overspread: hence סֹכֶךְ suk, a tabernacle; the people who were covered (emphatically) under the earth. 8 Nevertheless ¹ they shall be his servants; that they may know ^m my service, and the service of the kingdoms of the countries.

9 ⁿ So Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem, and took away the treasures of the house of the LORD, and the treasures of the king's house; he took all: he carried away also the shields of gold which Solomon had ^o made.

10 Instead of which King Rehoboam made shields of brass, and committed them ^p to the hands of the chief of the guard, that kept the entrance of the king's house.

11 And when the king entered into the house of the LORD, the guard came and fetched them, and brought them again into the guard-chamber.

brought up with him, chap. x. 8, 10. They were young men then; and if he was brought up with them, he must have been young then also. Besides, Abijah, in his speech to Jeroboam, chap. xiii. 7. says, that at the time Rehoboam came to the throne he was tender-hearted, and therefore could not withstand the children of Belial raised up against him by Jeroboam: but surely at that time no man could be reputed young and tender-hearted, quite devoid of experience, who was above forty years of age. Besides, if this reading were allowed, it would prove that he was born before his father Solomon began to reign, for Solomon reigned only forty years, and Rehoboam immediately succeeded him.

Verse 15. Concerning genealogies] “In the book of the genealogy of the family of David.” Targum.

Verse 16. Abijah his son] Concerning the many varieties in this king's name, see the note on 1 Kings xiv. 31.

CHAPTER XIII.

Abijah begins to reign over Judah, and has war with Jeroboam, 3. His speech from mount Zemaraim to Jeroboam, before the commencement of hostilities, 4—12. While thus engaged, Jeroboam despatched some troops, which came on the rear of Abijah's army, 13. Perceiving this, they cried unto the Lord, and the Israelites are defeated with the loss of five hundred thousand men, 11—14. Abijah retakes several cities from Jeroboam, who is smitten by the Lord and dies, 19, 20. Abijah's marriages and issue, 21, 22.

NOW^a in the eighteenth year of King Jeroboam began Abijah to reign over Judah.

2 He reigned three years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was^b Michaiah the daughter of Uriel of Gibeah.

^a 1 Kings 15. 1, &c. — ^b See Ch. 11. 20.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIII.

Verse 2. His mother's name was Michaiah] See on chap. xi. 20.

Verse 3. Abijah set the battle in array] The numbers in this verse, and in the seventeenth, seem almost incredible. Abijah's army consisted of four hundred thousand effective men; that of Jeroboam consisted of eight hundred thousand; and the slain of Jeroboam's army were five hundred thousand. Now it is very possible that there is a cipher too much in all these numbers, and that they should stand thus: Abijah's army, forty thousand; Jeroboam's, eighty thousand; the slain, fifty thousand. Calmet, who defends the common reading, allows that the Venice edition of the Vulgate, in 1478; another in 1489; that of Nuremberg in 1521; that of Basil, by Froben, in 1538; that of Robert Stevens, in 1546; and many others, have the smaller numbers. Dr. Kennicott says, "On a particular collation of the Vulgate version, it appears that the number of chosen men here slain, which Pope Clement's edition in 1592 determines to be five hundred thousand, the edition of Pope Sixtus, printed two years before, determined to be only fifty thousand; and the two preceding numbers, in the edition of Sixtus, are forty thousand and eighty thousand. As to different printed editions, out of fifty-two, from the year 1462 to 1592, thirty-one contain the less number. And out of fifty-one MSS. twenty-three in the Bodleian library, four in that of Dean Aldrich, and two in that of Exeter College, contain the less number, or else are corrupted irregularly, varying only one or two numbers."

This examination was made by Dr. Kennicott before he had finished his collation of Hebrew MSS., and before De Rossi had published his Varie Lectiones Veteris Testamenti; but from these works we find little help, as far as the Hebrew MSS. are concerned. One Hebrew MS. instead of ארבע מאות אלף arba meoth eleph, four hundred thousand, reads ארבע אלף arba eser eleph, fourteen thousand.

In all printed copies of the Hebrew, the numbers are as in the common text, four hundred thousand, eight hundred thousand, and five hundred thousand.

The versions are as follow: the Targum, or Chaldee, the same in each place as the Hebrew.

The Syriac, in ver. 3. has four hundred thousand young men, for the army of Abijah; and eight hundred thousand stout youth for that of Jeroboam. For the slain Israelites, in ver. 17. it has חמשים אלף five hundred thousand, falsely translated in the Latin text quinque milia, five thousand, both in the Paris and London Polyglotts. Another proof, among many, what little dependence is to be placed

And there was war between Abijah and Jeroboam.

3 And Abijah^c set the battle in array with an army of valiant men of war, even four hundred thousand chosen men: Jeroboam also set the battle in array against him with eight hundred thousand chosen men, on the Latin translation of this version in either of the above Polyglotts.

The Arabic is the same in all these cases with the Syriac, from which it has been translated.

The Septuagint, both as it is published in all the Polyglotts, and as far as I have seen in MSS. is the same with the Hebrew text. So is also Josephus.

The Vulgate or Latin version is that alone that exhibits any important variations: we have had considerable proof of this in the above-mentioned collations of Calmet and Kennicott. I shall beg liberty to add others from my own collection.

In the Edilio Princeps of the Latin Bible, though without date or place, yet evidently printed long before that of Fust, in 1462, the places stand thus: Ver. 3. Cumque inisset certamen, et haberet bellicosissimos viros; et electorum QUADRAGINTA milia: Iheroboam construxit à contra aciem OCTOGINTA milia virorum: "With him Abia entered into battle; and he had of the most warlike and choice men forty thousand; and Jeroboam raised an army against him of eighty thousand men."

And in ver. 17. Et corruerunt vulnerati ex Israel; QUINQUAGINTA milia virorum fortium: "And there fell down wounded fifty thousand stout men of Israel."

In the Glossa Ordinaria, by Strabo Fuldenis, we have forty thousand, and eighty thousand, in the two first instances; and five hundred thousand in the last. Bib. Sacra. vol. ii. Antv. 1634.

In four ancient MSS. of my own, marked A, B, C, D, the text stands thus:—

A.—Cumque inisset Abia certamen, et haberet bellicosissimos viros et electorum XL MIL. Jeroboam instruxit contra aciem LXXX. MIL.

And in ver. 17. Et corruerunt vulnerati ex Israel L. MIL. virorum fortium. Here we have forty thousand for the army of Abijah, and eighty thousand for that of Jeroboam, and fifty thousand for the slain of the latter.

QUINQUAGINTA milia,
FIFTY thousand.

The numbers being here expressed in words at full length, there can be no suspicion of mistake.

C.—cccc milia, dccc milibus, D milia, 400 thousand. 300 thousand. 500 thousand.

This is the same as the Hebrew text, and very distinctly expressed.

D.—xl. m. lxxx. m. l. v. m.
40,000. 80,000. 50 and 5000.

This, in the two first numbers, is the same as the others above; but the last is confused, and appears to stand for fifty thousand and five

4 ¶ And Abijah stood up upon mount ^d Zemaraim, which is in mount Ephraim, and said, Hear me, thou Jeroboam, and all Israel:

5 Ought ye not to know that the LORD God of Israel ^e gave the kingdom over Israel to David for ever, even to him and to his sons ^f by a covenant of salt?

thousand. A later hand has corrected the two first numbers in this MS., placing over the first four ^{cccc} cccc, thus xl., thus changing forty into four hundred; and over the second thus, ^{cccc} lxxx. thus changing eighty into eight hundred. Over the latter number, which is evidently a mistake of the scribe, there is no correction.

The reader has now the whole evidence which I have been able to collect before him, and may choose: the smaller numbers appear to be the most correct. Of corruptions in the numbers, in these historical books, we have often had cause to suspect and complain.

Verse 4. Stood up upon mount Zemaraim] "Which was a mount of the tribe of the house of Ephraim." Targum. Jarchi thinks that Abijah went to the confines of the tribe of Ephraim to attack Jeroboam. It could not be Shomeron, the mount on which Samaria was built, in the days of Omri, king of Israel, 1 Kings xvi. 24.

Verse 5. By a covenant of salt?] For ever. "For as the waters of the sea never grow sweet, neither shall the dominion depart from the house of David." Targum. See my note on Numb. xviii. 19.

10 But as for us, the LORD ⁿ is our God, and we have not forsaken him; and the priests, which minister unto the LORD, are the sons of Aaron, and the Levites wait upon their business.

11 ⁿ And they burn unto the LORD, every morning and every evening, burnt-sacrifices and sweet incense: the ^o show-bread also set they in order upon the pure table; and the candlestick of gold, with the lamps thereof, ^p to burn every evening: for we keep the charge of the LORD our God; but ye have forsaken him.

tender-hearted] Therefore he could not be forty-one when he came to the throne: see the note on ver. 3. Children of Belial here signifies men of the most abandoned principles and characters; or men without consideration, education, or brains.

Verse 9. A young bullock and seven rams] He who could provide these for his own consecration was received into the order of this spurious and wicked priesthood. Some think he who could give to Jeroboam a young bullock and seven rams, was thereby received into the priesthood; this being the price for which the priesthood was conferred. The former is most likely.

Verse 10. The LORD is our God] We have not abandoned the Lord; and we still serve him according to his own law.

Verse 12. God himself is with us] Ye have golden calves, ver. 8. We have the living and omnipotent Jehovah.

shout: and as the men of Judah shouted, it came to pass, that God ^tsmote Jeroboam and all Israel before Abijah and Judah.

16 And the children of Israel fled before Judah: and God delivered them into their hand.

17 And Abijah and his people slew them with a great slaughter: so there fell down slain of Israel five hundred thousand chosen men.

Verse 17. Slain—five hundred thousand chosen men] Quere, fifty thousand? This was a great slaughter: see the note on ver. 3. where all these numbers are supposed to be overcharged.

Verse 18. Judah prevailed, because] “They depended on the Word of the God of their fathers.” Targum.

Verse 19. Beth-el] “Beth-lehem.” Targum. Jeshanah] We know not where these towns lay.

Verse 20. The Lord struck him; and he died.] Who died? Abijah, or Jeroboam? Some think it was Jeroboam, some that it was Abijah. Both rabbins and Christians are divided on this point; nor is it yet settled. The prevailing opinion is, boam, and took cities from him; Beth-el with the towns thereof, and Jeshanah with the towns thereof, and ^vEphraim with the towns thereof.

20 Neither did Jeroboam recover strength again in the days of Abijah: and the LORD ^wstruck him, and ^xhe died.

21 [†]But Abijah waxed mighty, and married fourteen wives, and begat twenty and two sons, and sixteen daughters.

that Jeroboam is meant, who was struck then with that disease of which he died about two years after; for he did not die till two years after Abijah: see 1 Kings xiv. 20. and xv. 9. It seems as if Jeroboam was meant, not Abijah.

Verse 21. Married fourteen wives] Probably he made alliances with the neighbouring powers, by taking their daughters to him for wives.

Verse 22. Written in the story] במדרש be-midrash, “in the commentary:” this, as far as I recollect, is the first place where a midrash, or commentary, is mentioned. The margin is right.

His ways, and his sayings] The commentary of the prophet Iddo is lost. What his sayings were, we cannot tell; but, from the specimen in this chapter, he appears to have been a very able speaker, and one who knew well how to make the best use of his argument.

Verse 14. There was—much spoil in them] These cities being on the rear of this vast army, they had laid up much forage in them; and, to get this, the Jews overthrew the whole.

Verse 15. Tents of cattle] Those which had carried the baggage of the great army: and which they had left in such places as abounded with pasture. Perhaps sheepfolds, enclosures for camels, mules, &c. may also be intended. The discomfiture was great, for God fought for the people: and the spoil was immense, because the multitude was prodigious, indeed almost incredible; a million of men in one place is almost too much for the mind to conceive, but there may be some mistake in the numerals: it is evident, from the whole account, that the number was vast, and the spoil great.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XV.

Verse 1. Azariah the son of Oded] We know nothing of this prophet but what is related of him in this place.

Verse 2. The Lord is with you while ye be with him] This is the settled and eternal purpose of God : to them who seek him he will ever be found propitious ; and them alone will he abandon who forsake him. In this verse the unconditional perseverance of the saints has no place ; a doctrine which was first the ruin of the human race, Ye shall not die ; and ever since the fall, the plague and disgrace of the church of Christ. The Targum is curious : "Hearken to me, Asa, and all Judah and Benjamin. The Word of the Lord shall be your helper ; while ye walk in his ways, if ye seek doctrine from his presence, he will be found of you in times of trouble ; but if you cast away his fear, he will abandon you."

Verse 3. Now for a long season Israel] "Israel hath followed Jeroboam, and they have not worshipped the true God. They have burnt incense to their golden calves ; their priestlings [כֹּהֲנֵי בָמֹת] cumaria, their black sooty sacrificers] have burnt perfumes with a strange worship, and have not exercised themselves in the law." Targum. These priests could not teach, because they had not learnt ; and, as they had abandoned the law of the Lord, consequently they had no proper matter for instruction.

There is a great diversity of opinions concerning the meaning of this text. Some consider it a prophecy relative to the future

8 ¶ And when Asa heard these words, and the prophecy of Oded the prophet, he took courage, and put away the ^m abominable idols out of all the land of Judah and Benjamin, and out of the cities. ⁿ which he had taken from mount Ephraim, and renewed the altar of the LORD, that was before the porch of the LORD.

state of this people ; and the final destruction of the Jews, as to their political existence : others consider it as referring to the state of the people under the reigns of Rehoboam and Abijah, which were happily changed under that of Asa ; and this appears to me to be the most natural sense of the words.

Verse 5. But great vexations] Does not our Lord allude to this and the following verse, in Matt. xxiv. 6, 7, 9, 13.

Verse 8. Renewed the altar] Dedicated it afresh, or perhaps enlarged it, that more sacrifices might be offered on it than ever before ; for it cannot be supposed that this altar had no victims offered on it till the fifteenth year of the reign of Asa, who had previously been so zealous in restoring the divine worship.

Verse 9. And the strangers] Many out of the different tribes, particularly out of Simeon, Ephraim, and Manasseh, having reflected that the divine blessing was promised to the house of David, and finding the government of Jeroboam founded in idolatry, would naturally, through a spirit of piety, leave their own country, and go where they might enjoy the worship of the true God.

Verse 10. The third month] At the feast of pentecost, which was held on the third month.

Verse 11. The spoil which they had brought] The spoil which they had taken from Zerah and his auxiliaries, chap. xiv. 14, 15.

Verse 12. They entered into a covenant] The covenant consisted of two parts.—1. We will seek the God of our fathers with all our heart, and with all our soul.—2. Whosoever, great or with all their heart, and with all their soul ;

13 ^u That whosoever would not seek the LORD God of Israel ^v should be put to death, whether small or great, whether man or woman.

14 And they sware unto the LORD with a loud voice, and with shouting, and with trumpets, and with cornets.

15 And all Judah rejoiced at the oath :
for they had sworn with all their heart, and ^w sought him with their whole desire ; and he was found of them : and the LORD gave them rest round about.

16 ¶ And also concerning ^x Maachah, the ^y mother of Asa the king, he removed her from being queen, because she had made an ^z idol in a grove : and Asa cut down her idol, and stamped it, and burnt it at the brook Kidron.

17 But ^a the high places were not taken away out of Israel : nevertheless the heart of Asa was perfect all his days.

18 ¶ And he brought into the house of God the things that his father had dedicated, and that he himself had dedicated, silver, and gold, and vessels.

19 And there was no more war unto the five and thirtieth year of the reign of Asa.

Thus no toleration was given to idolatry, so that it must be rooted out : and, that this covenant might be properly binding, they confirmed it with an oath ; and God accepted them and their services.

Verse 16. Concerning Maachah] See this matter fully explained in the note on 1 Kings
xv. 13.

The Jews imagine that Maachah repented, and her name became changed into Michaiah, daughter of Uriel of Gibeah ; and that this was done that there might be no mention of her former name, lest it might be a reproach to her.
But we have already seen another gloss on this name ; see on chap. xi. 20.

Verse 17. The high places were not taken away] He had totally suppressed or destroyed the idolatry ; but some of the places, buildings, or altars, he permitted to remain.

Verse 18. The things that his father had dedicated] As it was a custom to dedicate a part of the spoils taken from an enemy to the service and honour of God, it is natural to suppose that Abijah (having so signally overthrown Jeroboam, chap. xiii. 15—19.) had de-dedicated a part of the spoils to the Lord ; but they had not been brought into the temple till this time.

Silver, and gold, and vessels.] The word
כֵּלִים kelim, which we translate vessels, signifies

Verse 19. The five and thirtieth year of the reign of Asa.] Archbishop Ussher thinks that this should be counted from the separation of the kingdom, and that this fell on the fifteenth year of Asa's reign. To settle in every respect these chronologies is a most difficult undertaking ; and the difficulty does not belong to the Sacred Books alone, all other chronological tables of all the nations in the world, are in the same predicament. With those of our own history I have often been puzzled, even while I had access to all the archives of the nation.
Probably we should read here the five and twentieth year. See the margin, and the note on 1 Kings xv. 16.

4 And Ben-hadad hearkened unto King Asa, and sent the captains of his armies against the cities of Israel; and they smote Ijon, and Dan, and Abel-maim, and all the store-cities of Naphtali.

5 And it came to pass, when Baasha heard it, that he left off building of Ramah, and let his work cease.

6 Then Asa the king took all Judah; and they carried away the stones of Ramah, and the timber thereof, wherewith Baasha was building; and he built therewith Geba and Mizpah.

7 ¶ And at that time Hanani the seer came to Asa king of Judah, and said unto him, Because thou hast relied on the king of Syria, and not relied on the LORD thy God, therefore is the host of the king of Syria escaped out of thine hand.

8 Were not the Æthiopians and the Lubims a huge host, with very many chariots and horsemen? yet, because thou didst rely on the LORD, he delivered them into thine hand.

Verse 6. Took all Judah.] See on 1 Kings xv. 22.

Verse 7. Escaped out of thine hand.] It is difficult to know what is here intended. Perhaps the divine providence had intended to give Asa a grand victory over the Syrians, who had always been the inveterate enemies of the Jews: but, by this unnecessary and very improper alliance between Asa and Ben-hadad, this purpose of the divine providence was prevented; and thus the Syrians escaped out of his hands.

Verse 9. Therefore—thou shalt have wars.] And so he had with Israel during the rest of his reign, 1 Kings xv. 32.

Verse 10. Asa was wroth with the seer.] Instead of humbling himself, and deprecating the displeasure of the Lord, he persecuted his messenger. And, having thus laid his impious hands upon the prophet, he appears to have got his heart hardened through the deceitfulness of sin; and then he began to oppress the people, either by unjust imprisonments, or excessive taxations.

of them whose heart is perfect toward him. Herein thou hast done foolishly; therefore from henceforth thou shalt have wars.

10 Then Asa was wroth with the seer, and put him in a prison house; for he was in a rage with him because of this thing. And Asa oppressed some of the people the same time.

11 ¶ And, behold, the acts of Asa, first and last, lo, they are written in the book of the kings of Judah and Israel.

12 And Asa, in the thirty and ninth year of his reign was diseased in his feet, until his disease was exceeding great: yet in his disease he sought not to the LORD, but to the physicians.

13 ¶ And Asa slept with his fathers, and died in the one and fortieth year of his reign.

14 And they buried him in his own sepulchres, which he had made for himself in the city of David, and laid him in the bed which was filled with sweet odours, and divers kinds of spices prepared by the apothecaries' art; and they made a very great burning for him.

He sought not to the LORD.] “He did not seek discipline from the face of the Lord, but from the physicians.” Targum.

Are we not taught by this, in our afflictions, to make prayer and supplication to the Lord with the expectation that he will heal us when he finds us duly humbled, i. e. when the end is answered for which he sends the affliction?

Verse 14. And laid him in the bed.] It is very likely that the body of Asa was burnt; that the bed spoken of here was a funeral pyre, on which much spices and odouriferous woods had been placed; and then they set fire to the whole, and consumed the body with the aromatics. Some think the body was not burned, but the aromatics only, in honour of the king.

How the ancients treated the bodies of the illustrious dead we learn from Virgil, in the funeral rites paid to Misenus.

Meanwhile the Trojan troops, with weeping eyes,
To dead Misenus pay their obsequies.
First from the ground a lofty pile they rear
Of pitch trees, oaks, and pines, and unctuous fir.
The fabric's front with cypress twigs they strew,
And stick the sides with boughs of bauful yew.
The topmost part his glittering arms adorn;
Warm waters, then, in brazen caldrons borne,
Are poured to wash his body joint by joint;
And fragrant oils the stiffen'd limbs anoint.

Then on a bier, with purple cover'd o'er,
The breathless body thus bestall'd they lay,
And fire the pile, (their faces turn'd away).
Such revereat rites their fathers used to pay.
Pure oil and incense on the fire they throw,
And fat of victims which their friends bestow.
These gifts the greedy flames to dust devour,
Then on the living coals red wine they pour:
And last the relics by themselves dispose,
Which in a brazen urn the priests enclose.

And dipp'd an olive branch in holy dew,
Which thrice he sprinkled round, and thrice aloud

Dryden.

All these rites are of Asiatic extraction.
Virgil borrows almost every circumstance from Homer; see II. xxiii. v. 164, &c. And we well know that Homer ever describes Asiatic manners. Sometimes, especially in war, several captives were sacrificed to the manes of the departed hero. So in the place above, the mean-souled, ferocious demon, Achilles, is represented sacrificing twelve Trojan captives to the ghost of his friend Patroclus. Urns containing the ashes and half-calcined bones of the dead occur frequently in barrows, or tumuli, in this country; most of them, no doubt, the work of the Romans. But all ancient nations, in funeral matters, had nearly the same rites.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XVII.

Verse 1. Jehoshaphat—and strengthened himself against Israel. The kingdoms of Israel and Judah were rivals from the beginning; sometimes one, sometimes the other, prevailed. Asa and Baasha were nearly matched; but after Baasha's death Israel was greatly weakened by civil contentions, and Jehoshaphat got the ascendancy: see 1 Kings xvi. 16—23.

Verse 2. The cities of Ephraim This conquest from the kingdom of Israel is referred to, chap. xv. 8; but when it was made, we do not know.

Verse 3. The Lord was with Jehoshaphat "The Word of the Lord was Jehoshaphat's helper." Targum.

Verses 7—9. To teach in the cities of Judah "To teach the fear of the Lord in the cities of Judah." Targum.

In these verses we find a remarkable account of an itinerant ministry, established by Jehoshaphat; and in this work he employed three classes of men. 1. The princes. 2. The Levites. 3. The priests. We may presume that the princes instructed the people in the nature of the civil law and constitution of the kingdom. The Levites instructed them in every thing that appertained to the temple service, and ritual law; and the priests instructed them in the nature and design of the religion they professed. Thus the nation became thoroughly instructed in their duty to God, to the king, and to each

10 ¶ And ^m the fear of the LORD ⁿ fell upon all the kingdoms of the lands that were round about Judah, so that they made no war against Jehoshaphat.

11 Also some of the Philistines ^o brought Jehoshaphat presents, and tribute-silver; and the Arabians brought him flocks, seven thousand and seven hundred rams, and seven thousand and even hundred he-goats.

12 ¶ And Jehoshaphat waxed great exceedingly: and he built in Judah ^p castles, and cities of store.

13 And he had much business in the cities of Judah: and the men of war, mighty men of valour, were in Jerusalem.

ther. They became, therefore, as one man; and against a people thus united, on such principles, no enemy could be successful.

Verse 9. Had the book of the law of the LORD with them] This was their text-book; it was the Book of God; they taught it as such, and as such the people received it. Its laws were God's laws, and the people felt their obligation, and their consciences were bound. Thus they were obedient to the laws of the land, on the principle of religion. In this they were encouraged and confirmed by the example of all, both in church and state. The princes were not only pious, but were teachers of piety. The Levites showed them the worth and excellence of their ritual institutions; and the priests showed them the moral use they were to make of the whole; and thus the people became obedient to God as well as to the king; and kept all the civil ordinances not merely for the sake of a good king, but for the sake of a good and gracious God. By these means the nations enjoyed peace and prosperity; and all insurrections, seditions, and popular commotions, were prevented. The surrounding nations perceiving this, saw that there was no hope of subduing such a people; so they made no war with Jehoshaphat, ver. 10. And they took care not to provoke such a people to fall on them; therefore, it is said, The fear of the Lord fell on all the kingdoms and lands that were round about Judah. Such an itinerant ministry established in these kingdoms for upwards of fourscore years, teaching the pure unadulterated doctrines of the Gospel, with the propriety and necessity of obedience to the laws, has been the principal means, in the hand of God, of preserving these lands from those convulsions and revolutions that have ruined and nearly dissolved the European continent. rant ministry, to which this refers, is that which was established in these lands by the late truly reverend, highly learned and cultivated, deeply pious, and loyal, JOHN WESLEY, A. M. formerly a fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford, whose followers are known by the name of METHODISTS; a people who are an honour to their country, and a blessing to the government of their most excellent and revered King George III.; who, through a long reign, has been the patron of religion and learning, and the father of his people.

Verse 11. The Philistines brought—presents] They and the Arabians purchased peace with the king of Judah, by paying an annual tribute. The Philistines brought silver, and no doubt different kinds of merchandise. The Arabs, whose riches consisted in cattle, brought him flocks in great abundance, principally rams and he-goats.

Verse 13. He had much business in the cities] He kept the people constantly employed; they had wages for their work, and by their labours the empire was both enriched and strengthened.

Verse 14. Adnah the chief] He was generalissimo of all this host. These are the numbers of the five battalions:—Under Adnah three hundred thousand; Jehohanan, two hundred and eighty thousand; Amasiah, two hundred thousand; Eliada, two hundred thousand; Jehozabad, one hundred and eighty thousand; in all, one million one hundred and sixty thousand.

Verse 19. These waited on the king] They were disposable forces, always at the king's command: and were independent of those by which the cities of Judah were garrisoned.

There is not a sovereign in Europe, or in the world, but might read this chapter with advantage. It shows, most forcibly, that true religion is the basis of the state; and that wherever it prospers, there the state prospers. 2. It shows also, that it is the wisdom of kings to encourage religion with all their power and influence; for, if the hearts of the subjects be not bound and influenced by true religion, vain is the application of laws, fines, imprisonments, or corporal punishment of any kind. 3. A religious nation is ever a great nation; it is loved by its friends, it is dreaded by its enemies. 4. It is ever a peaceable and united nation: the blessings of religion, and a wholesome and paternal government, are so fully felt and prized, that all find it their interest to preserve and defend them. Harmony, peace, piety, and strength, are the stability of such times. May Britain know and value them!

Jehoshaphat joins affinity with Ahab, king of Israel, 1, 2. Who invites him to assist him in the war against the Syrians, to which Jehoshaphat agrees, 3. They consult the prophets concerning the success of the war; and all but Micaiah, promise Ahab victory, 4—17. Micaiah relates his vision concerning the lying spirit in the mouth of Ahab's prophets, 18—22. Zedekiah, a false prophet, opposes Micaiah; and Micaiah is put in prison, 23—27. Verse 1. Jehoshaphat had riches and honour] The preceding chapter gives ample proof of this. Joined affinity with Ahab] Took his daughter Athaliah to be wife to his son Joram.

Verse 3. To Ramoth-gilead] This place belonged to the Israelites, and was now held by the king of Syria.

11 And all the prophets prophesied so, saying, Go up to Ramoth-gilead, and prosper; for the LORD shall deliver it into the hand of the king.

12 And the messenger that went to call Micaiah spake to him, saying, Behold the words of the prophets de- clare good to the king ¹ with one assent; let thy word therefore, I pray thee, be like one of theirs, and speak thou good.

13 And Micaiah said, As the LORD liveth, ^m even what my God saith, that will I speak.

15 ¶ And the king said to him, How many times shall I adjure thee that thou say nothing but the truth to me in the name of the LORD?

18 Again he said, Therefore hear the word of the LORD; I saw the LORD sitting upon his throne, and all the host of heaven standing on his right hand and on his left.

19 And the LORD said, Who shall entice Ahab, king of Israel, that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-gilead? And one spake saying after this manner, and another saying after that manner.

20 Then there came out a ^ospirit, and stood before the LORD, and said, I will entice him. And the LORD said unto him, Wherewith?

Verse 20. Then there came out a spirit] The Targum gives a strange gloss here: "Then the spirit of Naboth of Jezreel came out from the abode of the righteous, and stood before the Lord, and said, I will deceive him. And the Lord said, By what means? To which he answered, I will be a spirit of false prophecy in the mouth of his prophets. And the Lord said, Thou mayest then. But, although the power of deceiving them is given unto thee, nevertheless it will not be lawful for thee to sit among

25 Then the king of Israel said, Take ye Micaiah, and carry him back to Amon the governor of the city, and to Joash the king's son;

26 And say, Thus saith the king, ^uPut this fellow in the prison, and feed him with bread of affliction, and with water of affliction, until I return in peace.

27 And Micaiah said, If thou certainly return in peace, then hath not the LORD spoken by me. And he said, Hearken, all ye people.

28 ¶ So the king of Israel, and Jehoshaphat the king of Judah, went up to Ramoth-gilead.

29 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, I will disguise myself, and will go to the battle; but put thou on thy robes. So the king of Israel disguised himself; and they went to the battle.

30 Now the king of Syria had commanded the captains of the chariots that were with him, saying, Fight ye not with small or great, save only with the king of Israel.

31 And it came to pass, when the captains of the chariots saw Jehoshaphat, that they said, It is the king of Israel. Therefore they compassed about him to fight: but Jehoshaphat cried out, and the LORD helped him; and God moved them to depart from him.

32 For it came to pass, that, when the captains of the chariots perceived that it was not the king of Israel, they turned back again ^vfrom pursuing him.

Verse 31. But Jehoshaphat cried out] "Jehoshaphat cried, and the Word of the Lord brought him assistance." Targum.

See the note on 2 Kings v. 1. for this tradition.

Verse 34. Stayed himself up—against the Syrians] There was a great deal of true personal courage and patriotism in this last act of the king of Israel: he well knew that if his troops found that he was mortally wounded, they would immediately give way, and the battle would not only be lost, but the slaughter would be great in the pursuit; therefore he stayed himself up till the evening, when the termination of the day must necessarily bring the battle to a close: and when this was done, the Israelites found that their king was slain, and so they left the field of battle to their foes. Thus Israel had a great loss, and the Syrians had got a great delivery. Had it not been for this accident, the Syrians had probably been defeated. See the note on 1 Kings xxii. 36.

In the notes referred to above, the quibbling predictions of false prophets, and lying oracles, are mentioned; and several instances given: and the whole account of the lying spirit going forth from the Lord to deceive Ahab particularly considered. See especially the notes as above on verses 19, 23, 34.

The reader should never forget a truth so very frequently occurring in the Bible, that God is repeatedly represented as doing, what in the course of his providence he only permits, to be done.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIX.

Verse 1. Returned to his house in peace] That is, in safety; notwithstanding he had been exposed to a danger so imminent, and from which only the especial mercy of God could have saved him.

Verse 2. Jehu the son of Hanani] We have met with this prophet before: see the note on 1 Kings xv. 7.

Therefore is wrath upon thee] That is, thou deservest to be punished. And who can doubt this, who knows that he did help the ungodly, and did love them that hated Jehovah. And is not the wrath of God upon all those alliances which his people form with the ungodly; whether they be social, matrimonial, commercial, or political?

Verse 4. From Beer-sheba to mount Ephraim] Before the separation of the ten tribes, in speaking of the extent of the land it was said, From Dan to Beer-sheba: but, since that event, the kingdom of Judah was bounded on the south by Beer-sheba, and on the north by the mountains of Ephraim. This shows that Jehoshaphat had gone through all his territories to examine every thing himself, to see that judgment and justice were properly administered among the people.

Verse 6. Take heed what ye do] A very solemn and very necessary caution: judges should feel themselves in the place of God, and judge as those who know they shall be judged for their judgments.

8 T Moreover, in Jerusalem did Jehoshaphat ^m set of the Levites, and of the priests, and of the chief of the fathers of Israel, for the judgment of the LORD, and for controversies, when they returned to Jerusalem.

Verse 8. And for controversies when they returned to Jerusalem.] Who were they that returned to Jerusalem? Some suppose that it means Jehoshaphat and his courtiers, who returned to Jerusalem after the expedition mentioned ver. 4: but if this were so, or if the text spoke of any person returning to Jerusalem, would not ירושלים Ieyerushalem, to Jerusalem, and not the simple word ירושלים Jerushalem, without the preposition, be used?

Learned men have supposed, with great plausibility, that the word יושבי vaiyashebu, "and they returned," should be written יושבי yoshebey, "the inhabitants;" and that the words should be read, And for the controversies of the inhabitants of Jerusalem. That this was the original reading is very probable from its vestiges in the Vulgate, habitatoribus ejus, "its INHABITANTS:" and in the Septuagint, it is found totidem verbis, Και κρινει τους κατοικοιυντας ey Iegouσαλημ, And to judge the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

There is a clause in chap. xxxiv. 9. where we have a similar mistake in our version, And tutes and judgments, ye shall even warn them that they trespass not against the LORD, and so ^p wrath come upon ^r you, and upon your brethren: this do, and ye shall not trespass.

they returned to Jerusalem, יושבי ירושלים where the false keri, or marginal note, directs it, in opposition to common sense, and ALL the versions, to be read יושבו and they returned, which our translation has unhappily followed.

Verse 10. Between blood and blood] Cases of manslaughter, or accidental murder; or cases of consanguinity, the settlement of inheritance, family claims, &c.

Between law and commandment] Whatsoever concerns the moral precepts, rites, and ceremonies, of the law; or whatsoever belongs to civil affairs.

Verse 11. Behold, Amariah] Here was a twofold jurisdiction, ecclesiastical and civil. In the ecclesiastical court, Amariah the high priest was supreme judge; in the civil court, Zebediah was supreme. To assist both, the Levites were a sort of counsellors.

Without good and wholesome laws, no nation can be prosperous: and vain are the best laws, if they be not judiciously and conscientiously administered. The things of God, and the things of the KING should never be confounded in the administration of justice. Amariah the priest, and Zebadiah the ruler, should ever have their distinct places of jurisdiction.

CHAPTER XX.

The Moabites, Ammonites, and Edomites, invade Judah, 1, 2. Jehoshaphat proclaims a fast, and gathers the people together to seek the Lord, 3, 4. His prayer to God, 5—12. NOTES ON CHAPTER XX.

Verse 1. Children of Ammon, and with them other besides the Ammonites] Here there must be a mistake; for surely the Ammonites are the same as the children of Ammon. Our translators have falsified the text by inserting the words "other besides," which have nothing properly to represent them in the Hebrew. Lit- rally translated, the words are, "And it happened after this, the children of Moab, and the children of Ammon, and with them of the Ammonites:" and thus the Vulgate. The Syriac, which the Arabic follows, has felt the difficulty, and translated, Came together with warlike men to fight, &c. The Septuagint have given it another turn, Και ησαν αυτον ητοιμωμενοι, And that told Jehoshaphat, saying, There cometh a great multitude against thee from beyond the sea on this side Syria; and, behold, they be ^a in Hazazon-tamar, which is ^b En-gedi.

3 And Jehoshaphat feared, and set ^c himself to ^d seek the LORD, and ^e proclaimed a fast throughout all Judah.

4 And Judah gathered themselves together, to ask ^{help} of the LORD: even out of all the cities of Judah they came to seek the LORD.

5 ¶ And Jehoshaphat stood in the congregation of Judah and Jerusalem, in the house of the LORD, before the new court, with them people of the Minaites; which were a people of Arabia Felix, near the Red sea. The Targum has מִימְהוֹן מִן אֶדְוִמָּה Ve-immehon min Adomaei, "And with them some of the Edomites." This is very likely to be the true reading, as we find from ver. 10, 22, 23. that they procured men from mount Seir; and these were the Idumeans, or Edomites. We should, in my opinion, read the text thus: The children of Moab, and the children of Ammon, and with them some of the Edomites.

Verse 2. On this side Syria] Instead of מִיָּאֵם miaram, from Syria, I would read with one of Kennicott's MSS. (89.) מִיָּדוֹם miedom, from Edom; which alteration brings it to truth; and does not require the change of half a letter, as it consists in the almost imperceptible difference between resh and daleth. We do not read of any Syrians in this invasion; but we know there were Edomites, or inhabitants of mount Seir.

Hazazon-tamar] "In the wood of palm trees, that is, in En-gedi." Targum. This is the meaning of the word, and it is probable that they lay hid here.

Verse 3. Jehoshaphat feared] He found that he could not possibly stand against such a numerous army, and therefore could not expect to be delivered except by the strong arm of God. To get this assistance, it was necessary to seek it; and to get such extraordinary help, built thee a sanctuary there—in for thy name, saying,

9 ⁿ If, when evil cometh upon us, as the sword, judgment, or pestilence, or famine, we stand before this house, and in thy presence, (for thy ^o name is in this house,) and cry unto thee in our affliction, then thou wilt hear and help.

10 And now, behold, the children of Ammon, and Moab, and mount Seir, whom thou ^p wouldest not let Israel invade, when they came out of the land of Egypt, but ^r they turned from them, and destroyed them not.

11 Behold, I say, how they reward us, ^s to come to cast us out of thy possession, which thou hast given us to inherit.

12 O our God, wilt thou not ^t judge them? for we have no might against this great company that cometh against us; neither know we what to do; but ^u our eyes are upon thee.

13 And all Judah stood before the LORD, with their little ones, their wives, and their children.

14 ¶ Then upon Jahaziel, the son of Zechariah, the son of Benaiah, the son of Jeiel, the son of Mattaniah, a Le-they should seek it in an extraordinary way; hence he proclaimed a universal fast, and all the people came up to Jerusalem to seek the Lord.

Verse 5. Jehoshaphat stood] What an instructive sight was this! The king who proclaimed the fast, was foremost to observe it; and on this occasion the priest of the people, offering in the congregation, without form or any premeditation, one of the most sensible, pious, correct, [and, as to its composition, one of the most elegant,] prayers, ever offered under the Old Testament dispensation.

Verse 7. Art not thou our God] "Hast not thou, by thy Word, driven out?" Targum.

Verse 8. Therein for thy name] "For the name of thy Word." Targum.

Verse 9. For thy name is in this house] "Thy Majesty is in this house." Several of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. with the Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic, add נִקְרָא nikra, [is invoked;] Thy name is invoked in this house: here thou dwellest, and here thou art worshipped.

Verse 11. They reward us] Six of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. add רָעָה evil: "Behold, they reward us evil." This is also the roading of the Targum.

Lord set against the children of Ammon and Moab ambushments of those who came from mount Seir against Judah; and the children of Ammon and Moab were smitten: but they afterward rose up against the inhabitants of mount Seir, and utterly destroyed them; who, being destroyed, they rose up one against another, and mutually destroyed each other." This is probably the meaning of these verses. Calmet's version is not very different.

Verse 25. Both riches with the dead bodies For מגרים pegarim, dead bodies, בגדים begadim, garments, is the reading of eight MSS. in the collections of Kennicott and De Rossi, and in several ancient editions. None of the versions have dead bodies except the Chaldee. The words might be easily mistaken for each other, as the p pe, if a little faint in the under dot, might easily pass for a b beth; and we know that the v resh, and d daleth, are frequently interchanged, and mistaken for each other, both could carry away: and they were three days in gathering of the spoil, it was so much.

26 ¶ And on the fourth day they assembled themselves in the valley of ° Berachah; for there they blessed the LORD: therefore the name of the same place was called, The valley of Berachah, unto this day.

Verse 33. The high places were not taken away] The idolatry, as we have seen, was universally suppressed; but some of the places where that worship had been performed were not destroyed. Some of them still remained:

CHAPTER XXI.

Jehoram succeeds his father Jehoshaphat; and commences his reign with the murder of his brethren, and of several of the princes of Israel, 1—5. He walks in the way of Ahab, whose bad daughter, Athaliah, he had married, 6. God remembers his covenant with David, and does not destroy the nation, 7. The Edomites revolt, 8—10. Jehoram restores the high places in the mountains of Judah, and greatly corrupts the morals of the people, 11. A letter comes to him from Elijah, 12—15. The Philistines and Arabians come up against him; pillage his house, take away his wives, and all his sons, except Jehoahaz, 16, 17. He is smitten with an incurable disease in his bowels: of which, in two years, he dies miserably, after a profligate reign of eight years. 18—20.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXI.

Verse 2. And he had brethren—the sons of Jehoshaphat, king of Israel. Jehoshaphat certainly was not king of Israel, but king of Judah. יִשְׂרָאֵל Yishrael, must be a corruption in the text, for יְהוּדָה Yehudah; which is the reading of the Syriac, Arabic, Septuagint, and Vulgate: the Chaldee, only, agrees with the Hebrew text. And the reading of the versions is supported by thirty-eight of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. The word Judah should, therefore, be restored to the text.

Verse 3. The kingdom gave he to Jehoram He made him copartner with himself in the kingdom about three years before his death; so that he reigned only five years after the death of his father Jehoshaphat. See the notes on 2 Kings viii. 16, &c. and on the same, chap. i. 17. where an attempt is made to settle this disturbed chronology.

Verse 4. Slew all his brethren What a truly diabolic thing is the lust of power! it destroys all the charities of life; and renders those who are under its influence the truest resemblants of the arch fiend. That he might sit the more secure upon his throne, this execrable man imbrues his hands in the blood of his own brothers! There are more instances of this species of cruelty among bad Asiatic kings than among any other class of men. The history of Verse 6. He had the daughter of Ahab to wife This was Athaliah, daughter of Ahab and Jezebel, who was famous for her impieties and cruelty, as was her most profligate mother. It is likely that she was the principal cause of Jehoram's cruelty and profaneness.

Verse 7. To give a light to him To give him a descendant.

Verse 8. In his days the Edomites revolted See on 2 Kings viii. 21.

Verse 11. To commit fornication That is, to serve idols. The Israelites were considered as joined to Jehovah, as a woman is joined to her husband; when she associates with other men, this is adultery; when they served other gods, this was called by the same name; it was adultery against Jehovah. This is frequently the only meaning of the terms adultery and fornication, in the Scriptures.

Verse 12. There came a writing to him from Elijah the prophet From 2 Kings ii. 11. it is evident that Elijah had been translated in the reign of Jehoshaphat, the father of Jehoram. How then could he send a letter to the son? Some say he sent it from heaven by an angel; others, that, by the spirit of prophecy, he foresaw this defection of Jehoram, and left the letter with Elisha, to be sent to him when this defection should take place; others say that Elijah is put here for Elisha; and others, that this Elijah was not the same that was translated, but another prophet of the same name. There are others who think that, as Elijah was still in the body, for he did not die, but was translated, he sent this letter from that secret place in which he was hidden by the Almighty. All the versions have Elijah, and all the MSS. the same reading. Dr. Kennicott contends that Elisha was the writer; for Elijah had been taken up to heaven thirteen years before the time of this writing. Our margin says, the letter was written before his assumption, and refers to 2 Kings ii. 1.

These are all conjectures; and I could add another to their number, but still we should be where we were. I should adopt the conjecture relative to Elisha, were not every Hebrew MS. and all the oriental versions, against it: to which may be added, that the author of this book does not once mention Elisha in any part of his work. It is certainly a possible case that this writing might have been a prediction of Jehoram's impiety and miserable death, delivered in the time of the prophet, and which was now laid before this wicked king for the first time: and by it the prophet, though not among mortals, still continued to speak. I can see no solid reason against this opinion.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXII.

Verse 1. Made Ahaziah his youngest son king] All the others had been slain by the Arabians, &c.: see the preceding chapter, verse 17.

Verse 2. Forty and two years old was Ahaziah] See the note on 2 Kings viii. 26. Ahaziah might have been twenty-two years old, according to 2 Kings viii. 26. but he could not have been forty-two, as stated here, without being two years older than his own father! See the note there. The Syriac and Arabic have twenty-two; and the Septuagint, in some copies, twenty. And it is very probable that the Hebrew text read so originally; for, when numbers were expressed by single letters, it was easy to mistake p mem, FORTY, for c caph, TWENTY. And if this book was written by a scribe who used the ancient Hebrew letters, now called the Samaritan, the mistake was still more easy and probable; as the difference between c caph, and m mim, is very small; and can, in many cases, be discerned only by an accustomed eye.

fought with Hazael king of Syria. And ⁱ Azariah the son of Jehoram king of Judah went down to see Jehoram the son of Ahab at Jezreel, because he was sick.

7 And the ^j destruction of Ahaziah ^k was of God, by coming to Joram, for, when he was come, he ^l went out with Jehoram against Jehu the son of Nimshi, ^m whom the LORD had anointed to cut off the house of Ahab.

8 And it came to pass, that when Jehu was ⁿ executing judgment upon the house of Ahab, and ^o found the princes of Judah, and the sons of the brethren of Ahaziah, that ministered to Ahaziah, he slew them.

9 ^p And he sought Ahaziah: and they caught him, (for he was hid in Samaria,) and brought him to Jehu; and when they had slain him, they buried him: Because, said they, he ^q is the son of Jehoshaphat, who ^r sought the LORD with all his heart. So the house of Ahaziah had no power to keep still the kingdom.

10 ^s ¶ But when Athaliah, the mother of Ahaziah, saw that her son was dead, she arose and destroyed all the seed royal of the house of Judah.

2 And they went about in Judah, and gathered the Levites out of all the cities of Judah, and the chief of the fathers of Israel, and they came to Jerusalem.

3 And all the congregation made a covenant with the king in the house of God. And he said unto them, Behold, the king's son shall reign, as the LORD hath ^bsaid of the sons of David.

noise of the people running and praising the king, she came to the people into the house of the LORD :

13 And she looked, and, behold, the king stood at his pillar at the entering in, and the princes and the trumpets by the king : and all the people of the land rejoiced, and sounded with trumpets, also the singers with instruments of music, and ¹ such as taught to sing praise. Then Athaliah rent her clothes, and said, ² Treason, Treason.

14 Then Jehoiada the priest brought out the captains of hundreds that were set over the host, and said unto them, Have her forth of the ranges ; and whoso followeth her, let him be slain with the sword. For the priest said, Slay her not in the house of the LORD.

15 So they laid hands on her ; and when she was come to the entering ³ of the horse-gate, by the king's house, they slew her there.

16 ¶ And Jehoiada made a covenant between him, and between all the people, and between the king, that they should be the LORD's people.

17 Then all the people went to the house of Baal, and brake it down, and brake his altars and his images in pieces, and ⁴ slew Mattan the priest of Baal before the altars.

18 Also Jehoiada appointed the offices of the house of the LORD by the hand of the priests the Levites, whom David had ⁵ distributed in the house of the LORD, to offer the burnt-offerings of the LORD, as it is written in the ⁶ law of Moses, with rejoicing and with singing, as it was ordained ⁷ by David.

19 And he set the ⁸ porters at the gates of the house of the LORD, that none which was unclean in any thing should enter in.

20 ⁹ And he took the captains of hundreds, and the nobles, and the governors of the people, and all the people of the land, and brought down the king from the house of the LORD : and they came through the high gate into the king's house, and set the king upon the throne of the kingdom.

21 And all the people of the land rejoiced : and the city was quiet, after that they had slain Athaliah with the sword.

Verse 17. Mattan the priest.] The Targum will not prostitute the term priest, but calls him קומרא kumara, priestling.

Verse 21. The city was quiet.] There was no attempt at a counter-revolution. Concerning the coronation of Joash, there is a curious circumstance mentioned by the Targumist, on ver. 11. It is as follows :

“ And they brought forth the son of the king, and put on him the royal crown, which David took from the head of the king of the children of Ammon. In it was inserted the precious attracting stone, in which was engraven and expressed the great and honourable NAME, [יהוה] which David had placed there by the Holy Spirit ; and it was of the weight of a talent of gold ; it was therefore a testimony to the house of David that no king, who was not of the seed of David, should be able to put it on his head, nor be able to bear its weight. When, therefore, the people saw it placed on the head of Joash, and that he was able to bear this crown, they believed him to be of the seed of David, and immediately constituted him king. Therefore Jehoiada and his sons anointed him, and said, May the king be prosperous in his kingdom !”

The Jews say that this was the crown of the king of the Ammonites ; and that it was always worn afterward by the kings of the house of Judah. See Jarchi on this place.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Joash begins to reign when seven years old, and reigns well all the days of Jehoiada the priest, 1—3. He purposes to repair the temple of God ; and makes a proclamation that the people should bring in the money prescribed by Moses, 4—9. They all contribute liberally ; and the different artificers soon perfect the work, 10—13. The rest of the money is employed to form utensils for the temple, 14. Jehoiada dies, 15, 16. And the people, after his death, become idolaters, 17, 18. Prophets are sent unto them, 19. And among the rest Zechariah, the son of Jehoiada, who testifies against them ; and they stone him to death, 20—22. The Syrians come against Jerusalem, and spoil it, 23, 24. 4 ¶ And it came to pass after this, that Joash was minded^c to repair the house of the LORD.

5 And he gathered together the priests and the Levites, and said to them, Go out unto the cities of Judah, and^d gather of all Israel money to repair the house of your God from year to year, and see that ye hasten the matter. Howbeit the Levites hastened it not.

6^e And the king called for Jehoiada the chief, and said unto him, Why hast thou not required of the Levites to bring in out of Judah and out of Jerusalem the collection, according to the commandment of^f Moses, the servant of the LORD, and of the congregation of Israel, for the^g tabernacle of witness?

7 For^h the sons of Athaliah, that wicked woman, had broken up the house of God; and also all theⁱ dedicated things of the house of the LORD did they bestow upon Baalim.

8 And at the king's commandment^k they made a chest, and set it without at the gate of the house of the LORD.

9 And they made^l a proclamation through Judah and Jerusalem, to bring in to the LORD^m the collection that Moses, the servant of God, laid upon Israel in the wilderness.

10 And all the princes and all the people rejoiced, and brought in, and cast into the chest, until they had made an end.

11 Now it came to pass, that at what time the chest was brought unto the king's office by the hand of the Levites, andⁿ when they saw that there was much money, the king's scribe and the high priest's officer came and emptied the chest, and took it, and carried it to his place again. Thus they did day by day, and gathered money in abundance.

12 And the king and Jehoiada gave it to such as did the work of the service of the house of the LORD, and hired masons and carpenters to repair the house of the LORD, and also such as wrought iron and brass to mend the house of the LORD.

13 So the workmen wrought, and^o the work was perfected by them, and they set the house of God in his state, and strengthened it.

14 And when they had finished it, they brought the rest of the money before the king and Jehoiada, ^pwhereof were made vessels for the house of the LORD, even vessels to minister, and^q to offer withal, and spoons, and vessels of gold and silver. And they offered burnt-offerings in the house of the LORD continually all the days of Jehoiada.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXIV.

Verse 1. Joash was seven years old] As he was hidden six years in the temple, and was but seven when he came to the throne, he could have been but one year old when he was secreted by his aunt: see on chap. xxii. 10.

Verse 4. To repair the house of the LORD.] During the reigns of Joram and Athaliah, the temple of God had been pillaged to enrich that of Baal, and the whole structure permitted to fall into decay: see ver. 7.

Verse 5. Gather of all Israel money] As the temple was the property of the whole nation, and the services performed in it were for the salvation of the people at large, it was right that each should come forward on an occasion of this kind, and lend a helping hand. This is the first instance of such a general collection for building or repairing a house of God.

From year to year] It must have been in a state of great dilapidation, when it required such annual exertions to bring it into a thorough state of repair.

Verse 6. The collection—of Moses] This was the poll-tax fixed by Moses, of half a shekel, which was levied off every man from twenty years old and upwards; and which was considered as a ransom for their souls, that there might be no plague among them. See Exod. xxx. 12-14.

Verse 16. They buried him—among the kings] He had, in fact, been king in Judah; for Joash, who appears to have been a weak man, was always under his tutelage. Jehoiada governed the state in the name of the king; and his being buried among the kings is a proof of the high estimation he was in among the people.

Verse 17. The princes of Judah—made obeisance to the king.] I believe the Targum has given the true sense of this verse: “After the death of Jehoiada, the great men of Judah came and adored King Joash, and seduced him; and then the king received from them their idols.”

Verse 20. And the Spirit of God came upon Zechariah] “When he saw the transgression of the king and of the people, burning incense to an idol in the house of the sanctuary of the Lord, on the day of expiation; and preventing the priests of the Lord from offering the burnt-offerings, sacrifices, daily oblations, and services, as written in the book of the law of Moses; he stood above the people, and said.” Targum.

Verse 21. Stoned him—at the commandment of the king] What a most wretched and con-and ^zstoned him with stones at the commandment of the king, in the court of the house of the LORD.

22 Thus Joash the king remembered not the kindness which Jehoiada his father had done to him, but slew his son. And when he died, he said, The LORD look upon it, and require it.

23 ¶ And it came to pass ^aat the end of the year, that ^bthe host of Syria came up against him; and they came to Judah and Jerusalem, and destroyed all the princes of the people from among the people, and sent all the spoil of them unto the king of ^cDamascus.

24 For the army of the Syrians ^dcame with a small company of men, and the LORD ^edelivered a very great host into their hand, because they had forsaken the LORD God of their fathers. So they ^fexecuted judgment against Joash.

25 And when they were departed from him, (for they left him in great diseases,) ^ghis own servants conspired against him for the blood of the ^hsons of Jehoiada the priest, and slew him on his bed, and he died: and they buried him in the city of David, but they buried him not in the sepulchres of the kings.

temptible man was this, who could imbrue his hands in the blood of a prophet of God, and the son of the man who had saved him from being murdered, and raised him to the throne! Alas, alas! Can even kings forget benefits? But when a man falls from God, the devil enters into him; and then he is capable of every species of cruelty.

Verse 22. The LORD look upon it, and require it.] And so he did; for, at the end of that year, the Syrians came against Judah, destroyed all the princes of the people, sent their spoils to Damascus; and Joash, the murderer of the prophet, the son of his benefactor, was himself murdered by his own servants. Here was a most signal display of the divine retribution.

On the subject of the death of this prophet the reader is requested to refer to the note on Matt. xxiii. 34, 35.

Verse 26. These are they that conspired against him] The two persons here mentioned were certainly not Jews; the mother of one was an Ammonitess, and the mother of the other was a Moabitess. Who their fathers were we know not; they were probably foreigners and

It has been, and is still, the folly of kings to have foreigners for their valets, and most confidential servants; and they have often been the causes of murders, and treacheries of different kinds. Foreigners should be banished from the person of the sovereign by strong and efficient laws: even in this country they have often been the cause of much political wo.

Written in the story מדרש midrash, the commentary, of the Book of Kings. We have met with this before; but these works are all lost, except the extracts found in Kings, Chronicles, and Ezra. These abridgments were the cause of the neglect, and finally of the destruction, of the originals. This has been often the case in works of great consequence. Trogus Pompeius wrote a general history of the world, which he brought down to the reign of Augustus, in forty-four volumes. Justin abridged them into one volume, and the original is lost.

CHAPTER XXV.

Amaziah succeeds his father Joash, and begins his reign well, 1, 2. He slays his father's murderers, but spares their children, 3, 4. He reviews and remodels the army, 5. And hires a hundred thousand soldiers out of Israel; whom, on the exhortation of a prophet, he sends home again, without bringing them into active service, at which they are greatly offended, 6—10. He attacks the Syrians, kills ten thousand, and takes ten thousand prisoners, whom he precipitates from the top of a rock, so that they are dashed to pieces, 11, 12. The Israelitish soldiers sent back, ravage several of the cities of Judah, 13. Amaziah becomes an idolater, 14. Is reproved by a prophet; whom he threatens and obliges to desist, 15, 16. He challenges Joash king of Israel, 17. Who reproves him by a parable, 17—19. Not desisting, the armies meet, the Jews are overthrown, Amaziah taken prisoner by Joash, who ravages the temple, and takes away all the treasures of the king, 20—24. The reign of Amaziah; a conspiracy is formed against him; he flies to Lachish, whither he is pursued and slain; is brought to Jerusalem, and buried with his fathers, 25—28.

last, when he departed from the right way before the Lord: are they not written," &c.

Verse 27. Made a conspiracy] He no doubt became very unpopular after having lost the battle with the Israelites; the consequence of which was the dismantling of Jerusalem, and the seizure of the royal treasures, with several other evils. It is likely that the last fifteen years of his reign were greatly embittered; so that finding the royal city to be no place of safety, he endeavoured to secure himself at Lachish; but all in vain, for thither his murderers pursued him; and he who forsook the Lord, was forsaken by every friend, perished in his gainsaying, and came to an untimely end.

CHAPTER XXVI.

Uzziah, the son of Amaziah, succeeds; and begins his reign piously and prosperously, which continued during the life of Zechariah the prophet, 1-5. He fights successfully against the Philistines, takes and dismantles some of their chief cities, 6. Prevails over the Arabians and Meunims, 7. And brings the Ammonites under tribute, 8. He fortifies Jerusalem, and builds towers in different parts of the country, and delights in husbandry, 9, 10. An account of his military strength, warlike instruments, and machines, 11-15. He is elated with his prosperity, invades the priest's office, and is smitten with the leprosy, 16-20. He is obliged to abdicate the regal office, and dwell apart from the people, his son Jotham acting as regent, 21. His death and burial, 22, 23.

8 And the Ammonites ¹ gave gifts to Uzziah: and his name ^k spread abroad even to the entering in of Egypt; for he strengthened himself exceedingly.

9 ¶ Moreover, Uzziah built towers in Jerusalem at the ¹ corner-gate, and at the valley-gate, and at the turning of the wall, and ^m fortified them.

10 Also he built towers in the desert, and ⁿ digged many wells: for he had much cattle, both in the low country, and in the plains; husbandmen also, and vine-dressers in the mountains, and in ^o Carmel: for he loved ^p husbandry.

11 ¶ Moreover, Uzziah had a host of fighting men, that went out to war by bands, according to the number of their account by the hand of Jeiel the scribe, and Maaseiah the ruler, under the hand of Hananiah, one of the king's captains.

this was we know not, but by the character that is given of him here. He was wise in the visions of God, in giving the true interpretation of divine prophecies. He was probably the tutor of Uzziah.

Verse 7. And God helped him] “And the Word of the Lord helped him against the Philistines, and against the Arabians who lived in Gerar, and the plains of Meun.” Targum. These are supposed to be the Arabs which are called the Meuneons, or Munites, or Meonites.

Verse 8. The Ammonites gave gifts] Paid an annual tribute.

Verse 10. Built towers in the desert] For the defence of his flocks, and his shepherds and husbandmen.

And in Carmel] Calmet remarks that there were two Carmels in Judea: one in the tribe of Judah, where Nabal lived; and the other on the coast of the Mediterranean sea, near to Kishon: and both fertile in vines.

He loved husbandry.] This is a perfection in a king: on husbandry every state depends. Let their trade or commerce be what they may, there can be no true national prosperity if agriculture do not prosper; for the king himself is served by the field. When, therefore, the king of a country encourages agriculture, an emulation is excited among his subjects; the science is cultivated; and the earth yields its proper increase: then, should trade and commerce fail, the people cannot be reduced to wretchedness, because there is plenty of bread.

Verse 14. Shields, and spears] He prepared a vast number of military weapons to have 12 The whole number of the chief of the fathers of the mighty men of valour were two thousand and six hundred.

13 And under their hand was ^r an army, three hundred thousand, and seven thousand and five hundred, that made war with mighty power, to help the king against the enemy.

14 And Uzziah prepared for them, throughout all the host, shields, and spears, and helmets, and habergeons, and bows, and ^s slings to cast stones.

15 And he made in Jerusalem engines, invented by cunning men, to be on the towers, and upon the bulwarks, to shoot arrows and great stones withal. And his name ^t spread far abroad; for he was marvellously helped, till he was strong.

16 ¶ But ^u when he was strong, his heart was ^v lifted up to his destruction: for he transgressed against the LORD his God, and ^w went into the temple of the LORD to burn incense ready to put into the hands of his subjects on any exigency.

Verse 15. Engines—to shoot arrows and great stones] The Targum says, “He made in Jerusalem ingenious instruments, and little hollow towers, to stand upon the towers and upon the bastions, for the shooting of arrows, and projecting of great stones.”

This is the very first intimation on record of any warlike engines for the attack or defence of besieged places: and this account is long prior to any thing of the kind among either the Greeks or Romans. Previously to such inventions, the besieged could be only starved out; and hence sieges were very long and tedious. Shalmanezar consumed three years before such an inconsiderable place as Samaria, 2 Kings xvii. 5, 6. Sardanapalus maintained himself in Nineveh for seven years, because the besiegers had no engines proper for the attack and destruction of walls, &c.; and it is well known that Troy sustained a siege of ten years, the Greeks not possessing any machine of the kind here referred to. The Jews alone were the inventors of such engines; and the invention took place in the reign of Uzziah, about eight hundred years before the Christian era. It is no wonder that, in consequence of this, his name spread far abroad, and struck terror into his enemies.

Verse 16. He transgressed against the LORD] “He sinned against the Word of the Lord his God.” Targum.

18 And they withstood Uzziah the king, and said unto him, It ^v appertaineth not unto thee, Uzziah, to burn incense unto the LORD, but to the ^zpriests the sons of Aaron, that are consecrated to burn incense: go out of the sanctuary; for thou hast trespassed; neither shall it be for thine honour from the LORD God.

19 Then Uzziah was wroth, and had a censer in his hand to burn incense; and, while he was wroth with the priests, ^athe leprosy even rose up in his forehead before the priests in the house of the LORD, from beside the incense-altar.

20 And Azariah the chief priest, and all the priests, looked upon him, and,

Verse 23. They buried him—in the field of the burial] As he was a leper, he was not permitted to be buried in the common burial-place of the kings; as it was supposed that even a place of sepulture must be defiled by the body of one who had died of this most afflictive and dangerous malady.

Written in the book of the kings, &c.] There is not so much found in the Books of Kings which we have now, as in this place of the Chronicles. In both places we have abridged accounts only: the larger histories have long been lost. The reign of Jotham was properly the last politically prosperous reign among the Jews. Hezekiah and Josiah did much to preserve the divine worship; but Judah continued to be cut short, till at last it was wholly ruined.

5 Wherefore ^s the LORD his God delivered him into the hand of the king of Syria; and they ^h smote him, and carried away a great multitude of them captives, and brought them to ¹ Damascus. And he was also delivered into the hand of the king of Israel, who smote him with a great slaughter.

6 For ^k Pekah the son of Remaliah slew in Judah a hundred and twenty thousand in one day, which were all ¹ valiant men; because they had forsaken the LORD God of their fathers.

7 And Zichri, a mighty man of Ephraim, slew Maaseiah the king's son, and Azrikam the governor of the house, and Elkanah that was ^m next to the king.

8 ¶ And the children of Israel carried away captive of their ⁿ brethren two hundred thousand, women, sons, and daughters, and took also away much spoil from them, and brought the spoil to Samaria.

9 But a prophet of the LORD was there, whose name was Oded; and he went out before the host that came to Samaria, and said unto them, Behold, ^o because the LORD God of your fathers was wroth with Judah, he hath delivered them into your hand, and ye have slain them in a rage that ^p reacheth up unto heaven.

10 And now ye purpose to keep under the children of Judah and Jerusalem for ^r bondmen and bondwomen unto you: but are there not with you,

Verse 5. Delivered him into the hand of the king of Syria] To understand these passages the reader will be pleased to refer to 2 Kings xvi. 5, &c. and to the notes there.

Verse 6. A hundred and twenty thousand] It is very probable that there is a mistake in this number. It is hardly possible that a hundred and twenty thousand men could have been slain in one day: yet all the versions and MSS. agree in this number. The whole people seem to have been given up into the hands of their enemies.

Verse 9. But a prophet of the LORD—whose name was Oded] To this beautiful speech nothing can be added by the best comment; it is simple, humane, pious, and overwhelmingly convincing: no wonder it produced the effect mentioned here. That there was much of humanity in the heads of the children of Ephraim, even with you, sins against the LORD your God?

11 Now hear me therefore, and deliver the captives again, which ye have taken captive of your brethren; ^s for the fierce wrath of the LORD is upon you.

12 Then certain of the heads of the children of Ephraim, Azariah the son of Johanan, Berechiah the son of Meshillemoth, and Jehizkiah the son of Shalum, and Amasa the son of Hadlai, stood up against them that came from the war,

13 And said unto them, Ye shall not bring in the captives hither: for whereas we have offended against the LORD already, ye intend to add more to our sins and to our trespass: for our trespass is great, and there is fierce wrath against Israel.

14 So the armed men left the captives and the spoil before the princes and all the congregation.

15 And the men ^t which were expressed by name rose up, and took the captives, and with the spoil clothed all that were naked among them, and arrayed them, and shod them, and ^u gave them to eat and to drink, and anointed them, and carried all the feeble of them upon asses, and brought them to Jericho, ^v the city of palm trees, to their brethren: then they returned to Samaria.

16 ¶ ^w At that time did King Abaz send unto the kings of Assyria to help him.

17 For again the Edomites had come who joined with the prophet on this occasion, the fifteenth verse sufficiently proves. They did not barely dismiss these most unfortunate captives, but they took that very spoil which their victorious army had brought away; and they clothed, fed, shod, and anointed these distressed people, set the feeblest of them upon asses, and escorted them safely to Jericho! We can scarcely find a parallel to this in the universal history of the wars which savage man has carried on against his fellows, from the foundation of the world.

After verse 15, the 23d, 24th, and 25th verses are introduced before the 16th, in the Syriac and Arabic: and the 22d verse is wholly wanting in both, though some of the expressions may be found in the 21st verse.

Verse 23. He sacrificed unto the gods of Damascus, which smote him.] This passage, says Mr. Hallet, greatly surprised me; for the sacred historian himself is here represented as saying, The gods of Damascus had smitten Ahaz. But it is impossible to suppose that an inspired author could say this; for the Scripture every where represents the heathen idols as nothing and vanity, and as incapable of doing either good or hurt. All difficulty is avoided if we follow the old Hebrew copies, from which the Greek translation was made, Και απην ο βασιλευς Αχαζ, εκζητησα τους Θεους Δαμασκου, τους τυττοντας με, And King Ahaz said, I will seek to the gods of Damascus which said, Because the gods of the kings of Syria help them, therefore will I sacrifice to them, that ^e they may help me. But they were the ruin of him, and of all Israel.

24 And Ahaz gathered together the vessels of the house of God, and cut in pieces the vessels of the house of God, and shut up the doors of the house of the LORD, and he made him altars in every corner of Jerusalem.

25 And in every several city of Judah he made high places ^z to burn incense unto other gods, and provoked to anger the LORD God of his fathers.

26 ¶ ^h Now the rest of his acts, and of all his ways, first and last, behold, they are written in the book of the kings of Judah and Israel.

27 And Ahaz slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the city, even in Jerusalem: but they brought him not into the sepulchres of the kings of Israel: and Hezekiah his son reigned in his stead.

HAVE SMITTEN ME; and then it follows, both in Hebrew and Greek, He said moreover, Because the gods of the king of Syria help them; therefore will I sacrifice to them, that they may help me. Both the Syriac and Arabic give it a similar turn; and say that Ahaz sacrificed to the gods of Damascus, and said, Ye are my gods and lords; you will I worship, and to you will I sacrifice.

Verse 24. Shut up the doors.] He caused the divine worship to be totally suspended; and they continued shut till the beginning of the reign of Hezekiah, one of whose first acts was to reopen them, and thus to restore the divine worship, chap. xxix. 3.

Verse 27. The kings of Israel.] It is a common thing for the writer of this book to put Israel for Judah. He still considers them as one people, because proceeding from one stock. The versions and MSS. have the same reading with the Hebrew: the matter is of little importance, and with this interpretation none can mistake.

CHAPTER XXIX.

Hezekiah's good reign, 1, 2. He opens and repairs the doors of the temple, 3. He assembles and exhorts the priests and Levites, and proposes to renew their covenant with the Lord, 4—11. They all sanctify themselves, and cleanse the temple, 12—17. They inform the king of their progress, 18, 19. He collects the rulers of the people; and they offer abundance of sin-offerings and burnt-offerings, and worship the Lord, 20—30. Every part of the divine service is arranged, and Hezekiah and all the people rejoice, 31—36.

3. ¶ He, in the first year of his reign, in the first month, ^c opened the doors of the house of the LORD, and repaired them.

4 And he brought in the priests and the Levites, and gathered them together into the east street,

5 And said unto them, Hear me, ye Levites, ^d sanctify now yourselves, and sanctify the house of the LORD God of your fathers, and carry forth the filthiness out of the holy place.

6 For our fathers have trespassed, and done that which was evil in the eyes of the LORD our God, and have forsaken him, and have ^e turned away their faces from the habitation of the LORD, and ^f turned their backs.

7 ^g Also they have shut up the doors of the porch, and put out the lamps, and have not burned incense, nor offered burnt-offerings in the holy place, unto the God of Israel.

8 Wherefore the ^h wrath of the LORD was upon Judah and Jerusalem, and he hath delivered them to ⁱ trouble, to astonishment, and to ^k hissing, as ye see with your eyes.

10 Now it is in mine heart to make ^m a covenant with the LORD God of Israel, that his fierce wrath may turn away from us.

11 My sons, ⁿ be not now negligent: for the LORD hath ^o chosen you to stand before him, to serve him, and that ye should minister unto him, and ^p burn incense.

12 ¶ Then the Levites arose, Mahath the son of Amasai, and Joel the son of Azariah, of the sons of the Kohathites: and of the sons of Merari; Kish the son of Abdi, and Azariah the son of Jehalelel: and of the Gershonites; Joah the son of Zimmah, and Eden the son of Joah:

13 And of the sons of Elizaphan; Shimri, and Jeiel: and of the sons of Asaph; Zechariah, and Mattaniah:

14 And of the sons of Heman; Jehiel, and Shimei: and of the sons of Jeduthun; Shemaiah, and Uzziel.

15 And they gathered their brethren, and ^r sanctified themselves, and came, according to the commandment of the king, ^s by the words of the LORD, ^t to cleanse the house of the LORD.

16 And the priests went into the inner part of the house of the LORD, to cleanse it, and brought out all the uncleanness that they found in the temple of the LORD into the court of the house of the LORD. And the Levites took it, to carry it out abroad into the brook Kidron.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXIX.

Verse 2. He did that which was right] See the note on 2 Kings xviii. 3.

Verse 8. He hath delivered them to trouble, to astonishment] He probably refers here chiefly to that dreadful defeat by the Israelites, in which a hundred and twenty thousand were slain, and two hundred thousand taken prisoners: see the preceding chapter, ver. 6, 8.

Verse 10. To make a covenant] To renew the covenant under which the whole people were constantly considered, and of which circumcision was the sign; and the spirit of which was, I will be your God—Ye shall be my people.

Verse 16. And the priests went] The priests and Levites cleansed first the courts both of the priests and of the people. On this labour they spent eight days. Then they cleansed the interior of the temple; but as the Levites had no right to enter the temple, the priests carried all the dirt and rubbish to the porch, whence they were collected by the Levites, carried away, and cast into the brook Kidron: in this work eight days were occupied, and thus the temple was purified in sixteen days.

Verse 17. On the first day] “They began the first day of the first month Nisan.” Targum.

to the porch of the LORD ;
so they sanctified the house of the LORD in eight days ;
and in the sixteenth day of the first month they made an end.

18 Then they went in to Hezekiah the king, and said, We have cleansed all the house of the LORD, and the altar of burnt-offering, with all the vessels thereof, and the show-bread table, with all the vessels thereof.

19 Moreover, all the vessels, which King Ahaz in his reign did ^u cast away in his transgression, have we prepared and sanctified, and, behold, they are before the altar of the LORD.

20 ¶ Then Hezekiah the king rose early, and gathered the rulers of the city, and went up to the house of the LORD.

21 And they brought seven bullocks, and seven rams, and seven lambs, and seven he-goats, for a ^v sin-offering for the kingdom, and for the sanctuary, and for Judah. And he commanded the priests the sons of Aaron to offer them on the altar of the LORD.

22 So they killed the bullocks, and the priests received the blood, and ^w sprinkled it on the altar: likewise, when they had killed the rams, they sprinkled the blood upon the altar: they killed also the lambs, and they sprinkled the blood upon the altar.

23 And they brought ^x forth the he-goats for the sin-offering before the king and the congregation; and they laid their ^y hands upon them:

24 And the priests killed them, and they made reconciliation with their blood upon the altar, ^z to make an atonement for all Israel; for the king commanded that the burnt-offering and the sin-offering should be made for all Israel.

25 ^a And he set the Levites in the house of the LORD with cymbals, with psalteries, and with harps, ^b according to the commandment of David, and of ^c Gad the king's seer, and Nathan the prophet: ^d for so was the commandment ^e of the LORD ^f by his prophets.

26 And the Levites stood with the instruments ^g of David, and the priests with ^h the trumpets.

27 And Hezekiah commanded to offer the burnt-offering upon the altar. And ⁱ when the burnt-offering began, ^k the song of the LORD began also with the trumpets, and with the ^l instruments ordained by David king of Israel.

Verse 19. All the vessels which King Ahaz] The Targum says, "All the vessels which King Ahaz had polluted and rendered abominable by strange idols, when he reigned in his transgression against the Word of the Lord, we have collected and hidden; and others have we prepared to replace them; and they are now before the Lord."

Verse 21. They brought seven bullocks, &c.] This was more than the law required, see Levit. iv. 13, &c. It ordered one calf or ox, for the sins of the people; and one he-goat for the sins of the prince: but Hezekiah here offers many more. And the reason appears sufficiently evident: the law speaks only of sins of ignorance; but here there were sins of every kind, and every die, idolatry, apostasy from the divine worship, profanation of the temple, &c. &c. The sin-offerings, we are informed, were offered, first, for the kingdom, for the transgressions of the king and his family; secondly, for the sanctuary, which had been defiled and polluted; and for the priests, who had been profane, negligent, and unholly: and, finally, for JUDAH, for the whole mass of the people, who had been led away into every kind of abomination by the above examples.

Verse 23. They laid their hands upon them]

That is, they confessed their sin; and as they had by their transgression forfeited their lives, they now offer these animals to die, as vicarious offerings: their life to be taken for the life of their owners.

Verse 25. With cymbals, with psalteries] Moses had not appointed any musical instruments to be used in the divine worship; there was nothing of the kind under the first tabernacle. The trumpets, or horns, then used, were not for song, nor for praise: but, as we use bells, to give notice to the congregation of what they were called to perform, &c. But David did certainly introduce many instruments of music into God's worship, for which we have already seen he was solemnly reproved by the prophet Amos, chap. vi. 1—6. Here, however, the author of this book states, he had the commandment of the prophet Nathan, and Gad, the king's seer; and this is stated to have been the commandment of the Lord by his prophets: but the Syriac and Arabic give this a different turn: "Hezekiah appointed the Levites in the house of the Lord, with instruments of music, and the sound of harps, and with the hymns of David, and the hymns of Gad, the king's prophet, and of Nathan, the king's prophet: for David sang the praises of the Lord his God as from the

28 And all the congregation worshipped, and the singers sang, and the trumpets sounded: and all this continued until the burnt-offering was finished.

29 And when they had made an end of offering, ^a the king and all that were ^o present with him bowed themselves, and worshipped.

30 Moreover, Hezekiah the king and the princes commanded the Levites to sing praise unto the LORD with the words of David, and of Asaph the seer. And they sang praises with gladness, and they bowed their heads and worshipped.

31 Then Hezekiah answered and said, Now ye have ^p consecrated yourselves unto the LORD, come near and bring sacrifices and ^r thank-offerings into the house of the LORD. And the congregation brought in sacrifices and thank-offerings; and as many as were of a free heart, burnt-offerings.

32 And the number of the burnt-offerings, which the congregation brought, was threescore and ten bullocks, a hundred rams, and two hundred lambs: all these were for a burnt-offering to the LORD.

33 And the consecrated things were six hundred oxen, and three thousand sheep.

34 But the priests were too few, so that they could not slay all the burnt-offerings: wherefore ^t their brethren the Levites ^u did help them, till the work was ended, and until the other priests had sanctified themselves; ^v for the Levites were more ^v upright in heart to sanctify themselves than the priests.

35 And also the burnt-offerings were in abundance, with ^w the fat of the peace-offerings, and ^x the drink-offerings for every burnt-offering. So the service of the house of the LORD was set in order.

36 And Hezekiah rejoiced, and all the people, that God had prepared the people: for the thing was done suddenly.

mouth of the prophets." It was by the hand or commandment of the Lord and his prophets that the Levites should praise the Lord; for so the Hebrew text may be understood: and it was by the order of David that so many instruments of music should be introduced into the divine service. But were it even evident, which it is not, either from this or any other place in the Sacred Writings, that instruments of music were prescribed by divine authority under the law, could this be adduced with any semblance of reason, that they ought to be used in Christian worship? No; the whole spirit, soul, and genius, of the Christian religion are against this: and those who know the church of God best, and what constitutes its genuine spiritual state, know that these things have been introduced as a substitute for the life and power of religion; and that where they prevail most, there is least of the power of Christianity. Away with such portentous baubles from the worship of that infinite Spirit who requires his followers to worship him in spirit and in truth; for to no such worship are those instruments friendly. See the texts in the margin; see the use of trumpets in the sanctuary, Numb. x. 2. &c. and the notes there.

Verse 34. They could not slay all the burnt-offerings. Peace-offerings, and such like, the Levites might slay and dress; but the whole burnt-offerings, that is, those which were entirely consumed on the altar, could be touched only by the priests, unless in a case of necessity, such as is mentioned here.

The Levites were more upright in heart. The priests seem to have been very backward in this good work; the Levites were more ready to help forward this glorious reformation. Why the former should have been so backward is not easy to tell; but it appears to have been the fact. Indeed it often happens that the higher orders of the priesthood are less concerned for the prosperity of true religion than the lower. Why is this? They are generally too busy about worldly things, or too much satisfied with secular emoluments. A rich priesthood is not favourable either to the spread, or depth of religion. Earthly gratifications are often put in the place of divine influences: it is almost a miracle to see a very rich man deeply interested in behalf either of his own soul, or the souls of others.

Verse 36. And Hezekiah rejoiced. Both he and the people rejoiced that God had prepared the hearts of the people to bring about so great a reformation in so short a time: for it is added, the thing was done suddenly. The king's example and influence were here, under God, the grand spring of all those mighty and effectual movements. What amazing power and influence has God lodged with kings! They can sway a whole empire nearly as they please: and when they declare themselves in behalf of religion, they have the people uniformly on their side.

CHAPTER XXX.

Hezekiah invites all Israel and Judah, and writes letters to Ephraim and Manasseh, to come up to Jerusalem, and hold a passover to the Lord, 1—4. The posts go out with the king's proclamation from Dan to Beer-sheba, and pass from city to city, through the coasts of Ephraim, Manasseh, and Zebulun; but are generally mocked in Israel, 5—10. Yet several of Asher, Manasseh, and Zebulun, humble themselves, and come to Jerusalem, 11. But in Judah they are all of one heart, 12, 13. They take away the idolatrous altars, kill the passover, sprinkle the blood, and, as circumstances would permit, sanctify the people, 14, 15. Many having eaten of the passover, who were not purified according to the law, Hezekiah prays for, and the Lord accepts his prayer, and heals them, 16—20. Hezekiah exhorts them; and they hold the feast seven additional days, fourteen in all, and the people greatly rejoice, 21—25. The priests and the Levites bless the people, and God accepts their prayers and thanksgivings, 27.

AND Hezekiah sent to all Israel and Judah, and wrote letters also to Ephraim and Manasseh, that they should come to the house of the LORD at Jerusalem, to keep the passover unto the LORD God of Israel.

2 For the king had taken counsel, and his princes, and all the congregation in Jerusalem, to keep the passover in the second ^a month.

3 For they could not keep it ^b at that time, ^c because the priests had not sanctified themselves sufficiently, neither had the people gathered themselves together to Jerusalem.

4 And the thing ^d pleased the king and all the congregation.

5 So they established a decree to make proclamation throughout all Israel, from Beer-sheba even to Dan, that they should come to keep the passover unto the LORD God of Israel at Jerusalem: for they had not done it of a long time in such sort as it was written.

6 So the posts went with the letters ^e from the king and his princes throughout all Israel and Judah, and according to the commandment of the king; saying, Ye children of Israel, ^f turn again unto the LORD God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, and he will return to the remnant of you that are escaped out of the hand of ^g the kings of Assyria.

7 And be ye not ^h like your fathers, and like your brethren, which trespassed against the LORD God of their fathers, who therefore ⁱ gave them up to desolation, as ye see.

8 Now ^k be ye not ^l stiff-necked, as your fathers were, but ^m yield yourselves unto the LORD, and enter into his sanctuary, which he hath sanctified for ever: and serve the LORD your God, ⁿ that the fierceness of his wrath may turn away from you.

9 For if ye turn again unto the LORD, your brethren and your children shall find ^o compassion before them that lead them captive, so that they shall come again into this land: for the LORD your God is ^p gracious and merciful, and will not turn away his face from you, if ye ^r return unto him.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXX.

Verse 1. [Hezekiah sent to all Israel] It is not easy to find out how this was permitted by the king of Israel: but it is generally allowed that Hosea, who then reigned over Israel, was one of their best kings. And as the Jews allow that at this time both the golden calves had been carried away by the Assyrians, that at Dan by Tiglath-pileser, and that at Beth-el by Shalmanezar, the people who chose to worship Jehovah at Jerusalem were freely permitted to do it, and Hezekiah had encouragement to make the proclamation in question.

Verse 2. [In the second month] In Iyar, as they could not celebrate it in Nisan, the fourteenth of which month was the proper time. But as they could not complete the purgation of the temple till the sixteenth of that month, therefore they were obliged to hold it now, or else adjourn it till the next year, which would have been fatal to that spirit of reformation which had now taken place. The law itself had given permission to those who were at a distance, and could not attend on the fourteenth of the first month, and to those who were accidentally defiled, and ought not to attend, to celebrate the passover on the fourteenth of the second month, see Numb. ix. 10, 11. Hezekiah, therefore, and his counsellors, thought that they might extend that to the people at large, (because of the delay necessarily occasioned by the cleansing of the temple,) which was granted to individuals in such cases as the above: and the result showed that they had not mistaken the mind of the Lord upon the subject.

Verse 6. [So the posts went] רצים ratsim, the runners, or couriers; persons who were usually employed to carry messages; men who were light of foot, and confidential.

and Manasseh even unto Zebulun: but ^s they laughed them to scorn, and mocked them.

11 Nevertheless, ^t divers of Asher, and Manasseh, and of Zebulun, humbled themselves, and came to Jerusalem.

12 Also in Judah ^u the hand of God was to give them one heart to do the commandment of the king and of the princes, ^v by the word of the LORD.

13 ¶ And there assembled at Jerusalem much people to keep the feast of unleavened bread in the second month, a very great congregation.

14 And they arose, and took away the ^w altars that were in Jerusalem, and all the altars for incense took they away, and cast them into the brook Kidron.

15 Then they killed the passover on the fourteenth day of the second month: and the priests and the Levites were ^x ashamed, and sanctified themselves, and brought in the burnt-offerings into the house of the LORD.

16 And they stood in ^y their place after their manner, according to the law of Moses the man of God: the priests sprinkled the blood, which they received of the hand of the Levites.

17 For there were many in the congregation that were not sanctified; ^z therefore the Levites had the charge of the killing of the passovers for every one that was not clean, to sanctify them unto the LORD.

encouragement which this prudent and pious king gave. It is a fine and expressive character given to these men, "They taught the good knowledge of God to the people." soon were all these bright prospects beclouded for ever!

It is not for want of holy resolutions, and heavenly influences, that men are not saved, but through their own unsteadiness; they do not persevere, they forget the necessity of continuing in prayer, and thus the Holy Spirit is grieved, departs from them, and leaves them to their own darkness and hardness of heart. When we consider the heavenly influences which many receive who draw back to perdition, and the good fruits which for a time they bore; it is blasphemy to say they had no genuine or saving grace. They had it, they showed it, they trifled with it, and sinned against it, and therefore are lost.

CHAPTER XXXI.

The people destroy all traces of idolatry through Judah, Benjamin, Ephraim, and Manasseh, 1. Hezekiah reforms the state of religion in general; and the tithes are brought in from all quarters, and proper officers set over them, 2—13. They bring in also the free-will-offerings, and regulate the priests and Levites, and their families, according to their genealogies, 14—19. Hezekiah does every thing in sincerity and truth, and is prosperous, 20, 21.

NOW when all this was finished, all Israel that were ^a present went out to the cities of Judah, and brake the ^c images in pieces, and cut down the groves, and threw down the high places and the altars out of all Judah and Benjamin, in Ephraim also and Manasseh, ^d until they had utterly destroyed them all. Then all the children of Israel returned every man to his possession, into their own cities.

2 ¶ And Hezekiah appointed ^e the courses of the priests and the Levites after their courses, every man according to his service, the priests and Levites ^f for burnt-offerings and for peace-offerings, to minister, and to give thanks, and to praise in the gates of the tents of the LORD.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXI.

Verse 1. Brake the images in pieces] This species of reformation was not only carried on through Judah; but they carried it into Israel, whether through a transport of religious zeal, or whether with the consent of Hoshea, the Israelitish king, we cannot tell.

Verse 2. In the gates of the tents of the LORD.] That is, in the temple; for this was the house, tabernacle, tent, and camp of the Most High.

tion of his substance for the burnt-offerings, to wit, for the morning and evening burnt-offerings, and the burnt-offerings for the sabbaths, and for the new-moons, and for the set feasts, as it is written in the ^g law of the LORD.

4 Moreover, he commanded the people that dwelt in Jerusalem to give the ^h portion of the priests and the Levites, that they might be encouraged in ⁱ the law of the LORD.

5 ¶ And as soon as the commandment ^k came abroad, the children of Israel brought in abundance ^l the first-fruits of corn, wine, and oil, and ^m honey, and of all the increase of the field; and the tithe of all things brought they in abundantly.

Verse 3. The king's portion of his substance for the burnt-offerings] It is conjectured that the Jewish kings, at least from the time of David, furnished the morning and evening sacrifice daily, at their own expense; and several others also.

Verse 5. Brought in—the first-fruits] These were principally for the maintenance of the priests and Levites: they brought tithes of all the produce of the field, whether commanded or not, as we see in the instance of honey, of Judah, they also brought in the tithe of oxen, and sheep, and the ^atithe of holy things which were consecrated unto the LORD their God, and laid them ^oby heaps.

7 In the third month they began to lay the foundation of the heaps, and finished them in the seventh month.

8 And when Hezekiah and the princes came and saw the heaps, they blessed the LORD, and his people Israel.

9 Then Hezekiah questioned with the priests and the Levites concerning the heaps.

10 And Azariah the chief priest of the house of Zadok answered him, and said, ^pSince the people began to bring the offerings into the house of the LORD, we have had enough to eat, and have left plenty; for the LORD hath blessed his people; and that which is left is this great store.

11 ¶ Then Hezekiah commanded to prepare ^rchambers in the house of the LORD; and they prepared them,

12 And brought in the offerings, and the tithes, and the dedicated things faithfully: ^sover which Cononiah the Levite was ruler, and Shimei his brother was the next.

13 And Jehiel, and Azaziah, and Nahath, and Asahel, and Jerimoth, and Jozabad, and Eliel, and Ismachiah, and Mahath, and Benaiah, were overseers ^tunder the hand of Cononiah and Shimei his brother, at the commandment of Hezekiah the king, and Azariah the ruler of the house of God.

14 And Kore, the son of Imnah the Levite, the porter toward the east, was over the free-will-offerings of God, to distribute the oblations of the LORD, and the most holy things.

15 And ^unext him were Eden, and Miniamin, and Jeshua, and Shemaiah, Amariah, and Shecaniah, in the ^vcities of the priests, in their ^wset office, to give to their brethren by courses, as well to the great as to the small:

16 Besides their genealogy of males, from three years old and upwards, even unto every one that entereth into the house of the LORD, his daily portion for their service in their charges according to their courses;

17 Both to the genealogy of the priests by the house of their fathers, and the Levites ^xfrom twenty years old and upwards, in their charges by their courses;

18 And to the genealogy of all their little ones, their wives, and their sons, and their daughters, through all the congregation: for in their ^yset office they sanctified themselves in holiness:

19 Also of the sons of Aaron, the priests, which were in the ^zfields of the suburbs of their cities, in every several city, the men that were ^aexpressed by name, to give portions to all the males among the priests, and to all that were reckoned by genealogies among the Levites.

20 ¶ And thus did Hezekiah throughout all Judah, and ^bwrought that which was good, and right, and truth, before the LORD his God.

21 And in every work that he began in the service of the house of God, and in the law, and in the commandments, to seek his God, he did it with all his heart, and prospered.

Verse 17. From twenty years old] Moses had ordered that the Levites should not begin their labour till they were thirty years of age; but David changed this order, and obliged them to begin at twenty.

Verse 20. Wrought—good, and right, and truth] Here is the proper character of a worthy king: he is good, and he does good; he is upright, and he acts justly, and maintains justice; he is truly religious, and he lives according to that truth which he receives as a revelation from God.

Verse 21. He did it with all his heart] In May God ever send such kings to the nations of the world; and may the people who are blessed with such be duly obedient to them, and thankful to the God who sends them.

AFTER ^athese things, and the establishment thereof, Sennacherib king of Assyria came, and entered into Judah, and encamped against the fenced cities, and thought ^bto win them for himself.

2 And when Hezekiah saw that Sennacherib was come, and that ^che was purposed to fight against Jerusalem,

3 He took counsel with his princes and his mighty men to stop the waters of the fountains which were without the city; and they did help him.

4 So there was gathered much people together, who stopped all the fountains, and the brook that ^dran through the midst of the land, saying, Why should the kings of Assyria come, and find much water?

5 Also ^ehe strengthened himself, ^fand built up all the wall that was broken, and raised it up to the towers, and another wall without, and repaired ^gMillo in the city of David, and made ^hdarts and shields in abundance.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXII.

Verse 1. After these things] God did not permit this pious prince to be disturbed till he had completed the reformation which he had begun.

Verse 2. When Hezekiah saw] This was in the fourteenth year of the reign of Hezekiah; and at first the Jewish king bought him off, at the great price of three hundred talents of silver, and thirty talents of gold; and even emptied his own treasures, and spoiled the house of the Lord, to gratify the oppressive avarice of the Assyrian king. See the whole account 2 Kings xviii. 13, &c.

Verse 4. Stopped all the fountains] This was prudently done; for, without water, how could an immense army subsist in an arid country. No doubt the Assyrian army suffered much through this; as a Christian army did eighteen hundred years after this. When the crusaders came, in A. D. 1099, to besiege Jerusalem, the people of the city stopped up the

6 And he set captains of war over the people, and gathered them together to him in the street of the gate of the city, and ⁱspake comfortably to them, saying,

8 With him is an ⁿarm of flesh; but ^owith us is the LORD our God to help us, and to fight our battles. And the people ^prested themselves upon the words of Hezekiah king of Judah.

9 ¶ ^rAfter this did Sennacherib king of Assyria send his servants to Jerusalem, (but he himself laid siege against Lachish, and all his ^spower with him,) unto Hezekiah king of Judah, and unto all Judah that were at Jerusalem, saying,

Verse 7. There be more with us than with him] These words he quotes from the prophet Elisha, 2 Kings vi. 16. We have more power than they have: this was soon proved to be true by the slaughter made by the angel of the Lord in the Assyrian camp.

Verse 9. After this did Sennacherib] Having received the silver and gold mentioned above, he withdrew his army; but shortly after he sent Rabshakeh with a blasphemous message. This is the fact mentioned here.

abide ^u in the siege in Jerusalem?

11 Doth not Hezekiah persuade you to give over yourselves to die by famine and by thirst, saying, ^v The LORD our God shall deliver us out of the hand of the king of Assyria?

12 ^w Hath not the same Hezekiah taken away his high places and his altars, and commanded Judah and Jerusalem, saying, Ye shall worship before one altar, and burn incense upon it?

13 Know ye not what I and my fathers have done unto all the people of other lands? ^x were the gods of the nations of those lands any ways able to deliver their lands out of mine hand?

14 Who was there among all the gods of those nations that my fathers utterly destroyed, that could deliver his people out of mine hand, that your God should be able to deliver you out of mine hand?

15 Now therefore ^y let not Hezekiah deceive you, nor persuade you on this manner, neither yet believe him: for no god of any nation or kingdom was able to deliver his people out of mine hand, and out of the hand of my fathers; how much less shall your God deliver you out of mine hand?

16 And his servants spake yet more against the LORD God, and against his servant Hezekiah.

17 ^z He wrote also letters to rail on the LORD God of Israel, and to speak against him, saying, ^a As the gods of the nations of other lands have not delivered their people out of mine hand, so shall not the God of Hezekiah deliver his people out of mine hand.

19 And they spake against the God of Jerusalem, as against the gods of the people of the earth, which were ^d the work of the hands of man.

20 ^e And for this cause Hezekiah the king, and ^f the prophet Isaiah the son of Amoz, prayed and cried to heaven.

21. ^g And the LORD sent an angel, which cut off all the mighty men of valour, and the leaders and captains in the camp of the king of Assyria. So he returned with shame of face to his own land. And when he was come into the house of his god, they that came forth of his own bowels ^h slew him there with the sword.

22 Thus the LORD saved Hezekiah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem from the hand of Sennacherib the king of Assyria, and from the hand of all other, and guided them on every side.

23 And many brought gifts unto the LORD to Jerusalem, and ⁱ presents ^k to Hezekiah king of Judah: so that he was ^l magnified in the sight of all nations from thenceforth.

24 ^m In those days Hezekiah was sick to the death, and prayed unto the LORD: and he spake unto him, and he ⁿ gave him a sign.

Verse 33. Chiefest of the sepulchres] This respect they paid to him who, since David, had been the best of all their kings.

I shall subjoin a few things from the Targum on this chapter.

Ver. 1.—“After these things, which Hezekiah did, and their establishment, the Lord appointed by his Word to bring Sennacherib, king of Assyria, and his army into the land of Israel, that he might destroy the Assyrians in the land of the house of Judah, and smite their troops on the mountains of Jerusalem, and deliver all their spoils into the hands of Hezekiah and his people: wherefore Sennacherib came with immense armies, which could not be numbered; and, having pitched his camps in the land of the tribe of Judah, besieged their fortified cities with his armies, hoping to overthrow them.”

Ver. 8. Hezekiah said—“His help is the strength of the flesh; but our auxiliary is the Word of the Lord.”

Ver. 16.—“His servants (Sennacherib's,) spoke blasphemy against the Word of the Lord God.”

31 ¶ Howbeit in the business of the ^y ambassadors of the princes of Babylon, who ^z sent unto him to inquire of the wonder that was done in the land, God left him, to ^a try him, that he might know all that was in his heart.

32 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Hezekiah, and his ^b goodness, behold, they are written in the ^c vision of Isaiah the prophet, the son of Amoz, and in the ^d book of the kings of Judah and Israel.

33 ^e And Hezekiah slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the ^f chiefest of the sepulchres of the sons of David; and all Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem did him ^g honour at his death. And Manasseh his son reigned in his stead.

^a Deut. 8. 2.—^b Heb. kindnesses.—^c Isa. 36. & 37. & 38. & 39.—^d 2 Kings 18. & 19. & 20.—^e 2 Kings 20. 21.—^f Or, highest.—^g Prov. 10. 7.

Ver. 18. In the Jews' speech—“In the language of the holy house.”

Ver. 21.—“And the Word of the Lord sent Michael, and the angel Gabriel, and destroyed them on the night of the passover, with a destructive fire; and burnt up their breath within their bodies, and consumed every soldier, captain, and prince, in the army of the king of Assyria; and he returned with shame of face into his own land.

The destruction of God's enemies, and the support and salvation of the faithful, is in every instance in this Targum attributed to the Word of the Lord, personally understood. See the note on chap. xxxiv. 27.

Ver. 24.—“In those days was Hezekiah sick, near to death; but he prayed before the Lord, who spoke to him by his Word to preserve him, and to add to his life fifteen years.”

Ver. 31.—“The king of Babylon sent, that they might inquire concerning the miracle that had been done in the land; that they might see the two tables of stone which were in the ark of the covenant of the Lord, which Moses had placed there with the two tables which he had broken, on account of the sin of the calf which they made in Horeb. The Word of the Lord permitted him to show them these; neither did he suffer for it, that he might try him, and see what was in his heart.”

Thus God speaks after the manner of men: he either brings, or permits them to be brought, into such circumstances as shall cause them to show their prevailing propensities; and then warns them against the evils to which they are inclined, after having shown them that they are capable of those evils. To know ourselves, and our own character, is of the utmost importance to our religious growth and perfection. He who does not know where his weakness lies, is not likely to know where his strength lies. Many, by not being fully acquainted with their own character, have been unwatchful and unguarded, and so become an easy prey to their enemies. Know thyself, is a lesson which no man can learn but from the Spirit of God.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Manasseh reigns fifty-five years, and restores idolatry, pollutes the temple, and practises all kinds of abominations, 1-9. He and the people are warned in vain, 10. He is delivered into the hands of the Assyrians, bound with fetters, and carried to Babylon, 11. He humbles himself, and is restored, 12, 13. He destroys idolatry, and restores the worship of God, 14-16. The people keep the high places, but sacrifice to the Lord on them, 17. His acts, prayer, and death, 18-20. His son Amon succeeds him; and after a wicked, idolatrous reign of two years, is slain by his own servants, in his own house, 21-24. The people rise up, and slay his murderers, and make Josiah his son king in his stead, 25.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXIII.

Verse 1. Manasseh was twelve years old] We do not find that he had any godly director; his youth was therefore the more easily seduced. But surely he had a pious education;—how then could the principles of it be so soon eradicated?

Verse 3. Altars for Baalim] The sun and moon. And made groves, אֲשֵׁרֹת, Asheroth, As-tarte, VENUS; the host of heaven, all the PLANETS and STARS. These were the general objects of his devotion.

Verse 5. He built altars] See the principal facts in this chapter explained in the notes on 2 Kings xxi. 1-17.

7 And ^m he set a carved image, the idol which he had made, in the house of God, of which God had said to David and to Solomon his son, In ⁿ this house, and in Jerusalem, which I have chosen before all the tribes of Israel, will I put my name for ever :

8 ^o Neither will I any more remove the foot of Israel from out of the land which I have appointed for your fathers; so that they will take heed to do all that I have commanded them, according to the whole law, and the statutes, and the ordinances, by the hand of Moses.

Verse 13. And prayed unto him] "While he was thus praying, all the presiding angels went away to the gates of prayer in heaven; and shut all the gates of prayer, and all the windows and apertures in heaven, lest that his prayer should be heard. Immediately the compassions of the Creator of the world were moved, whose right hand is stretched out to receive sinners, who are converted to his fear, and break their heart's concupiscence by repentance. He made therefore a window and opening in heaven, under the throne of his glory; and, having heard his prayer, he favourably received his supplication. And when his Word had shaken the earth, the mule was burst, and he escaped. Then the spirit went out from between the wings of the cherubim; by which, being inspired through the decree of the Word of the Lord, he returned to his kingdom in Jerusalem. And then Manasseh knew that it was the Lord God who had done these miracles and signs; and he turned to the Lord with his whole heart, left all his idols, and never served them more." This long addition gives the Jewish account of those particulars, which the sacred writer has passed by: it is curious, though in some sort trifling. The gates of prayer may be considered childish; but in most of those things the ancient rabbins purposely hid deep and important meanings.

Verse 14. He built a wall] This was probably a weak place that he fortified; or a part of the wall which the Assyrians had broken down, which he now rebuilt.

Verse 15. He took away the strange gods] He appears to have done every thing in his power to destroy the idolatry which he had set up, and to restore the pure worship of the true God. His repentance brought forth fruits meet for repentance. How long he was in captivity, when and by whom he was delivered, we know not. The fact of his restoration is asserted; and we believe it on divine testimony.

Verse 17. The people did sacrifice] "Nevertheless the people did sacrifice on the high places, but only to the name of the Word of the Lord their God." Targum.

Verse 18. The words of the seers that spake to him] "Which were spoken to him in the name of the Word of the Lord God of Israel."

Verse 19. His prayer also] What is called the Prayer of Manasseh king of Judah, when he was holden captive in Babylon, being found among our apocryphal books, I have inserted it at the end of the chapter, without either asserting, or thinking, that it is the identical prayer which this penitent king used when a captive in Babylon. But, as I have observed in another place, there are many good sentiments in it; and some sinners may find it a proper echo of the distresses of their hearts: I therefore insert it.

Verse 22. Sacrificed unto all the carved images] How astonishing is this: with his father's example before his eyes, he copied his father's vices, but not his repentance.

Verse 23. Trespassed more and more.] He appears to have exceeded his father, and would take no warning.

Verse 24. His servants conspired against him] On what account we cannot tell.

Verse 25. The people of the land slew all them] His murder was not a popular act, for the people slew the regicides. They were as prone to idolatry as their king was. We may rest satisfied that idolatry was accompanied with great licentiousness, and sensual gratifications; else it never, as a mere religious system, could have had any sway in the world.

For an explanation of the term groves, ver. 3., see the observations at the end of chap. xxi. of the Second Book of Kings.

I have referred to the prayer attributed to Manasseh, and found in what is called the Apocrypha, just before the first book of Maccabees. It was anciently used as a form of confession in the Christian church; and is still as such received by the Greek church. It is as follows:—

“O Lord, Almighty God of our fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and of their righteous seed; who hast made heaven and earth, with all the ornament thereof; who hast bound the sea by the word of thy commandment; who hast shut up the deep, and sealed it by thy terrible and glorious name; whom all men fear, and tremble before thy power; for the majesty of thy glory cannot be borne, and thine angry threatening toward sinners is importable: but thy merciful promise is unmeasurable and unsearchable; for thou art the most high Lord, of great compassion, long-suffering, very merciful, and repentest of the evils of men. Thou, O Lord, according to thy great goodness hast promised repentance and forgiveness to them that have sinned against thee: and of thine infinite mercies hast appointed repentance unto sinners, that they may be saved. Thou, therefore, O Lord, that art the God of the just, hast not appointed repentance to the just, as to Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, which have not sinned against thee; but thou hast appointed repentance unto me that am a sinner: for I have sinned above the number of the sands of the sea. My transgressions, O Lord, are multiplied; my transgressions are multiplied; and I am not worthy to behold and see the height of heaven for the multitude of mine iniquities. I am bowed down with many iron bands, that I cannot lift up mine head, neither have any release: for I have provoked thy wrath, and done evil before thee: I did not thy will, neither kept I thy commandments: I have set up abominations, and have multiplied offences. Now therefore I bow the knee of mine heart, beseeching thee of grace. I have sinned, O Lord, I have sinned, and I acknowledge mine iniquities: wherefore I humbly beseech thee, forgive me, O Lord, forgive me, and destroy me not with mine iniquities. Be not angry with me for ever, by reserving evil for me; neither condemn me into the lower parts of the earth. For thou art the God, even the God of them that repent; and in me thou wilt show all thy goodness; for thou wilt save me, that am unworthy, according to thy great mercy. Therefore I will praise thee for ever all the days of my life: for all the powers of the heavens do praise thee, and thine is the glory for ever and ever. Amen.”

The above translation, which is that in our common Bibles, might be mended; but the piece is scarcely worth the pains.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

Josiah reigns thirty-one years; destroys idolatry in Judah, as also in Manasseh, Ephraim, Simeon, and even to Naphtali, 1—7. He begins to repair the temple, and collects money for the purpose, and employs workmen, 8—13. Hilkiah the priest finds the book of the law in the temple, which is read by Shaphan before the king, 14—19. He is greatly troubled, and consults Huldah the prophetess, 20—22. Her exhortation, and message to the king, 23—28. He causes it to be read to the elders of Judah, and they make a covenant with God, 29—32. Josiah reforms every abomination, and the people serve God all his days, 33.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXIV.

Verse 2. He declined neither to the right hand, nor to the left. He never swerved from God and truth; he never omitted what he knew to be his duty to God and his kingdom; he carried on his reformation with a steady hand; timidity did not prevent him from going far enough; and zeal did not lead him beyond due bounds. He walked in the golden mean, and his moderation was known unto all men. He went neither to the right, nor to the left; he looked inward, looked forward, and looked upward. Reader, let the conduct of this pious youth be thy exemplar through life.

Verse 4. The altars of Baalim] How often have these been broken down, and how soon set up again! We see that the religion of a land is as the religion of its king. If the king were idolatrous, up went the altars, on them were placed the statues, and the smoke of incense ascended in ceaseless clouds to the honour of that which is vanity, and nothing in the world; on the other hand, when the king was 8 ¶ Nowⁿ in the eighteenth year of his reign, when he had purged the land, and the house, he sent Shaphan the son of Azaliah, and Maa-seiah the governor of the city, and Joah the son of Joahaz the recorder, to repair the house of the LORD his God.

9 And when they came to Hilkiah the high priest, they delivered^o the money that was brought into the house of God, which the Levites that kept the doors had gathered of the hand of Manasseh and Ephraim, and of all the remnant of Israel, and of all Judah and Benjamin; and they returned to Jerusalem.

10 And they put it in the hand of the workmen that had the oversight of the house of the LORD, and they gave it to the workmen that wrought in the house of the LORD, to repair and amend the house:

Verse 12. All that could skill of instruments of music.] Did the musicians play on their several instruments to encourage and enliven the workmen? Is not this a probable case from their mention here? If this were really the case, instrumental music was never better applied in any thing that refers to the worship of God. It is fabled of Orpheus, a most celebrated musician, that such was the enchanting harmony of his lyre, that he built the city of Thebes by it: the stones and timbers danced to his melody; and, by the power of his harmony, rose up, and took their respective places in the different parts of the wall that was to defend the city! This is fable: but as all fable is a representation of truth, where is the truth and fact to which this refers? How long has this question lain unanswered! But have we not the answer now? It is known in general, that the cities of Herculeanum and Pompeii were overwhelmed by an eruption of mount Vesuvius, about the seventy-ninth year of the Christian era. It is also known that, in sinking for wells, the workmen of the king of Naples lighted on houses, &c. of those overwhelmed cities; that excavations have been carried on, and are now in the act of being carried on, which are bringing daily to view various utensils, pictures, and books, which have escaped the influence of the burning lava; and that some of those parchment volumes have been unrolled, and facsimiles of them engraved and published; and that our late Prince Regent, now George IV. king of Great Britain, has expended, and is expending, considerable sums of money annually in searching for, unrolling, and deciphering those rolls. This I record to his great credit as a lover of science and literature. Now, among the books that have been unrolled and published, is a Greek Treatise on Music, by Philodemus; and here we have the truth represented which lay hidden under the fables of Orpheus and Amphion. This latter was a skilful harper, who was frequently employed by the Theban workmen to play to them while engaged in their labour, and for which they rewarded him out of the proceeds of that labour. So powerful and pleasing was his music, that they went lightly and comfortably through their work; and time and labour passed on without tedium or fatigue; and the walls and towers were speedily raised. This, by a metaphor, was attributed to the dulcet sounds of his harp; and poetry seized on and embellished it, and mythology incorporated it with her fabulous system. Orpheus is the same. By his skill in music he drew stones and trees after him, i. e. he presided over and encouraged the workmen by his skill in music. Yet how simple and natural is the representation given by this ancient Greek writer of such matters! See Philodemus, Column. viii. and ix. Orpheus and Amphion, by their music, moved the workmen to diligence and activity, and lessened and alleviated their toil. May we not suppose, then, that skilful musicians among the Levites did exercise their art among the workmen who were employed in the repairs of the house of the Lord? May I be allowed a gentle transition? Is it not the power and harmony of the grace of Jesus Christ in the Gospel, that convert, change, and purify the souls of men, and prepare them for, and place them in, that part of the house of God, the New Jerusalem? A most beautiful and chaste allusion to this fact and fable is made by an eminent poet, while praying for his own success as a Christian minister, who uses all his skill as a poet and musician for the glory of God:

Thy own musician, Lord, inspire,
And may my consecrated lyre
Repeat the psalmist's part!
His son and thine reveal in me,
And fill with sacred melody
The fibres of my heart.

So shall I charm the list'ning throng,
And draw the living stones along,
By Jesus' tuneful name.
The living stones, shall dance, shall rise,
And form a city in the skies,
The New Jerusalem.

25 Because they have forsaken me, and have burned incense unto other gods, that they might provoke me to anger with all the works of their hands; therefore my wrath shall be poured out upon this place, and shall not be quenched.

26 And as for the king of Judah, who sent you to inquire of the LORD, so shall ye say unto him, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel concerning the words which thou hast heard;

27 Because thine heart was tender, and thou didst humble thyself before God, when thou heardest his words against this place, and against the inhabitants thereof, and humbledst thyself before me, and didst rend thy clothes, and weep before me; I have even heard thee also, saith the LORD.

28 Behold, I will gather thee to thy fathers, and thou shalt be gathered to thy grave in peace; neither shall thine eyes see all the evil that I will bring upon this place, and upon the inhabitants of the same. So they brought the king word again.

29 ¶ Then the king sent and gathered together all the elders of Judah and Jerusalem.

30 And the king went up into the house of the LORD, and all the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and the priests, and the Levites, and all the people, ^d great and small: and he read in their ears all the words of the book of the covenant that was found in the house of the LORD.

on the ^bfourteenth day of the first month.

2 And he set the priests in their ^ccharges, and ^dencouraged them to the service of the house of the LORD;

3 And said unto the Levites ^e that taught all Israel, which were holy unto the LORD, ^fPut the holy ark ^gin the house which Solomon the son of David king of Israel did build; ^h*it shall not be a burden upon your shoulders: serve now the LORD your God, and his people Israel,*

4 And prepare yourselves by the ⁱhouses of your fathers, after your courses, according to the ^kwriting of David king of Israel, and according to the ^lwriting of Solomon his son.

5 And ^mstand in the holy place according to the divisions of ⁿthe families of the fathers of your brethren ^othe people, and after the division of the families of the Levites.

6 So kill the passover, and ^psanctify yourselves, and prepare your brethren, that they may do according to the word of the LORD by the hand of Moses.

7 And Josiah ^rgave ^sto the people, of the flock, lambs and kids, all for the passover offerings, for all that were present, to the number of thirty thousand, and three thousand bullocks: these were of the king's substance.

8 And his princes ^tgave willingly unto the people, to the priests, and to the Levites: Hilkiah, and Zechariah, and Jehiel, rulers of the house of God, 9 Conaniah also, and Shemaiah, and Nethaneel, his brethren, and Hashabiah, and Jeiel, and Jozabad, chief of the Levites, ^ugave unto the Levites for passover offerings five thousand small cattle, and five hundred oxen.

10 So the service was prepared, and the priests ^vstood in their place, and the Levites in their courses, according to the king's commandment.

11 And they killed the passover, and the priests ^wsprinkled the blood from their hands, and the Levites ^xflayed them.

12 And they removed the burnt-offerings, that they might give according to the divisions of the families of the people, to offer unto the LORD, as it is written ^yin the book of Moses. And so did they with the oxen.

13 And they ^zroasted the passover with fire according to the ordinance: but the other holy offerings ^asod they in pots, and in caldrons, and in pans, and ^bdivided them speedily among all the people.

14 And afterward they made ready for themselves, and for the priests: because the priests the sons of Aaron

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXV.

Verse 3. Put the holy ark in the house] It is likely that the priests had secured this, when they found that the idolatrous kings were determined to destroy every thing that might lead the people to the worship of the true God. And now, as all appears to be well established, the ark is ordered to be put into its own place.

For an ample account of this passover, and the reformation that was then made, see on 2 Kings xxiii. 1, &c. and the places marked in the margin.

Verse 11. They killed the passover] The people themselves might slay their own paschal lambs, and then present the blood to the priests, that they might sprinkle it before the altar: and the Levites flayed them, and made them ready for dressing.

15 And the singers, the sons of Asaph, were in their place, according to the commandment of David, and Asaph, and Heman, and Jeduthun the king's seer; and the porters waited at every gate; they might not depart from their service; for their brethren the Levites prepared for them.

16 So all the service of the LORD was prepared the same day, to keep the passover, and to offer burnt-offerings upon the altar of the LORD, according to the commandment of King Josiah.

17 And the children of Israel that were present kept the passover at that time, and the feast of unleavened bread seven days.

18 And there was no passover like to that kept in Israel from the days of Samuel the prophet; neither did all the kings of Israel keep such a passover as Josiah kept, and the priests, and the Levites, and all Judah and Israel that were present, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

19 In the eighteenth year of the reign of Josiah was this passover kept.

Verse 18. There was no passover like to that That which distinguished this passover from all the former was, says Calmet, the great liberality of Josiah, who distributed to his people a greater number of victims than either David or Solomon had done.

Verse 20. Necho king of Egypt] Pharaoh the lame, says the Targum.

Verse 21. God commanded me to make haste] The Targum gives a curious turn to this and the following verse; "My idol commanded me to make haste: refrain, therefore, from me and my idol which is with me, that he betray thee not. When he heard him mention his idol, he would not go back; and he hearkened not unto the words of Necho, which he spake concerning his idol." Here is the rabbinical excuse for the conduct of Josiah.

Verse 24. The second chariot] Perhaps this means no more than they took Josiah out of his against Charchemish by Euphrates: and Josiah went out against him.

21 But he sent ambassadors to him, saying, What have I to do with thee, thou king of Judah? I come not against thee this day, but against the house wherewith I have war; for God commanded me to make haste: forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not.

22 Nevertheless Josiah would not turn his face from him, but disguised himself, that he might fight with him, and hearkened not unto the words of Necho from the mouth of God, and came to fight in the valley of Megiddo.

23 And the archers shot at King Josiah; and the king said to his servants, Have me away; for I am sore wounded.

24 ¶ His servants therefore took him out of that chariot, and put him in the second chariot that he had; and they brought him to Jerusalem, and he died, and was buried in one of the sepulchres of his fathers. And all Judah and Jerusalem mourned for Josiah.

25 ¶ And Jeremiah lamented for Josiah; and all the singing men and the singing women spake of Josiah in their lamentations to this day, and made them an ordinance in Israel: and, behold, they are written in the Lamentations.

Verse 25. Behold, they are written in the Lamentations.] The Hebrews had poetical compositions for all great and important events, military songs, songs of triumph, epithalamia or marriage odes, funeral elegies, &c. Several of these are preserved in different parts of the historical books of Scripture; and these were generally made by prophets, or inspired men. That composed on the tragical end of this good king, by Jeremiah, is now lost. The Targum says, "Jeremiah bewailed Josiah with a great lamentation; and all the chiefs and matrons sing these lamentations concerning Josiah to the present day; and it was a statute in Israel

CHAPTER XXXVI.

Jehoahaz made king on the death of his father Josiah, and reigns only three months, 1, 2. He is dethroned by the king of Egypt, and Jehoiakim his brother made king in his stead, who reigns wickedly eleven years, and is dethroned, and led captive to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar, 3—8. Jehoiachin is made king in his stead, and reigns wickedly three months and ten days, and is also led captive to Babylon, 9, 10. Zedekiah begins to reign, and reigns wickedly eleven years, 11, 12. He rebels against Nebuchadnezzar, and he and his people cast all the fear of God behind their backs: the wrath of God comes upon them to the uttermost; and their temple is destroyed, the whole nation is subjugated, and led into captivity, 13—21. Cyrus, king of Persia, makes a proclamation to rebuild the temple of the Lord, 22, 23.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXVI.

Verse 1. Took Jehoahaz] It seems that after Necho had discomfited Josiah, he proceeded immediately against Charchemish; and in the interim, Josiah dying of his wounds, the people made his son king.

Verse 3. The king of Egypt put him down] He now considered Judah to be conquered and tributary to him; and, because the people had set up Jehoahaz without his consent, he dethroned him; and put his brother in his place;

6 ^f Against him came up Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, and bound him in ^g fetters, to ^h carry him to Babylon.

7 ⁱ Nebuchadnezzar also carried of the vessels of the house of the LORD to Babylon, and put them in his temple at Babylon.

8 Now the rest of the acts of Jehoiakim, and his abominations which he did, and that which was found in him, behold, they are written in the book of the kings of Israel and Judah: and ^k Jehoiachin his son reigned in his stead.

9 ^l Jehoiachin was eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned three months and ten days in Jerusalem; and he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD.

Verse 10. Made Zedekiah—king] His name was at first Mattaniah, but the king of Babylon changed it to Zedekiah. See 2 Kings xxiv. 17. and the note there.

Verse 12. Did that which was evil] Was there ever such a set of weak, infatuated men as the Jewish kings in general! They had the fullest evidence that they were only deputies to God Almighty, and that they could not expect to retain the throne any longer than they were faithful to their Lord; and yet, with all this conviction, they lived wickedly, and endeavoured to establish idolatry in the place of the worship of their Maker! After bearing with them long, the divine mercy gave them up, as their case was utterly hopeless. They sinned till there was no remedy.

Verse 19. They burnt the house of God]

17 ^eTherefore he brought upon them the king of the Chaldees, who ^fslew their young men with the sword in the house of their sanctuary, and had no compassion upon young man or maiden, old man, or him that stooped for age: he gave them all into his hand.

18 ^gAnd all the vessels of the house of God, great and small, and the treasures of the house of the LORD, and the treasures of the king, and of his princes; all these he brought to Babylon.

thing which I judged of importance in these and the preceding historical books, and in the course of this work having often found the want of a chronological list of the kings of Israel and Judah, in the consecutive order of their reigns; for the reader's information I have brought all the facts into a synopsis or general view, so that he may see at once the contemporary reigns in those two kingdoms, as well as the leading facts by which their reigns were distinguished. In this table will be seen, at one view, the year of the world; the year before Christ; the year before and after the First Olympiad; the year before and from the building of Rome; and under them the Jewish history, from its first kings till the time in which its regal state was entirely abolished, and both kingdoms led into captivity, never more to arise to any political consequence till they acknowledge the Lion of the tribe of Judah, and take Jesus the Christ, the son and only legitimate heir of David, for their Saviour and their Lord. I hope that the table which is here subjoined, will be found in every point of view both interesting and instructive.

The beginning of Hoshea's reign is placed two years later, that his 9th year may synchronize with Hezekiah's 6th.	19

INTRODUCTION

BOOK OF EZRA.

AT the conclusion of 2 Kings, and also of the preceding book, 2 Chronicles, we have seen the state of misery and desolation to which the kingdoms of Israel and Judah were reduced through their unparalleled ingratitude to God, and their innumerable backslidings and rebellions. These at last issued in their captivity; the inhabitants of the former country being carried away by the Assyrians, and those of the latter by the Chaldeans. The former never recovered their ancient territories; and were so disposed of by their enemies, that they either became amalgamated with the heathen nations, so as to be utterly undistinguishable, or they were transported to some foreign and reclusive place of settlement, that the place of their existence, though repeatedly guessed at, has, for more than two thousand years, been totally unknown.

In mercy to the less polluted inhabitants of the kingdom of Judah, though delivered up into the hands of their enemies, God had promised, by his prophet, that at the expiration of seventy years they should be enlarged, and restored to their own country. This prediction was most literally fulfilled; and the books of Ezra, Esther, and Nehemiah, inform us how the divine goodness accomplished this most gracious design, and the movers and agents whom he employed on the occasion. The writer of the following book was undoubtedly the chief agent under God; and his history, as found in the most authentic writings of the Jews, is too nearly connected with this book, and too important in every point of view, to be passed by. No man has written on this subject with such perspicuity as Dean Prideaux; and from his invaluable work, The connected History of the Old and New Testaments, I shall freely borrow whatever may be best calculated to throw light upon the ensuing history.

"In the beginning of the year 458 before the Christian era, Ezra obtained of King Artaxerxes, and his seven counsellors, a very ample commission for his return to Jerusalem, with all his nation that were willing to accompany him thither; giving him full authority to restore and settle the state, and reform the church of the Jews, and to regulate and govern both according to their own laws. This extraordinary favour, not being likely to have been obtained but by some more than ordinary means, appears to have been granted by King Artaxerxes to the solicitations of Esther, who, though not at that time advanced to the dignity of his queen, was yet the best beloved of his concubines.

"Ezra was of the descendants of Seraiah, the high priest, who was slain by Nebuchadnezzar, when he burnt the temple and city of Jerusalem.

"As Ezra was a very holy, so also was he a very learned man, and especially skilled excellently in the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures; and, therefore, he is said to have been a very ready scribe in the law of God, for which he was so eminent, that Artaxerxes takes particular notice of it in his commission. He began his journey from Babylon, on the first day of the first month, called Nisan, which might fall about the middle of our March; and, having halted at the river of Ahava till the rest of his company was come up to him, he there, in a solemn fast, recommended himself, and all that were with him, to the divine protection: and then, on the twelfth day, set forward for Jerusalem, they all having spent four months in their journey from Babylon thither. On his arrival he delivered up to the temple the offerings which had been made to it by the king and his nobles, and the rest of the people of Israel that stayed behind; which amounted to a hundred talents of gold, with twenty basins of gold of the value of a thousand daries, and six hundred and fifty talents of silver, with vessels of silver of the weight of a hundred talents more: and then, having communicated his commission to the king's lieutenants and governors throughout all Syria and Palestine, he betook himself to the executing of the contents of it, whereby he was fully empowered to settle both the church and the state of the Jews, according to the law of Moses; and to appoint magistrates and judges to punish all such as should be refractory; and that not only by imprisonment, and confiscation of goods, but also with banishment and death, according as their crimes should be found to deserve. And all this power Ezra was invested with, and continued faithfully to execute it for the space of thirteen years, till Nehemiah arrived with a new commission from the Persian court, for the same work. Ezra, having found in the second year of his government (Ezra ix. and x.) that many of the people had taken strange wives, contrary to the law, and that several of the priests and Levites, as well as the chief men of Judah and Benjamin, had transgressed herein, after he had in fasting and prayer deprecated God's wrath for it, he caused proclamation to be made for all the people of Israel that had returned from the captivity to gather themselves together at Jerusalem, under the penalty of excommunication, and forfeiture of all their goods. And when they were met, he made them sensible of their sin; and engaged them in promise and covenant before God, to depart from it by putting away their strange wives, and all such as were born of them, that the seed of Israel might not be polluted with such an undue commixture; and thereon commissioners were appointed to inquire into this matter, and cause every man to do according to the law.

"And they sat down the first day of the tenth month to examine into this matter, and made an end by the first day of the first month; so that in three months' time, that is, in the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth months of the Jewish year, a thorough reformation was made of this transgression: which three months answer to January, February, and March, of our year.

"About this time, (Esther ii. 21.) Bigthan and Jeush, two eunuchs of the palace, entered into a conspiracy against the life of King Artaxerxes. Most likely they were of those who had attended Queen Vashti; and, being now out of their offices by the degrading of their mistress, and the advancing of another in her place, took such a disgust at this, as to resolve to revenge themselves on the king for it; of which Mordecai, having got the knowledge, made discovery to Queen Esther, and she in Mordecai's name to the king; whereon inquiry being made into the matter, and the whole treason laid open and discovered, the two traitors were both crucified for it, and the history of the whole matter was entered on the public registers and annals of the kingdom.

"Ezra continued in the government of Judea till the end of the year 446; and, by virtue of the commission he had from the king, and the powers granted him thereby, he reformed the whole state of the Jewish church, according to the law of Moses, in which he was excellently learned, and settled it upon that bottom upon which it afterward stood till the time of our Saviour. The two chief things which he had to do, were to restore the observance of the Jewish law according to the ancient approved usages which had been in practice before the captivity, under the directions of the prophets; and to collect together and set forth a correct edition of the Holy Scriptures; in the performance of both which, the Jews inform us, he had the assistance of what they call the Great Synagogue, which they tell us was a convention consisting of one hundred and twenty men; who lived all at the same time under the presidency of Ezra, and assisted him in both of these two works; and among these they name Daniel and his three friends, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego.

"But the whole conduct of the work, and the glory of accomplishing it, is, by the Jews, chiefly attributed to him, under whose presidency they tell us it was done; and, therefore, they look upon him as another Moses: for the law, they say, was given by Moses; but it was reviewed and restored by Ezra, after it had in a manner been extinguished and lost in the Babylonish captivity. And, therefore, they reckon him as the second founder of it: and it is a common opinion among them that he was Malachi the prophet; that he was called Ezra as his proper name, and Malachi, (which signifies an angel or messenger,) from his office, because he was sent as the angel and messenger of God to restore again the Jewish religion, and establish it in the same manner as it was before the captivity, on the foundation of the law and the prophets. And, indeed, by virtue of that ample commission which he had from King Artaxerxes, he had an opportunity of doing more herein than any other of his nation; and he executed all the powers thereof to the utmost he was able, for the resettling both of the ecclesiastical and political state of the Jews in the best posture they were then capable of: and from hence his name is in so high esteem and veneration among the Jews, that it is a common saying among their writers, 'That if the law had not been given by Moses, Ezra was worthy by whom it should have been given.' As to the ancient and approved usages of the Jewish church, which had been in practice before the captivity, they had by Joshua and Zerubbabel, with the chief elders then contemporaries, and by others that after succeeded them, been gathering together from their first return to Jerusalem, as they could be recovered from the memories of the ancients of their nation, who had either seen them practised themselves before the captivity, or who had been informed concerning them by their parents or others, who had lived before them.

"All these, and whatsoever else was pretended to be of the same nature, Ezra brought under a review; and, after due examination, allowed such of them as were to be allowed, and settled them by his approbation and authority: they gave birth to what the Jews now call their Oral Law: for they own a twofold law—the first, the Written Law, which is recorded in the Holy Scriptures; and the second, the Oral Law, which they have only by the tradition of their elders. And both these, they say, were given them by Moses from mount Sinai, of which the former only was committed to writing, and the other delivered down to them from generation to generation by the tradition of the elders: and, therefore, holding them both to be of the same authority, as having both of them the same divine original, they think themselves to be bound as much by the latter as the former, or rather much more; for the Written Law is, they say, in many places obscure, scanty, and defective, and could be no perfect rule to them without the Oral Law; which containing, according to them, a full, complete, and perfect interpretation, of all that is written in the other, supplies all the defects, and solves all the difficulties of it; and, therefore, they observe the Written Law no otherwise than according as it is explained and expounded by their Oral Law. And hence it is a common saying among them, 'That the covenant was made with them not upon the Written Law, but upon the Oral Law;' and, therefore, they do, in a manner, lay aside the former, to make room for the latter, and resolve their whole religion into their traditions, in the same manner as the Romanists do theirs, having no farther regard to the Written Word of God than as it agrees with their traditional explications of it, but always preferring them thereto, though in many particulars they are quite contradictory to it; which is a corruption that had grown to a great height among them, even in our Saviour's time; for he charges them with it, and tells them, That they make the word of God of none effect through their traditions, Mark vii. 13. But they have done it much more since, professing a greater regard to the latter than the former: and hence it is that we find it so often said in their writings, 'That the words of the scribes are lovely above the words of the law; that the words of the law are weighty and light, but the words of the scribes are all mighty : that the words of the elders are weightier than the words of the prophets ; (where, by the words of the scribes, and the words of the elders, they mean their traditions, delivered to them by their scribes and elders.) And in other places, 'That the written text is only as water; but the Mishna and Talmud, in which are contained the traditions, are as wine and hippocras.' And again, 'That the Written Law is only as salt, but the Mishna and Talmud as pepper and sweet spices.' And in many other sayings, very common among them, do they express the very high veneration which they bear toward the Oral or Traditionary Law, and the little regard which they have to the Written Word of God in comparison of it, making nothing of the latter but as expounded by the former ; as if the Written Word were no more than the dead letter, and the Traditionary Law alone the soul that gives it the whole life and essence.

"And this being what they hold of their traditions, which they call their Oral Law, the account which they give of its original is as follows : for they tell us that, 'At the same time when God gave unto Moses the law in mount Sinai, he gave unto him also the interpretation of it, commanding him to put the former into writing, but to deliver the other only by word of mouth, to be preserved in the memories of men, and to be transmitted down by them from generation to generation by tradition only ; and from hence the former is called the Written, and the other, the Oral Law.' And to this day all the determinations and dictates of the latter are termed, by the Jews, 'Constitutions of Moses from mount Sinai,' because they do as firmly believe that he received them all from God in his forty days' converse with him in that mount, as that he then received the Written Text itself. That on his return from this converse he brought both of these laws with him, and delivered them unto the people of Israel in this manner :—As soon as he was returned to his tent, he called Aaron thither unto him, and first delivered unto him the text, which was to be the Written Law, and after that, the interpretation of it, which was the Oral Law, in the same order as he received both from God in the mount. Then Aaron arising, and seating himself at the right hand of Moses, Eleazar and Ithamar his sons went next in ; and, being taught both these laws at the feet of the prophet, in the same manner as Aaron had been, they also arose and seated themselves, the one on the left hand of Moses, the other on the right hand of Aaron ; and then the seventy elders, who constituted the sanhedrim, or great senate, went in, and being taught by Moses both these laws in the same manner, they also seated themselves in the tent ; and then entered all such of the people as were desirous of knowing the law of God, and were taught in the same manner. After this Moses withdrawing, Aaron repeated the whole of the law, as he had heard it from him, and also withdrew ; and then Eleazar and Ithamar repeated the same ; and, on their withdrawing, the seventy elders made the same repetition to the people then present ; so that each of them, having heard both these laws repeated to them four times, they all had it thereby fixed in their memories : and that then they dispersed themselves among the whole congregation, and communicated to all the people of Israel what had thus been delivered to them by the prophet of God. That they did put the text into writing, but the interpretation of it they delivered down only by word of mouth to the succeeding generations ; that the written text contained the six hundred and thirteen precepts, into which they divide the law and the unwritten interpretations, all the manners, ways, and circumstances, that were to be observed in the keeping of them ; that after this, toward the end of the fortieth year from their coming up out of the land of Egypt, in the beginning of the eleventh month, (which fell about the beginning of our June,) Moses, calling all the people of Israel together, acquainted them of the approaching time of his death, and therefore ordered, that if any of them had forgot ought of what he had delivered to them, they should repair to him, and he would repeat to them what had slipped their memories, and farther explain to them every difficulty and doubt which might arise in their minds concerning what he had taught them of the law of their God ; and that hereon they applying to him, all the remaining time of his life, that is, from the said beginning of the eleventh month till the sixth day of the twelfth month, was employed in instructing them in the text which they call the Written Law, and in the interpretation of it, which they call the Oral Law ; and that, on the said sixth day, having delivered unto them thirteen copies of the Written Law, all copied out with his own hand, from the beginning of Genesis to the end of Deuteronomy, one to each of the twelve tribes, to be kept by them throughout their generations, and the thirteenth to the Levites, to be laid up by them in the tabernacle before the Lord ; and having, moreover, repeated the Oral Law to Joshua his successor, he went, on the seventh day, up into mount Nebo, and there died ; that after his death Joshua delivered the same Oral Law to the elders, who after succeeded him, and they delivered it to the prophets, and the prophets transmitted it down to each other, till it came to Jeremiah, who delivered it to Baruch, and Baruch to Ezra, by whom it was delivered to the men of the Great Synagogue, the last of whom was Simon the Just ; that by him it was delivered to Antigonus of Socho, and by him to Jose the son of Jochanan, and by him to Jose the son of Joesser, and by him to Nathan the Arbelite, and Joshua the son of Berachiah, and by him to Judah the son of Jabbai, and Simeon the son of Shatah, and by them to Shemaiah and Abitulon, and by them to Hillel, and by Hillel to Simeon his son, who is supposed to have been the same who took our Saviour into his arms when he was brought to the temple to be there presented to the Lord at the time of his mother's purification ; and by Simeon it was delivered to Gamaliel his son, the same at whose feet Paul was brought up, and by him to Simeon his son, by him to Gamaliel his son, and by him to Simeon his son, and by him to Rabbah Judah Hak-kadosh his son, who wrote it into the book called the Mishna. But all this is mere fiction, spun out of the fertile invention of the Talmudists, without the least foundation, either in Scripture or in any authentic history, for it. But since all this has made a part of the Jewish creed, they do as firmly believe their traditions thus to have come from God, in the manner I have related, as they do the Written Word itself ; and have now, as it were, wholly resolved their religion into these traditions. There is no understanding what their religion at present is without it; and it is for this reason I have here inserted it.

“But the truth is this; after the death of Simon the Just, there arose a sort of men whom they call The Jarmain, or the Mishnical doctors, that made it their business to study and descant upon those traditions which had been received and allowed by Ezra and the men of the great synagogue, and to draw inferences and consequences from them, all of which they ingrafted into the body of these ancient traditions, as if they had been as authentic as the other; which example being followed by those who after succeeded them in this profession, they continually added their own imaginations to what they had received from those who went before them, whereby the traditions becoming as a snowball, the farther they rolled down from one generation to another, the more they gathered, and the greater the bulk of them grew. And thus it went on till the middle of the second century after Christ, when Antoninus Pius governed the Roman empire, by which time they found it necessary to put all these traditions into writing; for they were then grown to so great a number, and enlarged to so huge a heap, as to exceed the possibility of being any longer preserved in the memory of men. And, besides, in the second destruction which their country had undergone from the Romans, a little before, in the reign of Adrian the preceding emperor, most of their learned men having been cut off, and the chiefest of their schools broken up and dissolved, and vast numbers of their people dissipated, and driven out of their land, the usual method of preserving their traditions had then, in a great measure, failed; and, therefore, there being danger that under these disadvantages they might be all forgotten and lost, for the preservation of them it was resolved that they should be all collected together, and put into a book; and Rabbi Judah, the son of Simeon, who, from the reputed sanctity of his life, was called Hakkadosh, that is, The Holy, and was then rector of the school which they had at Tiberias, in Galilee, and president of the sanhedrim that there sat, undertook the work, and compiled it in six books, each consisting of several tracts, which altogether made up the number of sixty-three, in which, under their proper heads, he methodically digested all that had hitherto been delivered to them of their law and their religion, by the tradition of their ancestors. And this is the book called The Mishna, which book was forthwith received by the Jews with great veneration throughout all their dispersions, and has ever since been held in high estimation among them: for their opinion of it is, that all the particulars therein contained were dictated by God himself to Moses from mount Sinai, as well as the Written Word itself; and consequently must be of the same divine authority with it, and ought to be as sacredly observed. And, therefore, as soon as it was published, it became the subject of the studies of all their learned men; and the chiefest of them, both in Judea and Babylonia, employed themselves to make comments on it; and these, with the Mishna, make up both their Talmuds; that is, the Jerusalem Talmud, and the Babylonish Talmud. These comments they call the Gemara, i. e. The Complement, because by them the Mishna is fully explained, and the whole traditional doctrines of their law and their religion completed. For the Mishna is the text; and the Gemara the comment; and both together is what they call the Talmud. That made by the Jews of Judea is called the Jerusalem Talmud; that by the Jews of Babylonia is called the Babylonish Talmud. The former was completed about the year of our Lord 300, and is published in one large folio: the latter was published about two hundred years after, in the beginning of the sixth century, and has had several editions since the invention of printing. The last, published at Amsterdam, is in twelve folios; and in these two Talmuds, the law and the prophets being in a manner quite jumbled out of them, is contained the whole of the Jewish religion that is now professed among them: but the Babylonish Talmud is that which they chiefly follow; for the other, that is, the Jerusalem Talmud, being obscure, and hard to be understood, is not now much regarded by them. But this and the Mishna, being the most ancient books which they have, except the Chaldee Paraphrases of Onkelos and Jonathan, and both written in the language and style of the Jews of Judea; our countryman, Dr. Lightfoot, has made very good use of them, in explaining several places of the New Testament by parallel phrases and sayings out of them. For the one being composed about the one hundred and fiftieth year of our Lord, and the other about the three hundredth, the idioms, proverbial sayings, and phraseologies, used in our Saviour's time, might very well be preserved in them. But the other Talmud being written in the language and style of Babylonia, and not compiled till about the five hundredth year of our Lord, or, as some will have it, much later, this cannot so well serve for this purpose. However, it is now the Alcoran of the Jews, into which they have resolved all their faith, and all their religion, although framed almost with the same imposture as that of Mohammed out of the doctrines falsely pretended to be brought from heaven. And in this book all that now pretend to any learning among them place their studies; and no one can be a master in their schools, or a teacher in their synagogues, who is not well instructed and versed herein; that is, not only in the text, which is the Mishna, but also in the comment thereon, which is the Gemara; and this comment they so highly esteem beyond the other, that the name of Gemara is wholly engrossed by it; the Gemara of the Babylonish Talmud being that only which they now usually understand by that word; for this, with the Mishna, to which it is added, they think truly completes and makes up the whole of their religion, as fully and perfectly containing all the doctrines, rules, and rites thereof; and, therefore, it is, in their opinion, the most deserving of that name, which signifies what completes, fills up, or perfects: for this is the meaning of the word in the Hebrew language.

“They who professed this sort of learning, that is, taught and propagated this traditional doctrine among them, have been distinguished by several different titles and appellations, according to the different ages in which they lived. From the time of the men of the Great Synagogue to the publishing of the Mishna, they were called Jarmain; and they are the Mishnical doctors, out of whose doctrines and traditions the Mishna was composed. And from the time of the publishing of the Mishna to the publishing of the Babylonish Talmud, they were called Amoraim; and they are the Gemarial doctors, out of whose doctrines and traditions the Gemara was composed. And for about a hundred years after the publishing of the Talmud, they were called Seburaim, and after that Georim. And these were the several classes in which their learned men have been ranked, according to the several ages in which they lived. But, for these latter times, the general name of rabbi is that only whereby their learned men are called, there being no other title whereby they have been distinguished for near seven hundred years past.

“For, about the year 1040, all their schools in Mesopotamia, where only they enjoyed these high titles, being destroyed, and all their learned men thence expelled and driven out by the Mohammedan princes, who governed in those parts; they have since that, with the greatest number of their people, flocked into the western parts, especially into Spain, France, and England: and from that time all these pompous titles which they affected in the East being dropped, they have retained none other for their learned men from that time but that of rabbi; excepting only that those of them who minister in their synagogue are called Chacums, i. e. Wise Men.

“But the great work of Ezra was, his collecting together and setting forth a correct edition of the Holy Scriptures, which he laboured much in, and went a great way in the perfecting of it. Of this both Christians and Jews give him the honour: and many of the ancient fathers attribute more to him in this particular than the Jews themselves; for they hold that all the Scriptures were lost and destroyed in the Babylonish captivity, and that Ezra restored them all again by divine revelation. Thus says Irenæus, and thus says Tertullian, Clemens Alexandrinus, Basil, and others. But they had no other foundation for it than that fabulous relation which we have of it in the fourteenth chapter of the second Apocryphal Book of Esdras; a book too absurd for the Romanists themselves to receive into their canon.

“Indeed, in the time of Josiah, through the impiety of the two preceding reigns of Manasseh and Amon, the book of the law was so destroyed and lost, that besides the copy of it which Hilkiah is said to have found, and the grief which Josiah expressed at the hearing of it read, do plainly show, that neither of them had ever seen it before.

“And if the king and the high priest, who were both men of eminent piety, were without this part of the Holy Scripture, it can scarcely be thought that any one else then had it. But so religious a prince as King Josiah could not leave this long unremedied. By his orders copies were written out from this original; and search being made for all the other parts of Holy Scripture, both in the colleges of the sons of the prophets, and all other places where they could be found, care was taken for transcripts to be made out of these also; and thenceforth copies of the whole became multiplied among the people: all those who were desirous of knowing the laws of their God either writing them out themselves, or procuring others to do it for them; so that within a few years after the Holy City and Temple were destroyed, and the authentic copy of the law, which was laid up before the Lord, was burnt and consumed with them; yet, by this time, many copies, both of the law and the prophets, and all the other Sacred Writings, were got into private hands, who carried them with them into captivity.

“That Daniel had a copy of the Holy Scriptures with him in Babylon is certain; for he quotes the law, and also makes mention of the prophecies of the prophet Jeremiah, which he could not do had he never seen them. And in the sixth chapter of Ezra it is said, that on the finishing of the temple, in the sixth year of Darius, the priests and the Levites were settled in their respective functions, according as it is written in the Law of Moses. But how could they do this according to the Written Law, if they had not copies of the law then among them? And this was nearly sixty years before Ezra came to Jerusalem.

“And farther, in chap. viii. of Nehemiah, the people called for the Law of Moses, to have it read to them, which the Lord had commanded to Israel; which plainly shows that the book was then well known to have been extant, and not to need such a miraculous expedient as that of the divine revelation for its restoration; all that Ezra did in this matter was to get together as many copies of the Sacred Writings as he could, and out of them all set forth a correct edition, in the performance of which he took care of the following particulars:—First, He corrected all the errors that had crept into these copies through the negligence or mistakes of transcribers; for, by comparing them one with the other, he found out the true reading, and set all at rights. Whether the keri cethib, or various readings, that are in our present Hebrew Bibles, were of these corrections, I dare not say. The generality of the Jewish writers tell us that they were: and others among them hold them as much more ancient: referring them, with absurdity enough, as far back as the times of the first writers of the books in which they are found, as if they themselves had designedly made these various readings for the sake of some mysteries comprised under them. It is most probable that they had their original from the mistakes of the transcribers after the time of Ezra, and the observations and corrections of the Masorites made thereon. If any of them were of those ancient various readings which had been observed by Ezra himself in the comparing of those copies he collated on this occasion, and were by him annexed in the margin as corrections of those errors which he found in the text, it is certain those could not be of that number which are now in those Sacred Books that were written by himself, or taken into the canon after his time; for there are keri cethib in them as well as in the other books of the Hebrew Scriptures. Secondly, He collected together all the books of which the Holy Scriptures did then consist, and disposed them in their proper order; and settled the canon of Scripture for his time. These books he divided into three parts.—1. The Law.—2. The Prophets.—3. The Cetubim, or Hagiographa; i. e. the Holy Writings: which division our Saviour himself takes notice of, Luke xxiv. 44. where he says, These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things might be fulfilled which are written in the Law, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning me. For there by the Psalms he means the whole third part called the Hagiographa; for, that part beginning with the Psalms, the whole was for that reason then commonly called by that name; as, usually with the Jews, the particular books are named from the words with which they begin. Thus with them Genesis is called Bereshith, Exodus Shemoth, Leviticus Vajikra, &c. because they begin with these Hebrew words.

“And Josephus makes mention of this same division; for he says, in his first book against Apion, We have only two and twenty books which are to be believed as of divine authority, of which five are the Books of Moses. From the death of Moses to the reign of Artaxerxes, the son of Xerxes, king of Persia, the prophets, who were the successors of Moses, have written in thirteen books. The remaining four books contain hymns to God, and documents of life for the use of men; in which division, according to him, the law contains Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy. The writings of the prophets, Joshua, Judges, with Ruth, Samuel, Kings, Isaiah, Jeremiah, with his Lamentations, Ezekiel, Daniel, the twelve minor prophets, Job, Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther; and the Hagiographa, i. e. the Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and Song of Solomon, which, altogether, make two and twenty books. This division was made for the sake of reducing the books to the number of their alphabet, in which were twenty-two letters. But at present they reckon these books to be twenty-four, and dispose of them in this order: first, the law, which contains Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy. Secondly, The writings of the prophets, which they divide into the Former Prophets and the Latter Prophets: the books of the Former Prophets are Joshua, Judges, Samuel, and Kings; the books of the Latter Prophets, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel; the twelve Minor Prophets; the Hagiographa, which are the Psalms, Proverbs, Job, the Song of Solomon, which they call the Song of Songs, Ruth, the Lamentations, Ecclesiastes, Esther, Daniel, Ezra, and the Chronicles. Under the name of Ezra they comprehend the book of Nehemiah; for the Hebrews, and also the Greeks, anciently reckoned Ezra and Nehemiah but as one book. But this order has not been always observed among the Jews; neither is it so now in all places, for there has been great variety as to this, and that not among the Jews only, but also among the Christians, as well as the Greeks and Latins; but no variation herein is of any moment, for in what order soever the books are placed, they are still the Word of God: and no change as to this can make any change as to that divine authority which is stamped upon them. But all these books were not received into the canon in Ezra's time, for Malachi it is supposed lived after him; and in Nehemiah mention is made of Jaddua as high priest, and of Darius Codomannus as king of Persia; who were at least a hundred years after his time. And in chap. iii. of the First Book of Chronicles the genealogy of the sons of Zerubbabel is carried down for so many generations, as must necessarily make it reach to the time of Alexander the Great: and therefore the book could not be put into the canon till after his time.

“It is most likely that the two books of Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, and Esther, as well as Malachi, were afterward added in the time of Simon the Just, and that it was not till then that the Jewish canon of the Holy Scriptures was fully completed; and, indeed, these last books seem very much to want the exactness and skill of Ezra in their publication, they falling far short of the correctness which is in the other parts of the Jewish Scriptures. The five books of the law are divided into fifty-four sections. This division many of the Jews hold to be one of the Constitutions of Moses from mount Sinai; but others, with more likelihood of truth, attribute it to Ezra. It was made for the use of their synagogues, and the better instructing of the people there in the law of God; for every sabbath day one of these sections was read in their synagogues: and this, we are assured in the Acts of the Apostles, was done among them of old time, which may well be interpreted from the time of Ezra. They ended the last section with the last words of Deuteronomy on the sabbath of the feast of Tabernacles, and then recommenced with the first section from the beginning of Genesis the next sabbath after: and so went on round in this circle every year. The number of the sections was fifty-four; because in their intercalated years, (a month being then added,) there were fifty-four sabbaths. [See complete tables of these in all their variations at the end of this comment on the book of Deuteronomy.]

“On other years they reduced them to the number of the sabbaths which were in those years, by joining two short ones several times into one; for they held themselves obliged to have the whole law thus read over to them in their synagogues every year. Until the time of the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, they read only the law; but being then forbid to read it any more, in the room of the fifty-four sections of the law, they substituted fifty-four sections out of the prophets, the reading of which they ever after continued. So that when the reading of the law was again restored by the Maccabees, the section which was read every sabbath out of the law served for their first lesson; and the section out of the prophets for the second lesson; and so it was practised in the time of the apostles. And, therefore, when Paul entered into the synagogue at Antioch, in Pisidia, it is said that he stood up to preach after the reading of the law and the prophets; that is, after the reading of the first lesson out of the law, and the second lesson out of the prophets. And, in that very sermon which he then preached, he tells them, That the prophets were read at Jerusalem every sabbath day; that is, in those lessons which were taken out of the prophets.

“These sections were divided into verses, which the Jews call pesukim; they were marked out in the Hebrew Bibles by two great points at the end of them, called from hence soph-pasuk, i. e. the end of the verse. If Ezra himself was not the author of this division, (as most say,) it was not long after him that it was introduced; for certainly it is very ancient. It is most likely that it was introduced for the sake of the Targumists or Chaldee interpreters; for after the Hebrew language had ceased to be the mother tongue of the Jews, and the Chaldee grew up into use among them instead of it, (as was the case after their return from the Babylonish captivity,) their usage was that, in the public reading of the law to the people, it was read to them, first, in the original Hebrew, and after that rendered by an interpreter into the Chaldee language, that so all might fully understand the same; and this was done period by period; and, therefore, that these periods might be the better distinguished, and the reader more certainly know how much to read at every interval, and the interpreter know how much to interpret at every interval, there was a necessity that some marks should be invented for their direction herein. The rule given in the ancient books is, that in the law the reader was to read one verse, and then the interpreter was to render the same into Chaldee; but that in the prophets the reader was to read three verses together, and then the interpreter was to render the same three verses into Chaldee, in the same manner; which manifestly proves that the division of the Scriptures into verses must be as ancient as the way of interpreting them into the Chaldee language in their synagogues; which was from the very time that the synagogues were erected, and the Scriptures publicly read in them, after the Babylonish captivity. This was at first done only in the law; for, till the time of the Maccabees, the law only was read in their synagogues; but afterward, in imitation of this, the same was also done in the prophets, and in the Hagiographa especially. After that the prophets also began to be publicly read among them, as well as the law; and from hence the division of the Holy Scriptures into verses, it is most likely, was first made; but without any numerical figures annexed to them.

"The manner whereby they are now distinguished in their common Hebrew Bibles is, by the two great points called soph-pasuk above mentioned; but whether this is the ancient way is by some made a question. The objection against it is this:—If the distinction of verses was introduced for the sake of the Chaldee interpreters in their synagogues, and must therefore be held as ancient as that way of interpreting the Scriptures in them, it must then have place in their sacred synagogical books; for none others were used, either by their readers or their interpreters, in their public assemblies. But it has been anciently held as a rule among them, that any points or accents written into these Sacred Books pollute and profane them: and, therefore, no copy, either of the law or the prophets now used in their synagogues, has any point or accents written in it. To this I answer: Whatever be the practice of the modern Jews, this is no rule to let us know what was the ancient practice among them; since in many particulars they have varied from the ancient usages, as they now do from each other, according to the different parts of the world in which they dwell. For mention is made of them in the Mishna; and that the reason for this division was for the direction of the readers, and the Chaldee interpreters, is also there implied; and, therefore, supposing a division for this use, it must necessarily follow, that there must have been some marks to set it out; otherwise it would not have answered the end intended.

"It is most likely that anciently the writing of those books was in long lines, from one side of the parchment to the other; and that the verses in them were distinguished in the same manner as the stichi afterward were in the Greek Bibles: for the manner of their writing those stichi was, to allow a line to every stichus, and then to end the writing where they ended the stichus, leaving the rest of the line void, in the same manner as a line is left at a break; but this losing too much of the parchment, and making the book too bulky, for the avoiding of both these inconveniences, the way afterward was, to put a point at the end of every stichus, and so continue the writing without leaving any part of the line void as before. And in the same manner, I conceive, the pesukim, or verses of the Hebrew Bibles, were anciently written. At first they allowed a line to every verse, and a line drawn from one end of the parchment to the other, of the length as above mentioned, was sufficient to contain any verse that is now in the Hebrew Bible; but many verses falling short of this length, they found the same inconveniences that the Greeks after did in the first way of writing their stichi; and, therefore, came to the same remedy, that is, they did put the two points above mentioned, (which they call soph-pasuk) at the place where the former verse ended, and continued the writing of the next verse in the same line, without leaving any void space at all in the line. And so their manner has continued ever since; excepting only that between their sections, as well the smaller as the larger, there is some void space left, to make the distinction between them: and I am the more inclined to think this to be the truth of the matter; that is, that anciently the verses of the Hebrew Bible were so many lines; because among the ancients of other nations, about the same time, the lines in the writings of prose authors, as well as of poets, were termed verses; and hence it is that we are told that Zoroaster's works contain two millions of verses; and Aristotle's four hundred and forty-five thousand two hundred and seventy; though neither of them wrote any thing but in prose; and so also we find the writings of Tully, of Origen, of Lactantius, and others, who were all prose writers, reckoned by the number of verses, which could be no other than so many lines. And why, then, might not the Bible verses anciently have been of the same nature also? I mean when written in long lines as aforesaid. But the long lines often occasioning, that in reading to the end of one verse, they lost the beginning of the next, and so often did lead wrong, either by skipping a line, or beginning the same again; for the avoiding of which they came to the way of writing in columns, and in short lines, as above mentioned. But all this I mean of their Sacred Synagogical Books. In their common Bibles they are not tied up to such rules, but write and print them so as they may serve for their instruction and convenience in common use.

"But the division of the Holy Scriptures into chapters, as we now have them, is of a much later date. The Psalms, indeed, were always divided as at present: for St. Paul, in his sermon at Antioch, in Pisidia, quotes the second Psalm: but, as to the rest of the Holy Scriptures, the division of them into such chapters as we find at present, is a matter of which the ancients knew nothing. Some attribute it to Stephen Langton, who was archbishop of Canterbury, in the reigns of King John and King Henry III. his son. But the true author of this invention was Hugo de Sancto Claro, who being from a Dominican monk advanced to the dignity of a cardinal, and the first of that order that was so, is commonly called Hugo Cardinalis.

The third thing that Ezra did about the Holy Scriptures in his edition of them was:—He added in several places, throughout the books of this edition, what appeared necessary for the illustrating, correcting, or completing of them, wherein he was assisted by the same spirit by which they were at first written. Of this sort we may reckon the last chapter of Deuteronomy, which giving an account of the death and burial of Moses, and of the succession of Joshua after him, it could not be written by Moses himself, who undoubtedly was the penman of all the rest of that book. It seems most probable that it was added by Ezra at this time: and such also we may reckon the several interpolations which occur in many places of the Holy Scriptures. For that there are such interpolations is undeniable, there being many passages through the whole sacred writers which create difficulties which can never be solved without the allowing of them: as, for instance, Gen. xii. 6., it is remarked on Abraham's coming into the land of Canaan, that the Canaanites were then in the land: which is not likely to have been said till after the time of Moses, when the Canaanites, being extirpated by Joshua, were then no longer in the land: and Gen. xxii. 14. we read, As it is said to this day, In the mount of the Lord it shall be seen. But mount Moriah, which is the mount there spoken of, was not called the mount of the Lord till the temple was built on it many hundred years after; and this being here spoken of as a proverbial saying that obtained among the Israelites in after ages, the whole style of the text manifestly points at a time after Moses, when they were in the possession of the land in which this mountain stood; and, therefore, both these particulars prove the words cited to have been an interpolation. Gen. xxxvi. 3. it is written, And these are the kings that reigned in the land of Edom before there reigned any king over the land of Israel, which could not have been said till after there had been a king in Israel; and therefore they cannot be Moses's words, but must have been interpolated afterward. Exod. xvi. 35. the words of the text are, And the children of Israel did eat manna forty years, till they came to a land inhabited. They did eat manna till they came into the borders of the land of Canaan. But Moses was dead before the manna ceased; and, therefore, these cannot be his words, but must have been inserted afterward. Deut. ii. 12. it is said, The Horims also dwelt in Seir beforetime, but the children of Esau succeeded them when they had destroyed them before them, and dwelt in their stead, as Israel did unto the land of his possession which the Lord gave unto them. Which could not have been written by Moses, Israel having not till after his death entered into the land of his possession, which the Lord gave unto them. Deut. iii. 2. it is said, Only Og, king of Bashan, remained of the remnant of giants; behold, his bedstead was a bedstead of iron. Is it not in Rabbah of the children of Ammon? The whole style and strain of which text, especially that of the last clause of it, plainly speaks it to have been written a long while after that king was slain; and, therefore, it could not have been written by Moses, who died within five months after. In the same chapter verse 14. it is said, Jair, the son of Manasseh, took all the country of Argob unto the coasts of Geshuri and Maachathi; and called them after his own name, Bashan-havoth-jair, unto this day. Where the phrase unto this day speaks a much greater distance of time after the fact related than those few months in which Moses survived after the conquest; and, therefore, what is there written must have been inserted by some other hand than that of Moses, and long after his death. And in the Book of Proverbs, which was certainly King Solomon's; in the beginning of the twenty-fifth chapter, it is written, These are also proverbs of Solomon, which the men of Hezekiah king of Judah copied out. Which must certainly have been added many ages after Solomon; for Hezekiah was the twelfth generation in descent from him.

“Many more instances of such interpolated passages might be given; for throughout the whole Scriptures they have been frequently cast in by way of parenthesis; where they have appeared necessary for the explaining, connecting, or illustrating the text, or supplying what was wanting in it: but those already mentioned are sufficient to prove the thing. Of which interpolations undoubtedly Ezra was the author, in all the books which passed his examination; and Simon the Just in all the rest which were added afterward; for they all seem to refer to those latter times.

“But these additions do not at all detract from the divine authority of the whole, because they were all inserted by the direction of the same Holy Spirit which dictated all the rest. This, as to Ezra, is without dispute; he being himself one of the divine persons of the Holy Scriptures: for he was most certainly the writer of that book in the Old Testament which bears his name; and he is, upon good grounds, supposed to be the author of two more, that is, of the two books of Chronicles, as perchance he was also of the Book of Esther. And if the books written by him be of divine authority, why may not every thing else be so which he has added to any of the rest, since there is reason for us to suppose that he was as much directed by the Holy Spirit of God in the one, as in the other? The great importance of the work proves the thing; for as it was necessary for the church of God that this work should be done, so also it was necessary for the work that the person called thereto should be thus assisted in the completing of it.

“Fourthly, He changed the names of several places that were grown obsolete, putting instead of them the new names by which they were at that time called, that the people might the better understand what was written. Thus, Gen. xiv. 14. Abraham is said to have pursued the kings who carried Lot away captive as far as Dan, whereas the name of that place was Laish till the Danites, long after the death of Moses, possessed themselves of it, and called it Dan, after the name of their father; and, therefore, it could not be called Dan in the original copy of Moses, but that name must have been put in afterward, instead of that of Laish, on this review. And so in several places in Genesis, and also in Numbers, we find mention made of Hebron, whereas the name of that city was Kiriath-arba, till Caleb, having the possession of it after the division of the land, called it Hebron after the name of Hebron, one of his sons: and, therefore, that name could not be had in the text, till placed there long after the time of Moses, by way of exchange for that of Kiriath-arba, which, it is not to be doubted, was done at the time of this review.

“And many other like examples of this may be given; whereby it appears that the study of those who governed the church of God at those times was to render the Scriptures as plain and intelligible to the people as they could; and not to hide and conceal any of it from them.

"Fifthly, He wrote out the whole in the Chaldee character: for that having now grown wholly into use among the people after the Babylonish captivity, he changed the old Hebrew character for it, which hath since that time been retained only by the Samaritans, among whom it is preserved even to this day. This was the old Phœnician character, from which the Greeks borrowed theirs; and the old Ionian alphabet bears some similitude to it, as Scaliger shows in his notes upon Eusebius' Chronicon. In this Moses and the other prophets recorded the Sacred Oracles of God; and in this the finger of God himself wrote the ten commandments in the two tables of stone. Eusebius, in his Chronicon, tells us so, and St. Jerom doth the same; and so do also both the Talmuds; and the generality of learned men, as well among the Jews as Christians, hold this opinion.

"Whether Ezra on this review did add the vowel points, which are now in the Hebrew Bibles, is a hard question to be decided: it went without contradiction in the affirmative, till Elias Levita, a German Jew, wrote against it about the beginning of the Reformation. Buxtorf, the father, endeavoured to refute his arguments: but Cupellus, a Protestant divine, of the French church, and professor of Hebrew in their university at Saumur, hath, in a very elaborate discourse, made a thorough reply to all that can be said on this head, and very strenuously asserted the contrary. Buxtorf, the son, in vindication of his father's opinion, has written an answer to it, but not with that satisfaction to the learned world as to hinder the generality of them from going into the other opinion.

"There is in the church of St. Dominic, in Bononia, a copy of the Hebrew Scriptures, kept with a great deal of care, which they pretend to be the original copy written by Ezra himself; and, therefore, it is there valued at so high a rate that great sums of money have been borrowed by the Bononians upon the pawn of it, and again repaid for its redemption. It is written in a very fair character, upon a sort of leather; and made up in a roll, according to the ancient manner: but it having the vowel points annexed, and the writing being fresh and fair, without any decay, both these particulars prove the novelty of that copy.

"But though Ezra's government over all Judah and Jerusalem expired with this year, 446; yet his labour to serve the church of God did not end here; for still he went on as a preacher of righteousness, and a skilful scribe in the law of God, to perfect the reformation which he had begun, both in preparing for the people correct editions of the Scriptures, and also in bringing all things in church and state to be conformed to Scripture rules. And this he continued to do so long as he lived, and in this he was thoroughly assisted and supported by the next governor, who, coming to Jerusalem with the same intention, and the same zeal, for promoting the honour of God, and the welfare of his people in Judah and Jerusalem, as Ezra did, he struck in heartily with Ezra in the work, so that Ezra went on still to do the same things by the authority of the new governor, which he before did by his own; and by their thus joining together in the same holy undertaking, and their mutually assisting each other, it exceedingly prospered in their hands, till at length, notwithstanding all opposition both from within and without, it was brought to full perfection forty-nine years after it had been begun by Ezra. Whether Ezra lived so long is uncertain: but what he had not time to do was completed by the piety and zeal of his successor."

THE BOOK OF EZRA.

Chronological Notes relative to this Book.

Year from the Creation, according to Archbishop Ussher, whose system of chronology is the most generally received, 3468.—Year before the birth of Christ, 532.—Year before the vulgar era of Christ's nativity, 536.—Year of the Julian period, 4178.—Year since the Flood of Noah, according to the English Bible, 1812.—Year of the Cali Yuga, or Indian era of the Deluge, 2566.—Year from the vocation of Abram, 1386.—Year from the destruction of Troy, 649.—This we collect from three passages in Dionysius of Halicarnassus, (who flourished in the Augustian age,) which state that an interval of four hundred and thirty-two years elapsed from the destruction of Troy to the building of Rome.—Year from the foundation of Solomon's temple, 475.—Year since the division of Solomon's monarchy into the kingdoms of Israel and Judah, 439.—Year of the era of Iphitus, who re-established the Olympic games, three hundred and thirty-eight years after their institution by Hercules, or about eight hundred and eighty-four years before the commencement of the Christian era, 349.—Year since the conquest of Corebus at Elis, usually styled the first Olympiad, (being the 24th Olympiad after their re-establishment by Iphitus,) 241.—First year of the sixty first Olympiad.—Year of the Varroian, or generally received era of the building of Rome, 218. This is upon the supposition that Rome was built in the last year of the twenty-third Olympiad.—Year from the building of Rome, according to Cato and the Fasti Consulares, 217. Dionysius of Halicarnassus follows this account; for he says that the metropolis of the Roman world was built in the first year of the twenty-fourth Olympiad, which was the first year of Charops, the first decennial archon of the Athenians.—Year from the building of Rome, according to Polybius, 216.—Year from the building of Rome, according to Fabius Pictor, who lived about two hundred and twenty-five years before the commencement of the Christian era, 212.—Year of the Nabonassarean era, 212.—Year since the destruction of the kingdom of Israel by Shalmaneser, the king of Assyria, 185.—Year from the destruction of Solomon's temple by Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, 53.—Year of Servius Tullius, the sixth king of the Romans, and father-in-law of Tarquin the Proud, 43.—Year of Arison, king of Lacedæmon, and of the family of the Proclides, or Eurypontide, 29.—Year of Anaxandrides, king of Lacedæmon, and of the family of the Euristhenide, or Agide, 28. N. B. The kings of the Lacedæmonians of the families of the Proclides and the Euristhenide sat on the throne together for several hundred years.—Year of Amyntas, the ninth king of the Macedonians, 12.—Year of the reign of Cyrus, computing from the year in which he dethroned his grandfather Astyages, the last king of Media, 24. But this was only his first year, if, with the Holy Scriptures, as well as Xenophon in the eighth book of his Institutes, we compute the years of his reign from the time in which he was put in possession of the whole Eastern empire. See Ezra i. 1.—Year of the Babylonish captivity, 70. The years of this captivity are generally reckoned from 606, B. C. when Jehoiakim king of Judah was put in chains to be carried to Babylon; and are supposed to be terminated by the edict of Cyrus to rebuild the temple at Jerusalem. But others are of opinion, that the seventy years' captivity are to be computed from the total destruction of the Jewish monarchy; and that they reach down to the second year of Darius king of Persia, at which time Zerubbabel and Joshua were encouraged by the prophets Haggai and Zechariah to proceed with the rebuilding of the temple.

In the preface to this book, the reader will find the history of Ezra detailed at considerable length. It is only necessary to say here, that he is generally allowed among the Jews to have been of the sacerdotal family, and therefore he is called שֹׁפֵט, the priest, by the Septuagint. Among the rabbins he passes for a most extraordinary critic, divinely authorized to collect and arrange the different portions of the Sacred Writings, and digest them into a system. How far all they say on this subject is true, we cannot tell: he was, beyond all controversy, a very eminent man; and, in all that he did, acted under the immediate direction and inspiration of the Almighty.

This history contains the transactions of about eighty-two years; from the first year of Cyrus in Babylon, according to Archbishop Ussher, A. M. 3468, to the nineteenth year of Ardsheer Diraz Dest, or Artaxerxes Longimanus, who sent Nehemiah to Jerusalem, about A. M. 3550. For all other particulars see the introduction.

NOTES ON CHAPTER I.

Verse 1. Now in the first year] This is word for word with the two last verses of the preceding book; which stand here in their proper place and connexion, but there are entirely destitute of chronological connexion and reference.

Cyrus] This prince, so eminent in antiquity, is said to have been the son of Cambyses king of Persia, and Mandane, daughter of Astyages king of the Medes; and was born about six hundred years before Christ. Josephus accounts for his partiality to the Jews from this circumstance; that he was shown the places in Isaiah the prophet, where he is mentioned by name, and his exploits and conquests foretold; see Isa. xlv. 28. and xlv. 1, &c. Finding himself thus distinguished by the God of the Jews, he was anxious to give him proofs of his gratitude in return; and so made the decree in favour of the Jews, restored their sacred vessels, gave them liberty to return to their own land, and encouraged them to rebuild the temple of Jehovah, &c.

throughout all his kingdom, and put it also in writing, saying,

2 Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, The LORD God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth; and he hath ^dcharged me to build him a house at Jerusalem, which is in Judah.

3 Who is there among you of all his people? his God be with him, and let him go up to Jerusalem, which is in Judah, and build the house of the LORD God of Israel, (^e he is the God,) which is in Jerusalem.

4 And whosoever remaineth in any place where he sojourneth, let the men of his place ^f help him with silver, and with gold, and with goods, and with beasts, besides the free-will-offering for the house of God that is in Jerusalem.

^d Isa. 44. 28. & 45. 1, 13.—^e Dan. 6. 26.—^f Heb. lift him up.
^g Phil. 2. 13.

It is very probable that when Cyrus took Babylon, he found Daniel there, who had been long famed as one of the wisest ministers of state in all the East; and it is most likely that it was this person who pointed out to him the prophecy of Isaiah, and gave him those farther intimations relative to the divine will which were revealed to himself. Of his death there are contradictory accounts. Herodotus says, that having turned his arms against the Massa-getes, and killed the son of Tomyris their queen, the mother, impatient to avenge the death of her son, sent him a defiance; promised to glut him with blood; and, having attacked him, pretended to be worsted and to fly; and thus she drew him and his army into an ambuscade, where he was routed and slain, and a considerable part of his army destroyed.
The enraged queen having found his body, cut off his head, and threw it into a vessel full of human blood, with this most bitter sarcasm:—

Σὺ μὲν ἐμὴν ζωὴν τε καὶ νίκης τε μαχὴν, ἀπαλεῖπας παῖδα τὸν ἐμόν, ἔλυν δολῶ· σὲ δ' ἐγώ, κατὰ περ νεικῆσα, αἵματος πορέσω. HEROD.
Chio, c. 214.

“Although living and victorious, thou hast destroyed me in slaying my son, whom thou hast overcome by deceit: but, as I have threatened, I will now slake thy thirst with blood.”

Cyrus, thy thirst was blood; now drink thy fill.

By—Jeremiah] This prophet, chap. xxv.
12. and xxix. 11. had foretold that the Baby-lonish captivity should last only seventy years:
these were now ended; Cyrus had given the Jews permission and encouragement to return to Judea, and rebuild the temple of the Lord; and thus the prediction of Jeremiah was fulfilled.

Verse 2. The LORD God of heaven] It is not unworthy of remark, that in all the books

5 ¶ Then rose up the chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin, and the priests, and the Levites, with all them whose spirit ^g God had raised; to go up to build the house of the LORD which is in Jerusalem.

6 And all they that were about them
^h strengthened their hands with vessels of silver, with gold, with goods, and with beasts, and with precious things, besides all that was willingly offered.

7 ¶ ⁱ Also Cyrus the king brought forth the vessels of the house of the LORD, ^k which Nebuchadnezzar had brought forth out of Jerusalem, and had put them in the house of his gods;

8 Even those did Cyrus king of Persia bring forth by the hand of Mithredath the treasurer, and numbered them unto ^l Sheshbazzar, the prince of Judah.

^h That is, helped them.—ⁱ Ch. 5. 14. & 6. 5.—^k 2 Kings 24. 13.

written prior to the captivity, Jehovah is called The Lord of hosts; but in all the books written after the captivity, as 2 Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, and Daniel, he is styled,
The God of heaven. The words, however, have the same meaning.

All the kingdoms of the earth] At this time the empire of the Medo-Persians was very extensive: according to ancient writers, Cyrus, at this time, reigned over the Medes, Persians, Hyrcanians, Armenians, Syrians, Assyrians, Arabians, Cappadocians, Phrygians, Lydians, Phœnicians, Babylonians, Bactrians, Indians, Saci, Cilicians, Paphlagonians, Moriandrians, and many others. His empire extended on the East, to the Red sea; on the North, to the Euxine sea; on the West, to the island of Cyprus and Egypt; and on the South, to Ethiopia.

Verse 4. Whosoever remaineth in any place]
Every one was at liberty to go, but none was obliged to go. Thus their attachment to God was tried: he whose heart was right with God went; he who was comfortably settled in Babylon, might go if he chose. Those who did not go were commanded to assist their brethren who went.

Verse 6. Vessels of silver] Articles of silver, gold, &c.

Verse 7. The king brought forth the vessels]
See on verses 9—11.

Verse 8. Sheshbazzar, the prince of Judah]
This was probably the Chaldean name of him who was originally called Zerubbabel: the former signifies joy in affliction; the latter, a stranger in Babylon. The latter may be designed to refer to his captive state, the former to the prospect of release. Some think this was quite a different person; a Persian, or Chaldean, sent by Cyrus to superintend whatever officers or men Cyrus might have sent to assist the Jews on their return; and to procure them help in the Chaldean provinces,

Verse 11. All the vessels—were five thousand and four hundred] This place is without doubt corrupted: here it is said the sum of all the vessels, of every quality and kind, was five thousand four hundred; but the enumeration of the articles, as given in verses 9 and 10, gives the sum of two thousand four hundred and ninety-nine only. But we can correct this account from 1 Esdras ii. 13, 14.

I shall set both accounts down, that they may be compared together.

According, therefore, to the sum total in Ezra, the sum total in Esdras is only 69 different. See the next chapter.

It may be said, that the vessels did actually amount to 5400, and that the chief of them only were intended to be specified: and these happen to amount to 2499; but that it was not the design of Ezra to insert the whole; and that the ninth verse should be considered as stating, And of the chief of them, that is, the gold and silver articles, this is the number. But the expression in verse 10, other vessels, sets this conjecture aside: the place is most manifestly corrupted.

NOTES ON CHAPTER II.

Verse 1. These are the children of the province] That is, of Judea; once a kingdom and a flourishing nation, now a province subdued, tributary, and ruined! Behold the goodness and severity of God! Some think Babylon is meant by the province; and that the children of the province mean those Jews who were born in Babylon. But the first is most likely to be the meaning; for thus we find Judea styled, chap. v. 8. Besides, the province is contradistinguished from Babylon even in this first verse. The children of the province—that had been carried away unto Babylon.

Verse 2. Which came with Zerubbabel] There are many difficulties in this table of names; but, as we have no less than three copies of it, (that contained here from ver. 1—67. a second in Nehem. vii. 6—69. and a third in 1 Esdras v. 7—43.) on a careful examination they will be found to correct each other. The versions also, and the Varie Lectiones of Kennicott and De Rossi, do much toward harmonizing the names.

Though the sum total at the end of each of these enumerations is equal, namely 42,360; yet the particulars reckoned up make in Ezra only 29,818, and in Nehemiah 31,089. We find that Nehemiah mentions 1765 persons which are not in Ezra, and Ezra has 494 not mentioned by Nehemiah. Mr. Altting thinks that this circumstance, which appears to render all hope of reconciling them impossible, is precisely the very point by which they can be reconciled: for, if we add Ezra's surplus to the sum in Nehemiah, and the surplus of Nehemiah to the number in Ezra, the numbers will be equal.

Verse 55. The children of Solomon's servants] The Nethinim, and others appointed to do the meaner services of the holy house.

Verse 63. The Tirshatha] This is generally supposed to be Nehemiah, or the person who was the commandant; (see chap. viii. 9. and x. 1.) for the word appears to be the name of an office. The Vulgate and Septuagint write it Atershatha; the Syriac and Arabic render it the princes of Judah. Some suppose the word to be Persian; but nothing like it of the same import occurs in that language at present. If, as Castel supposed, it signifies austerity, or that fear which is impressed by the authority of a governor; it may come from تيرش ters, FEAR, or ترش terash, ACID; the former from ترسیدن tarsidan, to FEAR OF DREAD.

Should not eat of the most holy things] There was a high priest then, but no Urim and Thummim, these having been lost in the captivity.

Verse 66. Their horses—seven hundred, &c.] They went into captivity stripped of every thing: they now return from it, abounding in the most substantial riches; viz. horses, 736, or, according to Esdras, 7036; mules, 245; camels, 435; asses, 6720; besides gold, and silver, and rich stuffs. NOTES ON CHAPTER III.

Verse 1. When the seventh month was come] The month Tisri, which answers to the latter part of our September, and beginning of October. It seems that the Israelites had left Babylon about the spring of the year; that on their arrival at Jerusalem they constructed themselves huts and sheds to lodge in among the ruins, in which they must have spent some months. After this, they rebuilt the altar of burnt-offerings, and kept the feast of tabernacles, which happened about this time; and continued to offer sacrifices regularly, as if the temple were standing.

Verse 2. Jeshua, the son of Jozadak] He was grandson of Seraiah the high priest, who was put to death by Nebuchadnezzar, 2 Kings xxxv. 18, 21. This Jeshua, or Joshua, was the first high priest after the captivity.

Verse 3. They set the altar upon his bases] Rebuilt it on the same spot on which it had formerly stood. As it was necessary to keep up the divine worship during the time they should be employed in re-edifying the temple, they first reared this altar of burnt-offerings; and all this they did, "though fear was upon them," because of the unfriendly disposition of their surrounding neighbours.

Verse 4. They kept also the feast of tabernacles, as it is written] This began on the fifteenth day of the seventh month; but they had begun the regular offerings from the first the Levites, and all they that were come out of the captivity unto Jerusalem; and appointed the Levites, from twenty

Verse 7. They gave money also] They building his temple; see 1 Kings v. 11. He employed the Tyrians, gave them meat and drink, &c.; and this permission they now had from Cyrus.

transporting them to the place, and making other necessary preparations for the comhave been greatly inferior, because it wanted the ark of the covenant, the heavenly fire, the mercy-seat, the heavenly manna, Aaron's rod that budded, the divine shekina, the spirit of prophecy, and most probably the Urim and Many shouted for joy] Finding they were now restored to their own land, and to the worship of their God in his own peculiar city:

these, in general, had not seen the original temple; and, therefore, could not feel affected in that way which the elderly people did.

The sight must have been very affecting: a whole people, one part crying aloud with sorrow, the other shouting aloud for joy; and on the same occasion too, in which both sides felt an equal interest! The prophet Haggai comforted them on this occasion, by assuring them that the glory of this latter house should exceed that of the former, because the Lord (Jesus Christ) was to come to this temple, and fill it with his glory. See Haggai, chap. ii.

NOTES ON CHAPTER IV.

Verse 1. Now when the adversaries] These were the Samaritans, and the different nations with which the kings of Assyria had peopled Israel, when they had carried the original inhabitants away into captivity. See ver. 9.

Verse 2. Let us build with you] We acknowledge the same God, are solicitous for his glory, and will gladly assist you in this work. But that they came with no friendly intention, the context proves.

Verse 3. Ye have nothing to do with us] We cannot acknowledge you as worshippers of the true God; and cannot participate with you in any thing that relates to his worship.

Verse 4. Weakened the hands] Discouraged and opposed them by every possible means.

Verse 5. Hired counsellors] They found means to corrupt some of the principal officers of the Persian court, so that the orders of Cyrus were not executed; or at least so slowly, as to make them nearly ineffectual.

Until the reign of Darius] This was probably Darius the son of Hystaspes.

Verse 6. In the reign of Ahasuerus] This is the person who is called Cambyzes by the Greeks. He reigned seven years and five months; and during the whole of that time the building of the temple was interrupted.

Verse 7. In the days of Artaxerxes] After the death of Cambyzes, one of the Magi named Oropastus by Trogus Pompeius, Smerdis by Herodotus, Mardus by Aeschylus, and Sphen-dates by Ctesias, usurped the empire, feigning himself to be Smerdis, the brother of Cambyzes, who had been put to death. This is the person named Artaxerxes in the text: or, following the Hebrews, Artachshasta. It is generally believed, that from the time of Cyrus the Great, Xerxes and Artaxerxes were names assumed by the Persian sovereigns, whatever their names had been before.

Written in the Syrian tongue] That is, the Syriac or Chaldean character was used; not the Hebrew.

Interpreted in the Syrian tongue] That is, the language, as well as the character, was the Syrian or Chaldeic.

Verse 8. Rehum the chancellor] With this verse the Chaldee part of this chapter begins; and the same language continues to the end of verse 18 of chapter vi. These men wrote to Darius in their own language; and the king in the same dialect returns an answer, chap. vi. This circumstance adds authenticity to what is written: so scrupulous was the inspired penman, that he not only gave the words which each spoke and wrote; but he gave them also in the very language in which they were conceived, and in the character peculiar to that language.

chronologists are not agreed. The Syriac terms him Asphid; but of this person we know no more than we do of Asnapper. He might have been the military officer who was appointed to escort this people to Judea.

Verse 11. And at such a time] The word וּבְכֵן u-bcēneth, has greatly perplexed all commentators and critics. The versions give us no light; and the Vulgate translates et dicunt salutem; "and they wish prosperity." Some translate it, and so forth; and our translators supposed that it referred to the date, which, however, is not specified; and might have been as easily entered as the words, and at such a time.

In our first translation of the Bible, that by Coverdale, in 1535, the passage stands thus:
"And other on this syde the water, and in Canaan."

In that by Beck, 1549, it is thus: "And other on this syde the water, and in Ceneeth;" and in the margin he enters "or peace," "or health."

In Cardmarden's Bible, printed at Rouen, 1566, it stands thus: "And other that are nowe on thys syde the water."

In that printed by Barker, 1615, we find the text thus: "AND OTHER that are beyond the river, and Cheeneth," on which is the following marginal note:—"To wit, Euphrates: and he meaneth in respect of Babel, that they dwelt beyond it." And the note on Cheeneth is,
"Which were a certain people that envied the Jews." All this is merely guessing, in the midst of obscurity: most of these having considered the original word נַחַץ Ceeneth as the name of a people; and in this they follow the Syriac, which uses the word Acāneth.

Calmet thinks we should read וּבְכֵן u-baeth,
"and at this time;" as if they had said, "We wish thee to enjoy the same health and prosperity at all future times, which thou dost at present." This is not remote from the meaning of the Chaldee original.

Verse 13. Toll, tribute, and custom] The first term is supposed to imply the capitation tax; the second an excise on commodities and merchandise; the third, a sort of land tax.
Others suppose the first means a property tax;
the second, a poll tax; and the third, what was paid on imports and exports. In a word, if you permit these people to rebuild and fortify their city, they will soon set you at nought, and pay you no kind of tribute.

Verse 14. Now because we have maintenance from the king's palace] More literally; Now, because at all times we are salted with the salt of the palace. Salt was used as the emblem of an incorruptible covenant; and those who ate bread and salt together were considered as having entered into a very solemn covenant.
These hypocrites intimated that they felt their conscience bound by the league between them and the king; and therefore, could not, conscientiously, see any thing going on that was likely to turn to the king's damage. They were probably also persons in the pay of the Persian king.

Verse 15. The book of the records of thy fathers] That is, the records of the Chaldeans, to whom the Persians succeeded.

Verse 17. Peace, and at such a time] The word נַחַץ u-cēth, is like that which we have already considered on ver. 10. and probably has the same meaning.

easy thing to find a staff to beat a dog." The struggles of the Israelites to preserve or regain their independency, which they had from God, are termed insurrection, rebellion, and sedition; because at last they fell under the power of their oppressors. Had they been successful in these struggles, such offensive words had never been used. In 1688 the people of England struggled to throw off an oppressive government, that was changing the times and the seasons, and overthrowing the religion of the country, and setting up in its place the spurious offspring of the pope and the devil. They were successful; and it is called the revolution: had they failed, it would have been called rebellion; and the parties principally concerned would have been put to death.

Verse 23. Made them to cease by force and power] Commanded them on pain of the king's displeasure not to proceed, obliging all to remit their labours, and probably bringing an armed force to prevent them from going forward.

Verse 24. So it ceased unto the second year of —Darius] They had begun in the first year of Cyrus, B. C. 536, to go up to Jerusalem, and they were obliged to desist from the building, B. The son of Iddo] That is, the grandson of Iddo; for Zechariah was the son of Barachiah, the son of Iddo. See his prophecy, ch. i. ver. 1.

Verse 2. Then rose up Zerubbabel] Here we find three classes of men joining in the sacred work: Zerubbabel the civil governor; Jeshua the high priest, or ecclesiastical governor; and Haggai and Zechariah the prophets. How glorious it is when we see the civil government joining with the sacerdotal and prophetic for the establishment and extension of true religion!

Verse 3. Tatnai governor] He was governor of the provinces which belonged to the Persian empire on their side the Euphrates, comprehending Syria, Arabia Deserta, Phœnicia, and Samaria. He seems to have been a mild and judicious man; and to have acted with great prudence and caution, and without any kind of prejudice. The manner in which he represented this to the king, is a full proof of this disposition.

6 ¶ The copy of the letter that Tatnai, governor on this side the river, and Shethar-boznai, ^l and his companions the Apharashites, which were on this side the river, sent unto Darius the king.

7 They sent a letter unto him, ^m wherein was written thus: Unto Darius the king, all peace.

8 Be it known unto the king, that we went into the province of Judea, to the house of the great God, which is builded with ⁿ great stones, and timber is laid in the walls, and this work goeth fast on, and prospereth in their hands.

9 Then asked we those elders, and said unto them thus, ^o Who commanded you to build this house, and to make up these walls?

10 We asked their names also, to certify thee, that we might write the names of the men that were the chief of them.

11 And thus they returned us answer, saying, We are the servants of the God of heaven and earth, and build the house that was builded these many years ago, which a great king of Israel builded ^p and set up.

Verse 4. What are the names] It is most evident that this is the answer of the Jews to the inquiry of Tatnai, ver. 3; and the verse should be read thus: Then said we unto them after this manner: THESE are the names of the men who make this building.

Verse 5. The eye of their God was upon the elders] The watchful care of God was upon the elders. They were assured of his favour; and they found his especial providence working in their behalf.

Verse 8. With great stones] They are making a very strong, and a very costly building.

Verse 11. We are the servants of the God of heaven] How simple, plain, and ingenuous, is this confession! They were the servants of the God of heaven; how came they then into bondage? Why, we provoked the God of heaven, repeatedly sinned against him, and then he gave us into the hands of our enemies.

provoked the God of heaven unto wrath, he gave them into the hand of ^s Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, the Chaldean, who destroyed this house, and carried the people away into Babylon.

13 But in the first year of ^t Cyrus the king of Babylon, the same King Cyrus made a decree to build this house of God.

14 And ^u the vessels also of gold and silver of the house of God, which Nebuchadnezzar took out of the temple that was in Jerusalem, and brought them into the temple of Babylon, those did Cyrus the king take out of the temple of Babylon, and they were delivered unto one ^v whose name was Sheshbazzar, whom he had made ^w governor;

15 And said unto him, Take these vessels, go, carry them into the temple that is in Jerusalem, and let the house of God be builded in his place.

16 Then came the same Sheshbazzar, and ^x laid the foundation of the house of God which is in Jerusalem: and since that time even until now hath it been in building, and ^y yet it is not finished.

17 Now therefore, if it seem good to the king, ^z let there be search made in the king's treasure-house, which is there at Babylon, whether it be so, that a decree was made of Cyrus the king to build this house of God at Jerusalem, and let the king send his pleasure to us concerning this matter.

There is a great deal of good sense and candour in this letter. Nothing of passion or prejudice appears in it. They laid before the king a fair statement, without any attempt to prejudice his mind; and gave him those directions which were most likely to lead him to the truth, and to form a correct judgment on a business which, however it issued, must be of considerable importance to the state. God was in all this business: he was now giving an additional proof of his continued regard for a disobedient people, whom, though he had punished in his justice, he had spared in his mercy.

Verse 1. In the house of the rolls בית ספריה beith siphria, the house of the books; the king's library. This is the first time we hear of a library.

Verse 2. At Achmetha] Ecbatana in India, whither it is probable all the records of Cyrus had been carried. This was a sort of summer residence for the kings of Persia.

Verse 3. The height thereof threescore cubits] This was much larger than the temple of Solomon. This was sixty cubits high, and sixty cubits broad: whereas Solomon's was only twenty cubits broad, and thirty cubits high.

Verse 4. Three rows of great stones, and a row of new timber] We have noticed this kind of building before; three courses of stones, and then a course of strong balk: and this continued to the square of the building.

And let the expenses be given] Cyrus had ordered wood to be cut at Libanus, and conveyed to Joppa at his expense: but it does not appear that he furnished the other expenses of the building; for we have already seen that the Jews contributed for the defraying of all

6 ^hNow, therefore, Tatnai, governor beyond the river, Shethar-boznai, andⁱ your companions, the Apharsachites, which are beyond the river, be ye far from thence:

7 Let the work of this house of God alone; let the governor of the Jews and the elders of the Jews build this house of God in his place.

8 Moreover, ^kI make a decree what ye shall do to the elders of these Jews for the building of this house of God; that of the king's goods, even of the tribute beyond the river, forthwith expenses be given unto these men, that they be not^l hindered.

9 And that which they have need of, both young bullocks, and rams, and lambs, for the burnt-offerings of the God of heaven, wheat, salt, wine, and oil, according to the appointment of the priests which are at Jerusalem, let it be given them day by day without fail:

10 ^mThat they may offer sacrificesⁿ of sweet savours unto the God of heaven, and^o pray for the life of the king, and of his sons.

others. But it appears that he provided, at his own expense, the sacrifices and offerings for the temple. See ver. 9.

Verse 6. Be ye far from thence] Do not interrupt the Jews in their building; but, on the contrary, farther them all in your power.

Verse 10. And pray for the life of the king, and of his sons.] Even heathens believed that offerings made in their behalf to the God of the Jews would be available. And this principle has had considerable influence in certain states, where there was even a form of religion established by the law, to induce them to tolerate other forms, that the state might have the benefit of their prayers.

Verse 11. Let timber be pulled down.] Whether this refers to the punishment of hanging and gibbeting, of whipping at a post, or of empaling, is not quite clear. In China they tie culprits to posts; and the executioner cuts them open while alive, takes out their bowels, &c. Empaling, thrusting a sharp stake through the body till it comes out at the side of the neck, or hanging, seems to be what is intended here.

Of Cyrus] This sovereign gave his orders for the rebuilding of the temple about A. M. 3468.

And Darius] Darius Hystaspes confirmed the above orders, A. M. 3485.

And Artaxerxes] Artaxerxes Longimanus sent Ezra to Judea, with new privileges, A. M. 3537. With the permission of the same king Nehemiah came to Judea in 3550. The writer recapitulates the different sovereigns who favoured the Jews after the Babylonish captivity. See Calmet.

Verse 15. This house was finished] The sixth year of Darius mentioned here, was about A. M. 3489, twenty years after the foundation had been laid by Zerubbabel, under the reign of Cyrus.

17 And ^a offered at the dedication of this house of God a hundred bullocks, two hundred rams, four hundred lambs; and for a sin-offering for all Israel, twelve he-goats, according to the number of the tribes of Israel.

18 And they set the priests in their ^b divisions, and the Levites in their ^c courses, for the service of God which is at Jerusalem: ^d as ^e it is written in the book of Moses.

19 And the children of the captivity kept the passover ^f upon the fourteenth day of the first month.

20 For the priests and the Levites were ^g purified together, all of them were pure, and ^h killed the passover for all the children of the captivity, and for their brethren the priests, and for themselves.

21 And the children of Israel, which were come again out of captivity, and all such as had separated themselves unto them from the ⁱ filthiness of the heathen of the land, to seek the LORD God of Israel, did eat,

22 And kept the ^k feast of unleavened bread seven days with joy: for the LORD had made them joyful, and ^l turned the heart ^m of the king of Assyria unto them, to strengthen their hands in the work of the house of God, the God of Israel.

Verse 17. Twelve he-goats] This was a sin-offering for every tribe.

Verse 18. And they set the priests] With this verse the Chaldee or Aramitic part of this chapter ends.

Verse 20. The Levites were purified together] They were all ready at one time to observe the proper rites and ceremonies; and had no need of having a second passover, which was appointed by the law for those who had been accidentally defiled, or at a distance from the tabernacle. See 2 Chron. xxx. 3.

Verse 21. And all such as had separated themselves] These were the proselytes who had embraced the Jewish religion by having mingled with the Jews in their captivity. This proves, that there the poor captives had so acted according to the principles of their religion, that the heathens saw it, and walked in the light of the Lord with them. A good example is very persuasive; and particularly so, when founded on pure principles.

Verse 22. Turned the heart of the king of Assyria] I am of Calmet's mind, that king of Assyria here is put for king of Persia. Cyrus and his successors possessed all the rights and estates of the ancient kings of Assyria; and therefore, the same monarch may be styled king of Assyria, as well as king of Persia.

Darius had a very high character, as a wise, just, and merciful prince. To strengthen his title to the crown, he married two of the daughters of Cyrus; and, no doubt, to show his affection to this family, he the more cheerfully confirmed the edict which Cyrus had made in favour of the Jews.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VII.

Verse 1. In the reign of Artaxerxes.] This was Artaxerxes Longimanus, the seventh of whose reign chronologers place A. M. 3547, sixty-eight years after Cyrus had sent back Zerubbabel.—Calmet. See the Introduction.

Son of Seraiah] Either this could not have been Seraiah the high priest, who had been put to death by Nebuchadnezzar, a hundred and twenty-one years before this time, or the term son here must signify only his descendants, or one of his descendants. Were it otherwise, Ezra must now be at least a hundred and twenty-two years of age, supposing him to have been born in the year of his father's death; if, indeed, Seraiah the high priest was his father: but this is evidently impossible. In this place there are only sixteen generations reckoned between Ezra and Aaron, but in 1 Chron. vi. 7, 8, &c. there are not less than twenty-two. We must therefore supply the deficient generations from the above place, between Amariah son of Meraioth, 1 Chron. vi. 7, and Azariah the son of Johanan, ver. 10. There are other discrepancies relative to genealogies in these historical books, which it would be useless to investigate. On these differences much has been already said in different parts of this comment.

Verse 6. A ready scribe] סופר סופר sopher machir, does not merely signify a speedy writer, or an excellent penman, but one that was eminently skilful in expounding the law. In this sense the word γραμματεως, scribe, is repeatedly used in the New Testament; and we find that both in the Old and New Testament it had the same signification. The Syriac gives the sense of the word by translating ܣܦܪܐܢ sophro chocimo, a wise scribe, or expounder.

Verse 8. He came to Jerusalem in the fifth month] From the following verse we learn that Ezra and his company set off from Babylon on the first day of the first month; and thus we find they were upwards of four months on their journey. They could not travel fast, as they were a great company, composed in part of the aged and infirm, besides multitudes of women and children. They appear also to have taken a circuitous route; see on chap. viii.

Verse 10. Ezra had prepared his heart] Here is a fine character of a minister of God. He prepares הָכִין hekin, he fixes, purposes, and determines, לִבּוֹ lebabo, "with his heart," with all his powers and affections, to seek the law of

This title of the king would, in Persian, run thus:—اردشیر شاهنشاه Ardsheer shahinshah,

“great or supreme king, or emperor.”

Verse 13. Their own free will] None shall be forced either to go or stay. He who loves his God will avail himself of this favourable opportunity.

likely that the privy council of the king consisted of seven persons simply. The names of these seven counsellors, or chamberlains, may be found in Esther, chap. i. 10.

Verse 16. And all the silver and gold] The king and his counsellors had already made a 24 Also we certify you, that, touching any of the priests and Levites, singers, porters, Nethinim, or ministers of this house of God, it shall not be lawful to impose toll, tribute, or custom, upon them.

bution which any of the inhabitants of the province of Babylon may think proper to give.

Verse 18. After the will of your God.] He gave them the fullest liberty to order every thing according to their own institutions; binding them to no form or mode of worship.

Verse 23. Why should there be wrath] As he believed he was appointed by the Almighty to do this work, he therefore wished to do it heartily; knowing that if he did not, God would be displeased, and that the kingdom would be cut off from him or his posterity.

would have been unreasonable to have laid them under taxation.

Verse 26. Whether it be unto death] These include almost every species of punishment which should be inflicted on culprits in any civilized state. With this verse the Chaldee part of this chapter ends.

Verse 28. And I was strengthened] In what the king decreed he saw the hand of God; he therefore gave him the praise, and took courage. There is a most amiable spirit of piety in these reflections. Ezra simply states the case; shows thing as this in the king's heart, to beautify the house of the LORD which is in Jerusalem:

28 And ^fhath extended mercy unto me before the king, and his counsellors, and before all the king's mighty princes. And I was strengthened as ^gthe hand of the LORD my God was upon me, and I gathered together out of Israel chief men to go up with me.

what the king had determined; and tells what he said; and then points out the grand agent in the whole business: it was the Lord God of his fathers. Thus God had put it into the king's heart to beautify the house of Jehovah; and, as that house was built for the salvation of the souls of men, he gives God praise for putting it into the king's heart to repair it: he who loves God and man will rejoice in the establishment of the divine worship, because this is the readiest way to promote the best interests of man.

CHAPTER VIII.

The genealogy of the chief persons who went with Ezra from Babylon, 1—14. He gathers them together at Ahava; and finding among them no Levites, he sends confidential persons to the river of Ahava, who return with many Levites and Nethinim, 15—20. He proclaims a fast at Ahava for divine protection on their journey, 21—23. He delivers to the care of the priests, &c. the silver, gold, and sacred vessels, that they might carry them to Jerusalem, and deliver them to the high priest, 24—26. They depart from Ahava, and come to Jerusalem, 31, 32. The vessels are weighed, and the weight registered, 33, 34. They offer burnt-offerings to God, 35. Deliver the king's commissions to his lieutenants; by whom they are furthered in their work, 36.

3 Of the sons of Shechaniah, of the sons of ^cPharosh; Zechariah: and with him were reckoned, by genealogy of the males, a hundred and fifty.

4 Of the sons of Pahath-moab; Elihoenai the son of Zerabiah, and with him two hundred males.

5 Of the sons of Shechaniah; the son of Jahaziel, and with him three hundred males.

6 Of the sons also of Adin; Ebed the son of Jonathan, and with him fifty males.

7 And of the sons of Elam; Jeshaiiah the son of Athaliah, and with him seventy males.

8 And of the sons of Shephatiah; Zebadiah the son of Michael, and with him fourscore males.

9 Of the sons of Joab; Obadiah the son of Jehiel, and with him two hundred and eighteen males.

10 And of the sons of Shelomith; the son of Josiphiah, and with him a hundred and threescore males.

11 And of the sons of Bebai; Zechariah the son of Bebai, and with him twenty and eight males.

12 And of the sons of Azgad; Johanan ^dthe son of Hakkatan, and with him a hundred and ten males.

13 And of the last sons of Adonikam, whose names are these, Eliphelet, Jeiel, and Shemaiah, and 16 Then sent I for Eliezer, for Ariel, for Shemaiah, and for Elnathan, and for Jarib, and for Elnathan, and for Nathan, and for Zechariah, and for Meshullam, chief men; also for Joiarib, and for Elnathan, men of understanding.

17 And I sent them with commandment unto Iddo the chief, at the place Casiphia, and ^hI told them what they should say unto Iddo, and to his brethren the Nethinim, at the place Casiphia, that they should bring unto us ministers for the house of our God.

18 And, by the good hand of our God upon us, they ⁱbrought us a man of understanding, of the sons of Mahli, the son of Levi, the son of Israel; and Sherebiah, with his sons and his brethren, eighteen;

19 And Hashabiah, and with him Jeshaiah of the sons of Merari, his brethren and their sons, twenty;

Verse 15. The river that runneth to Ahava] Ahava was a river itself, which is supposed to be the same that is called Diava, or Adiava, in the province of Adiabene; and perhaps the place whence the people of Ava came who were brought by the king of Assyria to Palestine, 2 Kings xvii. 24.

None of the sons of Levi] None that were simply Levites. He found priests, and they were sons of Levi; but no Levites that were not priests.

Verse 17. At the place Casiphia] The most judicious commentators are agreed that by Casiphia, the Caspian mountains, between Media and Hyrkania, are intended; where, probably, the Nethinim were employed in working silver mines; כּסֵּפֶת kesepeh, from which the word comes, signifies silver.

Verse 22. I was ashamed to require—a band] He had represented God, the object of his worship, as supremely powerful, and as having the strongest affection for his true followers: he could not, therefore, consistently with his declarations, ask a band of soldiers from the king for the service of the Levites, two hundred and twenty Nethinim: all of them were expressed by name.

21 ¶ Then I^l proclaimed a fast there at the river of Ahava, that we might ^mafflict ourselves before our God, to seek of him a ⁿright way for us, and for our little ones, and for all our substance.

22 For ^oI was ashamed to require of the king a band of soldiers and horsemen to help us against the enemy in the way: because we had spoken unto the king, saying, ^pThe hand of our God is upon all them for ^rgood that seek him; but his power and his wrath is ^sagainst all them that ^tforsake him.

23 So we fasted, and besought our God for this; and he was ^uentreated of us.

24 ¶ Then I separated twelve of the chief of the priests, Sherebiah, Hashabiah, and ten of their brethren with them.

25 And weighed unto them ^vthe silver, and the gold, and the vessels, even the offering of the house of our God, which the king, and his counsellors, and his lords, and all Israel there present, had offered:

26 I even weighed unto their hand six hundred and fifty talents of silver, and silver vessels a hundred talents, and of gold a hundred talents;

27 Also twenty basins of gold, of a thousand drams; and two vessels of to protect them on the way, when they were going expressly to rebuild the temple of Jehovah, and restore his worship. He, therefore, found it necessary to seek the Lord by fasting and prayer, that they might have from him those succours without which they might become a prey to their enemies; and then, the religion which they professed would be considered by the heathen as false and vain. Thus we see that this good man had more anxiety for the glory of God than for his own personal safety.

Verse 26. Silver vessels a hundred talents] That is, the weight of all the silver vessels amounted to 100 talents; not that there were 100 vessels of silver, each a talent in weight.

Reckoning, in round sums, 650 talents of silver at 450*l.* the talent, amount to 292,500*l.* sterling. Silver vessels, 100 talents, amount to 45,000*l.*; gold, 100 talents, at 7000*l.* per talent, amount to 700,000*l.* independently of the 20 basins of gold, amounting to 1000 drachms. Now the golden drachm, or daric, was worth about 1*l.* 2*s.* therefore these basins were worth 1100*l.*; the whole amounting to 1,033,600*l.*

29 Watch ye, and keep them, until ye weigh them before the chief of the priests and the Levites, and chief of the fathers of Israel, at Jerusalem, in the chambers of the house of the LORD.

30 So took the priests and the Levites the weight of the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, to bring them to Jerusalem, unto the house of our God.

31 ¶ Then we departed from the river of Ahava on the twelfth day of the first month, to go unto Jerusalem : and ^a the hand of our God was upon us, and he delivered us from the hand of the enemy, and of such as lay in wait by the way.

32 And we ^b came to Jerusalem, and sterling. But these different weights and coins are variously computed; some making the silver talent only 353*l.* 11*s.* 10½*d.*, and the talent of gold 5075*l.* 15*s.* 1½*d.*, calculations which I have elsewhere introduced.

Fine copper, precious as gold.] What these were we cannot tell The Syriac translates نحوشو كورنثيو توبا nechoshô korinthio toba, to be vessels of the best Corinthian brass; so called from the brass found after the burning of Corinth by Lucius Mummîus, which was brass, copper, gold, and silver, all melted together, as is generally supposed. But it was probably some factitious metal, made there, that took the polish, and assumed the brightness of gold, and because of its hardness was more durable. There is still a certain factitious metal made among the Asiatics of this kind : I have seen this metal often made ; it is as bright and fine as gold, takes a most exquisite polish, and will scarcely tarnish. I have kept this exposed to every variation of the air, even among old iron, brass, copper, &c. for twenty years together, without being scarcely at all oxidized. It requires much art in the making ; but the constituent materials are of small value. Vessels of this metal, because of their lustre and durability, for domestic and ornamental uses, are, in many respects, more valuable than gold itself. The only difficulty is to get at first the true colour, which depends on the degree of heat, and the time employed

33 ¶ Now on the fourth day was the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, weighed in the house of our God by the hand of Meremoth the son of Uriah the priest; and with him was Eleazar the son of Phinehas; and with them was Jozabad the son of Jeshua, and Noadiah the son of Binnui, Levites;

34 By number and by weight of every one: and all the weight was written at that time.

35 Also the children of those that had been carried away, which were come out of the captivity, ^doffered burnt-offerings unto the God of Israel, twelve bullocks for all Israel, ninety and six rams, seventy and seven lambs, twelve he-goats for a sin-offering: all this was a burnt-offering unto the LORD.

36 ¶ And they delivered the king's commissions unto the king's lieutenants, and to the governors on this side the river: and they farthered the people, and the house of God.

^z Lev. 22. 2, 3. Num. 4. 4, 15, 19, 20.—^a Ch. 7. 6, 9, 28.—^b Neh. 2. 11.—^c Ver. 26, 30.—^d So Ch. 6. 17.—^e Ch. 7. 21.

in fusion: but there are, however, proper rules to ascertain them. This metal is widely different from the or moulu of France and England, is less expensive, and much more valuable.

Verse 35. Twelve bullocks for all Israel] Though of tribes there were only Judah and Benjamin, yet they offered a bullock for every tribe, as if present. There can be little doubt that there were individuals there from all the twelve tribes; possibly some families of each: but no complete tribe but those mentioned above.

Verse 36. The king's lieutenants] אחשארפני achash-darpeney: this is generally understood to mean lieutenant, or deputy; and is probably of Persian origin, though here greatly cor- rupted. The Vulgate renders it regis satraps, the satraps of the king; which is the Persian سأتراب satrab. A viceroy in Persian is صوبه دار soubah-dar; *viceroy*s, صوبه داران soubah-daran.
دارافرن darasfreen, signifies a person in whom one has confidence; and اچي achi, is an epithet of a vizir. These two words conjoined will make nearly that of the text. But I do not give any of these etymologies with confidence.
Other words might be proposed as candidates, but where there is so little certainty conjecture is useless: were it necessary, a dissertation might be written on the Persian words, and Persian forms of speech, in this and the two following books. But probably after my toil few of my readers would thank me for my pains.

CHAPTER IX.

NOTES ON CHAPTER IX.

Verse 1. The people of Israel] These were they who had returned at first with Zerubbabel, and were settled in the land of Judea; and whom Ezra found on his arrival to be little better than the Canaanitish nations, from whom God had commanded them ever to keep separate.

Verse 2. Hath been chief in this trespass.] They who are the first men, have been the most capital offenders: so VIRGIL, Æn. ix. 783.

*Unus homo, vestris, ô ciops, undique septus
Aggeribus, tantas strages impune per urbem

Calm you look on, and see the furious foe
Plunge clouds of heroes to the shades below! Pitt.

The first of the Trojan youth were the chief, the most illustrious: so we say the first men of the kingdom, for the nobles, &c.

Verse 3. I rent my garment and my mantle] The outer and inner garment; in sign of great grief. This significant act is frequently mentioned in the Sacred Writings, and was common among all ancient nations.

Plucked off the hair] Shaving the head and beard were signs of excessive grief; much more so the plucking off the hair, which must produce exquisite pain. All this testified his abhorrence, not merely of the act of having taken strange wives, but their having also joined them in their idolatrous abominations.

5 ¶ And at the evening sacrifice I arose up from my ^lheaviness; and having rent my garment and my mantle, I fell upon my knees, and ^mspread out my hands unto the LORD my God,

6 And said, O my God, I am ⁿashamed and blush to lift up my face to thee, my God: for ^oour iniquities are increased over our head, and our ^ptrespass is ^rgrown up unto the heavens.

Until the evening sacrifice.] The morning sacrifice was the first of all the offerings of the day; the evening sacrifice the last. As the latter was offered between the two evenings, i. e. between sunset and the end of twilight; so the former was offered between break of day and sunrise. Ezra sat astonished; confounded in his mind, distressed in his soul, and scarcely knowing what to do. He probably had withdrawn himself into some sequestered place, or into some secret part of the temple; spending the time in meditation and reflection.

Verse 5. Fell upon my knees] In token of the deepest humility. Spread out my hands; as if to lay hold on the mercy of God. We have already had occasion to explain these significant acts.

Verse 6. I am ashamed and blush] God had been so often provoked, and had so often pardoned them, and they had continued to transgress, that he was ashamed to go back again to the throne of grace, to ask for mercy in their behalf. This is the genuine feeling of every reawakened backslider.

Verse 8. And now for a little space] This interval in which they were returning from servitude to their own land.

And now for a little space grace hath been showed] God has disposed the hearts of the Persian kings to publish edicts in our favour.

A. M. 3547. B. C. 457. Ol. 10 And now, O our God, what shall we say after this? for we have forsaken thy commandments,

To leave us a remnant to escape] The ten tribes are gone irrecoverably into captivity; a great part even of Judah and Benjamin had continued beyond the Euphrates: so that Ezra might well say, there was but a remnant which had escaped.

A nail in his holy place] Even so much ground as to fix our tent-poles in.

May enlighten our eyes] To give us a thorough knowledge of ourselves, and of our highest interest, and to enable us to re-establish his worship, is the reason why God has brought us back to this place.

A little reviving] We were perishing, and our hopes were almost dead; and because of our sins, we were sentenced to death: but God, in his great mercy, has given us a new trial; and he begins with little, to see if we will make a wise and faithful use of it.

Verse 10. What shall we say after this?] Even in the midst of these beginnings of respite and mercy we have begun to provoke thee anew!

Verse 11. Have filled it from one end to another] The abominations have been like a sweeping mighty torrent, that has increased till it filled the whole land, and carried every thing before it.

Verse 13. Hast punished us less than our iniquities] Great, numerous, and oppressive, as our calamities have been; yet, merely as temporal punishments, they have been much less than our provocations have deserved.

Verse 15. Thou art righteous] Thou art merciful: this is one of the many meanings of the word צדק tsedek; and to this meaning St. Paul refers, when he says, God declares his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, Rom. iii. 25. See the note there.

We remain yet escaped] Because of this righteousness or mercy.

In our trespasses] We have no righteousness; we are clothed and covered with our trespasses.

We cannot stand before thee because of this.] The parallel place, as noted in the margin, is Psal. cxxx. 3. If thou Lord, shouldest mark iniquities, O Lord, who shall stand? Every man must stand before the judgment-seat of Christ: but who shall stand there with joy? No man against whom the Lord marks iniquities. There is a reference here to the temple service: the priests and Levites stood and ministered before the Lord, but they were not permitted to do so unless pure from all legal pollution; so no man shall stand before the judgment-seat of Christ who is not washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb. Reader, how dost thou expect to stand there?

CHAPTER X.

The people are greatly afflicted by Ezra's prayer, 1. Shechaniah proposes that all who had taken strange wives should put them away, and the children they had by them: and to make a covenant to serve God, 2-4. Ezra is encouraged; and makes a proclamation to collect the people, to find who had transgressed, 5-8. They come together on the 20th day of the ninth month, 9. Ezra exhorts them to put away their strange wives, 10. The people agree to it, and require time, 11-14. This being granted, the business is completed by the first of the first month, 15-17. Some of the priests had taken strange wives; their names, and the names of all who were in the same trespass, 18-44.

NOW, ^a when Ezra had prayed, and when he had confessed, weeping and casting himself down ^b before the house of God, there assembled unto him out of Israel a very great congregation of men, and women, and children: for the people ^c wept very sore.

2 And Shechaniah the son of Jehiel, one of the sons of Elam, answered and said unto Ezra, We have ^d trespassed against our God, and have taken strange wives of the people of the land: yet now there is hope in Israel concerning this thing.

3 Now therefore let us make a ^e covenant with our God ^f to put away all the wives, and such as are born of them, according to the counsel of my lord, and of those that ^g tremble at ^h the commandment of our God; and let it be done according to the law.

4 Arise; for this matter belongeth unto thee: we also will be with thee: ⁱ be of good courage, and do it.

5 Then arose Ezra, and made the chief priests, the Levites, and all Israel, ^k to swear that they should do according to this word. And they sware.

6 ¶ ^l Then Ezra rose up from before the house of God, and went into the chamber of Johanan the son of Eliashib: and when he came thither, he ^m did eat no bread, nor drink water: for he mourned because of the transgression of them that had been carried away.

7 And they made proclamation throughout Judah and Jerusalem unto all the children of the captivity, that they should gather themselves together unto Jerusalem;

8 And that whosoever would not come within three days, according to the counsel of the princes and the elders, all his substance should be ⁿ forfeited, and himself separated from the congregation of those that had been carried away.

9 ¶ Then all the men of Judah and Benjamin gathered themselves together unto Jerusalem within three days. It was the ninth month, and the twentieth day of the month; and ^o all the people sat in the street of the house of God, trembling because of this matter, and for ^p the great rain.

10 And Ezra the priest stood up, and said unto them, Ye have transgressed, and ^r have taken strange wives, to increase the trespass of Israel.

11 Now, therefore, ^s make confession unto the LORD God of your fathers,

NOTES ON CHAPTER X.

Verse 1. The people wept very sore] They were deeply affected at the thought of God's displeasure, which they justly feared was about to light upon them, because of their transgressions.

Verse 2. Shechaniah the son of Jehiel] He speaks here in the name of the people, not acknowledging himself culpable, for he is not in the following list. It is in the same form of speech with that in James, chap. ii. 9. with the tongue curse we men. He seems to have been a chief man among the people; and Ezra, at present, stood in need of his influence and support.

Yet now there is hope in Israel] מִקְוֵה mikveh, expectation of pardon; for the people were convinced of the evil, and were deeply penitent: hence it is said, ver. 1. that they wept sore.

Verse 3. Let us make a covenant] נִכְרַח נִכְרַח berith; let us cut or divide the covenant sacrifice. See the notes on Gen. xv. 10.

Verse 4. Arise, for this matter belongeth unto thee] By the decree of Artaxerxes, he was authorized to do every thing that the law of God required: see chap. vii. 23—28. And all officers were commanded to be aiding and assisting; hence Shechaniah says, We are with you.

Verse 5. And they sware.] The thing was evidently contrary to the law of God; and now he bound them, by an oath, to rectify the abuse.

Verse 6. Johanan the son of Eliashib] Eliashib was high priest, and was succeeded in that office by his son Joiada, Neh. xii. 10. Probably Johanan here is the same as Jonathan in Nehemiah, who was the son of Joiada, and grandson of Eliashib. Some suppose that Johanan and Joiada were two names for the same person.

Verse 8. All his substance should be forfeited] To the use of the temple. So the Septuagint understood the place: ἀναθηματισθῆναι πρὸς τὴν ἱεραγίαν αὐτοῦ, "All his substance shall be devoted to a holy use."

Himself separated] Excommunicated from the church of God, and exiled from Israel.

Verse 9. Ninth month] Answering to a part of our December.

Trembling because of—the great rain] Ἀπὸ τοῦ χειμῶνος, Septuagint, Because of the winter: it was now December, the coldest and most rainy part of the year in Palestine.

12 Then all the congregation answered and said with a loud voice, As thou hast said, so must we do.

13 But the people are many, and it is a time of much rain, and we are not able to stand without, neither is this a work of one day or two: for ^u we are many that have transgressed in this thing.

14 Let now our rulers of all the congregation stand, and let all them which have taken strange wives in our cities come at appointed times, and with them the elders of every city, and the judges thereof, until ^v the fierce wrath of our God ^w for this matter be turned from us.

15 ¶ Only Jonathan the son of Asahel, and Jahaziah the son of Tikvah, ^x were employed about this matter: and Meshullam and Shabbethai the Levite helped them.

16 And the children of the captivity did so. And Ezra the priest, with certain chief of the fathers, after the house of their fathers, and all of them by their names, were separated, and sat down in the first day of the tenth month to examine the matter.

17 And they made an end with all the men that had taken strange wives by the first day of the first month.

your sins before God with deep compunction of heart, and the fullest resolution to forsake them.

Verse 12. As thou hast said, so must we do] They all resolved to do what Ezra then commanded; they did put away their wives, even those by whom they had children, ver. 44. This was a great hardship on the women and children: though by the Jewish laws all such marriages were null and void; yet, as the women they had taken, did not know these laws their case was deplorable. However, we may take it for granted that each of them received a portion according to the circumstances of their husbands; and that they and their children were not turned away desolate, but had such a provision as their necessities required. Humanity must have dictated this; and no law of God is contrary to humanity. all, there is some room to doubt whether they did put them finally away; for, several years after, Nehemiah found Jews that had married wives of Ashdod, Ammon, and Moab, Neh. chap. xiii. 23. And if these were not the same women, we find that the same offence was continued.

Verse 17. The first day of the month] So they were three whole months in examining into this affair, and making those separations which the law required.

Verse 19. They gave their hands] They bound themselves, in the most solemn manner, to do as the rest of the delinquents had done; and they made an acknowledgment of their iniquity to God by offering each a ram for a trespass-offering.

This passage, Justin says, the Jews, through enmity to Christ, blotted out of the book of Ezra. He charges them with cancelling several other places, through the same spirit of enmity and opposition.

In the Hebrew text, this and the following book make but one, though sometimes Nehemiah is distinguished as the Second Book of Esdras. In the Masoretic enumeration of sections, &c. both books are conjoined. This may be seen at the end of Nehemiah. I can add nothing of importance to the character of Ezra, which has already been given so much in detail in the introduction to this book.

END OF THE NOTES ON THE BOOK OF EZRA.

INTRODUCTION

BOOK OF NEHEMIAH.

IN the Introduction to the Book of Ezra, we have already seen those wonderful interferences of Divine Providence, in which Nehemiah bore so large a share. Dr. Prideaux, with his usual perspicuity, has interwoven the whole of the transactions of the mission of Nehemiah, with that part of the Persian history with which they are connected; which I shall give, as in the preceding book, in his own words. He connects this book, as it ought, with the book of Ezra. See before.

“He who succeeded Ezra in the government of Judah and Jerusalem, was Nehemiah, a very religious and most excellent man; one that was nothing behind his predecessor, saving his learning and great knowledge in the law of God. He came to Jerusalem in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes Longimanus, about four hundred and forty-five years before Christ; and, by a commission from him, superseded that of Ezra, and succeeded him in the government of Judah and Jerusalem. He had in that commission, by an express clause therein inserted, full authority to repair the walls, and set up the gates of Jerusalem; and to fortify it again in that manner as it was before it was dismantled and destroyed by the Babylonians. He was a Jew, whose ancestors had formerly been citizens of Jerusalem; for there, he says, was the place of his fathers’ sepulchres: but as to the tribe or family which he was of, no more is said, but only that his father’s name was Hachaliah, who seems to have been of those Jews who, having gotten good settlements in the land of their captivity, chose rather to abide in them than return to their own country, when leave was granted for it. It is most likely that Hachaliah was an inhabitant of the city of Shushan, and that it was his dwelling there that gave his son an opportunity of gaining an advancement in the king’s palace; for he was one of the cup-bearers of King Artaxerxes, which was a place of great honour and advantage in the Persian court, because of the privilege it gave him of being daily in the king’s presence, and the opportunity which he had thereby of gaining his favour for the obtaining of any petition which he should make to him; and that, especially since the times of his attendance always were when the king was making his heart merry with the wine which he served up to him; for this is the best opportunity with all men for the obtaining any boon that shall be desired of them, because they are always then in the best humour of complying: it was at such a time that he asked the government of Judea, and obtained it. And, by the like advantages of his place, no doubt it was that he gained those immense riches, which enabled him for so many years, out of his own private purse only, to live in his government with that splendour and expense as will be hereafter related, without burdening the people at all for it: and no doubt it was by the favour of Queen Esther, as being of the same nation and people with her, that he obtained so honourable and advantageous a preferment in that court. However, neither the honour or advantage of this place, nor the long settlement of his family out of his country, could make him forget his love for it, or lay aside that zeal which he had for the religion of his forefathers, who had formerly dwelt in it. For though he had been born and bred in a strange land, yet he had a great love for Sion, and a heart thoroughly set for the advancing the prosperity of it, and was in all things a very religious observer of the law of his God; and, therefore, when some came from Jerusalem, and told him of the ill state of that city, how the walls of it were still in many places broken down, and the gates of it in the same demolished state as when burnt with fire by the Babylonians, and that, by reason hereof, the remnant of the captivity that dwelt there lay open not only to the incursions and insults of their enemies, but also to the reproach and contempt of their neighbours, as a mean and despicable people, and that they were in both these respects in great grief and affliction of heart; the good man being suitably moved with this representation, applied himself in fasting and prayer unto the Lord his God, and earnestly supplicated him for his people Israel, and the place which he had chosen for his worship among them. And having thus implored the divine mercy against this evil, he resolved next to make his application to the king for the redressing of it, trusting in God for the inclining of his heart thereto; and, therefore, when his turn came next to wait in his office, the king, observing his countenance to be sad, which at other times used not to be so, and asking the cause thereof, he took this opportunity to lay before him the distressed state of his country; and owning this to be the cause of great grief to him, prayed the king to send him there to remedy it. And by the favour of Queen Esther he had his petition granted unto him: for it being particularly marked in the Sacred Text that the queen was sitting with the king when Nehemiah obtained this grant, sufficiently indicates that her favour was assisting to him herein;*

* See the note on this passage.

Introduction to the Book of Nehemiah.

and accordingly a royal decree was issued out for the rebuilding of the walls and gates of Jerusalem; and Nehemiah was sent thither with it, as governor of the province of Judea, to put it in execution: and, to do him the more honour, the king sent a guard of horse with him, under the command of some of the captains of his army, to conduct him safe to his government. And he wrote letters to all the governors on this side the river Euphrates, to farther him in the work on which he was sent; and also gave his orders to Asaph, the keeper of the forests in those parts, to allow him as much timber out of them as should be needed for the finishing of it. However, the Ammonites, the Moabites, and the Samaritans, and other neighbouring nations round, did all they could to hinder him from proceeding therein; and to this they were excited not only by the ancient and bitter enmity which those people bore to the whole Jewish nation, because of the different manners and different religions they professed; but most especially at this time because of their lands; for, during the time that the Jews were in captivity, these nations having seized their lands, were forced to restore them on their return; for which reason they did all they could to oppose their settlement, hoping that if they could be kept low, they might find an opportunity, some time or other, of resuming the prey they had lost. But Nehemiah was not at all discouraged at this; for having, on his arrival, at Jerusalem made known to the people the commission with which he was sent, he took a view of the ruins of the old walls, and immediately set about the repairing of them, dividing the people into several companies, and assigning to each of them the quarter where they were to work, but reserving to himself the superintendence and direction of the whole, in which he laboured so effectually that all was finished by the end of the month Elul, within the compass of thirty-two days, notwithstanding all manner of opposition that was made against him both from within and without: for, within, several false prophets, and other treacherous persons, endeavoured to create obstructions: and from without, Sanballat the Horonite, Tobias the Ammonite, Geshem the Arabian, and several others, gave him all the disturbance they were able, not only by underhand dealings, and treacherous tricks and contrivances, but also by open force: so that while part of the people laboured in carrying on the building, the other part stood to their arms to defend themselves against those who had any designs upon them. And all had their arms at hand, even while they worked, to be ready at a signal given to draw together at any part where the enemy should be discovered to be coming upon them: and by this means they secured themselves against the attempts and designs of their enemies till the work was brought to a conclusion. And when they had thus far finished the walls, and set up the gates, a public dedication of them was celebrated with great solemnity by the priests and Levites, and all the people. The burden which the people underwent in the carrying on of this work, and the incessant labour which they were forced to undergo to bring it to so speedy a conclusion being very great, and such as made them faint and groan under it; to revive their drooping spirits, and make them the more easy and ready to proceed in that which was farther to be done, care was taken to relieve them from a much greater burden, the oppression of usurers, which they, at that time, lay under, and had much greater reason to complain of; for the rich, taking advantage of the necessities of the poor, had exacted heavy usury of them, making them pay the centesimal for all moneys lent them; that is, one per cent. for every month, which amounted to twelve per cent. for the whole year, so that they were forced to mortgage their lands, and sell some of their children into servitude, to have wherewith to buy bread for the support of themselves and families; which, being a manifest breach of the law of God, given by Moses, for that forbids all the race of Israel to take usury of any of their brethren, Nehemiah, on hearing of this, resolved forthwith to remove so great an iniquity: in order whereto he called a general assembly of all the people, where, having set forth unto them the nature of the offence, how great a breach it was of the divine law, and how heavy an oppression upon their brethren, and how much it might provoke the wrath of God against them, he caused it to be enacted by the general suffrage of that whole assembly, that all should return to their brethren whatsoever had been exacted of them upon usury, and also release all the lands, vineyards, oliveyards, and houses, which had been taken of them upon mortgage on this account.

“And thus Nehemiah, having executed the main of the end for which he obtained the favour of the king to be sent to Jerusalem, he appointed Hanani and Hananiah to be governors of the city, and returned again unto him into Persia; for a time had been set him for his return again to court, when he first obtained to be sent from thence on this commission; which, as expressed in the text, plainly imports a short time, and not that of twelve years, after which he again went unto the king, as some interpret it. And his having appointed governors of the city as soon as the walls were built evidently implies that he then went from thence, and was absent for some time; for, had he still continued at Jerusalem, he would not have needed any deputies to govern the place. And furthermore, the building of the walls of Jerusalem being all for which he prayed his first commission; when this was performed, he seems to have needed a new authority before he could go on to other proceedings, which were necessary for the well settling of the affairs of that country. But on his return to the king, and having given him an account how all things stood in that province, and what farther was needful to be done for the well regulating of it, he soon obtained to be sent back again to take care thereof: and the shortness of his absence seems to have been the cause why there is no mention of it in the text, though the particulars I have mentioned seem sufficiently to imply it.

“Nehemiah being returned from the Persian court with a new commission, in the twenty-first year of Artaxerxes, [B. C. 444.] forthwith set himself to carry on the reformation of the church, and the state of the Jews, which Ezra had begun; and took along with him the advice and direction of that learned and holy scribe in all that he attempted in this work.

“The first thing that he did was to provide for the security of the city, which he had now fortified, by settling rules for the opening and shutting of the gates, and keeping watch and ward on the towers and walls: but finding Jerusalem to be but thinly inhabited, and that to make this burden more easy there needed more inhabitants to bear their share with them in it, he projected the thorough repeopleing of the place: in order to which he prevailed first with the rulers and great men of the nation to agree to build them houses there, and dwell in them; and then others, following their example, offered themselves voluntarily to do the same; and of the rest of the people every tenth man was taken by lot, and obliged to come to Jerusalem, and there build them houses, and settle themselves and their families in them. And when the city was fortified, and all that had their dwellings in it were there well secured by walls and gates against the insults of their enemies, and the incursions of thieves and robbers, who before molested them, all willingly complied; by which means the houses, as well as the walls and gates, being again rebuilt, and fully replenished with inhabitants, it soon after this received its ancient lustre, and became again a city of great note in those parts.

"Nehemiah finding it necessary to have the genealogies of the people well investigated and clearly stated, next examined into that matter; and this he did not only for the sake of their civil rights, that all knowing of what tribe and family they were, they might be directed where to take their possessions; but more especially for the sake of the sanctuary, that none might be admitted to officiate, even as Levites who were not of the tribe of Levi; or as priests, that were not of the family of Aaron. And, therefore, for the true settling of this matter, search was made for the old registers; and, having among them found a register of the genealogies of those who came up at first from Babylon with Zerubbabel and Jeshua, he settled this matter according to it; adding such also as came up, and expunging others whose families were extinct. And this caused the difference that is between the accounts we have of these genealogies in Ezra and Nehemiah: for in the second chapter of Ezra we have the old register, made by Zerubbabel; and in the seventh of Nehemiah, from the sixth verse to the end of the chapter, a copy of it as settled by Nehemiah, with the alterations I have mentioned. Ezra having completed his edition of the law of God, and written it out fairly and clearly, in the Chaldean character, this year, on the feast of trumpets, publicly read it to the people of Jerusalem. This feast was celebrated on the first of Tisri, the seventh month of the Jews' ecclesiastical year, and the first of their civil year. Their coming out of Egypt having been in the month Nisan, from that time the beginning of the year, in all ecclesiastical matters, was reckoned among them from the beginning of that month, which happened about the time of the vernal equinox; but in all civil matters, such as in contracts and bargains, they still continued to go by the old form, and began their year from the first of Tisri, which happened about the time of the autumnal equinox, as all other nations of the East then did; and all instruments and writings relating to contracts and bargains, or other civil matters, were dated according to this year; and all their jubilees and sabbatical years began with it; and, therefore, their reckoning it their New Year's Day, they celebrated it with a festival; and this festival being solemnized by the sounding of trumpets, from the morning of that day to the end of it, to proclaim and give notice to all of the beginning of the new year, it was from thence called the feast of trumpets. To celebrate this feast, the people assembled from all parts of Jerusalem; and understanding that Ezra had finished his revisal of the law, and written out a fair copy of it, they called upon him to have it read to them; when a scaffold or large pulpit was erected in the largest street of the city, where most of the people might stand to hear it. Ezra ascended into it with thirteen other principal elders, and having placed six on his right hand, and seven on his left, he stood up in the midst of them; and having blessed the Lord, the great God, he began to read the law out of the Hebrew text; and while he read it in this language, thirteen other of the Levites, whom he had instructed for this purpose, rendered it period by period into Chaldee, which was then the vulgar language of the people, giving them the meaning of every particular part; thus making them understand it: thus the holy scribe, with these assistants, continued from morning till noon, reading and explaining the law of God unto the people in such a manner as suited their low capacities. But it being a festival day, and the dining hour approaching, Nehemiah, Ezra, and the rest that had been assisting, dismissed them to dinner, to eat and drink, and rejoice before the Lord the remainder of the day, because it was thus consecrated thus to be kept holy unto him: but the next morning they assembled again, in the same place; and Ezra and his assistants went on farther to read and to explain the law of God, in the same manner as they had done the day before; and when they came to the twenty-third chapter of Leviticus, wherein is written the law of the feast of tabernacles, and had explained to them the obligation they were under to observe it, and that the fifteenth day of that month was the day appointed for the beginning of it, he excited an eager desire in all the people to fulfil the law of God in this particular; and proclamation was therefore made through all Judah, to give notice of the festival, and to warn them all to be present at Jerusalem on that day for the observing of it. Accordingly they went thither at the time prescribed; and, as they were instructed by the law of God, prepared booths, made of the branches of trees, and kept the festival in them, through the whole seven days of its continuance, in so solemn a manner as had not been observed before since the days of Joshua to this time. Ezra, taking the advantage of having the people assembled in so great a number, and so well disposed toward the law of God, went on with his assistants farther to read and explain in the same way as he had done on the two former days; and this he did from the first to the last day of the festival, till they had gone through the whole law; by which the people perceiving in how many things they had transgressed the law of God through ignorance, (for till now the law of God had never been read since their return from Babylon,) expressed much trouble of heart, being much grieved for their sins, and exceedingly terrified with the fear of God's wrath for the punishment of them. Nehemiah and Ezra finding them so well disposed, applied themselves to make the best improvement they could of it for the honour of God, and the interests of religion; and therefore, proclaimed a fast to be held the day but one after the festival was ended, to which having called all the people while the sense of these things was fresh in their minds, excited them to make a solemn confession of their sins before God, and also to enter into a solemn vow and covenant with God to avoid them for the future. The observances which they chiefly obliged themselves to in this covenant were—Firstly, Not to make intermarriages with the Gentiles, either by giving their daughters to them, or by taking any of their daughters to themselves. Secondly, To observe the sabbaths, and sabbatical years. Thirdly, To pay their annual tribute to the temple for the repairing of it, and finding all the necessities for the carrying on of the public service in it. And, Fourthly, To pay the tithes and first-fruits to the priests and Levites. And these particulars being thus named in this covenant, shows us that they were the laws of God which they had been neglectful of since their return from the captivity. It being their ignorance which had led them into these transgressions, and this ignorance having been occasioned by their not having heard the law of God read to them; to prevent this for the future, they had from this time the most learned of the Levites and scribes that were skilled in the law, to read it to them in every city; which, no doubt, was at first done by gathering the people together in the most wide street, where all might the better hear it; but the inconvenience of this being soon felt, especially in the winter and stormy seasons of the year, they erected houses or tabernacles to meet in, and these were the original synagogues among them. That they had no synagogues before the Babylonish captivity is plain, not only from the silence of the Scriptures of the Old Testament; but also from several passages in them, which evidently prove that there were none in those days: for it is a common saying among the Jews, that where there is no book kept of the law there can be no synagogue; for the chief service of the synagogue being the reading of the law to the people, where there was no law, there certainly could be no synagogue. Many texts of Scripture tell us that the book of the law was very rare through all Judah before the Babylonish captivity. When Jehoshaphat sent teachers through all Judah to instruct the people in the law of God, they carried the law with them; which they need not have done if there had been copies of the law in those cities where they went, which there would have been, had there been synagogues in them; it being the same absurdity to suppose a synagogue without a book of the law, as to suppose a parish church without a copy of the Bible in it: and, therefore, as this proves the want of the law through all Judah, so it does the want of synagogues in them also. And when Hilkiah found the law in the temple, neither he nor King Josiah would have been surprised at it, had books of the law been common in those times. Their behaviour on that occasion sufficiently proves that they had never seen it before, which could not have been the case had there been any copies of it to be found among the people; and if there were no copies of the law at that time among them, there could then be most certainly no synagogues for them to resort to for the hearing of it read. From hence it plainly follows, that there could be no synagogues among the Jews till after the Babylonish captivity; and it is most probable that Ezra's reading to them the law, and the necessity which they perceived there was of having it oftener read to them, was the occasion of their erecting them after the captivity in the manner I have related; and most learned men are of this opinion, and some of the Jews themselves say as much.

“Nehemiah, after having held the government of Judah twelve years, returned to the Persian court, either recalled thither by the king, or else going thither to solicit a new commission after the expiration of the former, [32 Artax. B. C. 433.] During all the time he had been in the government he managed it with great justice; and supported the dignity of his office, through these whole twelve years, with a very expensive and hospitable magnificence; for there sat at his table every day a hundred and fifty of the Jews and rulers, besides strangers who came to Jerusalem from among the heathen nations round about them; for when occasion brought them thither, if they were of any quality, they were always invited to the governor's house, and there hospitably and splendidly entertained; so that there were provided for Nehemiah's table every day one ox, six choice sheep, and fowls, and kine, with all other things in proportion, which must have been a great expense: yet all this he bore, through the whole twelve years, out of his own private purse, without burdening the province at all for it, or taking any part of that allowance which before was raised by other governors to support them in their station; which argues his great generosity, as well as his great love and tenderness to the people of his nation, in thus easing them of this burden; and also his vast wealth, in being able to do so. The office which he had been in at court, gave him the opportunity of amassing great riches; and he thought he could not better expend them than in the service of his country, and by doing all he could to promote its true interest in church and state; and God prospered him in the work, according to the great zeal with which he laboured in it.

“Nehemiah, on his return to the Persian court, in the thirty-seventh year of Artaxerxes, [B. C. 428.] having tarried there about five years in the execution, as it may be supposed, of his former office, at length obtained permission from the king to be sent back to Jerusalem with a new commission. The generality of chronologers as well as commentators on this part of Scripture make his going back there to have been much sooner: but considering the many and great corruptions, which he tells us in the thirteenth chapter the Jews had run into during his absence, it cannot be conceived how, in less than five years' time, they could have grown to such a height among them. He had been twelve years in reforming what was amiss among them, and Ezra had been thirteen years doing the same before him; and they had brought their reformation to such a state of stability, that a little time would not have been sufficient to have unhinged it. It is, indeed, expressed in our English version that Nehemiah came back from the Persian court to Jerusalem, after certain days; but the Hebrew word ימים yamim, which is there rendered days, signifies also years; and is in a great many places of the Hebrew Scriptures so used. About this time lived Malachi the prophet; the greatest of the corruptions he charged the Jews with are the same as those they had run into in the time of Nehemiah's absence; and therefore it is most probable that in this time his prophecies were delivered. It is certain the temple was all finished, and every thing restored in it, before this time: for there are passages in his prophecies which clearly suppose it; for he does not charge the Jews with not restoring the temple, but of their neglect of what pertained to the true worship of God in it. But at what time after the restoration of the temple it was that he wrote his prophecies is nowhere stated; and, therefore, we have only conjecture about it, and I know of no conjecture that can place it with more probability than in the time I have mentioned.

"Many things having gone wrong among the Jews during the absence of Nehemiah, as soon as he was again settled in the government he applied himself with his accustomed zeal to correct them. That which he first took notice of was, a great profanation which had been introduced into the temple for the sake of Tobiah the Ammonite. This man, though he had made two alliances with the Jews, for Johanan his son had married the daughter of Meshullam the son of Berachia, who was one of the chief managers in the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem, under the direction of the governor, who himself had married the daughter of Shecaniah the son of Arah, another great man among the Jews; yet, being an Ammonite, he bore a national hatred to all who were of the race of Israel; and, therefore, envying their prosperity, did the utmost that he could to obstruct Nehemiah in all that he did for the good of that people; and confederated with Sanballat, their greatest enemy, to carry on this purpose. However, by reason of the alliances I have mentioned, he had many correspondents among the Jews, who were favourers of him, and acted insidiously with Nehemiah on this account: but he, being aware of their devices, withstood and baffled them all, so long as he continued in Jerusalem. But when he went from thence to the Persian court, Eliashib the high priest was prevailed upon, being one in the confederacy and alliance with Tobiah, to allow and provide for him lodging within the temple itself; in order for which he removed the meat-offerings, the frankincense, and the vessels, and the tithes of the corn, the new wine, and the oil, which had been commanded to be given to the Levites, and the singers, and the porters, and the offering of the priests out of the chambers where they used to be laid; and out of them to make one large apartment for the reception of this heathen stranger. It is doubted by some whether this Eliashib were Eliashib the high priest, or only another priest of that name; for he is named in the text, where this is related of him, by the title only of priest, and is there said to have the oversight of the chambers in the house of God; from whence it is argued, that he was only chamberlain of the temple, and not the high priest, who was above such an office. But the oversight of the chambers of the house of God, may import the whole government of the temple, which belonged to the high priest only: and it is not easily to be conceived how any one less than the absolute governor of the whole temple could make such an innovation in it. Besides, Eliashib the high priest has no character in Scripture with which such a procedure can be said to be inconsistent. By what is said in the Book of Ezra, chap. x. 18. it appears the pontifical family was in his time grown very corrupt; and there is no act of his mentioned, either in Ezra or Nehemiah, except only his assisting in the repairing of the wall of Jerusalem. Had he done any thing else worthy of memory in the reforming of what was amiss, either in church or state, in the times of Ezra or Nehemiah, it may be presumed mention would have been made of it in the books written by them. The silence of him in both these books, as to any good act done by him, is a sufficient proof that there was none to be recorded; for the high priest being the head of the Jewish church, had he borne any part with those two good men, when they laboured so much to reform that church, it is utterly impossible that it should have been passed over in their writings, where they give an account of what was done in that reformation. What Jeshua his grandfather did in concurrence with Zerubbabel the governor, and Haggai and Zachariah the prophets, in the resettling of the church and state of the Jews after their return from the Babylonish captivity, is all recorded in Scripture; and had Eliashib done any such thing in concurrence with Ezra and Nehemiah, we may be certain it would have been recorded also.

"Putting all this together, it appears most likely that it was Eliashib the high priest who was the author of this great profanation of the house of God. What was done, however, the text tells us, Nehemiah immediately withstood, as soon as he returned to Jerusalem: for, overruling what the high priest had ordered to be done by the authority which he had as governor, he commanded all the household stuff of Tobiah to be cast out, and the chambers to be cleansed and restored to their former use.

"The reading of the law to the people having been settled by Nehemiah, so as to be constantly carried on at certain stated times ever since it was begun under his government by Ezra, (probably on every sabbath day,) when in the course of their lessons they came to chap. xliii. of Deuteronomy, where it is commanded that a Moabite or an Ammonite should not come into the congregation of the Lord, even to the tenth generation for ever; Nehemiah, taking advantage of it, separated all the mixed multitude from the rest of the people, that thereby it might be known with whom a true Israelite might lawfully marry; for neither this law, nor any other of the like nature, is to be understood as excluding any of whatever nation from entering into the congregation as a proselyte, and becoming a member of their church. Neither did the Jews so interpret it, for they freely received into their religion all who would embrace it; and on their conversion admitted them to all its rites and privileges; and treated them in all respects as true Israelites, excepting only in the case of marriage; and therefore this phrase in the text, of not entering into the congregation even to the tenth generation, must be understood to imply no more than a prohibition not to be married with them till then; and thus all the Jewish doctors expound it.

"Among other corruptions that grew up during the absence of Nehemiah, one especially to be noticed was, the neglect of not carrying on the daily service of the house of God in the manner it ought: for the tithes which were to maintain the ministers of the temple in their office and stations, either being embezzled by the high priest, or other rulers under him, or else subtracted by the laity, and not paid at all; for want of them the Levites and singers were driven from the temple, every one to his own house, there to seek for a subsistence some other way. This abuse the governor, whose piety led him always to attend to the public worship, could not be long without taking notice of, and when he had thoroughly informed himself of the cause, he soon provided very effectually for its remedy; for he again made those dues to be brought into the temple treasuries, and forced every man faithfully and fully to pay them: thus, a maintenance being again provided for those who attended the service of the house of God, all was there again restored to its pristine order. And he also took care that the sabbath should be duly observed; and made many good orders for the preventing of the profanation of it; and caused them all to be put into effectual execution. But though all these things are mentioned in one chapter, they were not all done at one time; but this good man brought them about as opportunities best served for the success of effecting them. In this same year, [B. C. 425,] in which Nehemiah went again to his government of Judea, from the Persian court, i. e. in the fourth year of the eighty-seventh Olympiad, Plato, the famous Athenian philosopher, was born; who came the nearest to the truth in divine matters of any of the heathens; for having, in his travels to the East, (whither he went for his improvement in knowledge,) conversed with the Jews, and got some insight into the writings of Moses, and their other sacred books, he learned many things from them which the other philosophers could not attain unto: and therefore he is said by Numenius to be none other than Moses speaking Greek; and many of the ancient fathers speak of him to the same purpose."

With this Book the general historical books of the Old Testament end; and the succeeding accounts of the Jewish people must be sought partly in the Apocryphal books, and in Josephus; but nowhere with so much perspicuity as in the remaining volumes of the industrious and judicious author of the connected history of the Old and New Testaments, from which the reader has already had such copious extracts.

BOOK OF NEHEMIAH.

Chronological Notes relative to this Book.

Year from the Creation, according to Archbishop Ussher, whose system of chronology is the most generally received, 3553.—Year before the birth of Christ, 442.—Year before the vulgar era of Christ's nativity, 446.—Year of the Julian period, 4268.—Year since the Flood of Noah, according to the English Bible, 1902.—Year of the Cali Yuga, or Indian era of the Deluge, 2656.—Year from the vocation of Abram, 1476.—Year from the destruction of Troy, 739.—This we collect from three passages in Dionysius of Halicarnassus, (who flourished in the Augustan age,) which state that an interval of four hundred and thirty-two years elapsed from the destruction of Troy to the building of Rome.—Year from the foundation of Solomon's temple, 565.—Year since the division of Solomon's monarchy into the kingdoms of Israel and Judah, 529.—Year of the era of Iphitus, king of Elis, who re-established the Olympic games, three hundred and thirty-eight years after their institution by Hercules, or about eight hundred and eighty-four years before the commencement of the Christian era, 439. This epoch is famous in chronological history, as every thing previous to it seems involved in fabulous obscurity.—Year since Coræbus won the prize at Olympia, a town of Elis in Peloponnesus, (being the twenty-eighth Olympiad after their re-establishment by Iphitus,) 331.—Third year of the eighty-third Olympiad. The epoch of the Olympiads commenced, according to the accurate and learned computations of some of the moderns, exactly seven hundred and seventy-six years before the Christian era, in the year of the Julian period, 3938, and twenty-three years before the building of Rome. N. B. The Olympic games were celebrated at the time of the full moon, which immediately followed the day of the summer solstice; therefore the Olympiads were not of equal length, because the time of the full moon differs about eleven days every year; and for that reason the Olympiads sometimes began the next day after the solstice, and at other times four weeks after.—Year of the Varronian, or generally received era of the building of Rome, 308. This computation was used by the Romans in the celebration of their secular games.—Year from the building of Rome, according to Cato and the Fasti Consulares, 307. Dionysius, of Halicarnassus, follows this account in his Roman Antiquities.—Year from the building of Rome, according to Polybius the historian, (a native of Megalopolis in Peloponnesus, and son of Lycortas,) 306.—Year from the building of Rome, according to Fabius Pictor, (the first Roman who wrote a history of his own country, from the age of Romulus to the year of Rome 536,) 302.—Year of the era of Nabonassar, a king of Babylon, after the division of the Assyrian monarchy, 302.—Year since the destruction of the kingdom of Israel by Shalmaneser, the king of Assyria, 276.—Year from the destruction of Solomon's temple by Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, 143.—Year since the publication of the famous edict of Cyrus, king of Persia, empowering the Jews to rebuild their temple, 90. The commencement of this epoch was synchonical with the termination of the seventy years, during which the Jews were under the dominion of the Babylonians.—Year since the expulsion of the Tarquins from Rome, which put an end to the regal government of the Romans, 63. The consular government immediately followed the expulsion of the Tarquins.—Year before the celebrated Peloponnesian war, 16. This war began on the 7th of May, four hundred and thirty-one years before the Christian era; and continued twenty-seven years between the Athenians and the inhabitants of Peloponnesus, with their allies.—Year before the commencement of the era of the Seleucidæ, 134. This era was named after Seleucus, one of the captains of Alexander the Great, surnamed Nicator, or the Conqueror. The year in which he conquered Babylon, (viz. 312. B. C.) is called the year of this era.—Year before the formation of the famous Achaean league, 165.—Year before the commencement of the first Punic war, 182. The Arundelian marbles are said to have been composed in the first year of this war.—Year before the fall of the Macedonian empire, 278.—Year before the extinction of the reign of the Seleucidæ in Syria, on the conquest of that country by Pompey, 381.—Year before the commencement of the era of the Roman emperors, 415. The year in which the famous battle of Actium was fought is the first year of this era.—Year of Archidamus, king of Lacedæmon, and of the family of the Proclidæ, or Eurypontidæ, 24.—Year of Plistonax, king of Lacedæmon, and of the family of the Euristhenidæ, or Agidæ, 21. This king was general of the Lacedæmonian armies in the Peloponnesian war. N. B. The kings of the Lacedæmonians, of the families of the Proclidæ and the Euristhenidæ, sat on the throne together for several hundred years; viz. from 1102 B. C. to about 200 B. C.—Year of Perdiccas II. the eleventh king of Macedon, 9.—Year of Artaxerxes, surnamed Machrochir, (Μακροχίρ), or Longimanus, because his arms were so long that, when standing erect, his hands reached down to his knees, 20. Roman consuls, T. Quintius Capitolinus the fourth time, and Agrippa Furius. During this consulship the Æqui and Volsci came near to the gates of Rome, and were defeated.

NOTES ON CHAPTER I.

Verse 1. The words of Nehemiah] That this book was compiled out of the journal or memoranda made by Nehemiah himself, there can be no doubt; but that he was not the compiler is evident from several passages in the work itself. As it is written consecutively as one book with Ezra, many have supposed that this latter was the author: but whoever compares the style of each, in the Hebrew, will soon be convinced that this is not correct. The style is so very different, that they could not possibly be the work of the same person.

It is doubtful, even whether the Nehemiah, who is mentioned Ezra chap. ii. 2. who came to Jerusalem with Zerubbabel, be the same with him who is the reputed author of this book. By the computation of the best chronologists, Zerubbabel came to Jerusalem in A. M. 3468; and Nehemiah, who is here mentioned, did not come before the twentieth year of the reign of Artaxerxes, which falls in with A. M. 3558, more than fourscore years after: and as his account here is carried down to A. M. 3580, thirty years later, he must at his death have been upwards of a hundred and thirty, allowing him to have been only twenty years old at the time that Zerubbabel went up to Jerusalem. This is by no means likely, as this would make him the king's cup-bearer when he was upwards of a hundred years of age! It seems, therefore, evident, that the Nehemiah of Ezra cannot be the same with the reputed author of this book, and the cup-bearer of the Persian king.

Son of Hachaliah] Of what tribe or lineage he was we cannot tell: this is all we know of his parentage. Some suppose he was a priest, and of the house of Aaron, on the authority of 2 Maccab. i. 18, 21; but this is but slender evidence. It is likely he was of a very eminent family, if not of the blood royal of Judah, as only persons of eminence could be placed in the office which he sustained in the Persian court.

The month Chisleu] Answering to a part of our November and December.

Twentieth year] That is, of Artaxerxes, A. M. 3558. B. C. 446.

Shushan the palace] The ancient city of Susa; called in Persian شِشْتَر Shuster: the winter residence of the Persian kings.

Verse 2. I asked them concerning the Jews] Josephus gives a probable account of this business: "Nehemiah, being somewhere out of Susa, seeing some strangers, and hearing them converse in the Hebrew tongue, he went near; and, finding they were Jews from Jerusalem, he asked them how matters went with their brethren in that city, and what was their state?" And the answer they gave him is, in substance, that recorded in the text; though with several aggravations in Josephus. Joseph. Ant. lib. xi. c. 5.

Verse 3. The wall of Jerusalem also is broken down] This must refer to the walls which had been rebuilt after the people returned from their captivity: for it could not refer to the walls which were broken down and levelled with the dust by Nebuchadnezzar; for, to hear of this could be no news to Nehemiah.

Verse 4. I mourned certain days] From the month Chisleu to the month Nisan; about four months from the time he received the above information till the time that Artaxerxes noticed his grief, chap. ii. 1. All this time he probably spent in supplication to God; waiting for a favourable opening in divine providence. Every good work is not to be undertaken hastily; prayer and watchfulness are necessary to its completion. Many good works have been ruined by making haste.

Verse 5. LORD God of heaven] What was, before the captivity, Jehovah, God of hosts, or armies.

Great] Able to do mighty things. Terrible; able to inflict the heaviest judgments.

For I was the king's cup-bearer] The king's butler; (the Persians call him ساقی saky) which gave him the opportunity of being frequently with the king: and, to be in such a place of trust, he must be in the king's confidence. No Eastern potentate would have a cup-bearer to whom he could not trust his life, poison being frequently administered in this way. This verse seems to have been a mental prayer, which Nehemiah now put up as he was delivering the cup into the king's hand.

CHAPTER II.

Artaxerxes, observing the sorrow of Nehemiah, inquires into the cause, 1, 2. Nehemiah shows him the cause, and requests permission to go and rebuild the walls of Jerusalem, 3—6. The king grants it, and gives him letters to the governors beyond the river, 7, 8. He sets out on his journey, 9. Sanballat and Tobiah are grieved to find he had got such a commission, 10. He comes to Jerusalem and, without informing any person of his business, examines by night the state of the city, 11—16. He informs the priests, nobles, and rulers, of his design and commission, 17, 18. This design is turned into contempt by Sanballat, Tobiah, and Geshem, 19. Nehemiah gives them a suitable answer, 20.

Verse 1. Month Nisan] Answering to a part of our March and April.

I took up the wine] It is supposed that the kings of Persia had a different cup-bearer for each quarter of the year, and that it had just now come to Nehemiah's turn.

from wishing ill to my master, I wish him, on the contrary, to live and prosper for ever.

5 And I said unto the king, If it please the king, and if thy servant have found favour in thy sight, that thou wouldest send me unto Judah, unto the city of my fathers' sepulchres, that I may build it.

6 And the king said unto me, (the queen also sitting by him,) For how long shall thy journey be? and when wilt thou return? So it pleased the king to send me: and I set him a time.

ing of the custom of presenting them annually with an offering of earth and water; as if they had said, May you reign for ever over these!

Verse 4. So I prayed to the God of heaven.
Before he dared to prefer his request to the king, he made his prayer to God, that his suit might be acceptable: and this he does by mental prayer. To the spirit of prayer every place is a praying place.

Verse 5. The city of my fathers' sepulchres
The tombs of the dead were sacred among the ancients: and nothing could appear to them more detestable than disturbing the ashes or remains of the dead. Nehemiah knew, that, in mentioning this circumstance, he should strongly interest the feelings of the Persian king.

Verse 6. The queen also sitting by him] Who probably forwarded his suit. This was not Esther, as some suppose; nor the same Arta-xerxes who had taken her to be queen; nor does shegel signify queen, but rather harlot or concubine, she who was chief favourite:
The Septuagint translate it παλλακή, harlot;
and properly too.

I set him a time.] How long this time was we are not told: it is by no means likely that it was long, probably no more than six months or a year; after which he either returned, or had his leave of absence lengthened: for in the same year we find he was made governor of the Jews, in which office he continued twelve years, viz. from the twentieth to the thirty-second year of Artaxerxes, chap. v. 14. He then returned to Susa; and, after staying a short time, had leave to return to rectify some abuses that Tobiah the Ammonite had introduced into the temple, chap. xiii. 6, 7. and several others, of which the people themselves were guilty: After having performed this service, it is likely he returned to the Persian king, and died in his office of cup-bearer: but of this latter circumstance we have no mention in the text.

Verse 8. Asaph the keeper of the king's forest] הפרס ha-paradis: of the paradise of the king. This I believe is originally a Persian word: it frequently occurs in Arabic, فردوس ferdoos, and in Greek παρδεισος, and in both signifies a pleasant garden, vineyard, pleasure garden, and what we call a paradise.

Above the hall of audience, in the imperial palace at Dehli, the following Persian couplet is inscribed:—

اگر فردوسی بر روی زوی است
همین است همین است همین است

“If there be a paradise on the face of the earth, this is it, this is it, this is it.”

Thus we find that the word is applied to denote splendid apartments, as well as fine gardens; in a word, any place of pleasure and delight. The king's forest, mentioned in the text, might have been the same to Artaxerxes, as the New Forest was to William the Conqueror; or Windsor Forest, to the late amiable sovereign of the British people, GEORGE the THIRD.

And the king granted me] This noble spirited man attributes every thing to God. He might have said, I had been long a faithful servant to the king; and he was disposed, in reward of my fidelity, to grant me my request:
but he would not say so. He granted my request, because the good hand of my God was upon me. God favoured me, and influenced the king's heart to do what I desired.

Verse 10. Sanballat the Horonite] Probably a native of Horonaim, a Moubit by birth, and at this time governor of the Samaritans under the king of Persia.

Tobiah the servant] He was an Ammonite;

that there was come a man to seek the welfare of the children of Israel.

11 So I came to Jerusalem, and was there three days.

12 ¶ And I arose in the night, I and some few men with me; neither told I any man what my God had put in my heart to do at Jerusalem: neither was there any beast with me, save the beast that I rode upon.

13 And I went out by night by the gate of the valley, even before the dragon-well, and to the dung-port, and viewed the walls of Jerusalem, which were broken down, and the gates thereof were consumed with fire.

14 Then I went on to the gate of the fountain, and to the king's pool: but there was no place for the beast that was under me to pass.

15 Then went I up in the night by the brook, and viewed the wall, and turned back, and entered by the gate of the valley, and so returned.

16 And the rulers knew not whither I went, or what I did; neither had I as yet told it to the Jews, nor to the priests, nor to the nobles, nor to the rulers, nor to the rest that did the work.

17 ¶ Then said I unto them, Ye see the distress that we are in, how Jerusalem lieth waste, and the gates thereof are burned with fire; come, and let us build up the wall of Jerusalem, that we be no more a reproach.

18 Then I told them of the hand of my God which was good upon me; as also the king's words that he had spoken unto me. And they said, Let us rise up and build. So they strengthened their hands for this good work.

19 But when Sanballat the Horonite, and Tobiah the servant, the Ammonite, and Geshem the Arabian, heard it, they laughed us to scorn, and despised us, and said, What is this thing that ye do? will ye rebel against the king?

20 Then answered I them, and said unto them, The God of heaven, he will prosper us; therefore we his servants will arise and build: but ye have no portion, nor right, nor memorial, in Jerusalem.

Verse 13. The dragon-well] Perhaps so called because of the representation of a dragon, out of whose mouth the stream issued that proceeded from the well.

By the gate of the valley] The valley through which the brook Cedron flowed. It was by this gate he went out: so he went round all the city, and entered by the same gate from which he had gone out.

Verse 16. The rulers knew not whither I went] He made no person privy to his design, that he might hide every thing as much as possible from their enemies, till he had all things in readiness; lest they should take measures to defeat the work.

Verse 18. Then I told them] He opened to them his design, and his commission.

Verse 19. Geshem the Arabian] Some chief of the Arabs contiguous to Samaria, who had joined with Sanballat and Tobiah to distress the Jews, and hinder their work.

Will ye rebel against the king?] This they said in order to raise jealousies in the king's mind, and induce him to recall his ordinance.

Verse 20. Ye have no portion, nor right] To be a citizen of Jerusalem was a high honour: and they would not permit those who did not belong to the tribes of Israel, to dwell there. Zerubbabel gave the same answer to the Samaritans. Ezra iv. 3.

They sanctified it.] As they began with the sacred offering as soon as they got an altar builded, it was proper that the gate by which these sacrifices entered should be consecrated for this purpose; i. e. set apart, so that it should be for this use only.

Verse 3. The fish-gate.] We really know scarcely any thing about these gates—what they were, why called by these names, nor in what part of the wall situated. All plans of Jerusalem, its temple, walls and gates, are mere works of conjecture. And yet how learnedly have some men written on all these subjects!

Verse 7. The throne of the governor.] His house, and the place where he dispensed justice and judgment. Previously to the days of Nehemiah, Jerusalem was governed by a deputy from the Persian king—see ch. v. 15. But after this time they were governed by governors and judges, chosen from among themselves.

Verse 8. Goldsmiths.] From the remotest period of the history of the Jews, they had artists, in all elegant and ornamental trades; and it is also evident that goldsmiths, apothecaries, and merchants, were formed into companies in the time of Nehemiah.

Apothecaries.] Rather such as dealt in drugs, aromatics, spices, &c. for embalming, or for Rephaiah mentioned here was one of these governors; and Shalum mentioned ver. 12. was the other. There were other rulers or governors of particular country or village districts.

Verse 11. Repaired the other piece.] That which was left by Jedaiah after he had repaired the wall opposite to his own house. Probably some of the principal people were obliged to repair those parts of the wall opposite to their own dwellings. Perhaps this was the case generally.

21 After him repaired Meremoth the son of Urijah the son of Koz another piece, from the door of the house of Eliashib even to the end of the house of Eliashib.

The stairs that go down from the city of David.] Jerusalem being built on very uneven ground, some hills being taken within the walls; there was a necessity that there should be, in different places, steps, by which they could ascend and descend; probably similar to what we see in the city of Bristol.

Verse 22. The priests, the men of the plain] Some of the officers of the temple, particularly the singers, dwelt in the plain country round about Jerusalem, chap. xii. 28. and it is likely that several of the priests dwelt in the same place.

Verse 28. The horse-gate] The place through which the horses passed in order to be watered. It was near the temple. Some rabbins suppose that in order to go to the temple, a person might go on horseback to the place here referred to; but then was obliged to alight, as a horse could pass no farther.

Verse 32. The goldsmiths and the merchants]. The word הזרמים ha-iseraphim, may signify smiths, or persons who work in metals of any kind; but it is generally understood to mean those who worked in gold. I have already observed, that the mention of merchants and goldsmiths shows that these persons were formed into bodies corporate in those ancient times. But these terms are differently rendered in the versions. The Vulgate is the same as ours, which probably our translators copied; auri- fices et negociatores. The Syriac is goldsmiths and druggists. The Arabic, smelters of metal and porters. The Septuagint, in some copies, particularly in the Roman edition, and in the Complutensian, Antwerp, and Paris Polyglotts, has οι χαλκις και οι μεταβολαι, smiths and merchants: but in other copies, particularly the London Polyglott, for μεταβολαι we find ροποπαλαι sellers of shields. And here the learned reader will find a double mistake, in the London Polyglott; ροποπαλαι for ροποπαλαι, and in the Latin version scruta for scuta, neither of which conveys any sense.

CHAPTER IV.

Sanballat and Tobiah mock the Jews, and endeavour to prevent the completing of the wall, 1—3. Nehemiah prays against them, and the people complete one half of the wall, 4—6. The Arabians, Ammonites, and Ashdodites, conspire together, and come to fight against the Jews, 7, 8. The Jews commend themselves to God, and determine to fight for their lives and liberties: on hearing of which their enemies are disheartened, 9—16. The Jews divide themselves into two bands: one half working, and the other standing ready armed to meet their enemies. Even the workmen are obliged to arm themselves, while employed in building, for fear of their enemies, 17, 18. Nehemiah uses all precautions to prevent a surprise; and all labour with great fervour in the work, 19—22.

BUT it came to pass, that when Sanballat heard that we builded the wall, he was wroth, and took great indignation, and mocked the Jews.

2 And he spake before his brethren and the army of Samaria, and said, What do these feeble Jews? will they fortify themselves? will they sacrifice? will they make an end in a day? will they revive the stones out of the heaps of the rubbish which are burned?

3 Now Tobiah the Ammonite was by him, and he said, Even that which they build, if a fox go up, he shall even break down their stone wall.

NOTES ON CHAPTER IV.

Verse 2. The army of Samaria] As he was governor, he had the command of the army; and he wished to excite the soldiers to second his views against Nehemiah and his men.

What do these feeble Jews?] We may remark here in general, that the enemies of God's work endeavour by all means to discredit, and destroy it, and those who are employed in it.

1. They despise the workmen. What do these feeble Jews? 2. They endeavour to turn all into ridicule. Will they fortify themselves? 3. They have recourse to lying. A fox, if he go up, will break down, &c. 4. They sometimes use fair but deceitful speeches, see ch. vi. 2, &c.

Verse 4. Turn their reproach upon their own head] A prayer of this kind, understood literally, is not lawful for any Christian. Jesus, our great master, has said, "Love your enemies, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you." Such sayings as the above are excusable in the mouth of a Jew under severe irritation. See the next verse.

Verse 5. Let not their sin be blotted out] These are the most terrible imprecations: but probably we should understand them as decla-

4 ^d Hear, O our God; for we are ^e despised: and ^f turn their reproach upon their own head, and give them for a prey in the land of captivity:

5 And ^g cover not their iniquity, and let not their sin be blotted out from before thee: for they have provoked thee to anger before the builders.

6 So built we the wall: and all the wall was joined together unto the half thereof: for the people had a mind to work.

7 But it came to pass, that when Sanballat, and Tobiah, and the Arabians, and the Ammonites, and the Ashdodites, heard that the walls of ratory; for the same form of the verb, in the Hebrew, is used as precativ and imperative. Turn their reproach, Their reproach shall be turned. Give them for a prey, They shall be given for a prey. Cover not their iniquity, Their iniquity shall not be covered. Let not their sin be blotted out, Their sin shall not be blotted out. All who know the genius of the Hebrew language, know that the future tense is used to express all these senses. Besides, we may rest assured that Nehemiah's curses or declaration of God's judgments, had respect only to their bodies, and to their life: not to their souls, and the world to come. And then they amount to no more than this, What a man soweth that he shall reap.

Verse 6. For the people had a mind to work] The original is very emphatic, וַיִּהְיוּ לֵב לַעֲשׂוֹת vayehi leb, la'eam la'asoth. "For the people had a heart to work." Their hearts were engaged in it; and where the heart is engaged, the work of God goes on well. The whole of this 6th verse is omitted by the Septuagint.

Verse 7. The walls of Jerusalem were made up] That is, they were made up to the half height of the wall; for the preceding verse seems to intimate that the whole wall was thus

Jerusalemⁱ were made up, and that the breaches began to be stopped, then they were very wroth,

8 And^k conspired all of them together to come and to fight against Jerusalem, and^l to hinder it.

9 Nevertheless^m we made our prayer unto our God, and set a watch against them day and night, because of them.

10 And Judah said, The strength of the bearers of burdens is decayed, and there is much rubbish; so that we are not able to build the wall.

11 And our adversaries said, They shall not know, neither see, till we come in the midst among them, and slay them, and cause the work to cease.

12 And it came to pass, that when the Jews which dwelt by them came, they said unto us ten times, ⁿ From all places whence ye shall return unto us they will be upon you.

far builded; not half of the wall completed; but the whole wall built to half height.

Verse 9. We made our prayer unto our God, and set a watch] The strongest confidence in the protection and favour of God does not preclude the use of all or any of the means of self-preservation and defence which his providence has put in our power. While God works in us to will and to do; we should proceed to willing, through the power he has given us to will; and we should proceed to action, through the power he has given us to act. We cannot will, but through God's power; we cannot act but through God's strength. The power, and the use of it, are two distinct things. We may have the power to will, and not will; and we may have the power to do, and not act; therefore, says the apostle, seeing God has wrought in you these powers, see that you work out your own salvation with fear and trembling.

Verse 10. The strength of the bearers of burdens is decayed] They worked both day and night, scarcely ever putting off their clothes, except for the purpose of being washed, ver. 21, 23.

Much rubbish] The ruins they were obliged to clear away, before they could dig the foundation for a new wall: and in this labour they were nearly exhausted: see chap. v. 15.

Verse 12. From all places whence ye shall return unto us] This verse is extremely difficult. Our translators have supplied the words, they will be upon you, which have nothing correspondent in the Hebrew. The Septuagint have given a good sense, ἀναβαινοῦσιν ἐκ παντὸς τῶν τόπων ἐφ' ἡμᾶς, They come up from all places against us. The sense appears to be this: the Jews which dwelt among the Samaritans, &c. came often to Nehemiah from all quarters, where they sojourned, and told him

13 ¶ Therefore set I^o in the lower places behind the wall, and on the higher places, I even set the people after their families with their swords, after their spears, and their bows.

14 And I looked, and rose up, and said unto the nobles, and to the rulers, and to the rest of the people, ^p Be not ye afraid of them: remember the Lord, which is^r great and terrible, and^s fight for your brethren, your sons, and your daughters, your wives, and your houses.

15 And it came to pass, when our enemies heard that it was known unto us, ^t and God had brought their counsel to nought, that we returned all of us to the wall, every one unto his work.

16 And it came to pass, from that time forth, that the half of my servants wrought in the work, and the other half of them held both the spears, the shields, and the bows, and the habergeons.

the designs of his enemies against him; therefore, he set people with their swords, spears, and bows, to defend the walls. It is probable that instead of תַּשְׁבּוּ tashubu, "ye shall return," we should read חֲשַׁבּוּ chasebu, "they designed or meditated." This word is very similar to the other, and makes the sense very clear. "The Jews who dwelt among them told us frequently, from all places, what they designed against us." For this reading Houbigant, Michaelis, and Duthé, contend. But this various reading is not found in any MS., and is not countenanced by any of the versions.—See ver. 15.

Verse 14. Be not ye afraid of them] Are they more terrible, or more strong, than God? Fight for your brethren] Your own countrymen, who worship the same God, and are come from the same stock. Your sons, whom they wish to slay, or lead into captivity, your daughters and wives, whom they wish to deflower and defile; and your houses, which they wish to seize and occupy as their own. They had every thing at stake: and therefore they must fight pro aris et focis, for their religion, their lives, and for their property. A people thus interested, who once take up the sword, can never be conquered.

Verse 15. Their counsel to nought] The word counsel used here, countenances the emendation in the 12th verse.

Verse 16. Half-wrought in the work] This is no unusual thing, even in the present day, in Palestine; people sowing their seed are often attended by an armed man, to prevent the Arabs from robbing them of their seed; which they will not fail to do if not protected.

Habergeons] In the Franco-Gallic hautbergon signifies a coat of mail; but as in Teutonic halg signifies the neck, and bergen, to cover or geons; and the rulers were behind all the house of Judah.

17 They which builded on the wall, and they that bare burdens, with those that laded, every one with one of his hands wrought in the work, and with the other hand held a weapon.

18 For the builders, every one had his sword girded by his side, and so builded. And he that sounded the trumpet was by me.

19 And I said unto the nobles, and to the rulers, and to the rest of the people, The work is great and large, and we are separated upon the wall, one far from another.

defend; it may be considered rather as signifying a breast-plate, or armour for the breast.

Verse 17. With one of his hands wrought in the work, and with the other hand held a weapon.] That is, he had his arms at hand; and was as fully prepared to fight as to work. So Ovid, Epist. xi. Canace Macario, ver. 1.

*Si qua tamen cæcis errabunt scripta lituris,
Obitus a domino, cæde libellus erit;
Dextra tenet calamus; strictum tenet altera ferrum:
Et jacet in gremio charta soluta meo.
If streaming blood my fatal letter stain,
Imagine, ere you read, the writer slain.
One hand the sword, and one the pen employs,
And in my lap the ready paper lies.* Dryden.

By this mode of speech Canace does not intimate to her brother Macarius, that she actually held the sword in one hand while she held the pen in the other; but that she had it ready to slay herself as soon as she had written the epistle.

Verse 20. Ye hear the sound of the trumpet.] As the walls were very extensive; and the workmen consequently much scattered, their enemies might easily attack and destroy them successively: he therefore ordered them all to work as near to each other as they could; and himself, who was every where surveying the work, kept a trumpeter always with him, who was to sound when the enemy approached; and all were instantly to run to the place where they heard the sound.

Verse 22. Let every one with his servant lodge within Jerusalem.] The country people were accustomed, after the day's labour, to return to their families: now, being so formidably threatened, he obliged them all to sleep in Jerusalem, that they might be ready, in case of attack, to help their brethren. All this man's arrangements were wise and judicious.

Verse 23. None of us put off our clothes, saving that every one put them off for washing.] The Hebrew for all this is only אִין אֲנַחְנוּ מְשִׁימִים נִדְרֵינוּ אִישׁ שְׁלָחוּ הַמֵּיִם ein anachnu pishtim begadeynu

20 In what place therefore ye hear the sound of the trumpet, resort ye thither unto us: your God shall fight for us.

21 So we laboured in the work: and half of them held the spears from the rising of the morning till the stars appeared.

22 Likewise at the same time said I unto the people, Let every one with his servant lodge within Jerusalem, that in the night they may be a guard to us, and labour on the day.

23 So neither I, nor my brethren, nor my servants, nor the men of the guard which followed me, none of us put off our clothes, saving that every one put them off for washing.

^v Or, every one went with his weapon for water. See Judges 5. 11.

ish shelacho hammayim; which Montanus translates, Non nos exuentes vestes nostras, vir misile suum aquas: "We, not putting off our garments, a man his dart to the waters." Of this latter clause what sense can be made? Let us hear what the ancient versions say.

The Vulgate, Unusquisque tantum nudabatur ad baptismum. "Every one stripped himself for the bath."

The Septuagint omit the latter part of this clause, And there was none of us who put off his garments.

The Syriac, "None of us put off his clothes for a month each in his turn."

The Arabic, "Nor did we put off our clothes, but with our arms, at the end of a month."

There is a remarkable reading in one of De Rossi's MSS. אִין אֲנַחְנוּ מְשִׁימִים נִדְרֵינוּ מִלְּחָמָה עַל הַמֵּיִם We did not lay aside our garments, but in order to send them to the washing. This is most likely the sense of the place.

It is curious to see how our old versions translate the place.

Coverdale—We put neuer of our clothes, so so much as to wash ourselves.—1535.

Beck—We put neuer of our clothes, so much as to washe ourselves.—1549.

Cardmarden—We put neuer of our clothes no more than the other dyd theyr harnessse, save onely bycause of the water.—1566.

This shows how all interpreters have been puzzled with this vexatious clause.

The reading from De Rossi's MS. given above, is the most likely to be the true one, because it gives a good sense, which cannot be found in the Hebrew text as it now stands. The general meaning is sufficiently evident: they worked nearly day and night, only had their hours by turns for repose; this did not permit them time sufficient to undress themselves in order to take regular sleep, therefore they only put off their clothes when they were obliged to get them washed.

CHAPTER V.

AND there was a great cry of the people, and of their wives, against their brethren the Jews.

2 For there were that said, We, our sons, and our daughters, are many; therefore we take up corn for them, that we may eat, and live.

3 Some also there were that said, We have mortgaged our lands, vineyards, and houses, that we might buy corn,
because of the dearth.

4 There were also that said, We have borrowed money for the king's tribute, and that upon our lands and vineyards.

5 Yet now our flesh is as the flesh of our brethren, our children as their children: and, lo, we bring into bondage our sons and our daughters to be servants, and some of our daughters are brought unto bondage already: neither is it in our power to redeem them; for other men have our lands and vineyards.

6 ¶ And I was very angry when I heard their cry and these words.

7 Then I consulted with myself, and I rebuked the nobles, and the rulers, and said unto them, Ye exact usury, every one of his brother. And I set a great assembly against them.

8 And I said unto them, We after our ability have redeemed our brethren the Jews, which were sold unto the heathen; and will ye even sell your brethren? or shall they be sold unto us?
Then held they their peace, and found nothing to answer.

9 Also I said, It is not good that ye do: ought ye not to walk in the fear of our God, because of the reproach of the heathen our enemies?

10 I likewise, and my brethren, and my servants, might exact of them money and corn: I pray you, let us leave off this usury.

11 Restore, I pray you, to them, even this day, their lands, their vineyards, their oliveyards, and their houses, also the hundredth part of the money, and of the corn, the wine, and the oil, that ye exact of them.

NOTES ON CHAPTER V.

Verse 2. We, our sons, and our daughters, are many] Our families are larger than we can provide for: we are obliged to go in debt; and our richer brethren take advantage of our necessitous situation, and oppress us. The details which are given in the next verse are sufficiently plain.

Verse 3. Because of the dearth.] About the time of Zerubbabel, God had sent a judicial dearth upon the land, as we learn from Haggai, chap. i. 9, &c. for the people, it seems, were more intent on building houses for themselves, than in rebuilding the house of the Lord. "Ye looked for much; and, lo, it is come to little; because of mine house that is waste; and ye run, every man unto his own house. Therefore the heaven over you is stayed from dew, and the earth is stayed from her fruit. And I called for a drought upon the land, and upon the mountains, and upon the corn, and upon the new wine, and upon the oil, and upon that which the ground brought forth; and upon men, and upon cattle, and upon all the labour of the hands." This dearth might have been continued, or its effects still felt: but it is more likely that there was a new dearth, owing to the great number of people, for whose support the land that had been brought into cultivation was not sufficient.

Verse 4. We have borrowed money] This should be read, we have borrowed money for the king's tribute, on our lands and vineyards. They had a tax to pay to the Persian king in token of their subjection to him; and though it is not likely it was heavy, yet they were not able to pay it.

Verse 5. We bring into bondage our sons] The law permitted parents to sell their children in times of extreme necessity, Exod. xxi. 7.

Verse 7. Ye exact usury] This was expressly contrary to the law of God; and was doubly cruel at this time, when they were just returning out of the land of their captivity, and were suffering from the effects of a dearth. Some think that it was about the time of a sabbatical year, when their land must have lain at rest without cultivation, and during which they were expressly commanded not to exact any debt, Deut. xv. 2.

I set a great assembly against them.] Brought all those delinquents before the rulers of the people.

Verse 9. Ought ye not to walk in the fear of our God] If ye wish to accredit that religion ye profess, which comes from the God of justice and mercy, should you not, in the sight of the heathen, abstain from injustice and cruelty? Can they credit your profession, when they see such practices?

Verse 11. Also the hundredth part of the money] Houbigant contends that the word part which we and the Vulgate translate one hundredth part, never means so any where. And, 2. That it would have answered no end to have remitted to people so distressed merely the one hundredth part of the money which had been taken from them by usury. He understands part as signifying the same as min in et, contracted into me et, a pre them, and will require nothing of them; so will we do as thou sayest. Then I called the priests,^k and took an oath of them, that they should do according to this promise.

13 Also ^lI shook my lap, and said, So God shake out every man from his house, and from his labour; that performeth not this promise, even thus be he shaken out, and ^memptied. And all the congregation said, Amen, and praised the LORD. ⁿAnd the people did according to this promise.

14 ^oMoreover, from the time that I was appointed to be their governor in the land of Judah, from the twentieth year ^peven unto the two and thirtieth year of Artaxerxes the king, that is, twelve years, I and my brethren have not ^qeaten the bread of the governor.

15 But the former governors that had been before me were chargeable unto the people, and had taken of them bread and wine, besides forty shekels of silver; yea, even their servants bare rule over the people: but ^rso did not I, because of the ^sfear of God.

16 Yea, also I continued in the work of this wall, neither bought we any land; and all my servants were gathered thither unto the work.

17 Moreover, there were ^tat my table a hundred and fifty of the Jews and rulers, besides those that came unto us from among the heathen that are about us.

18 Now that ^uwhich was prepared for me daily was one ox, and six choice sheep; also fowls were prepared for me, and once in ten days store of all sorts of wine; yet for all this ^vrequired not I the bread of the governor, because the bondage was heavy upon this people.

19 ^wThink upon me, my God, for good, according to all that I have done for this people.

position and demonstrative particle joined together, also a part FROM THE money. Neither the Syriac, Septuagint, nor Arabic, acknowledge this hundredth part. Some think that the hundredth part is that which they obliged the poor debtors to pay each month, which would amount to what we would call twelve per cent. interest for the money lent, or the debt contracted. See the introduction.

Verse 13. Also I shook my lap] This was a significant action frequent among the Hebrews; and something of the same nature was practised among other nations. "When the Roman ambassadors entered the senate of Carthage, they had their toga gathered up in their bosom. They said, We carry here peace and war; you may have which you will. The senate answered, You may give which you please. They then shook their toga, and said, We bring you war. To which all the senate answered, We cheerfully accept it." See Livy, lib. xxi. cap. 18., and see Calmet.

Verse 14. I and my brethren have not eaten the bread of the governor.] From what is related here, and in the following verse, we find that the table of the governor was always supplied by the people with bread and wine; and besides, they had forty shekels per diem for their other expenses. The people were also greatly oppressed by the servants and officers of the governor: but, during the twelve years that Nehemiah had been with them, he took not this salary, and ate none of their bread. Nor were his servants permitted to take or exact any thing from them. Having such an example, it was scandalous for their chiefs, priests, and nobles, thus to oppress an afflicted and distressed people.

Neither he, nor his officers, took any advantage of the necessities of the people to buy their lands, &c. He even made his own servants to work at the wall.

Verse 17. A hundred and fifty of the Jews] He kept open house, entertained all comers; besides having one hundred and fifty Jews who had their food constantly at his table, and at his expense.

Verse 18. One ox and six choice sheep] This was food sufficient for more than two hundred men.

Once in ten days store of all sorts of wine] It is supposed that every tenth day they drank wine; at all other times they drank water: unless we suppose the meaning of the phrase to be, that his servants laid in a stock of wine every ten days. Though the Asiatics drank sparingly of wine; yet it is not very likely that in a case such as that above, wine was tasted only thrice in each month.

Bishop Pococke mentions the manner in which the Bey of Tunis lived. He had daily twelve sheep, with fish, and fowls, soups, oranges, eggs, onions, boiled rice, &c. &c. His nobles dined with him. After they had done, the servants sat down; and when they had finished, the poor took what was left. Here is no mention of a fat ox; but there were six sheep at the Bey's table more than were at the table of Nehemiah;—so the twelve sheep were equal to six sheep and one ox. Probably the mode of living between these two was nearly alike.

Verse 19. Think upon me, my God, for good] Nehemiah wishes for no reward from man: and he only asks mercy at the hand of his God for what his providence enabled him to do; and which, according to the good hand of his God upon him, he had done faithfully. He does not offer his good deeds to God, in extenuation of his sins, or as a compensation for the heaven he expected. Nothing of this kind: he says simply, what any good man might say, My God, as I have done good to them, so do good to me; or, as the poet sung,

"Teach me to feel another's woe,
To hide the fault I see;
The mercy I to others show,
That mercy show to me!"

Pope.

This is according to Christ Jesus: Forgive, and ye shall be forgiven; Give, and it shall be given unto you.

CHAPTER VI.

Sanballat, Tobiah, and Geshem, insidiously desire a conference with Nehemiah, which he refuses, 1—4. They then charge him with the design of rebelling, and causing himself to be made king, 5—7. Which he denies; and prays to God for support, 8, 9. A false prophet is hired by Tobiah and Sanballat, to put him in fear; he discovers the imposture, and defeats their design, 10—13. He prays to God against them, 14. The wall is finished in fifty-two days, 15. He discovers a secret and treasonable correspondence between Tobiah and some of the Jewish nobles, 16—19.

NOW it came to pass, ^a when Sanballat, and ^b Tobiah, and ^c Geshem the Arabian, and the rest of our enemies, heard that I had builded the wall, and that there was no breach left therein, (^e though at that time I had not set up the doors upon the gates,)

2 That Sanballat and Geshem ^d sent unto me, saying, Come, let us meet together in some one of the villages in the plain of ^e Ono. But they ^f thought to do me mischief.

3 And I sent messengers unto them, saying, I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down: why should the work cease, while I leave it, and come down to you?

4 Yet they sent unto me four times after this sort; and I answered them after the same manner.

5 ¶ Then sent Sanballat his servant unto me, in like manner, the fifth time, with an open letter in his hand;

6 Wherein was written, It is reported among the heathen, and ^g Gashmu saith it, ^h that thou and the Jews think to rebel: for which cause thou buildest the wall, that thou mayest be their king, according to these words.

7 And thou hast also appointed prophets to preach of thee at Jerusalem, saying, There is a king in Judah; and now shall it be reported to the king according to these words. Come now therefore, and let us take counsel together.

8 Then I sent unto him, saying, There are no such things done as thou sayest, but thou feignest them out of thine own heart.

9 For they all made us afraid, saying, Their hands shall be weakened from the work, that it be not done. Now, therefore, O God, strengthen my hands.

10 ¶ Afterward I came unto the house of Shemaiah the son of Delaiah, Verse 2. Come, let us meet together in—the plain of Ono] They wished to get him out of Jerusalem from among his friends, that they might either carry him off, or murder him. Ono is supposed to have been in the tribe of Benjamin, near Jordan.

Verse 3. I am doing a great work] Though he knew their design, he does not think it prudent to mention it. Had he done so, they would probably have gone to extremities, finding that they were discovered; and perhaps in a formidable body attacked Jerusalem, when ill provided to sustain such a shock. They wished to effect their purpose rather by treachery than by open violence. I know not any language which a man, who is employed on important labours, can use more suitably as an answer to the thousand invitations and provocations he may have to remit his work, enter into useless or trivial conferences, or notice weak, wicked, and malicious attacks on his work and his motives. "I am doing a great work; so I cannot stoop to your nonsense, or notice your malevolence. Why should the work cease, while I leave it, and come down to such as you!"

Verse 5. With an open letter in his hand] This was an insult to a person of Nehemiah's quality, as letters sent to chiefs and governors, in the East, are always carefully folded up, and put in costly silken bags, and these carefully sealed. The circumstance is thus marked to show the contempt he (Sanballat) had for him.

Verse 6. And Gashmu saith it] You are accused of crimes against the state; and Geshem, the Arabian, is your accuser.

Verse 7. Thou hast also appointed prophets] Persons who pretend to be commissioned to preach to the people, and say, Nehemiah reigneth!

Come now therefore, and let us take counsel] Come and justify myself before me. This was a trick to get Nehemiah into his power.

Verse 8. There are no such things done] You well know that what you say is false; I shall not, therefore, trouble myself about a false charge.

Verse 10. Who was shut up] Lived in a the son of Mehetabeel, who was shut up; and he said, Let us meet together in the house of God, within the temple, and let us shut the doors of the temple: for they will come to slay thee; yea, in the night will they come to slay thee.

11 And I said, Should such a man as I flee? and who is there, that, being as I am, would go into the temple to save his life? I will not go in.

12 And, lo, I perceived that God had not sent him; but that ^h he pronounced this prophecy against me: for Tobiah and Sanballat had hired him.

13 Therefore was he hired; that I should be afraid, and do so, and sin, and that they might have matter for an evil report, that they might reproach me.

14 ^k My God, think thou upon Tobiah and Sanballat according to these their works, and on the ^l prophetess Noadiah, and the rest of the prophets, that would have put me in fear.

^h Ezek. 13. 22.—^k Ch. 13. 29.—^l Ezek. 13. 17.—^m Ch. 2. 10. & 4. 1, 7. & 6. 1.

sequestered, solitary state, pretending to sanctity, and to close intercourse with God.

Let us meet together in the house of God] The meaning is, "Shut yourself up in the temple; appear to have taken sanctuary there, for in it alone can you find safety." This he said to discourage and disgrace him, and to ruin the people; for, had Nehemiah taken his advice, the people would have been without a leader, their enemies would have come upon them at once, and they would have been an easy prey. Besides had Nehemiah done this, he would have been shut up in the temple, his government would have been declared at an end, and Sanballat would have assumed the reins.

Verse 11. Should such a man as I flee? Shall I, who am governor of the people, appointed both by God and the king, shall I betray my trust, and leave the flock without a shepherd? Shall I be a traitor, and abandon the office to which I am appointed? No! Who, in my situation, with such responsibility, and such prospects, would go into the temple to save his life? I will not: I will stand at my post, and be ready to receive my enemies whensoever they come; so let Sanballat, Tobiah, and Geshem, look to themselves.

Verse 14. And on the prophetess Noadiah] Whether this was a prophet or prophetess, we cannot tell: the Hebrew text, only, makes her a prophetess; all the versions have Noadiah the prophet, except the Arabic, which has نؤاديا Nounadiah the prophet. I think the ה he, at the end of נביאה Nebiah, is a mistake, and that we should read Noadia the prophet.

15 ¶ So the wall was finished in the twenty and fifth day of the month Elul, in fifty and two days.

16 And it came to pass, that ^m when all our enemies heard thereof, and all the heathen that were about us saw these things, they were much cast down in their own eyes: ⁿ for they perceived that this work was wrought of our God.

17 ¶ Moreover, in those days the nobles of Judah ^o sent many letters unto Tobiah, and the letters of Tobiah came unto them.

18 For there were many in Judah sworn unto him, because he was the son-in-law of Shechaniah the son of Arah; and his son Johanan had taken the daughter of Meshullam the son of Berechiah.

19 Also they reported his good deeds before me, and uttered my ^p words to him. And Tobiah sent letters to put me in fear.

posing that several thousand workmen, each of whom was working as for God, should be able to complete this wall in fifty-two days. There is little doubt that several parts of the old wall were entire; in many places the foundations still remained: there were all the materials of the old wall still at hand; and, though they had to clear and carry away much rubbish, yet they do not appear to have had any stones to quarry. The work mentioned here was little when compared to what Caesar did in Gaul and other places; and to what Titus did at Jerusalem, who built a wall round Jerusalem of five thousand paces in three days, besides thirteen towers of ten stadia in circuit. And Quintus Curtius and Arrian inform us that Alexander the Great built the walls of Alexandria, on the Tanais, which were nearly eight miles in compass, in the space of between twenty and thirty days. Nehemiah, therefore, had time sufficient in fifty-two days to repair and restore the walls of Jerusalem. See Calmet on this place.

Verse 16. This work was wrought of our God.] This is an additional reason why we should not wonder at the shortness of the time in which so great a work was done; for God helped them by an especial providence: and this was so very observable, that their carnal enemies could discover it.

Verse 17. The nobles of Judah sent many letters] The circumstance marked in this and the following verses, shows still more clearly the difficulties which Nehemiah had to encounter: he had enemies without, and false friends within. A treacherous correspondence was carried on between the nobles of Judah and the Ammonites: and, had almost any other man been at the head of the Jewish affairs, Jerusalem had never been re-established.

Verse 18. He was the son-in-law of Shecha-niah] Previously to the coming of Nehemiah, the Jews seemed to be fast intermixing with the heathen, by intermarriages with Ashdodites, Ammonites, and Moabites: see chap. xiii. 23. Ezra had many evils of this kind to redress, Ezra ix. 3, &c. chiefly among the common people, though there were both chiefs and priests in that trespass. But here we find the heathen and Jewish nobles interlinked; and the latter were so far imbued with the spirit of idolatry, that they forgot God, his service, their brethren, and their own souls.

CHAPTER VII.

Nehemiah makes use of proper precautions in guarding the city gates, 1-4. He purposes to reckon the people according to their genealogies; and finds a register of those who came out of Babylon with Zerubbabel, 5-7. A transcript of the register, 8-60. Account of those who came from other provinces; and of priests who, because they could not show their register, were put away from the priesthood as polluted, 61-65. The sum total of the congregation: of their men and maid servants; singing men and women; horses, mules, camels, and asses, 66-69. The sums given by different persons for the work, 70-72. All betake themselves to their several cities, 73.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VII.

Verse 2. My brother Hanani] This was the person who gave Nehemiah the account of the desolate state of the Jews, ch. i. 2. He is now made ruler of Jerusalem, probably because Nehemiah was about to return to the Persian court. And he found this man to be one in whom he could trust:—"1. Because he was a faithful man; one who had a proper belief in God, his government, and his protection; and, being devoted to the interests of his people, would be faithful in the discharge of his office. 2. Because he feared God above many; was the most religious person in the congregation; would govern according to the laws; would take care of the interests of pure religion; would not oppress, take bribes, nor abuse his authority; but act in all things as one who had the fear of God continually before his eyes." These are the qualifications of a proper governor."

Verse 3. Until the sun be hot] The meaning of this is, the gates were not to be opened before sunrise, and always shut at sunset. This is the custom to the present day in many of the cities of the East. If a traveller arrives after sunset, he finds the gates shut: and on no consideration will they open them till the next morning, so that those who come late are obliged to lodge in the plain, or under the walls.

Every one—over against his house] Each was obliged to guard that part of the wall that was opposite to his own dwelling.

Verse 4. The houses were not builded.] The city was not yet rebuilt; only a row of houses in the inside of the wall all round.

Verse 5. God put into mine heart] With this good man every good thing was of God. If he purposed any good, it was because God put it into his heart; if he did any good, it was because the good hand of his God was upon him; if he expected any good, it was because he earnestly prayed God to remember him for good. Thus, in all his ways, he acknowledged God; and God directed all his steps.

Verse 7. Who came with Zerubbabel] The register which he found was that of the persons only, who came long before with Zerubbabel, Ezra, and Joshua the son of Josedek; which register could not answer in every respect to the state of the people then. Several persons and families were no doubt dead, and others had arrived since. Nehemiah probably altered

Upon the first day of the seventh month.] This was the first day of what was called the civil year; and on it was the feast of trumpets, the year being ushered in by the sound of these instruments.

Verse 4. Stood upon a pulpit of wood] מגדל migdal, a tower, a platform, raised up for the purpose, to elevate him sufficiently for the people both to see and hear him; for it is said ver. 5. that he was above all the people. This is the first intimation we have of a pulpit, or structure of this kind. But we must not suppose that it was any thing similar to those tubs or barrels ridiculously set up in churches and chapels, in which a preacher is nearly as much confined during the time of his preaching, as if he was in the stocks.

Verse 5. All the people stood up] This was out of respect to the sacred word: in imitation

Verse 8. So they read in the book] For an explanation of this verse, see the observations at the end of the chapter.

Verse 9. Nehemiah, which is the Tirshatha] This puts it out of doubt that, when the Tirshatha is mentioned, Nehemiah himself is intended, Tirshatha being the name of his office.

Mourn not, nor weep.] This is a holy day to God; a day appointed for general rejoicing in him who has turned our captivity, restored to us his law, and again established among us his ordinances.

Verse 10. Eat the fat, and drink the sweet] Eat and drink the best that you have; and, while ye are feeding yourselves in the fear of the LORD, remember those who cannot feast; and send portions to them, that the joy and the thanksgiving may be general. This is no gluttonous and drunken festival that enervates the body, and enfeebles the mind: from your religious feast your bodies will acquire strength, and your minds power and fervour, so that you shall be able to do his will, and to do it cheerfully. Religious joy, properly tempered with continual dependence on the help of God, meekness of mind, and self-dependence, is a powerful means of strengthening the soul. In such a state every duty is practicable, and every duty delightful. In such a frame of mind no man ever fell.

the East are generally built with flat roofs.
On these they reposed; on these they took the air in the heats of summer: and on these they oftentimes slept.

Verse 17. Since the days of Jeshua] No feast of tabernacles since his time had been so heartily and so piously celebrated. The story of the sacred fire now discovered, which had been hidden by the order of Jeremiah in a dry well, and now some of the mud from the bottom being brought upon the altar, was kindled afresh by the rays of the sun, which suddenly broke out, though before covered with clouds, &c. is worthy of no credit. Those who wish to see the detail may consult 2 Maccab. chap.
i. 18—36.

On the subject in verse 8. I beg leave to make a few observations:—So they read in the book, in the law of God, distinctly; and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading. The Israelites having been lately brought out of the Babylonish captivity, in which they had continued seventy years, according to the prediction of Jeremiah, chap.
xxv. 11. were not only extremely corrupt; but it appears that they had, in general, lost the knowledge of the ancient Hebrew to such a degree, that when the book of the law was read, they did not understand it: but certain Levites stood by, and gave the sense, i. e. translated it into the Chaldee dialect. This was not only the origin of the Chaldee Targums, or translation of the laws and prophets into that tongue:
but was also, in all probability, the origin of preaching from a text; for it appears that the people were not only ignorant of their ancient language, but also of the rites and ceremonies of their religion, having been so long in Babylon, where they were not permitted to observe them. This being the case, not only the language must be interpreted, but the meaning of the rites and ceremonies must also be explained; for we find from ver. 13, &c. of this chapter, that they had even forgotten the feast of tabernacles, and every thing relative to that ceremony.

As we nowhere find that what is called preaching on, or expounding a text, was ever in use before that period, we are probably beholden to the Babylonish captivity for producing, in the hand of divine providence, a custom the most excellent and beneficial ever introduced among men.

What the nature of preaching or expounding the word of God was, at this early period of its institution, we learn from the above-cited text.

First, They read in the book of the law of God—The words of God, the doctrines of divine revelation, are the proper matter of preaching;

for they contain the wisdom of the Most High, and teach man the things which belong to his peace and happiness.

Secondly, They read distinctly—מפרש phorash, from פרש parash, to expand; they analyzed, dilated, and expounded it at large, showing the import and genuine meaning of every word.

Thirdly, They gave the sense—ושם סכל ve-som sekel, they put weight to it; showed its value and utility, and how intimately concerned they were in all that was revealed; thus applying verbal criticism, and general exposition, to their true and most important purpose.

Fourthly, They caused them to understand the reading—ויורו במקרא vayyabnu bammikra; and they understood, had a mental taste and perception of the things which were in the reading;
i. e. in the letter and spirit of the text. Thus they knew the divine will, and approved the things that were more excellent, being (thus) instructed out of the law. Rom. ii. 18.

This was the ancient method of expounding the word of God among the Jews; and this mode is still more necessary for us:

First, Because the Sacred Writings, as they came from God, are shut up in languages no longer vernacular: and no translation ever did, or ever can, reach the force of the original words, though perhaps our own, in general, comes nearest to this of all versions, whether ancient or modern.

Secondly, Ninety-nine out of a hundred know nothing of these languages; and consequently cannot, of themselves, reap all the requisite benefit from reading the Scriptures.

Thirdly, Sacred things are illustrated in the Bible by a reference to arts and sciences, of which the mass of the people are as ignorant as they are of the original tongues.

Fourthly, Provincial customs and fashions are mentioned in these writings, which must be understood, or the force and meaning of many texts cannot be comprehended.

Fifthly, There is a depth in the Word of God which cannot be fathomed except either by divine inspiration, or by deep study and research, for which the majority of the people have no time.

Sixthly, The people, in general, trust to the piety, learning, and abilities of their ministers, and maintain them as persons capable of instructing them in all the deep things of God; and believing them to be holy men, they are confident they will not take their tithes, their food, and their raiment, under a pretence of doing a work for which they have not the ordinary qualifications. Where there is not such נָסִיחַם benimrayim, in Egypt. This is the pha, and in the Septuagint. It is also the precepts, statutes, and laws, by the hand of Moses thy

^g broughtest forth water for them out of the rock for their thirst, and promisedst

Verse 19. The pillar of the cloud departed not from them מְלֵיחֵם meleyhem, "from over them." I have already had occasion to observe, that this miraculous cloud, the symbol of the divine presence, assumed three different positions while accompanying the Israelitish camp. 1. As a cloud, in the form of a pillar, it went before them, when they journeyed, to point out their way in the wilderness. 2. As a pillar of fire, it continued with them during the night, to give them light, and be a rallying point for the whole camp in the night season.
3. As an extended cloud, it hovered over them in their encampments, to refresh them with its dews, and to keep them from the ardours of the sun.

23 ^a Their children also multipliedst thou as the stars of heaven, and broughtest them into the land, con-

24 So ^b the children went in and pos-

Verse 21. Their clothes waxed not old] See the note on Deut. viii. 4.

Verse 22. The land of Og king of Bashan
It is most evident that Sihon was king of Heshbon. How then can it be said that they possessed the land of Sihon, and the land of the king of Heshbon? The words The land of the king of Heshbon are wanting in two of De Rossi's MSS. In another MS. the words and the land of are wanting; so that the clause is read, they possessed the land of Sihon king of Heshbon. The Septuagint has the same reading; the Arabic nearly the same, viz. the land of Sihon, the land of the king of Heshbon.
The Syriac has, they possessed the land of Sihon, the land of the kings of Heshbon. The reading of the text is undoubtedly wrong:
that supported by the MSS. and by the Septuagint, is most likely to be the true one.
Those of the Arabic and Syriac contain, at least, no contradictory sense. The and, in the Hebrew and our version, distinguishes two lands, and two kings; the land of Sihon, and the land of the king of Heshbon; when it is most certain that only one land and one king can be meant.

Verse 25. Became fat, and delighted themselves] They became effeminate, fell under the power of luxury; got totally corrupted in their manners, sinned against all the mercies of God, and then were destroyed by his judgments. We have an old nervous saying, “War begets poverty; poverty begets peace, peace begets affluence; affluence begets luxury and corruption of manners: and hence civil broils, foreign wars, and desolations.” A sensible Roman historian has said the same:— “Imperium facile iis artibus retinetur, quibus initio parum est: verum ubi pro LABORE, DE-SIDIA; pro continentia et æquitate, LIBIDO atque SUPERBIA invasere; fortuna simul cum moribus IMMUTATUR.”

Verse 27. Thou gavest them saviours] The whole book of Judges is a history of God's mercies, and their rebellions.

31 Nevertheless, for thy great mercies' sake ^d thou didst not utterly consume them, nor forsake them; for thou art ^e a gracious and merciful God.

32 Now therefore, our God, the great, the ^f mighty, and the terrible God, who keepest covenant and mercy, let not all the ^g trouble seem little before thee ^h that hath come upon us, on our kings, on our princes, and on our priests, and on our prophets, and on our fathers, and on all thy people, ⁱ since the time of the kings of Assyria unto this day.

34 Neither have our kings, our princes, our priests, nor our fathers, kept thy law, nor hearkened unto thy commandments and thy testimonies, wherewith thou didst testify against them.

35 For they have ^m not served thee in their kingdom, and in ⁿ thy great goodness that thou gavest them, and in the large and ^o fat land which thou gavest before them, neither turned they from their wicked works.

36 Behold, ^p we are servants this day, and for the land that thou gavest unto our fathers, to eat the fruit thereof, and the good thereof; behold, we are servants in it:

37 And ^q it yieldeth much increase unto the kings whom thou hast set over us because of our sins; also they have ^r dominion over our bodies, and over our cattle, at their pleasure, and we are in great distress.

38 And because of all this we ^t make a sure covenant, and write it; and our princes, Levites, and priests, ^u seal ^v unto it.

It is supposed that Nehemiah refers here principally to the ten tribes. And many years did God bear with them; not less than two hundred and fifty-four years from their separation from the house of David, till their captivity and utter dispersion under Shalmaneser; during the whole of which time God invariably warned them by his prophets; or, as it is here said, by thy spirit in thy prophets, which gives us the true notion of divine inspiration. God's spirit was given to the prophets; and they testified to the people, according as they were taught and influenced by this spirit.

Verse 32. On our kings, on our princes]. I believe Nehemiah in this place mentions the whole of civil society in its officers, as they stand related to each other in dignity:—1. KINGS, as supreme. 2. PRINCES. 3. PRIESTS. 4. PROPHETS. 5. THE FATHERS, heads or chiefs of tribes and families. 6. The common people. Those who disturb this natural order, for it subsists even in Britain, are enemies to the peace of the whole, whatever they may pretend to the contrary.

Verse 34. Neither have our kings] In this verse he acknowledges that the kings, princes, priests, and fathers, had broken the law: but the prophets are left out; for they continued faithful to God, testifying by his spirit against the crimes of all; and this even at the risk of their lives.

Verse 35. For they have not served thee in their kingdom] Instead of בַּמְּלֻכָּהּ be malcutum, "in their kingdom," בְּמִלְכוּתָּהּ be malcutheca, "in thy kingdom," is the reading of two of Kennicott's MSS. as also of the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic. This is most likely to be the true reading.

Verse 36. Behold, we are servants] They had no king of their own; and were under the government of the kings of Persia, to whom they paid a regular tribute.

Verse 37. It yieldeth much increase unto the kings] Good and fruitful as the land is, yet it profits us little; as the chief profits on all things go to the kings of Persia.

Over our bodies] Exacting personal and feudal services from us, and from our cattle; and this not by any fixed rate, or rule, of so much rent, so much labour, or boons; but at their pleasure; so that we can neither call our persons, our time, our land, nor our cattle, our own: therefore, we are in great distress. Miserable are the people that live under such a government. Think of this, ye Britons! think of your liberties and rights. Compare them with any other nation under heaven, and see what a balance is in your favour. Almost all the nations of the earth acknowledge Britons the most happy of all men. May I not say,

O fortunatos nimium sua si bona norint!

Verse 38. Our princes, Levites, and priests, seal unto it.]. Persuaded that we have brought all the miseries upon ourselves by our transgressions; feeling much, and fearing more, we make a covenant with thee to devote ourselves to thy service: do with us as thou pleasest. From this sealing we learn that at this time the government of the Jews was a mixed aristocracy; composed of the nobles for the civil department, and the priests and Levites for the ecclesiastical.

This was not mixing the church with the state, or the state with the church: both were separate, yet both mutually supported each other. The state never attempted to model the church according to its own mind; because the church had been founded and regulated by God, and neither its creed nor its ordinances could be changed. The church did not meddle with the state, to give it new laws, new ordinances, or new officers; therefore, the one could not be jealous of the other. Where this state of things prevails, every public blessing may be expected. In every state, God says to the governors and the governed, Render to Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, and to God the things which are God's.

Verse 1. Now those that sealed] Four classes here seal, Nehemiah first, as their governor. And after him, secondly, The priests, ver. 2—8. Thirdly, The Levites, ver. 9—13. Fourthly, The chiefs of the people, ver. 14—27.

It is strange that, among all these, we hear nothing of Ezra, nor of the high priest Elia-shib. Nor are any of the prophets mentioned, though there must have been some of them at Jerusalem at this time.

The whole of this chapter, the two first verses excepted, is wanting in the Arabic: the word Pashur of the third verse is retained; and the rest of the chapter is summed up in these words, and the rest of their assembly.

Verse 32. Charge ourselves yearly with the third part of a shekel According to the law, every one above twenty years of age was to give half a shekel to the sanctuary, which was called a ransom for their souls. See Exod. xxx. 11—16. But why is one third of a shekel now promised instead of the half shekel, which the law required? To this question no better answer can be given than this: the general poverty of the people occasioned by their wars, overthrows, heavy tributes, &c. in the land of their captivity: and now on their return, having little property, it was impossible for them to give more; and we know, from the terms of the law in this case, that the poor and the rich were obliged to give alike, because it was a ransom for their souls; and the souls of the poor and the rich were of like value, and stood equally in need of redemption; for all were equally fallen, and all had come equally short of the glory of God.

Though only a third part of a shekel was given at this time, and probably for the reason above assigned; yet, when the people got into a state of greater prosperity, the half shekel was resumed: for it is clear that this sum was paid in the time of our Lord, though not to the temple, but to the Roman government. Hence when those who collected this as a tribute came to our Lord, it was for the δίδραχμα, didrachma, which was half a shekel; and the coin with which our Lord paid for himself and Peter, was a stater, which contained exactly two half shekels. See Matt. xvii. 24—27.

Verse 34. Cast the lots—for the wood-offering There does not appear to have been any wood-offering under the law. It was the business of the Nethinim to procure this: and hence they were called hewers of wood, and drawers of water, to the congregation. But it is very likely that after the captivity, few Nethinim were found; for as such (who were the descendants of the Gibeonites) were considered only as slaves among the Israelites, they would doubtless find it as much, if not more, their interest to abide in the land of their captivity, than to return with their former masters. As there was not enough of such persons to provide wood for the fires of the temple, the people now cast lots, not who should furnish the wood, but what class or district should furnish it at a particular time of the year, so that there might be a constant supply. One district furnished it for one whole year, or for the first month or year; another for the second month or year; and so on. Now, the lot was to determine which district should bring the supply on the first month or year; which on the second; and so on. When the wood was brought, it was delivered to the Levites: they cut, prepared, and stacked it; and, when wanted, delivered it to the priests, whose business it was to lay it upon the altar. Perhaps this providing of the wood was done only once a year by one district, the next year by another district, and so on: and this bringing the wood to the temple at last became a great day; and was constituted into a feast, called by Josephus Ευροφωρία, the carrying of the wood. See De Bell. Jud. lib. ii. cap. xvii. sect. 6. p. 194. This feast is not mentioned in the Sacred Writings: then, there was no need for such an institution, as the Nethinim were sufficiently numerous.

Verse 36. Also the first-born See this law, and reasons of it, Exod. xiii. 1—13. As by this law the Lord had a right to all the first-born, instead of these he was pleased to take the tribe of Levi for the whole; and thus the Levites served at the tabernacle and temple, instead of the first-born of all the tribes.

VI.—Those who do not forsake the house of their God are those,—1. Who continue in the faith. 2. Who grow in grace. 3. Who labour in the vineyard. 4. Who bring forth fruit. 5. Who conscientiously attend all the ordinances. And, 6. Who take care that the offerings to the house of God shall be duly made; providing for those who labour in the word and doctrine.

VII.—Reader, 1. Art thou of this house? 2. Art thou in this house? 3. To what part of the family dost thou belong? 4. Art thou still an infant in this house? 5. Dost thou attend the ordinances of this house? 6. Hast thou forsaken this house? These questions are of great importance: answer them as in the sight of God.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XI.

Verse 1. To bring one of ten] Jerusalem certainly had many inhabitants at this time; but not sufficient to preserve the city, which was now encompassed with a wall; and the rebuilding of which was going on fast. Nehemiah, therefore, obliged one tenth of the country people to come and dwell in it, that the population might be sufficient for the preservation and defence of the city. Ten were set apart, and the lot cast among them to see which one

Verse 2. All the men that willingly offered] Some volunteered their services; which was considered a sacrifice to patriotism at that time; as Jerusalem afforded very few advantages, and was a place of considerable danger: hence the people spoke well of them, and no doubt prayed for God's blessing upon them.

It is most probable that it was the latter; who wished that a provision should be made for these, a part of whose office was to offer up prayers also, as well as praises. For we know that Darius made an ample provision for the priests, that they might offer sacrifices of sweet savour unto the God of heaven; and pray for the life of the king and of his sons, Ezra vi. 10. Some have thought that they had been Jewish singers employed in the service of the Persian king, to whom he had given a salary, and to whom he wished still to continue the same.

Verse 36. And of the Levites were divisions] The Levites had their dwellings in the divisions of Judah and Benjamin. This is probably the meaning: the Syriac says, they had the half of Judah and Benjamin; which is not likely.

That the people, whose hearts were now turned toward the Lord, would make the best provision for the support of God's work, and all those engaged in it, we may naturally suppose; but this could not be very great, as the complete service was not yet established, and the Levites themselves were few in number.

Verse 1. Now these are the priests] Not the whole, but the chief of them, as we are informed, verses 7, 22, 23, and 24.

The Septuagint omit ver. 3. except the word Shechaniah; as also verses 4, 5, 6—9. 37, 38, 39, 40, and 41. The Arabic omits the twenty-six first verses, and ver. 29. Mention is made of Ezra in this verse; and he is generally allowed to be that Ezra whose book the reader has already passed over, and who came to Jerusalem in the time of Cyrus with Zerubbabel.

10 ¶ And Jeshua begat Joiakim, Joiakim also begat Eliashib, and Eliashib begat Joiada, 11 And Joiada begat Jonathan, and Jonathan begat Jaddua.

12 And in the days of Joiakim were priests, the chief of the fathers: of Seraiah, Meraiah; of Jeremiah, Hananiah;

22 ¶ The Levites, in the days of Eliashib, Joiada, and Johanan, and Jaddua, were recorded chief of the fathers: also the priests, to the reign of Darius the Persian.

23 The sons of Levi, the chief of the fathers, were written in the book of the ^p Chronicles, even until the days of Johanan the son of Eliashib.

Verse 11. Jaddua] This was the high priest who went in his pontifical robes, accompanied by his brethren, to meet Alexander the Great, when he was advancing toward Jerusalem, with the purpose to destroy it, after having conquered Tyre and Gaza. Alexander was so struck with the appearance of the priest, that he forbore all hostilities against Jerusalem, prostrated himself before Jaddua, worshipped the Lord at the temple, and granted many privileges to the Jews. See Josephus ANT. lib. xi. c. 8.

Verse 22. To the reign of Darius the Persian] Calmet maintains that this must have been Darius Codomanus, who was defeated by Alexander the Great: but Archbishop Ussher understands it of Darius Nothus, in whose reign he thinks Jaddua was born, who was high priest under Darius Codomanus.

Verse 23. The book of the Chronicles] This is not the book of Chronicles which we have now, no such list being found in it; but some other book or register which is now lost.

Verse 25. The thresholds of the gates] Some understand this of a sort of porticoes at the gates; and are puzzled about it, because they find no mention of porticoes elsewhere: But why may we not suppose these to resemble our watch-boxes, or some temporary moveable shelters for those who took care of the gates? That there must have been some such conveniences, common sense dictates.

Verse 27. At the dedication of the wall] They sent for the Levites from all quarters, that this dedication might be as solemn and majestic as possible; and it is likely that this was done as soon as convenient after the walls were finished. The dedication seems to have consisted in processions of the most eminent persons around the walls; and thanksgivings to God, who had enabled them to bring the work to so happy a conclusion: and no doubt to all this were added a particular consecration of the city to God, and the most earnest invocation that he would take it under his guardian care, and defend it and its inhabitants against all their enemies.

The ancients consecrated their cities to the gods; and the very walls were considered as sacred. Ovid gives us an account of the ceremonies used in laying the foundations of the walls of the city of Rome, by Romulus. After having consulted together who should give name to the city, and have the direction of the wall by which it was necessary to surround it, they agreed to let the case be decided by the flight of birds. One brother went to the top of the Mons Palatinus, the other to that of mount Aventine. Romulus saw twelve birds, Remus saw but six: the former, therefore, according to agreement, took the command. The poet thus describes the ceremonies used on the occasion:—

*Apia dies legitur, qua mania signet aratro;

"A proper day is chosen in which he may mark out the walls with the plough: the festival of Pales was at hand when the work was begun. A ditch is dug down to the solid clay, into which they cast the fruits of the season; and bring earth from the neighbouring ground, with which they fill up the trench; and on it build an altar, by whose flames the newly made earth is cleft asunder. Then Romulus, seizing the plough, which a white heifer, yoked with a snowy bull, drew along, marked out the walls with a furrow. And thus spoke the king—'O Jupiter, and Father Mars, with Matron Vesta, prosper me in founding this city! And all ye gods approach, whomsoever it is right to invoke! Under your auspices may the work arise; may it endure for countless ages, and be the mistress of the world; and may the East and the West be under its control.' Thus he prayed."

The above is a literal version; and the account is not a little curious.

Verse 29. From the house of Gilgal, and out of the fields of Geba and Azmaveth] Or, from Beth-Gilgal; a village erected in the place where the Israelites encamped after they had, under the direction of Joshua, passed over Jordan.

Verse 30. The priests and the Levites purified themselves] This consisted in washings, abstinence from wine, and other matters, which, on all other occasions, were lawful. And as to the purifying of the gates and the walls, nothing was requisite but to remove all filth from the former, and all rubbish that might have been laid against the latter.

Verse 31. Then I brought up the princes] Perhaps this verse should be read thus: "Then I caused the princes of Judah to go up on the wall; and appointed two great choirs, [to sing praises;] and two processions, one on the right hand, &c.

The following seems to have been the order of the procession:—He divided the priests, the Levites, the magistrates, and the people, into two companies; each company to go round one half of the wall. They began at the dung-gate, one party going to the right and the other to the left, till they met at the great space opposite to the temple, where they all offered great sacrifices to God, and rejoiced with exceeding great joy: shouting so that the noise was heard a great way off.

Verse 38. The broad wall] What part this was we know not: it might have been a place

Verse 47. All Israel—gave the portions of the singers] The singers and the porters were supported by the people at large; and each of these had their portions served out to them daily.

45 And both the singers and the porters kept the ward of their God, and the ward of the purification, ^v according to the commandment of David, and of Solomon his son.

46 For in the days of David ^w and Asaph of old there were chief of the singers, and songs of praise and thanksgiving unto God.

47 And all Israel, in the days of Zerubbabel, and in the days of Nehemiah, gave the portions of the singers and the porters, every day his portion: ^x and they ^y sanctified holy things unto the Levites; ^z and the Levites sanctified them unto the children of Aaron.

vites; and the Levites presented them to the priests.

The children of Aaron] This may refer principally to the tithes which the people brought to the Levites; the tithe, or tenth of which the Levites gave to the priests. The presenting these tithes is termed sanctifying them; that is, dedicating them to those sacred or ecclesiastical uses for which they were designed: this is a very general meaning of the word sanctify in Scripture.

CHAPTER XIII.

The law is read, which commands that the Ammonite and Moabite should be separated from the congregation; on which they separate all the mixed multitude, 1—3. Eliashib, the high priest, having not only joined affinity with Sanballat, but was also allied to Tobiah the Ammonite, and had given him some of the chambers in the court of the house of God, 4, 5. Nehemiah casts out the goods of Tobiah, and purifies the chambers, 6—9. He rectifies several evils; and the people bring the tithes of all things to the treasurers, 10—12. He appoints treasurers, 13, 14. Finds that the sabbaths had been greatly profaned by buying and selling; and rectifies this abuse, 15—22. Finds Jews that had married strange wives; against whom he testifies, and expels one of the priests who had married the daughter of Sanballat the Horonite, 23—29. He cleanses them from all strangers, makes a final regulation, and prays for God's mercy to himself, 30, 31.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIII.

Verse 1. On that day] I am quite of Calmet's mind, that the transactions detailed in this chapter did not immediately succeed the dedication of the wall of Jerusalem. It is most likely that, when this dedication was ended, Nehemiah returned to Babylon, as himself particularly remarks, ver. 6. for he did return in the thirty-second year of Artaxerxes; and then, after certain days, supposed to be about the term of one year, he got leave to return to Jerusalem, to see how matters were

3 Now it came to pass, when they had heard the law, ^g that they separated from Israel all the mixed multitude.

4 ¶ And before this, Eliashib the priest ^h having the oversight of the chamber of the house of our God, was allied unto Tobiah:

5 And he had prepared for him a great chamber, ⁱ where aforetime they laid the meat-offerings, the frankincense, and the vessels, and the tithes of the corn, the new wine, and the oil, ^j which ^k was commanded to be given to the Levites, and the singers, and the porters; and the offerings of the priests.

conducted: and there he found the evils which he mentions in this chapter, and which he redressed in the manner himself describes. See the introduction to this book.

Should not come into the congregation] That is, ye shall not form any kind of matrimonial alliance with them. This, and this alone, is the meaning of the law.

Verse 3. They separated from Israel all the mixed multitude.] They excluded all strange women, and all persons, young and old, who had been born of these illegal connexions.

Verse 4. Eliashib the priest] Perhaps this was a different person from Eliashib the high priest; but there is no indubitable evidence that he was not the same. If he was high priest, he was very unfaithful to the high charge which he had received; and a reproach to the priesthood. He had married his grandson to Sanballat's daughter; this produced a connexion with Tobiah, the fast friend of Sanballat; in whose favour he polluted the house of God, giving him one of the chambers for his ordinary residence, which were appointed for the reception of the tithes, oblations, &c. that came to the house of God.

Verse 6. Was not I at Jerusalem] Nehemiah came to Jerusalem in the twentieth year

9 Then I commanded, and they ^r cleansed the chambers: and thither brought I again the vessels of the house of God, with the meat-offering and the frankincense.

10 ¶ And I perceived that the portions of the Levites had ^s not been given them: for the Levites and the singers, that did the work, were fled every one to ^t his field.

11 Then ^u contended I with the rulers, and said, ^v Why is the house of God forsaken? And I gathered them together, and set them in their ^w place.

12 ^x Then brought all Judah the tithe of the corn, and the new wine, and the oil, unto the ^y treasures.

13 ^z And I made treasurers over the treasures, Shelemiah the priest, and Zadok the scribe; and of the Levites, Pedaiah; and ^a next to them was Hanan the son of Zaccur, the son of Mattaniah: for they were counted ^b faithful, and their ^c office was to distribute unto their brethren.

of Artaxerxes; and remained there till the thirty-second year, twelve years: then returned to Babylon, and staid one year; got leave to revisit his brethren, and found matters as stated in this chapter.

Verse 8. I cast forth all the household stuff of Tobiah] He acted as Jesus Christ did, when he found the courts of the Lord's house profaned: He overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the seats of those who sold doves.

Verse 10. The portions of the Levites had not been given] Hence we find they were obliged to abandon the sacred service, and betake themselves to cultivate the land for their support. This was the fault of the rulers, who permitted all these abuses.

Verse 11. Why is the house of God forsaken] They had all solemnly promised, chap. x. 39. that they would never forsake the house of their God; but, alas, how soon is this forgotten! And Nehemiah uses their own words here by way of reproof.

Verse 13. They were counted faithful] They were reported to me as persons in whom I could confide: they had been steady in God's ways and work, while others had been careless and relaxed.

Verse 14. Wipe not out my good deeds] If 15 ¶ In those days saw I in Judah some treading wine-presses on the sabbath, and bringing in sheaves, and lading asses; as also wine, grapes, and figs, and all manner of burdens, which they brought into Jerusalem on the sabbath day: and I testified against them in the day wherein they sold victuals.

16 There dwelt men of Tyre also therein, which brought fish, and all manner of ware, and sold on the sabbath unto the children of Judah, and in Jerusalem.

17 ¶ Then I contended with the nobles of Judah, and said unto them, What evil thing is this that ye do, and profane the sabbath day?

18 Did not your fathers thus, and did not our God bring all this evil upon us, and upon this city? yet ye bring more wrath upon Israel by profaning the sabbath.

19 And it came to pass that, when the gates of Jerusalem began to be dark before the sabbath, I commanded that the gates should be shut, and charged that they should not be opened till after the sabbath: and some of my servants

Verse 17. I contended with the nobles] These evils took place through their negligence; and this I proved before them.

Verse 19. When the gates—began to be dark] After sunset on Friday evening, he caused the gates to be shut, and kept them shut all the sabbath; and as he could not trust the ordinary officers, he set some of his own servants to watch the gates, that no person might enter for the purpose of traffic.

Verse 20. So the merchants—lodged without Jerusalem] They exposed their wares for sale on the outside of the walls.

Verse 21. I will lay hands on you] I will imprison every man of you. This had the desired effect: they came no more.

Verse 22. Spare me according to the greatness of thy mercy] By some Nehemiah has been thought to deal too much with God on the principle of merit. That he wished God to remember him for good is sufficiently evident—and who does not wish the same? But that he set I at the gates, that there should no burden be brought in on the sabbath day.

20 So the merchants and sellers of all kind of ware lodged without Jerusalem once or twice.

21 Then I testified against them, and said unto them, Why lodge ye about the wall? if ye do so again, I will lay hands on you. From that time forth came they no more on the sabbath.

22 And I commanded the Levites, that they should cleanse themselves, and that they should come and keep the gates, to sanctify the sabbath day.

Remember me, O my God, concerning this also, and spare me according to the greatness of thy mercy.

23 ¶ In those days also saw I Jews that had married wives of Ashdod, of Ammon, and of Moab:

24 And their children spake half in the speech of Ashdod, and could not speak in the Jews' language, but according to the language of each people.

25 And I contended with them, and cursed them, and smote certain of them, and plucked off their hair, and made them swear by God, saying, Ye shall not give your daughters unto their sons, nor take their daughters unto your sons, or for yourselves.

[Heb. had made to dwell with them.—t Ezra 9. 2.—u Heb. they discerned not to speak.—v Heb. of people and people. w Ver. 11. Prov. 28. 4.—x Or, reviled them.—y Ezra 10. 5. Ch. 10. 29, 30.

expected heaven because of his good deeds, does not appear. Indeed the concluding clause of this verse proves the contrary; and shows that he expected nothing from God but through the greatness of his mercy. Shame on those who, with this evidence before them, brand this good man with the epithet of workmonger; a man, who, in inward holiness, outward usefulness, and genuine love to God and man, was worth ten score of such self-called believers.

Verse 24. Half in the speech of Ashdod] There were children in the same family by Jewish and Philistine mothers. As the Jewish mother would always speak to her children in Hebrew; so they learnt to speak Hebrew; and as the Ashdod mother would always speak to her children in the Ashdod language, so they learnt that tongue. Thus there were, in the same family, children who could not understand each other; half, or one part, speaking one language, and the other part another. Children of different wives did not ordinarily mingle together; and the wives had separate apartments. This is a better explanation than that which intimates that the same child spoke a jargon, half Ashdod and half Hebrew.

Verse 29. Because they have defiled the priesthood] God therefore, will remember their iniquities against them, and punish them for their transgressions. These words of Nehemiah are to be understood declaratively.

Verse 31. For the wood-offering] This was a most necessary regulation: without it the temple service could not have gone forward; and, therefore, Nehemiah mentions this as one of the most important services he had rendered to his nation. See on chap. x. 34.

Of Nehemiah the Jews speak as one of the greatest men of their nation. His concern for his country, manifested by such unequivocal marks, entitles him to the character of the first patriot that ever lived. In the course of the divine providence he was a captive in Babylon: but there, his excellencies were so apparent that he was chosen by the Persian king to fill an office the most respectable, and the most confidential, in the whole court. Here he lived in ease and affluence; he lacked no manner of thing that was good: and here he might have continued to live, in the same affluence, and in the same confidence; but he could enjoy neither so long as he knew his people distressed, the sepulchres of his fathers trodden under foot, the altars of his God overturned, and his worship either totally neglected or corrupted. He sought the peace of Jerusalem; he prayed to God for it; and was willing to sacrifice wealth, ease, safety, and even life itself, if he might be the instrument of restoring the desolations of Israel. And God, who saw the desire of his heart, and knew the excellencies with which he had endowed him, granted his request, and gave him the high honour of restoring the desolated city of his ancestors, and the pure worship of their God. On this account he has been considered by several as an expressive type of Jesus Christ, and many parallels have been shown in their lives and conduct.

I have already, in several notes, vindicated him from all mercenary and interested views; as well as from all false notions of religion grounded on human merit. For disinterestedness, philanthropy, patriotism, prudence, courage, zeal, humanity, and every virtue that constitutes a great mind, and proves a soul in deep communion with God, Nehemiah will ever stand conspicuous among the greatest men of the Jewish nation: and an exemplar worthy to be copied by the first patriots in every nation under heaven.

It has already been observed that, in the Jewish canon, Ezra and Nehemiah make but one book; and that both have been attributed, but without reason, to the same author: hence the Syriac version ends with this colophon—The end of the Book of Ezra the scribe, in which are contained two thousand three hundred and sixty-one verses.

MASORETIC NOTES.—Ezra and Nehemiah contain six hundred and eighty-eight verses. Middle verse is Neh. iii. 32. Sections ten.

INTRODUCTION

BOOK OF ESTHER.

THE son and successor of the famous Persian king Xerxes, was Artaxerxes, surnamed Longimanus, or in Persian اردشیر دیراز دست Ardshier Diraz dest, the long-handed Ardshur. This prince, on coming to the throne, had powerful opponents and competitors in the children of Artabanus, uncle to Xerxes, and in his own brother Hystaspes. The former, and their adherents, he overthrew in a bloody battle; and in the following year obtained a complete victory over his brother, and totally subdued the Bactrians, who had espoused his cause; and thus rendered himself the undisputed possessor of the Persian empire. About his third year, which was 462 before Christ, the history of Esther begins, which, in its connexion with the Persian history, is thus ably introduced by Dr. Prideaux.

“After Artaxerxes had obtained these successes, and thereby firmly settled himself in the peaceable possession of the whole Persian empire, (Esther i.) he appointed a solemn rejoicing on this account; and caused it to be celebrated in the city of Shushan, or Susa, in feastings and shows, for the term of a hundred and eighty days; on the conclusion of which he gave a great feast for all the princes and people that were then in Shushan, for seven days; and Vashti, the queen, at the same time, made a like feast in her apartment for the women. On the seventh day, the king's heart being merry with wine, he commanded the seven chamberlains to bring Queen Vashti before him, with the crown royal on her head, that he might show to the princes and people her beauty. But for her thus to show herself in such an assembly being contrary to the usage of the Persians, and appearing to her, as indeed it was, very indecent, and much unbecoming the modesty of a lady, as well as the dignity of her station, she refused to comply, and would not come; whereon the king, being very much incensed, called his seven counsellors to take advice with them about it, who, fearing this might be a bad example through the whole empire, in encouraging women to contemn and disobey their husbands, advised that the king should put Vashti away for ever from him, and give her royal state to another, that should be better than her; and, by his royal edict, give command throughout the whole empire, that all wives should pay honour and obedience to their husbands, and that every man should rule absolutely in his own house. Which advice pleasing the king, he commanded it accordingly to be put in execution; and Vashti never more after that came again into the king's presence: for the decree whereby she was removed from him was registered among the laws of the Medes and Persians, and, therefore, it could never again be altered. After this, orders were given out through the whole empire, for the gathering together at the palace at Shushan all the fair virgins in every province, that out of them one might be chosen whom the king should best like to be made queen in her place. At the time when this collection of virgins was made, (Esther ii.) there lived in Shushan a certain Jew named Mordecai, who was of the descendants of those who had been carried captive to Babylon with Jeconiah king of Judah; and, by his attendance at the king's gate, seems to have been one of the porters of the royal palace. He having no children did bring up Hadassah, his uncle's daughter, and adopted her for his own. This young woman, being very beautiful and fair, was made choice of among other virgins on this occasion; and was carried to the king's palace, and there committed to the care of Hege, the king's chamberlain, who was appointed to have the custody of these virgins; whom she pleased so well by her good carriage, that he showed her favour before all the other virgins under his care; and therefore he assigned her the best apartment of the house, and provided her first with those things that were requisite for her purification: for the custom was, that every virgin thus taken into the palace for the king's use was to go through a course of purification, by sweet oils and perfumes, for a whole year; and therefore Hadassah having been, by the favour of the chamberlain, of the earliest provided with these things, was one of the first that was prepared and made ready for the king's bed, and therefore was one of the soonest that was called to it. The term, therefore, of her purification being accomplished, her turn came to go in unto the king, who was so much pleased with her that he often called her by name, which he used not to do but to those only of his women whom he was much delighted with. Esther, growing still farther in the king's favour, and gaining his affections beyond all the rest of the women, (Esther ii.) he advanced her to higher honour; and on the tenth day of the tenth month, which falls about the end of our year, did put the royal diadem upon her head, and declared her queen in the place of Vashti; and, in consequence thereof, made a solemn feast for his princes and servants, which was called Esther's feast; and, in honour of her, at the same time made a release of taxes to the provinces, and gave donatives and presents to all that attended him, according to the grandeur and dignity of his royal estate. Haman, an Amalekite, of the posterity of Agag, who was king of Amalek, in the time of Saul, growing to be the chief favourite of king Artaxerxes, all the king's servants were commanded to pay reverence unto him, and bow before him: and all of them obeyed the king's order but Mordecai the Jew, who, sitting in the king's gate, according to his office, paid not any reverence to Haman at such times as he passed by into the palace, neither bowed he at all to him; at which, being told, he was exceedingly displeased: but scorning to lay hands on one man only, and being informed that he was a Jew, he resolved, in revenge of this affront, to destroy not only him, but also his whole nation with him: and to this act he was not a little excited by the ancient enmity which was between them and the people of whom he was descended; and therefore, for the accomplishing of this design, on the first day of the first month, that is, in the month Nisan, he called together his diviners, to find out what day would be the most fortunate for the putting his plan into execution: and they having, according to the manner of divination then in use among those Eastern people, cast lots first upon each month, did thereby determine for the thirteenth day of the twelfth month following, called Adar, as the day which they judged would be the most lucky for the accomplishing of what he purposed: whereon he forthwith went in unto the king; and, having insinuated to him that there was a certain people dispersed all over his empire who did not keep the king's laws, but followed laws of their own, diverse from the laws of all other people, to the disturbance of the good order of his kingdom, and the breach of that uniformity whereby it ought to be governed; and that, therefore, it was not for the king's profit that they should any longer be suffered; he proposed, and gave counsel that they should be all destroyed and extirpated out of the whole empire of Persia; and urged it as that which was necessary for the establishing of the peace and good order of his government: to which, having gained the king's consent, and an order that on the thirteenth day of Adar following, according as was determined by the divination of the lots, it should be put in execution; he called the king's scribes together to write the decree; and, it being drawn as he proposed, on the thirteenth day of the same month of Nisan, copies thereof were written out, and sent into all the provinces of the empire, commanding the king's lieutenants, governors, and all other his officers in every one of them, to destroy, kill, and cause to perish, all Jews, both young and old, little children and women, in one day, even on the thirteenth day of Adar following: and to take the spoil of them for a prey: which day was full eleven months after the date of the decree. The lot which seems to have pointed out that day, appears to have been directed by the special providence of God, that, so long a space intervening, there might be time enough to take such measures as should be proper to prevent the mischief intended. It is hard to find a reason for Mordecai's refusing to pay his respect to Haman, which may be sufficient to excuse him for thus exposing himself, and all his nation, to that destruction which it had like to have drawn upon them. That which is commonly said is, that it was the same adoration which was made to the king of Persia; and that consisting in the bowing of the knee, and the prostration of the whole body to the ground, it was avoided by Mordecai, upon a notion which he had of its being idolatrous: but this being the common compliment paid to the kings of Persia, by all that were admitted into their presence, it was no doubt paid to this very king by Ezra and Nehemiah, when they had access to him, and after also by Mordecai himself: for otherwise he could not have obtained that admission into his presence, and that advancement in his palace which was afterward there granted unto him; and if it were not idolatrous to pay this adoration to the king, neither was it idolatrous to pay it to Haman. The Greeks would not pay this respect to the kings of Persia out of pride; and, excepting Themistocles, and two or three others, none of them could ever be brought to it. I will not say that this was the case with Mordecai in respect to Haman: it seems most probable that it was from a cause that was personal in Haman only. Perhaps it was because Haman being of the race of the Amalekites, he looked upon him as under the curse which God had denounced against that nation; and, therefore, thought himself obliged not to give that honour to him. And if all the rest of the Jews thought the same, this might seem reason enough to him to extend his wrath against the whole nation, and to meditate the destruction of them all in revenge. But whatever was the cause that induced Mordecai to refuse the payment of this respect to the king's favourite, this provoked that favourite to procure the decree above-mentioned, for the utter extirpation of the whole Jewish nation in revenge for it. When Mordecai heard of this decree, he made great lamentation, as did also all the Jews of Shushan, with him; and therefore, putting on sackcloth, he sat in this mournful garb, without the king's gate, (for he would not be allowed to enter within it in that dress,) which being told Esther, she sent to him to know what the matter was? Whereon Mordecai acquainted her with the whole state of the case; and sent her a copy of the decree, that she might fully see the mischief that was intended her people; to absolutely destroy them, and root them out from the face of the earth: and, therefore, commanded her forthwith to go in unto the king, and make supplication for them. At first she excused herself because of the law whereby it was ordained, that whosoever, whether man or woman, who should come in unto the king in the inner court who was not called for, should be put to death, excepting such only to whom the king should hold out the golden sceptre in his hand that he might live; and she was afraid of hazarding her life in this cause. Whereon Mordecai sending to her, again told her, that the decree extended universally to all of her nation, without any exception; and that, if it came to execution, she must not expect to escape more than any other of her people; that providence seemed to have advanced her on purpose for this work; but if she refused to act her part in it, then deliverance should come some other way, and she and her father's house should perish; for he was fully persuaded that God would not suffer his people to be thus totally destroyed.

“Whereon Esther resolving to put her life on the hazard for the safety of her people, desired Mordecai that he and all the Jews then in Shushan should fast three days for her, and offer up prayer and humble supplication to God for him to prosper her in the undertaking: which being accordingly done, on the third day Esther put on her royal apparel, and went in unto the king, where he was sitting upon his throne in the inner part of his palace. And as soon as he saw her standing in the court, he showed favour unto her, and held out his golden sceptre; and Esther going near, and touching the top of it, had thereby her life secured unto her: and when the king asked her what her petition was, at first she only desired that he and Haman would come to a banquet which she had prepared for him.

Introduction to the Book of Esther.

“And when Haman was called, and the king and he were at the banquet, he asked her again of her petition, promising it should be granted her to the half of his kingdom: but then she desired only that the king and Haman should come again to the like banquet on the next day, intimating that she would then make known her request unto him. Her intention in claiming thus to entertain the king twice at her banquet before she made known her petition unto him was, that thereby she might the more endear herself unto him, and dispose him the better to grant the request which she had to make unto him.

“Haman being proud of the honour of being thus admitted alone with the king to the queen's banquet, went home to his house much puffed up; but on his return thither, seeing Mordecai, sitting at the gate of the palace, and still refusing to bow unto him, this moved his indignation to such a degree, that on his coming to his house, and calling his friends about him to relate to them the great honour that was done to him by the king and queen, and the high advancement which he had obtained in the kingdom, he could not forbear complaining of the disrespect and affront that was offered him by Mordecai. Whereon they advised him to cause a gallows to be built of fifty cubits in height, and next morning to ask the king to have Mordecai hanged thereon; and accordingly he ordered the gallows immediately to be made; and went early the next morning to the palace, for the obtaining of the grant from the king to have Mordecai hanged on it. But that morning the king awaking sooner than ordinary, and not being able to compose himself again to sleep, he called for the book of the records and chronicles of the kingdom, and caused them to be read unto him; wherein finding an account of the conspiracy of Bighthan and Teresh, and that it was discovered by Mordecai the Jew, the king inquired what honour had been done to him for the same. And being told that nothing had been done for him, he inquired who was in the court; and being told that Haman was standing there, he ordered him to be called in, and asked of him what should be done to the man whom the king delighted to honour: whereon Haman, thinking this honour was intended for himself, gave advice that the royal apparel should be brought which the king used to wear, and the horse which he kept for his own riding, and the crown which useth to be set upon his head; and that this apparel and horse should be delivered into the hands of one of the king's most noble princes, that he might array therewith the man whom the king delighted to honour, and bring him on horseback through the whole city, and proclaim before him, ‘Thus shall it be done to the man whom the king delighteth to honour.’ Whereon the king commanded him forthwith to take the apparel and horse, and do this to Mordecai the Jew, who sat in the king's gate, in reward for his discovery of the treason of the two eunuchs: all which Haman having been forced to do in obedience to the king's command, he returned with great sorrow to his house, lamenting the disappointment and great mortification he had met with in being thus forced to pay such signal honour to his enemy, whom he had intended to have hanged on the gallows which he had provided for him. And on his relating this to his friends, they all told him, that if this Mordecai were of the seed of the Jews, this bad omen foreboded that he should not prevail against them, but should surely fall before him. While they were thus talking, one of the queen's chamberlains came to Haman's house to hasten him to the banquet; and, seeing the gallows which had been set up the night before, fully informed himself of the intent for which it was prepared. On the king's and Haman's sitting down to the banquet, the king asked again of Esther what was her petition, with like promise that it should be granted to her to the half of his kingdom: whereon she humbly prayed the king that her life might be given her on her petition, and her people at her request; for that a design was laid for the destruction of her and all her kindred and nation. At which the king asking, with much anger, who it was that durst do this thing, she told him that Haman, then present, was the author of the wicked plot; and laid the whole of it open to the king. Whereon the king rose up with much wrath from the banquet, and walked out into the garden adjoining; which Haman perceiving, fell down before the queen upon the bed on which she was sitting, to supplicate for his life; in which posture the king having found him upon his return, spoke out in great passion, What, will he force the queen before me in the house? At which words the servants present immediately covered his face, as was then the usage to condemned persons; and the chamberlain, who had that day called Haman to the banquet, acquainting the king with the gallows he saw in his house there prepared for Mordecai, who had saved the king's life in detecting the treason of the two eunuchs, the king ordered that he should be forthwith hanged thereon; which was accordingly done; and all his house, goods, and riches, were given to Queen Esther; and she appointed Mordecai to be her steward to manage the same. On the same day the queen made the king acquainted of the relation which Mordecai had unto her; whereon the king took him into his favour; and advanced him to great power, riches, and dignity, in the empire; and made him the keeper of his signet, in the same manner as Haman had been before. But, still the decree for the destruction of the Jews remaining in its full force, the queen petitioned the king a second time to put away this mischief from them; but, according to the laws of the Medes and Persians, nothing being to be reversed which had been decreed, and written in the king's name, and sealed with the king's seal; and the decree procured by Haman against the Jews having been thus written and sealed; it could not be recalled. All, therefore, that the king could do in compliance with her request was, to give the Jews by a new decree such a power to defend themselves against such as should assault them, as might render the former decree ineffectual: and for that end he bid Esther and Mordecai draw such a decree in words as strong as could be devised, that so the former might be hindered from being executed, though it could not be annulled. And, therefore, the king's scribes being again called on the twenty-third day of the third month, a new decree was drawn just two months and ten days after the former; wherein the king granted to the Jews, which were in every city of the Persian empire, full license to gather themselves together, and stand for their lives; and to destroy, slay, and cause to perish, all the power of the people and province that should assault them, with their little ones and women: and to take the spoil of them for a prey. And this decree being written in the king's hand, and sealed with his seal, copies hereof were drawn out, and especial messengers were despatched with them into all the provinces of the empire.

"The thirteenth day of Adar drawing near, when the decree obtained by Haman for the destruction of the Jews was to be put into execution, their adversaries every where prepared to act against them, according to the contents of it: and the Jews on the other hand, by virtue of the second decree which was obtained in their favour by Esther and Mordecai, gathered themselves together in every city where they dwelt, throughout all the provinces of king Aralzeræes, to provide for their safety: so that on the said thirteenth of Adar, through the means of these two different and discordant decrees, a war was commenced between the Jews and their enemies throughout the whole Persian empire. But the rulers of the provinces, and the lieutenants, the deputies, and the other officers of the king, knowing with what power Esther and Mordecai were then invested, through fear of them so favoured the Jews, that they prevailed every where against those that rose up against them; and on that day throughout the whole empire, slew of their enemies seven thousand five hundred persons; and in the city of Shushan on that day and the next, eight hundred more; among whom were the ten sons of Haman, whom by a special order from the king they caused all to be hanged; perhaps upon the same gallows on which Haman, their father had been hanged before. These transactions took place in the thirteenth year of Artaxerxes, about four hundred and fifty-two years before Christ." The reader is requested to refer to the notes on all these passages.

"The Jews being delivered thus from this dangerous design, which threatened them with nothing less than total extirpation, made great rejoicings for it on the two days following, that is, on the fourteenth and fifteenth days of the said month Adar: and by the order of Esther and Mordecai these two days, with the thirteenth that preceded them, were set apart, and consecrated to be annually observed for ever after in commemoration thereof; the thirteenth as a fast, because of the destruction on that day intended to have been brought upon them, and the other two as a feast because of their deliverance from it; and both this fast and feast they constantly observe every year on those days, even to this time. The fast they call the fast of Esther; and the feast the feast of Purim, from the Persian word Purim, which signifies lots; because it was by the casting of lots that Haman did set out this time for their destruction. This feast is the Bacchanals of the Jews, which they celebrate with all manner of rejoicing, mirth, and jollity: and therein indulge themselves in all manner of luxurious excesses, especially in drinking wine, even to drunkenness: which they think part of the duty of the solemnity, because it was by means of the wine banquet, they say, that Esther made the king's heart merry, and brought him into that good humour, which inclined him to grant the request which she made unto him for their deliverance: and, therefore, they think they ought to make their hearts merry also, when they celebrate the commemoration of it. During this festival the Book of Esther is solemnly read in all their synagogues from the beginning to the end; at which they are all to be present, men, women, children, and servants, because all these had their part in this deliverance which Esther obtained for them. And as often as the name of Haman occurs in the reading of this book, the usage is for them all to clap with their hands, and stamp with their feet, and cry out—Let his memory perish.

"This is the last feast of the year among them; for the next that follows is the passover, which always falls in the middle of the month, which begins the Jewish year."

The whole history of this book in its connected order, with the occurrences in the Persian empire at that time, will be found in the introduction; to which the reader is referred.

Concerning the author of this book there are several opinions: some attribute the work to Ezra; some to one Joachim, a high priest; others to the men of the great synagogue; and others to Mordecai. This latter is the most likely opinion: nor is that to be disregarded which gives Mordecai for copartner Ezra himself; though it is likely that the conclusion from chap. ix. 23. to the end of the book, was inserted by another hand, and at a later time. Though some Christians have hesitated to receive the book of Esther into the Sacred Canon: yet it has always been received by the Jews, not only as perfectly authentic, but also as one of the most excellent of their Sacred Books. They call it מגילת megillah, THE VOLUME, by way of eminence; and hold it in the highest estimation. That it records the history of a real fact, the observation of the feast of Purim, to the present day, is a sufficient evidence. Indeed, this is one of the strongest evidences that any fact can have, viz. that to commemorate it a certain rite, procession, feast, or the like, should have been instituted at the time, which, without intermission, has been continued annually through every generation of that people, and in whatsoever place they, or parties of them, may have sojourned, to the present day. This is the fact concerning the feast of Purim here mentioned; which the Jews, in all places of their dispersion, have uninterruptedly celebrated, and do still continue to celebrate, from the time of their deliverance from the massacre intended by Haman to the present time. Copies of this book, widely differing from each other, exist in Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriac, Greek, and Latin. All these differ much from the Hebrew text, particularly the Greek and the Chaldee: the former has many additional paragraphs; and the latter, as it exists in the London Polyglott, contains five times more than the Hebrew text. To notice all the various readings, additions, and paraphrases, in the above copies, would require a volume of no inconsiderable magnitude. The reader who is curious may consult the above Polyglott. This book does not appear to be extant in Arabic, or in any other of the oriental languages, besides the Hebrew and Syriac.

The question may naturally arise, What was the original of this book? or, In what language was it written? Though learned men, in general, decide in favour of a Hebrew original; yet there are many reasons which might be urged in favour of the Persian. Several of the proper names are evidently of a Persian origin; and, no doubt, all the others are so; but they are so transformed by passing through the Hebrew, that they are no longer discernible. The Hebrew has even retained some of the Persian words, having done little else than alter the character, e. g. Esther, Mehuman, Mishak, Melzar, Vashti, Shushan, Pur, Darius, Paradise, Shushan, &c. several of which will be noted in their proper places. The Targum in the London Polyglott is widely different from that in the Complutum, Antwerp, and Paris editions. The principal additions in the Greek are carefully marked in the London Polyglott, but are too long and too numerous to be inserted here. It is a singular circumstance that the name of God does not once occur in the whole of this book!

NOTES ON CHAPTER I.

Verse 1. Now it came to pass] The Ahasuerus of the Romans, the Artaxerxes of the Greeks, and Ardsheer of the Persians, are the same. Some think that this Ahasuerus was Darius, the son of Hystaspes: but Prideaux and others maintain that he was Artaxerxes Longimanus.

Reigned, from India even unto Ethiopia] This is nearly the same account that is given by Xenophon. How great and glorious the kingdom of Cyrus was, beyond all the kingdoms of Asia, is evident from this: αρχη μιν προς εφ τη ερυθρα θαλαττη προς αρευτον δε τω ευξεινω ποντι προς εσπεραν δε κυπρω και αιγυπτω προς μεσομεριαν δε αθιοπια. It was bounded on the east by the Red sea; on the north by the Euxine sea; on the west by Cyprus and Egypt: and on the south by Ethiopia. CYROP. lib. viii. page 241, edit. Steph. 1581.

Verse 2. Sat on the throne of his kingdom which was in Shushan] Having subdued all his enemies, and brought universal peace to his empire. See the commencement of the introduction.

ple that were ^g present in Shushan the palace, both unto great and small, seven days, in the court of the garden of the king's palace;

6 Where were white, green, and blue hangings, fastened with cords of fine linen and purple to silver rings and pillars of marble: ⁱ the beds were of gold and silver, upon a pavement ^k of red, and blue, and white, and black marble.

7 And they gave them drink in vessels of gold, (the vessels being diverse one from another,) and ^l royal wine in abundance, ^m according to the state of the king.

^k Or, of porphyre, and marble, and alabaster, and stone of blue colour.—^l Heb. wine of the kingdom.—^m Heb. according to the hand of the king.

Shushan the palace] The ancient city of Susa, now called شُشْتَر Shuster, by the Persians. This, with Ecbatana and Babylon, were residences of the Persian kings. The word הַבֵּית ha birah, which we render the palace, should be rendered the city, εἰς Σουσσις τῆ πόλιν, as in the Septuagint.

Verse 4. The riches of his glorious kingdom] Luxury was the characteristic of the Eastern monarchs, and particularly the Persians. In their feasts, which were superb, and of long continuance, they made a general exhibition of their wealth, grandeur, &c. and received the highest encomiums from their poets and flatterers. Their ostentation on such occasions passed into a proverb: hence Horace:

*Persicos odi, puer, apparatus:
Displicent nexæ phylræ coronæ;
Mitte sectari, rosa quo locorum Sera moretur.*

I tell thee, boy, that I detest
The grandeur of a Persian feast;
Nor for me the linden's rind,
Shall the flow'ry chaplet bind.

Then search not where the curious rose Beyond his season loitering grows. Francis.

Verse 5. A feast unto all the people] The first was a feast for the nobles in general; this for the people of the city at large:

In the court of the garden] As the company was very numerous that was to be received, no apartments in the palace could be capable of containing them; therefore, the court of the garden was chosen.

Verse 6. White, green, and blue hangings] It was customary on such occasions not only to hang the place about with elegant curtains of the above colours, as Dr. Shaw and others have remarked, but also to have a canopy of rich stuffs suspended on cords from side to side of the place in which they feasted. And such courts were ordinarily paved with different coloured marbles, or with tiles painted, as above specified. And this was the origin of the Mosaic or Mosaic work, well known among the Asiatics, and borrowed from them by the Greeks and the Romans.

The beds of gold and silver, mentioned here, were the couches covered with gold and silver cloth, on which the guests reclined.

Verse 7. Vessels being diverse] They had different services of plate.

8 And the drinking was according to the law; none did compel: for so the king had appointed to all the officers of his house, that they should do according to every man's pleasure.

9 Also Vashti the queen made a feast for the women in the royal house which belonged to King Ahasuerus.

10 ¶ On the seventh day, when the heart of the king was merry with wine, he commanded Mehuman, Biztha, Harbona, Bigtha, and Abagtha, Ze-thar, and Carcas, the seven chamberlains that served in the presence of Ahasuerus the king, 11 To bring Vashti the queen before the king with the crown royal, to show the people and the princes her beauty; for she was fair to look on.

12 But the queen Vashti refused to come at the king's commandment by his chamberlains: therefore was the king very wroth, and his anger burned in him.

Verse 8. None did compel: for so the king had appointed] Every person drank what he pleased; he was not obliged to take more than he had reason to think would do him good.

Among the Greeks, each guest was obliged to keep the round, or leave the company: hence the proverb ἢ πρὶν, ἢ ἀπὸν. Drink or begone. To this Horace refers, but gives more license:

*Pasco libatis dapibus; prout cuique libido est,
Siccata inaequales calices conviva, solutus
Legibus insanis: seu quis capiti acria fortis Pocula; seu modicis humescit laetius.*
Horat. Sat. lib. ii. s. vi. ver. 67.

There, every guest may drink and fill
As much or little as he will;
Exempted from the Bodiam rules,
Of roaring prodigals and fools,
Whether in merry mood, or whim,
He fills his goblet to the brim;
Or, better pleased to let it pass,
Is cheerful with a moderate glass. See Francis.

At the Roman feasts there was a person chosen by the cast of dice, who was the Arbiter bibendi; and prescribed rules to the company, which all were obliged to observe. References to this custom may be seen in the same poet: ODAE. lib. i. Od. iv. ver. 18.

Non regna vini sortiere talis.

And in lib. ii. Od. vii. ver. 25.

—Quem Venus arbitrum Dicit bibendi?

Mr. Herbert, in his excellent poem, The Church Porch, has spent five verses on this vile custom and its rules. E. G.

Drink not the third glass; who thou canst not tame
When once it is within thee; but before
Mayst rule it as thou list; and pour the shame,
Which it would pour on thee, upon the floor.
It is most just to throw that on the ground,
Which would throw me there, if I keep the round.

He that is drunken may his mother kill
Big with his sister; he hath lost the reins;
Is outlaw'd by himself. All kinds of ill
Did with his liquor slide into his veins.
The drunkard forfeits man; and doth divest
All worldly right, save what he hath by beast.

Nothing too severe can be said on this destructive practice.

Verse 9. Also Vashti the queen] وشتی is a mere Persian word; and signifies a beautiful or excellent woman.

Made a feast for the women] The king having subdued all his enemies, left no competitor for the kingdom; and being thus quietly and firmly seated on the throne, made this a time of general festivity. As the women of the East never mingle with the men in public, Vashti made a feast for the Persian ladies by themselves: and, while the men were in the court of the garden, the women were in the royal house.

Verse 10. He commanded Mehuman] All these are doubtless Persian names; but so disguised by passing through a Hebrew medium, that some of them can scarcely be known. Mehuman, مهومان, signifies a stranger or guest. We shall find other names and words in this book the Persian etymology of which may be easily traced.

Verse 11. To bring Vashti the queen] The Targum adds naked.

For she was fair to look on.] Hence she had her name وشتی Vashti, which signifies beautiful. See ver. 9.

Verse 12. Vashti refused to come] And much should she be commended for it. What woman, possessing even a common share of prudence and modesty, could consent to expose herself to the view of such a group of drunken bacchanals! Her courage was equal to her modesty: she would resist the royal mandate, rather than violate the rules of chaste decorum.

Her contempt of worldly grandeur, when brought in competition with what every modest woman holds dear and sacred, is worthy of observation. She well knew that this act of disobedience would cost her her crown, if not her life also: but she was regardless of both, as she conceived her virtue and honour were at stake.

Her humility was greatly evidenced in this refusal. She was beautiful; and might have shown herself to great advantage, and have had a fine opportunity of gratifying her vanity, if she had any: but she refused to come.

Hail! noble woman: be thou a pattern to all thy sex on every similar occasion. Surely, every thing considered, we have few women like Vashti. While some of the highest of the land will dress and deck themselves with the utmost splendour, even to the selage of their fortunes, to exhibit themselves at balls, plays, galas, operas, and public assemblies of all kinds, that they may be seen and admired of men; and, even to the endless reproach and broad suspicion of their honour and chastity, will figure away in masquerades; Vashti must be considered at the top of her sex:

Rara avis in terris, nigroque similima cygno.

A black swan is not half so rare a bird.

15 ^xWhat shall we do unto the queen Vashti according to law, because she hath not performed the commandment of the king Ahasuerus by the chamberlains ?

16 And Memucan answered before the king and the princes, Vashti the queen hath not done wrong to the king only, but also to all the princes, and to all the people that are in all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus.

17 For this deed of the queen shall come abroad unto all women, so that they shall ^ydespise their husbands in their eyes, when it shall be reported, The king Ahasuerus commanded Vashti the queen to be brought in before him, but she came not.

Verse 13. To the wise men] Probably the lawyers.

Verse 14. And the next unto him—the seven princes] Probably, the privy counsellors of the king. Who saw the king's face—were at all times admitted to the royal presence.

Verse 16. Vashti—hath not done wrong to the king only] This reasoning or arguing was inconsequent and false. Vashti had not generally disobeyed the king; therefore, she could be no precedent for the general conduct of the Persian women. She disobeyed only in one particular: and this, to serve a purpose, Memucan draws into a general consequence: and the rest came into the conclusion which he drew, being either too drunk to be able to discern right from wrong; or too intent on reducing the women to a state of vassalage, to neglect the present favourable opportunity.

Verse 18. The ladies of Persia] שָׂרוֹת saroth, the princesses: but the meaning is very well expressed by our term ladies.

Verse 19. That it be not altered] Let it be inserted among the permanent laws; and made a part of the constitution of the empire. Perhaps the Persians affected such a degree of wisdom in the construction of their laws, that and Media say this day unto all the king's princes, which have heard of the deed of the queen. Thus shall there arise too much contempt and wrath.

19 ^zIf it please the king, let there go a royal commandment ^afrom him, and let it be written among the laws of the Persians and the Medes, ^bthat it be not altered, That Vashti come no more before King Ahasuerus; and let the king give her royal estate ^cunto another that is better than she.

20 And when the king's decree which he shall make shall be published throughout all his empire, (for it is great,) all the wives shall ^dgive to their husbands honour, both to great and small.

21 And the saying ^epleased the king and the princes; and the king did according to the word of Memucan :

22 For he sent letters into all the king's provinces, ^finto every province according to the writing thereof, and to every people after their language, that every man should ^gbear rule in his own house, and ^hthat it should be published according to the language of every people.

12, 15.—^c Heb. unto her companion.—^d Eph. 5. 33. Col. 3. 18. 1 Pet. 3. 1.—^e Heb. was good in the eyes of the king.—^f Ch. 8. 9.—^g Eph. 5. 22, 23, 24. 1 Tim. 2. 12.—^h Heb. that one should publish it according to the language of his people.

they never could be amended, and should never be repealed. And this we may understand to be the ground of the saying, The laws of the Medes and Persians that change not.

Verse 22. That every man should bear rule in his own house] Both God's law, and common sense, taught this from the foundation of the world. And is it possible that this did not obtain in the Persian empire, previously to this edict! The twentieth verse has another clause, That all wives shall give to their husbands honour, both to great and small. This also was universally understood. This law did nothing. I suppose the parade of enactment was only made to deprive honest Vashti of her crown. The Targum adds, "That each woman should speak the language of her husband." If she were even a foreigner, she should be obliged to learn and speak the language of the king. Perhaps there might be some common sense in this, as it would oblige the foreigner to devote much time to study and improvement; and, consequently, make her a better woman, and a better wife. But there is no proof that this was a part of the decree. But there are so many additions to this book in the principal versions, that we know not what might have made a part of it originally.

CHAPTER II.

The counsellors advise that a selection of virgins should be made throughout the empire, out of whom the king should choose one to be queen in place of Vashti, 1—4. Esther pleases the king, and is set above all the women; and he makes her queen in place of Vashti, and does her great honour, 15—20. Mordecai, sitting at the king's gate, discovers a conspiracy formed against the king's life, by two of his chamberlains; he informs the king, the matter is investigated, they are found guilty and hanged, and the transaction is recorded, 21—23.

AFTER these things, when the wrath of King Ahasuerus was appeased, he remembered Vashti, and what she had done, and what was decreed against her.

2 Then said the king's servants that ministered unto him, Let there be fair young virgins sought for the king.

3 And let the king appoint officers in all the provinces of his kingdom, that they may gather together all the fair young virgins unto Shushan the palace, to the house of the women, ^b unto the custody of ^c Hegai the king's chamberlain, keeper of the women; and let their things for purification be given them:

4 And let the maiden which pleaseth the king be queen instead of Vashti. And the thing pleased the king; and he did so.

5 ¶ Now in Shushan the palace there was a certain Jew, whose name was Mordecai, the son of Jair, the son of 8 ¶ So it came to pass, when the king's commandment and his decree was heard, and when many maidens were ⁱ gathered together unto Shushan the palace, to the custody of Hegai, that Esther was brought also unto the king's house, to the custody of Hegai, keeper of the women.

NOTES ON CHAPTER II.

Verse 2. Let there be fair young virgins sought for the king] This was the usual way in which the harem, or seraglio, was furnished: the finest women in the land, whether of high or low birth, were sought out, and brought to the harem. They all became the king's concubines: but one was raised as chief wife or sultana, to the throne; and her issue was specially entitled to inherit.

Verse 3. Hegai the king's chamberlain] ^{הגאי} ^{חמור} ^{המלך} Hegai saris ham-melech, "Hegai, the king's eunuch," so the Septuagint, Vulgate, Targum, and Syriac. In the Eastern countries the women are intrusted to the care of the eunuchs only.

Let their things for purification be given them] ^{תמריקיהן} ^{תמריקיהן} tumerukeyhen, their cosmetics. What these were we are told in ver. 12; oil of myrrh, and sweet odours. The myrrh was employed for six months, and the odours for six months more; after which the person was brought to the king. This space was sufficient to show whether the young woman had been chaste: whether she were with child or not, that the king might not be imposed on, and be obliged to father a spurious offspring; which might have been the case had not this precaution been used.

Instead of the oil of myrrh, the Targum says it was the oil of unripe olives, which caused the hair to fall off, and rendered the skin delicate.

Verse 5. Whose name was Mordecai] The Targum says, "He was the son of Jair, the son of Shimea, the son of Gera, the son of Kish." And "this was the same Shimea that cursed David; and whom David forbade Joab to slay, because he saw, in the spirit of prophecy, that he was to be the predecessor of Esther and Mordecai: but when he became old, and incapable of having children, David ordered Solomon to put him to death."

Verse 7. He brought up Hadassah] ^{הדסה} hadassah, signifies a myrtle in Chaldee: this was probably her first or Babylonish name. When she came to the Persian court, she was called Esther, ^{אסתר} aster, or ^{סטרה} stara, which signifies a star in Persian: the name is undoubtedly Persian. Esther was the daughter of Abihail, the uncle of Mordecai; and therefore must have been Mordecai's cousin, though the Vulgate and Josephus make her Mordecai's niece: but it is safest here to follow the Hebrew.

Verse 9. The maiden pleased him] He conceived a partiality for her above the rest; probably because of the propriety of her deportment, and her engaging though unassuming manners.

13 Then thus came every maiden unto the king; whatsoever she desired was given her to go with her out of the house of the women unto the king's house.

Seven maidens] These were to attend her to the bath, to anoint and adorn her, and be her servants in general.

Verse 10. Esther had not showed her people] This might have prejudiced her with the king; for it was certainly no credit at the Persian court to be a Jew; and we shall find from the sequel that those who were in the Persian dominions were far from being reputable, or in a safe state. Besides, had her lineage been known, envy might have prevented her from ever having access to the king.

Verse 12. Six months with oil of myrrh] See on verse 3.

Verse 13. Whatsoever she desired] When any of the young women were called to go to the king, it appears that it was an ordinance that whatever kind of dress, stuff, colour, jewels, &c. they thought best to set off their persons, and render them more engaging, should be given them.

Verse 14. She returned into the second house] This was the place where the king's concubines were kept. They went out no more, and were never given in marriage to any man; and saw the king's face no more unless specially called.

15 ¶ Now when the turn of Esther, ^p the daughter of Abihail the uncle of Mordecai, who had taken her for his daughter, was come to go in unto the king, she required nothing but what Hegai the king's chamberlain, the keeper of the women, appointed. And Esther obtained favour in the sight of all them that looked upon her.

16 So Esther was taken unto King Ahasuerus into his house royal in the tenth month, which is the month Tebeth, in the seventh year of his reign.

17 And the king loved Esther above all the women, and she obtained grace and ^r favour ^s in his sight more than all the virgins; so that he set the royal crown upon her head, and made her queen instead of Vashti.

beardless, a proper epithet of a eunuch; or sestgunj, weak loins, for the same reason. Names of this kind at once show the reason of their imposition, by describing the state of the person.

Verse 15. She required nothing] She left this entirely to her friend Hegai, who seems to have been intent on her success. She therefore left her decorations to his judgment alone; and went in that dress, and in those ornaments, which he deemed most suitable.

Verse 17. Set the royal crown upon her head] Made her what is now called in the East the SULTANA, the queen. She was the mistress of all the rest of the wives; all of whom were obliged to pay her the most profound respect.

Verse 18. Made a release to the provinces] Remitted some kind of tribute, or impost, in honour of Esther, at her coronation; as our kings generally do when they are crowned, ordering a discharge from prison of many who are confined for minor offences. As it was the custom of the Persian kings to give their queens something like what is called with us the aurum reginae, the "queen gold," (which was a tenth of all fines, &c. above what was given to the king;) for they gave them such a city to buy them clothes, another for their hair, a third for their necklaces, a fourth for their pearls, &c.; it is probable that, on this occasion, Esther so wishing, he relieved those cities and provinces which had before paid this queen gold from all these expenses; and this would tend greatly to make the queen popular.

Verse 21. Mordecai sat in the king's gate] Mordecai might have been one of the officers of the king, as the gate was the place where such usually attended to await the king's call. It is not likely that he was the porter: had he been only such, Haman could have removed him at once.

Two of the king's chamberlains] Eunuchs. Why they conspired against the life of the king we are not informed. The Targum says, that they found out that Esther had intended to use her influence with the king to get them removed from their office, and Mordecai put in their place; therefore, they determined to poison Esther, and slay the king in his bed-chamber. It is very likely that they were creatures of Haman, who probably affected the kingdom; and perhaps were employed by him to remove the king, and so make his way open to the throne.

Verse 22. Was known to Mordecai] Josephus says that a Jew, named Barnabas, overheard the plot; told it to Mordecai, Mordecai to Esther, and Esther to the king, in Mordecai's name: and he was registered as the discoverer.

Verse 23 It was found out] It was proved against them, in consequence of which they were hanged. Perhaps the words עץ על ידו vayittal al ets, "they were hung upon wood," or "a tree," may refer to their being impaled. A pointed stake is set upright in the ground; and the culprit is taken, placed on the sharp point, and then pulled down by his legs till the stake that went in at the fundament passes up through the body, and comes out by the side of the neck. A most dreadful species of punishment, in which revenge and cruelty may glut the utmost of their malice. The culprit lives a considerable time in excruciating agonies.

It has been observed, that the name of God does not once occur in this book. This is true of the Hebrew text, and all translations from it: but in the Septuagint we find the following words, in ver. 20. after, Esther had not showed her kindred—Οὕτως γὰρ ἐντείλατο αὐτῇ Μαρδοχαιος, φοβισθαι τὸν Θεόν, καὶ ποιεῖν τὰ προσταγματα αὐτοῦ, καθὼς ἦν μετ' αὐτοῦ; "For so Mordecai had charged her to fear God and to keep his commandments, as she did when with him." This, as far as the Septuagint is concerned, takes away the strange reproach from this book. It must be owned that it was not because there were not many fair opportunities that the sacred name has not been introduced.

CHAPTER III.

Ahasuerus exalts Haman the Agagite, and commands all his officers to do him reverence, which Mordecai refuses, 1—3. Haman, informed of Mordecai's refusal, plots his destruction, and that of the Jews, 4—6. Lots are cast to find out the proper time, 7. Haman accuses the Jews to Ahasuerus, counsels him to destroy them, and offers ten thousand talents of silver for the damage which the revenue might sustain by their destruction, 8, 9. The king refuses the money, but gives Haman full authority to destroy them, 10, 11. Letters are written to this effect, and sent to the king's lieutenants through out the empire, and the thirteenth day of the month Adar is appointed for the massacre, 12—15.

Verse 1. Haman—the Agagite] Perhaps he was some descendant of that Agag king of the Amalekites, spared by Saul, but destroyed by Samuel; and on this ground might have an antipathy to the Jews.

Set his seat above all the princes] Made him his prime minister; and put all the officers of state under his direction.

3 Then the king's servants, which were in the king's gate, said unto Mordecai, Why transgressest thou the ^e king's commandment?

4 Now it came to pass, when they spake daily unto him, and he hearkened not unto them; that they told Haman, to see whether Mordecai's matters would stand: for he had told them that he was a Jew.

ters; and Mordecai was one of those officers; and came to the gate with the others who were usually there in attendance, to receive the commands of the king.

Mordecai bowed not] יכרע לו לא yikarâ, "he did not bow down;" nor did him reverence וְלֹא יִשְׁתַּחֲוֶה v'lo yishtachaveh, "nor did he prostrate himself." I think it most evident, from these two words, that it was not civil reverence merely that Haman expected, and Mordecai refused: this sort of respect is found in the word כָּרַע karâ, to bow. This sort of reverence Mordecai could not refuse without being guilty of the most inexcusable obstinacy; nor did any part of the Jewish law forbid it. But Haman expected what the Persian kings frequently received, a species of divine adoration; and this is implied in the word שָׁחָה shachah, which signifies that kind of prostration which implies the highest degree of reverence that can be paid to God or man, lying down flat on the earth, with the hands and feet extended, and the mouth in the dust.

The Turgum says that Haman set up a statue for himself, to which every one was obliged to bow, and to adore Haman himself. The Jews all think that Mordecai refused this prostration, because it implied idolatrous adoration. Hence, in the Apocryphal additions to this book, Mordecai is represented praying thus: "Thou knowest that if I have not adored Haman, it was not through pride, nor contempt, nor secret desire of glory; for I felt disposed to kiss the footsteps of his feet (gladly) for the salvation of Israel: but I feared to give to a man that honour which I know belongs only to my God."

Verse 7. The first month] That is, of the civil year of the Jews.

The month Nisan] Answering to a part of our March and April.

The twelfth year of King Ahasuerus] According to the chronology in our Bibles, about five hundred and ten years before Christ.

They cast Pur, that is, the lot] This appears to be the Hebrew corruption of the pure Persian word pari, which signifies any thing that happens fortuitously. There is an addition here in the Greek text, that was probably in the original, and which makes this place very plain. I shall set down the whole verse, and

5 And when Haman saw that Mordecai ^f bowed not, nor did him reverence, then was Haman ^g full of wrath.

6 And he thought scorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone; for they had showed him the people of Mordecai: wherefore Haman ^h sought to destroy all the Jews that were throughout the whole kingdom of Ahasuerus, even the people of Mordecai.

7 ¶ In the first month, that is, the month Nisan, in the twelfth year of King Ahasuerus, ⁱ they cast Pur, that is, the lot, before Haman from day to day, and from month to month, to the

give the Greek in a parenthesis, that it may be read consecutively with what is in the Hebrew. In the first month, that is, the month Nisan, in the twelfth year of King Ahasuerus, they cast Pur, that is, the lot, before Haman, from day to day, and from month to month, (ἀπὸς ἀπολείσαι ἐν μιᾷ ἡμέρᾳ τὸ γένος Μαρδοχαίου, καὶ ἐπέσεν ὁ κληρὸς εἰς τὴν τεσσαρακιστῆατὴν τοῦ μηνὸς ἐστὶν Ἀδάρ, "That they might destroy in one day the people of Mordecai; and the lot fell on the fourteenth day of the month Adar.")

We see plainly intimated by the Hebrew text that they cast lots, or used a species of divination, to find out which of the twelve months would be the most favourable for the execution of Haman's design; and having found the desired month, then they cast lots or used divination, to find out which day of the said month would be the lucky day for the accomplishment of the enterprise. But the Hebrew text does not tell us the result of this divination; we are left to guess it out; but the Greek supplies this deficiency, and makes all clear. From it we find that, when they cast for the month, the month Adar was taken; and when they cast for the day, the fourteenth [Heb. thirteenth] of that month was taken.

Some have questioned whether Pur may not have signified also some game of chance, which they played before, or with Haman, from day to day, to divert him from his melancholy, till the lucky time came in which he was to have the gratification of slaying all the people who were objects of his enmity: or, they cast lots, or played who should get the property of such and such opulent families. Holinshead, one of our ancient historians, informs us that, previously to the battle of Agincourt, the English army, under Henry V., were so thinned and weakened by disease, and the French army so numerous, that "Frenchmen, in the mean while, as though they had been sure of victory, made great triumphe, for the captains had determined before how to divide the spoil; and the souldiers, the night before, had played the Englishmen at dice." To this the chorus of Shakespeare alludes:—

Proud of their numbers, and secure in soul,
The confident and over lusty French
Do the low rated English play at dice.

8 ¶ And Haman said unto King Ahasuerus, There is a certain people scattered abroad and dispersed among the people in all the provinces of thy kingdom; and ^k their laws are diverse from all people; neither keep they the king's laws: therefore it is not ^l for the king's profit to suffer them.

Did Haman and his flatterers intend to divide the spoils of the designed-to-be-massacred Jews in some such manner as this?

Verse 8. Their laws are diverse from all people] Such they certainly were: for they worshipped the true God, according to his own laws; and this was not done by any other people then on the face of the earth.

Verse 9. Let it be written that they may be destroyed] Let it be enacted that they may all be put to death. By this he would throw all the odium off himself, and put it on the king and his counsellors; for he wished the thing to pass into a law, in which he could have but a small share of the blame.

I will pay ten thousand talents of silver] He had said before that it was not for the king's profit to suffer them; but here he is obliged to acknowledge that there will be a loss to the revenue; but that loss he is willing to make up out of his own property.

Ten thousand talents of silver is an immense sum indeed; which, counted by the Babylonish talent, amounts to two millions one hundred and nineteen thousand pounds sterling: but, reckoned by the Jewish talent, it makes more than double that sum.

Those who cavil at the Scriptures would doubtless call this one of the many absurdities which, they say, are so plenteously found in them; supposing it almost impossible for an individual to possess so much wealth. But, though they do not believe the Bible, they do not scruple to credit Herodotus, who (lib. 7.) says, that when Xerxes went into Greece, Pythius the Lydian had two thousand talents of silver, and four millions of gold darics, which sum united make near five millions and a half sterling.

Plutarch tells us, in his life of Crassus, that after this Roman general had dedicated the tenth of all he had to Hercules, he entertained the Roman people at ten thousand tables, and distributed to every citizen as much corn as was sufficient for three months; and, after all these expenses, he had seven thousand one hundred Roman talents remaining, which is more than a million and a half of English money.

In those days silver and gold were more plentiful than at present, as we may see in the yearly revenue of Solomon; who had of gold from Ophir at one voyage four hundred and fifty talents, which make three millions two hundred and forty thousand pounds sterling; and his annual income was six hundred and sixty-six talents of silver, which make four millions seven hundred and ninety-five thousand two hundred pounds English money.

In addition to the above, I cannot help subjoining the following particulars:—

Crassus, who was mentioned before, had a landed estate valued at one million six hundred and sixty-six thousand six hundred and sixty-six pounds thirteen shillings and fourpence.

C. Cæcilius Ridorus, after having lost much in the civil war, left by will effects to the amount of one million forty-seven thousand one hundred and sixty pounds.

Lentulus, the augur, is said to have possessed no less than three millions three hundred and thirty-three thousand three hundred and thirty-three pounds six shillings and eightpence.

Apicius was worth more than nine hundred and sixteen thousand six hundred and seventy-one pounds thirteen shillings and fourpence; who, after having spent in his kitchen eight hundred and thirty-three thousand three hundred and thirty-three pounds six shillings and eightpence, and finding that he had no more left than eighty-three thousand three hundred and thirty-three pounds six shillings and eightpence, he considered it so little for his support, that he judged it best to put an end to his life by poison.

The superfluous furniture of M. Scæurus, which was burnt at Tusculum, was valued at no less than eight hundred and thirty-three thousand three hundred and thirty-two pounds thirteen shillings and fourpence.

Anthony owed at the Ides of March the sum of three hundred and thirty-three thousand three hundred and thirty-three pounds six shillings and sixpence, which he paid before the calends of April.

None of these men were in trade, to account for the circulation of such immense sums through their hands. See DICKSON'S Husband. of the Anc.

Verse 10. The king took his ring] In this ring was no doubt included his privy seal; and he gave this to Haman, that when he had formed such a decree as he thought fit, he might seal it with his ring, which would give it its due force and influence among the rulers of the provinces. The privy seal of many of our sovereigns appears to have been inserted in 12 * Then were the king's scribes called on the thirteenth day of the first month, and there was written according to all that Haman had commanded unto the king's lieutenants, and to the governors that were over every province, and to the rulers of every people of every province, "according to the writing thereof, and to every people after their language; " in the name of King Ahasuerus was it written, and sealed with the king's ring.

15 The posts went out, being hastened by the king's commandment, and the decree was given in Shushan the palace. And the king and Haman sat down to drink; but ^b the city Shushan was perplexed.

their rings: and the seals of Eastern potentates were worn in rings upon their fingers. One such seal, once the property of the late Tippoo Sultan, lies before me; the inscription is deeply cut in silver, which is set in a massy carriage of gold. This, as fitted to the finger, he probably kept always on his hand, to be ready to seal despatches, &c. or, it might be carried by a confidential officer for the same purpose, as it seems to refer to one of the chief cucheries.

Verse 12. Unto the king's lieutenants] אחשדרפני Achashdarpene. This is, in all probability, another Persian word; for there is nothing like it in the Hebrew language, nor can it be fairly deduced from any roots in that tongue. The Vulgate translates ad omnes satrapas regis, to all the satraps of the king. It is very likely that this is the true sense of the word; and that the אחשדרפני achashdarpene, as it may be pronounced, is the Chaldee or Hebrew corruption of the Persian word ساتراپ satraban, the plural of ساتراپ satrab, a Persian peer, though the word is now nearly obsolete in the Persian language; for, since the conquest of Persia by Mohammedanism, the names of offices are materially changed, as something of Islamism is generally connected with the titles of officers both civil and military, as well as religious.

Verse 13. To destroy, to kill, and to cause to perish] To put the whole of them to death in any manner; or by every way and means.

Take the spoil of them for a prey.] Thus, whoever killed a Jew had his property for his trouble! And thus the hand of every man was armed against this miserable people. Both in the Greek version, and in the Latin, the copy of this order is introduced at length, expressing "the king's desire to have all his dominions in quiet and prosperity; but that he is informed that this cannot be expected, while a certain detestable people are disseminated through all his provinces, who not only are not subject to the laws, but endeavour to change them: and that nothing less than their utter extermination will secure the peace and prosperity of the empire; and, therefore, he orders that they be all destroyed, both male and female, young and old," &c.

Verse 15. The posts] Literally, the couriers, the hircarrahs, those who carried the public despatches; a species of public functionaries, which have been in use in all nations of the world from the remotest antiquity.

The decree was given in Shushan] It was dated from the royal city Susa, where the king then was.

The city Shushan was perplexed.] They saw that in a short time, by this wicked measure, the whole city would be thrown into confusion: for although the Jews were the only objects of this decree; yet, as it armed the populace against them, even the Persians could not hope to escape without being spoiled, when a desperate mob had begun to taste of human blood, and enrich themselves with the property of the murdered. Besides, many Persian families had, no doubt, become united by intermarriages with Jewish families; and in such a massacre they would necessarily share the same fate with the Jews. A more impolitic, disgraceful, and cruel measure was never formed by any government; and one would suppose that the king who ordered it must have been an idiot, and the counsellors who advised it must have been madmen. But a despotic government is ever capable of extravagance and cruelty; for, as it is the bane of popular freedom and happiness, so it is the disgrace of political wisdom, and of all civil institutions. Despotism and tyranny in the state are the direst curses which insulted justice can well inflict upon a sinful nation.

CHAPTER IV.

On hearing of the king's decree to exterminate the Jews, Mordecai mourns, and clothes himself in sackcloth, 1, 2. The Jews are filled with consternation, 3. Esther, perceiving Mordecai in distress at the palace gate, sends her servant Hatach to inquire the reason, 4—6. Hatach returns with the information, and also the express desire of Mordecai that she should go instantly to the king, and make supplication in behalf of her people, 7—9. Esther excuses herself, on the ground that she had not been called by the king for thirty days past; and that the law was such, that any one approaching his presence, without express invitation, should be put to death, unless the king should, in peculiar clemency, stretch out to such person the golden sceptre, 10—12. Mordecai returns an answer, insisting on her compliance, 13, 14. She then orders Mordecai to gather all the Jews of Shushan, and fast for her success three days, night and day; and resolves to make the attempt, though at the risk of her life, 15—17.

6 So Hatach went forth to Mordecai unto the street of the city, which was before the king's gate.

7 And Mordecai told him of all that had happened unto him, and of ^gthe sum of the money that Haman had promised to pay to the king's treasures for the Jews, to destroy them.

8 Also he gave him ^hthe copy of the writing of the decree that was given at Shushan to destroy them, to show it unto Esther, and to declare it unto her, and to charge her that she should go in unto the king, to make supplication unto him, and to make request before him for her people.

9 And Hatach came and told Esther the words of Mordecai.

10 ¶ Again Esther spake unto Hatach, and gave him commandment unto Mordecai;

11 All the king's servants, and the people of the king's provinces, do know that whosoever, whether man or woman, shall come unto the king into ⁱthe inner court, who is not called, ^k*there is* one law of his to put him to

NOTES ON CHAPTER IV.

Verse 1. Mordecai rent his clothes] He gave every demonstration of the most poignant and oppressive grief. Nor did he hide this from the city; and the Greek says that he uttered these words aloud: Ἀπεραι εἶνος παντὶν Ἰουδαίων, A people is going to be destroyed, who have done no evil!

Verse 2. Before the king's gate] He could not enter into the gate, or the place where the officers waited, because he was in the habit of a mourner; for this would have been contrary to law.

Verse 3. Fasting, and weeping, and wailing] How astonishing, that in all this there is not the slightest intimation given of praying to God!

Verse 4. Sent raiment] She supposed that he must have been spoiled of his raiment by some means; and, therefore, sent him clothing.

Verse 5. Then called Esther for Hatach] This eunuch the king had appointed to wait upon her partly, as is still the case in the East, to serve her; and partly to observe her conduct: for no despot is ever exempt from a twofold torture, jealousy and suspicion.

Verse 8. That she should go in unto the king] The Greek adds, "Remember the time of your low estate, and in what manner you have been nourished, and carried in my arms; and that Haman, who is next to the king, has got a decree for our destruction. Pray, therefore, to the Lord; and plead with the king, that we may be delivered from death." But there is not a word of this either in the Hebrew, Syriac, or Vulgate.

Verse 11. Into the inner court] We have already seen that the Persian sovereigns affected the highest degrees of majesty, even to the assuming of divine honours. No man nor woman dared to appear unveiled before them, without hazarding their lives: into the inner chamber of the harem no person ever entered but the king, and the woman he had chosen to call thither. None even of his courtiers or ministers dared to appear there; nor the most beloved of his concubines, except led thither by himself, or ordered to come to him. Here was Esther's difficulty; and that difficulty was now increased by the circumstance of her not having been sent for to the king's bed for thirty days. In the last verse of the preceding chap-

12 And they told to Mordecai Esther's words.

13 Then Mordecai commanded to answer Esther, Think not with thyself that thou shalt escape in the king's house, more than all the Jews:

14 For if thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, then shall there ^menlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place; but thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed: and who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?

15 ¶ Then Esther bade them return Mordecai this answer,

16 Go, gather together all the Jews that are ^apresent in Shushan, and fast ye for me, and neither eat nor drink ^othree days, night or day: I also and my maidens will fast likewise; and so will I go in unto the king, which is not according to the law; ^pand if I perish, I perish.

17 So Mordecai ^rwent his way, and did according to all that Esther had commanded him.

ter we find that the king and Haman sat down to drink. It is very likely that this wicked man had endeavoured to draw the king's attention from the queen, that his affection might be lessened, as he must have known something of the relationship between her and Mordecai; and, consequently, view her as a person who, in all probability, might stand much in the way of the accomplishment of his designs. I cannot but think that he had been the cause why Esther had not seen the king for thirty days.

Verse 13. Think not—that thou shalt escape] This confirms the suspicion that Haman knew something of the relationship between Mordecai and Esther; and, therefore, he gives her to understand that, although in the king's palace, she should no more escape than the Jews.

Verse 14. Then shall there enlargement and deliverance arise] He had a confidence that deliverance would come by some means; and he thought that Esther would be the most likely; and that, if she did not use the influence which her providential station gave her, she would be highly culpable.

And who knoweth whether thou art come] As if he had said, "Is it likely that Divine Providence would have so distinguished thee, and raised thee from a state of abject obscurity, merely for thy own sake? must it not have been on some public account? Did not he see what was coming; and has he not put thee in the place where thou mayest counteract one of the most ruinous purposes ever formed?" Is there a human being who has not some particular station by an especial providence, at some particular time, in which he can be of some essential service to his neighbour, in averting evil, or procuring good; if he be but only faithful to the grace and opportunity afforded by this station? Who dares give a negative to these questions? We lose much, both in reference to ourselves and others, by not advertising to our providential situation and circumstances. While on this subject, I will give the reader two important sayings, from two eminent men; both keen observers of human nature, and deeply attentive in all such cases to the operations of Divine Providence.

To every thing there is a season; and a time to every purpose under heaven. Therefore, Withhold not good from them to whom it is due, when it is in the power of thy hand to do it.

SOLOMON.

There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows, and in miseries. Shakespeare.

Has there not been a case within time of memory, when evil was designed against a whole people, through the Hamans who had poisoned the ears of well-intentioned men; in which one poor man, in consequence of a situation into which he was brought by an astonishing providence, used the influence which his situation gave him; and, by the mercy of his God, turned the whole evil aside? By the association of ideas the following passage will present itself to the reader's memory, who may have any acquaintance with the circumstance:—

"There was a little city, and few men within it; and there came a great king against it, and besieged it, and built great bulwarks against it. Now there was found in it a poor wise man; and he by his wisdom delivered the city; yet no man remembered that same poor man. Then said I, Ah, Lord God! They say of me, DO THOU HE NOT SPEAK PARABLES?" Rem acu tetigit.

Verse 16. Fast ye for me, and neither eat nor drink three days] What a strange thing, that still we hear nothing of prayer, nor of God! What is the ground on which we can account for this total silence? I know it not. He could not suppose there was any charm in fasting, sackcloth garments, and lying on the ground. If these were not done to turn away the displeasure of God, which seemed now to have unchained their enemies against them; what were they done for?

If I perish, I perish.] If I lose my life in this attempt to save my people, I shall lose it cheerfully. I see it is my duty to make the attempt; and, come what will, I am resolved to do it. She must, however, have depended much on the efficacy of the humiliations she prescribed.

CHAPTER V.

Esther presents herself before the king, and finds favour in his sight, 1, 2. He asks what her request is, and promises to grant it, 3. She invites him and Haman to a banquet, which they accept, 4, 5. He then desires to know her request; and she promises to make it known on the morrow, if they will again come to her banquet, 6-8. Haman, though overjoyed at the manner in which he was received by the queen, is indignant at the indifference with which he is treated by Mordecai, 9. He goes home, and complains of this conduct to his friends, and his wife Zeresh, 10-13. They counsel him to make a gallows of fifty cubits high, and to request the king that Mordecai may be hanged on it, which they take for granted the king will not refuse: and the gallows is made accordingly, 14.

Verse 1. On the third day. Most probably the third day of the fast which she had prescribed to Mordecai and the Jews.

Verse 2. She obtained favour in his sight. The Septuagint represents "the king, as being at first greatly enraged when he saw Esther, because she had dared to appear before him unveiled; and she, perceiving this; was so terrified that she fainted away; on which the king, touched with tenderness, sprung from his throne, took her up in his arms, laid the golden sceptre on her neck, and spoke to her in the most endearing manner." This is more circumstantial than the Hebrew, but is not contrary to it.

The golden sceptre that was in his hand.] That the kings of Persia did wear a golden sceptre we have the following proof in Xenophon: Οτι ου τοδ το χρυσου Σκηπτρον το τιν βασιλειαν διασφιν εστιν, αλλ' οι πιστοι φιλοι Σκηπτρον βασιλευσιν αληθεστατον και ασφαλεστατον. Κορ. παιδ. lib. viii. p. 139. edit. Steph. 1581. It is not, said Cyrus to his son Cambyzes, the GOLDEN SCEPTRE that saves the kingdom; faithful friends are the truest and safest sceptre of the empire.

Verse 4. Let the king and Haman come this day unto the banquet. It was necessary to invite Haman to prevent his suspicion; and that he might not take any hasty step which might have prevented the execution of the great design.

Verse 6. The banquet of wine. At that part of the banquet when the wine was introduced.

Verse 8. I will do to-morrow. She saw she was gaining on the king's affections; but she was not yet sufficiently confident; and therefore wished another interview, that she might ingratiate herself more fully in the king's favour, and thus secure the success of her design. But providence disposed of things thus, to give time for the important event mentioned in the succeeding chapter.

Verse 9. That he stood not up, nor moved for him. This was certainly carrying his integrity or inflexibility to the highest pitch. But still we are left to conjecture that some reverence was required, which Mordecai could not conscientiously pay.

Verse 11. The multitude of his children.] The Asiatic sovereigns delight in the number of their children; and this is one cause why they take so many wives and concubines.

of his riches; and ^m the multitude of his children, and all the things wherein the king had promoted him, and how he had ⁿ advanced him above the princes and servants of the king.

12 Haman said moreover, Yea, Esther the queen did let no man come in with the king unto the banquet that she had prepared but myself; and to-morrow am I invited unto her also with the king.

13 Yet all this availeth me nothing,

^m Ch. 9, 7, &c.—ⁿ Ch. 3, 1.—^o Heb. trees.

Verse 13. Yet all this availeth me nothing] Pride will ever render its possessor unhappy. He has such a high opinion of his own worth, that he conceives himself defrauded by every one who does not pay him all the respect and homage he conceives to be his due.

The soul was made for God; and nothing but God can fill it, and make it happy. Angels could not be happy in glory, when they had cast off their allegiance to their Maker. As soon as his heart had departed from God, Adam would needs go to the forbidden fruit, to satisfy a desire, which was only an indication of his having been unfaithful to his God. Solomon in all his glory, possessing every thing heart could wish, found all to be vanity and vexation of spirit; because his soul had not God for its portion. Ahab, on the throne of Israel, takes to his bed, and refuses to eat bread, not merely because he cannot get the vineyard of Naboth: but because he had not God in his heart, who could alone satisfy its desires. Haman, on the same ground, though the prime favourite of the king, is wretched, because he cannot have so long as I see Mordecai the Jew sitting at the king's gate.

14 ¶ Then said Zeresh his wife and all his friends unto him, Let a ^o gallows ^p be made of fifty cubits high; and to-morrow ^r speak thou unto the king that Mordecai may be hanged thereon: then go thou in merrily with the king unto the banquet. And the thing pleased Haman; and he caused ^s the gallows to be made.

a bow from that man whom his heart even despised. O how distressing are the inquietudes of vanity! And how wretched is the man who has not the God of Jacob for his help, and in whose heart Christ dwells not by faith!

Verse 14. Let a gallows be made of fifty cubits high] The word pylts, which we translate gallows, signifies simply wood, a tree, or pole; and this was to be seventy-five feet high, that he might suffer the greater ignominy, and be a more public spectacle. I believe impaling is here also meant. See the note on chap. ii. 23.

In former times the Jews were accustomed to burn Haman in effigy; and with him a wooden cross, which they pretended to be in memory of that which he had erected for the suspension of Mordecai; but which was in fact to deride the Christian religion. The emperors Justinian and Theodosius abolished it by their edicts; and the practice has ceased from that time, though the principle from which it sprang still exists; with the same virulence against Christianity and its glorious Author.

CHAPTER VI.

That night the king, not being able to sleep, orders the chronicles of the kingdom to be read to him; and finds there the record concerning the discovery of the treason of the two eunuchs, made by Mordecai, 1, 2. He inquires whether Mordecai had been rewarded, and was answered in the negative, 3. At this time Haman arrives, in order to request the king's permission to hang Mordecai: and, being suddenly asked what should be done to the man whom the king delighted to honour, supposing that himself must be meant, presented the ceremonial, 4—9. The king orders him to give Mordecai those honours; which he performs to his extreme mortification, 10, 11. He informs his wife Zeresh of these transactions, who predicts his downfall, 12, 13. He is hurried by the eunuchs to the queen's banquet, 14.

Verse 1. On that night could not the king sleep] The Targum says the king had a dream, which was as follows:—"And the king saw one in the similitude of a man, who spoke these words to him: Haman desireth to slay thee, and to make himself king in thy stead. Behold he will come unto thee early in the morning, to ask from thee the man who rescued thee from death, that he may slay him: but say thou unto Haman, What shall be done for the man whose honour the king studieth? than the royal vestments, the regal crown, and the horse on which the king is wont to ride." [The records of the Chronicles] It may be well asked, Why should the king, in such a perturbed state of mind, wish such a dry detail, as chronicles afford, to be read to him. But the truth is, as chronicles were composed among the Persians, he could not have brought before him any work more instructive, and more entertaining: because they were all written in verse, and were generally the work of the most eminent poets in the empire. They are written in this way to the present time.

and the famous epic poem of the finest Persian poet, Feridoosy, the Homer of India, is nothing else than a collection of chronicles, brought down from the creation to the reign of Mohammed Ghezny, in the beginning of the tenth century. After thirty years' labour, he finished this poem, which contained one hundred and twenty thousand lines; and presented it to the Sultan Mahmoud, who had promised to give him a dinar (eight shillings and sixpence,) for every line. The poem was finished A.D. 984; and was formed out of compositions of a similar nature, made by former poets. This chronological poem is written in all the harmony, strength, and elegance, of the most beautiful and harmonious language in the universe; and what adds greatly to its worth is, that it has few Arabic words, with which the beautiful Persian tongue was loaded, and in my opinion corrupted, after the conquest of the major part of Asia by the Mohammedans. The pedants of Hindoostan, whether they speak or write in prose, or in verse, affect this commixture of Arabic words; which, though they subjugate to Persian rules, yet are producing a ruggedness in a language, which in Feridoosy flows deep and strong like a river of oil over every kind of channel. Such, I suppose, was the chronicle that was read to Ahasuerus, when his distractions prevented his sleep, and his troubled mind required that soothing repose which the gentle though powerful hand of poetry is alone, in such circumstances, capable of affording. Even our rough English ancestors had their poetic chronicles; and, among many, the chronicle of Robert of Gloucester is proof in point. I need not add, that all that is real in Ossian is of the same complexion.

Verse 3. What honour and dignity hath been in his heart, To whom would the king delight to do honour more than to myself?

7 And Haman answered the king, For the man ° whom the king delighteth to honour,

8 Let the royal apparel be brought ° which the king useth to wear, and the horse that the king rideth upon, and the crown royal which is set upon his head:

9 And let this apparel and horse be delivered to the hand of one of the king's most noble princes, that they may array the man withal whom the king delighteth to honour, and bring him on horseback through the street of the city, ° and proclaim before him, Thus shall it be done to the man whom the king delighteth to honour.

10 Then the king said to Haman, Make haste, and take the apparel and the horse, as thou hast said, and do even so to Mordecai the Jew, that sit-done to Mordecai] It is certain he found nothing in the record; and had any thing been done, that was the most likely place to find it.

Verse 4. Who is in the court] This accords with the dream mentioned by the Targum; and given above.

Now Haman was come] This must have been very early in the morning. Haman's pride and revenge were both on the tenters to be gratified.

Verse 6. The king said unto him] He did not give him time to make his request; and put a question to him which, at the first view, promised him all that his heart could wish.

Verse 8. Let the royal apparel be brought] Pride and folly ever go hand in hand. What he asked would have been, in any ordinary case, against his own life: but he wished to reach the pinnacle of honour; never reflecting that the higher he rose, the more terrible would be his fall. The royal apparel was never worn but by the king: even when the king had laid them aside, it was death to put them on. The Targum has, purple robes.

And the horse—and the crown royal] Interpreters are greatly divided whether what is called here the crown royal be not rather an ornament worn on the head of the horse, than what may be called the royal crown. The original may be understood both ways; and our version seems to favour the former opinion: but I think it more likely that the royal crown is meant;—for why mention the ordinary trappings of the royal steed?

Verse 9. One of the king's most noble princes] Alas, poor Haman! never was the fable of the dog and shadow more literally fulfilled. Thou didst gape at the shadow, and didst lose the substance.

Verse 10. Make haste, and take the apparel

teth at the king's gate: ° let nothing fail of all that thou hast spoken. 11 Then took Haman the apparel and the horse, and arrayed Mordecai, and brought him on horseback through the street of the city, and proclaimed before him, Thus shall it be done unto the man whom the king delighteth to honour.

—and do even so to Mordecai] O mortifying reverse of human fortune! How could Haman bear this! The Targum might speak according to nature, when he said, that "Haman besought the king to kill him, rather than degrade him so." How astonishing is the conduct of divine providence in all this business! From it we plainly see that there is neither counsel, nor wisdom, against the Lord. And, that he who digs a pit for his neighbour is sure to fall into it himself.

Verse 12. Mordecai came again to the king's gate] He resumed his former humble state; while Haman, ashamed to look up, covered his face, and ran home to hide himself in his own house. Covering the head and face was a sign of shame and confusion, as well as of grief, among most people of the earth.

The Septuagint adds, οτι ὁ Θεὸς ὁ ζῶν μετ' αὐτοῦ, for the living God is with him. But this is a sentiment that could scarcely be expected to proceed from the mouth of heathens, such as these were.

Verse 14. Hasted to bring Haman] There was a dreadful banquet before him, of which he knew nothing: and he could have little appetite to enjoy that which he knew was prepared at the palace of Esther.

One grand design of this history is, to show that he who lays a snare for the life of his neighbour is most likely to fall into it himself: for, in the course of the divine providence, men generally meet with those evils in life which they have been the means of inflicting on others: and this is exactly agreeable to the saying of our Lord, With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you withal.

CHAPTER VII.

The king at the banquet urges Esther to prefer her petition, with the positive assurance that it shall be granted, 1, 2. She petitions for her own life, and the life of her people, who were sold to be destroyed, 3, 4. The king inquires the author of this project, and Haman is accused by the queen, 5, 6. The king is enraged: Haman supplicates for his life; but the king orders him to be hanged on the gallows he had prepared for Mordecai, 7—10.

Verse 2. At the banquet of wine] Postquam vino incalescat, after he had been heated with wine, says the Vulgate. In such a state the king was more likely to come into the measures of the queen.

Verse 3. Let my life be given me] This was very artfully, as well as very honestly, managed; and was highly calculated to work on the feelings of the king. What! is the queen's Verse 4. To be destroyed, to be slain] She here repeats the words which Haman put into the decree. See chap. iii. 13.

Could not countervail the king's damage.] Even the ten thousand talents of silver could not be considered as a compensation to the state for the loss of a whole nation of people throughout all their generations.

5 ¶ Then the king Ahasuerus answered and said unto Esther the queen, Who is he, and where is he, ^e that durst presume in his heart to do so?

6 And Esther said, ^f The adversary and enemy is this wicked Haman. Then Haman was afraid ^g before the king and the queen.

7 ¶ And the king, arising from the banquet of wine in his wrath, went into the palace garden: and Haman stood up to make request for his life to Esther the queen; for he saw that there was evil determined against him by the king.

8 Then the king returned out of the palace garden into the place of the banquet of wine; and Haman was fall-

Verse 5. Who is he, and where is he] There is a wonderful abruptness and confusion in the original words, highly expressive of the state of mind in which the king then was: מי הוא זה הוא אשר מלאו לבו לעשות כן Mey hu zeh-ve ey ze hu asher melau libbo la'asoth ken. "Who? He—this one? And where? This one—he? Who hath filled his heart to do thus?" He was at once struck with the horrible nature of a conspiracy so cruel and diabolic.

Verse 7. Haman stood up] He rose from the table to make request for his life, as soon as the king had gone out; and then he fell on his knees before the queen, she still sitting upon her couch.

Verse 8. Will he force the queen] On the king's return he found him at the queen's knees; and, professing to think that he intended to do violence to her honour, used the above expressions; though he must have known that, in such circumstances, the thought of perpetrating an act of this kind could not possibly exist.

They covered Haman's face] This was a sign of his being devoted to death: for the attend-en upon ^h the bed whereon Esther was. Then said the king, Will he force the queen also ⁱ before me in the house? As the word went out of the king's mouth, they ^k covered Haman's face.

9 And Harbonah, one of the chamberlains, said before the king, Behold also, ^m the ⁿ gallows, fifty cubits high, which Haman had made for Mordecai, who had spoken good for the king, standeth in the house of Haman. Then the king said, Hang him thereon.

10 So ^o they hanged Haman on the gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai. Then was the king's wrath pacified.

ants saw that the king was determined on his destruction. When a criminal was condemned by a Roman judge, he was delivered into the hands of the sergeant with these words: 1, lictor; caput obnubito, arbori infelici suspendito. "Go, sergeant; cover his head, and hang him on the accursed tree."

Verse 9. Behold also, the gallows] As if he had said, Besides all he has determined to do to the Jews, he has erected a very high gallows, on which he had determined, this very day, to hang Mordecai, who has saved the king's life.

Hang him thereon] Let him be instantly impaled on the same post. Harm watch, harm catch; says the proverb. Perillus was the first person burnt alive in the brazen bull, which he had made for the punishment of others: hence the poet said,

Nec lex est justior ulli Quam necis artifices arte perire sua.

Nor can there be a juster law than that the artificers of death should perish by their own invention.

CHAPTER VIII.

Ahasuerus invests Mordecai with the offices and dignities possessed by Haman, 1, 2. Esther begs that the decree of destruction gone out against the Jews may be reversed, 3—6. He informs her that the acts that had once passed the king's seal cannot be reversed; but he instructs her and Mordecai to write other letters in his name, and seal them with his seal, and send them to all the provinces in the empire, giving the Jews full liberty to defend themselves; which is accordingly done; and the letters are sent off with the utmost speed to all the provinces: in consequence the Jews prepare for their own defence, 7—14. Mordecai appears publicly in the dress of his high office, 15. The Jews rejoice in every place; and many of the people become Jews, because the fear of the Jews had fallen upon them, 16, 17.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VIII.

Verse 1. The king—give the house of Haman] As Haman was found guilty of treasonable practices against the peace and prosperity of the king and his empire, his life was forfeited, and his goods confiscated. And as Mordecai had been the means of preserving the king's life, and was the principal object of Haman's malice, it was but just to confer his property upon him, as well as his dignity and

2 And the king took off his ring, which he had taken from Haman, and gave it unto Mordecai. And Esther set Mordecai over the house of Haman.

3 ¶ And Esther spake yet again before the king, and fell down at his feet, and besought him with tears to put away the mischief of Haman the Agagite, and his device that he had devised against the Jews.

4 Then the king held out the golden sceptre toward Esther. So Esther arose, and stood before the king,

5 And said, If it please the king, and if I have found favour in his sight, and the thing seem right before the king, and I be pleasing in his eyes, let it be written to reverse the letters devised by Haman the son of Hammedatha the Agagite, which he wrote to destroy the Jews which are in all the king's provinces;

6 For how can I endure to see the evil that shall come unto my people? or how can I endure to see the destruction of my kindred?

7 ¶ Then the king Ahasuerus said unto Esther the queen, and to Mordecai the Jew, Behold, I have given Esther the house of Haman, and him they have hanged upon the gallows, because office, as Mordecai was found deserving of the former, and fit to discharge the duties of the latter.

Verse 2. The king took off his ring] In the ring was the seal of the king. Giving the ring to Mordecai was tantamount to giving him the seals of the kingdom, and constituting him the same as Lord Chancellor among us.

Verse 6. To see the destruction of my kindred?] She had now informed the king that she was cousin to Mordecai, and consequently a Jewess; and though her own life and that of Mordecai were no longer in danger, Haman being dead, yet the decree that had gone forth was in full force against the Jews; and, if not repealed, their destruction would be inevitable.

Verse 8. May no man reverse] Whatever had passed the royal signet could never be revoked; no succeeding edict could destroy or repeal a preceding one; but one of a similar nature to the Jews against the Persians, as that to the Persians was against the Jews, might be enacted; and thus the Jews be enabled legitimately to defend themselves; and, consequently, placed on an equal footing with their enemies.

Verse 9. The month Sivan] This answers to a part of our May and June.

he laid his hand upon the Jews.

8 Write ye also for the Jews, as it liketh you, in the king's name, and seal it with the king's ring; for the writing which is written in the king's name, and sealed with the king's ring, may no man reverse.

9 ¶ Then were the king's scribes called at that time in the third month, that is, the month Sivan, on the three and twentieth day thereof: and it was written, according to all that Mordecai commanded, unto the Jews, and to the lieutenants, and the deputies and rulers of the provinces which are from India unto Ethiopia, a hundred twenty and seven provinces, unto every province according to the writing thereof, and unto every people after their language, and to the Jews according to their writing, and according to their language.

10 And he wrote in the king Ahasuerus' name, and sealed it with the king's ring, and sent letters by posts on horseback, and riders on mules, camels, and young dromedaries:

11 Wherein the king granted the Jews which were in every city to gather themselves together, and to stand for their life, to destroy, to slay, and to cause to perish, all the power of the

Verse 10. On mules, camels, and young dromedaries] What these beasts were is difficult to say. The word רֶקֶשׁ rekesh, which we translate mules, signifies a swift chariot-horse.

The strange word אַהַשְׁתְּרָנִים ahashteranims, is probably a Persian word, but perhaps incurably corrupted. The most likely derivation is that of Bochart, from the Persian اَکَشْ alekash, huge, large, rough, and اَسْتَر aster, a mule; large mules.

The words בְּנֵי הָרָמִיִּים beney huramim, the sons of mares, which we translate dromedaries, is supposed to signify mules, produced between the he ass and the mare, to distinguish them from those produced between the stallion and the ass. But there is really so much confusion about these matters, and so little consent among learned men as to the signification of these words, and even the true knowledge of them is of such little importance, that we may well rest contented with such names as our modern translations have given us. They were, no doubt, the swiftest and hardiest beasts that the city or country could produce.

Verse 11. To destroy, to slay, and to cause to perish] The same words as in Haman's decree: therefore, the Jews had as much authority to slay their enemies, as their enemies had to slay them.

Little ones and women] This was the ordinary custom, to destroy the whole family of those convicted of great crimes; and, whether this was right or wrong, it was the custom of the people, and according to the laws. Verse 17. Many—became Jews, for—fear] These were a species of converts not likely to bring much honour to true religion; but the sacred historian states the simple fact. They did profess Judaism for fear of the Jews, whether they continued steady in that faith or not.

It is only the Gospel which will not admit of coercion for the propagation and establishment of its doctrines. It is a spiritual system, and can be propagated only by spiritual influence. As it proclaims holiness of heart and life, which nothing but the spirit of God can produce; so it is the spirit of God alone, that can persuade the understanding, and change the heart. If the kingdom of Christ were of this world, then would his servants fight. But it is not from hence.

CHAPTER IX.

On the 13th of the month Adar the Jews destroy their enemies, and the governors of the provinces assist them, 1—5. They slay five hundred in Shushan, and kill the ten sons of Haman, but take no spoil, 6—10. The king is informed of the slaughter in Shushan, 11. He desires to know what Esther requests further; who begs that the Jews may be permitted to act on the following day as they had done on the preceding, and that Haman's sons may be hanged upon the gallows, which is granted; and they slay three hundred more in Shushan, and in the other provinces seventy five thousand, 12—16. 2 The Jews^d gathered themselves together in their cities throughout all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus, to lay hand on such as^e sought their hurt: and no man could withstand them; for^f the fear of them fell upon all people.

3 And all the rulers of the provinces, and the lieutenants, and the deputies, and^g officers of the king, helped the Jews; because the fear of Mordecai fell upon them.

4 For Mordecai^h was great in the king's house, and his fame went out throughout all the provinces: for this man Mordecaiⁱ waxed greater and greater.

5 Thus the Jews smote all their enemies with the stroke of the sword, and slaughter, and destruction, and did^j what they would unto those that hated them.

6 And in Shushan the palace the Jews slew and destroyed five hundred men.

7 And Parshandatha, and Dalphon, and Aspatha, worked in behalf of the Jews! And must not this have had a powerful tendency to discredit the idolatry of the country?

Verse 3. And all the rulers of the provinces] Mordecai being raised to the highest confidence of the king, and to have authority over the whole realm; these officers assisted the Jews, no doubt, with the troops under their command, to overthrow those who availed themselves of the former decree to molest the Jews. For it does not appear that the Jews slew any person who did not rise up to destroy them. See ver. 5.

Verse 6. And in Shushan] It is strange that in this city, where the king's mind must have been so well known, there should be found five hundred persons to rise up in hostility against those whom they knew the king befriended!

Verse 10. The ten sons of Haman] Their names are given above. And it is remarked here, and in ver. 16. where the account is given of the number slain in the provinces;

11 On that day the number of those that were slain in Shushan the palace^m was brought before the king.

12ⁿ And the king said unto Esther the queen, The Jews have slain and destroyed five hundred men in Shushan the palace, and the ten sons of Haman; what have they done in the rest of the king's provinces? Now, ^owhat is thy petition? and it shall be granted thee: or what is^p thy request farther? and it shall be done.

13 Then said Esther, If it please the king, let it be granted to the Jews which are in Shushan to do to-morrow also^q according unto this day's decree, and^r let Haman's ten sons be hanged upon the gallows.

14 And the king commanded it so to be done: and the decree was given at Shushan; and they hanged Haman's ten sons.

15 For the Jews that were in Shushan gathered themselves together on the fourteenth day also of the month Adar, and slew three hundred men at Shushan; ^tbut on the prey they laid not their hand.

16 But the other Jews that were in the king's provinces^u gathered themselves together, and stood for their lives, and had rest from their enemies, and slew of their foes seventy and five thousand, ^vbut they laid not their hands on the prey.

that the Jews laid no hand on the spoil. They stood for their lives, and gave full proof that they sought their own personal safety, and not the property of their enemies; though the decree in their favour gave them authority to take the property of all those who were their adversaries, chap. viii. 11.

Verse 13. Let Haman's ten sons be hanged] They had been slain the preceding day; and now she requests that they may be exposed on posts or gibbets, as a terror to those who sought the destruction of the Jews.

Verse 15. And slew three hundred men] Esther had probably been informed by Mordecai, that there were still many enemies of the Jews who sought their destruction, who had escaped the preceding day; and, therefore, begs that this second day be added to the former permission. This being accordingly granted, they found three hundred more, in all eight hundred. And thus Susa was purged of all their enemies.

17 On the thirteenth day of the month Adar; and on the fourteenth day ^w of the same rested they, and made it a day of feasting and gladness.

18 But the Jews that were at Shushan assembled together ^x on the thirteenth day thereof, and on the fourteenth thereof; and on the fifteenth day of the same they rested, and made it a day of feasting and gladness.

19 Therefore the Jews of the villages, that dwelt in the unwall'd towns, made the fourteenth day of the month Adar ^y a day of gladness and feasting, ^z and a good day, and of ^a sending portions one to another.

20 ¶ And Mordecai wrote these things, and sent letters unto all the Jews that were in all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus, both nigh and far,

21 To stablish this among them, that they should keep ^b the fourteenth day of the month Adar, and the fifteenth day of the same, yearly,

22 As the days wherein the Jews rested from their enemies, and the month which was ^c turned unto them from sorrow to joy, and from mourning into a good day: that they should make them days of feasting and joy, and of ^d sending portions one to another, and gifts to the poor.

23 And the Jews undertook to do as they had begun, and as Mordecai had written unto them;

24 Because Haman the son of Hammedatha, the Agagite, the enemy of all the Jews, ^e had devised against the Jews to destroy them, and had cast Pur, that is, the lot, to ^f consume them, and to destroy them;

25 But ^g when ^h Esther came before the king, he commanded by letters that his wicked device, which he devised against the Jews, should ⁱ return upon his own head, and that he and his sons should be hanged on the gallows.

26 Wherefore they called these days Purim, after the name of ^j Pur. Therefore, for all the words of ^k this letter, and of that which they had seen concerning this matter, and which had come unto them,

27 The Jews ordained, and took upon them, and upon their seed, and upon all such as ^m joined themselves unto them, so as it should not ⁿ fail, that they would keep these two days according to their writing, and according to their appointed time, every year;

It is worthy of remark, that the ancient Itala or Antehieronymian version of this book omits the whole of these nineteen verses.

Verse 31. As they had decreed for themselves and for their seed] There is no mention of their receiving the approbation of any high priest, nor of any authority beyond that of Mordecai and Esther: the king could not join in such a business, as he had nothing to do with the Jewish religion, that not being the religion of the country.

32 And the decree of Esther confirmed these matters of Purim; and it was written in the book.

* Ch. 4. 1.—† Heb. for their souls.—* Ch. 4. 3. 16.

Verse 32. The decree of Esther confirmed these matters] It was received by the Jews universally with all respect, and they bound themselves to abide by it.

The Vulgate gives a strange turn to this verse: Et omnia quæ libri hujus, qui vocatur Esther, historiâ continentur; "And all things which are contained in the history of this book, which is called Esther."

The Targum says, And by the word of Esther all these things relative to Purim were confirmed; and the roll was transcribed in this book. The Syriac is the same as the Hebrew, and the Septuagint in this place not much different.

NOTES ON CHAPTER X.

Verse 1. Laid a tribute upon the land] On the one hundred and twenty-seven provinces of which we have already heard.

The isles of the sea.] Probably the isles of the Egean sea, which were conquered by Darius Hystaspes. Calmet supposes that this Hystaspes is the Ahasuerus of Esther.

Verse 2. The book of the Chronicles—of Media and Persia] The Persians have ever been remarkable for keeping exact chronicles of all public events. Their Tareekhs, which are compositions of this kind, are still very numerous, and indeed very important.

Verse 3. Was next unto King Ahasuerus] He was his prime minister; and, under him, was the governor of the whole empire.

The Targum is extravagant in its encomiums upon Mordecai: "All the kings of the earth feared and trembled before him: he was as resplendent as the evening star among the stars; and was as bright as Aurora beaming forth in the morning; and he was chief of the Jews."

Seeking the wealth of his people] Studying to promote the Jewish interest to the utmost of his power.

Speaking peace to all his seed.] Endeavouring to settle their prosperity on such a basis, that it might be for ever permanent. Here the Hebrew text ends: but in the ancient Vulgate, and in the Greek, ten verses are added to this chapter, and six whole chapters besides; so that the number of chapters in Esther amount to sixteen. A translation of these may be found in the Apocrypha, bound up with the Sacred Text, in most of our larger English Bibles. On any part of this work it is not my province to add any comment.

THIS is the last of the historical books of the Old Testament; for, from this time to the birth of Christ they had no inspired writers; and the interval of their history must be sought among the Apocryphal writers, and other historians who have written on Jewish affairs. The most complete supplement to this history will be found in that most excellent work of Dean Prideaux, entitled The Old and New Testament connected in the history of the Jews and neighbouring na- tions, from the declension of the kingdoms of Israel and Judah to the time of CHRIST, 4 vols. 8vo. 1725. The editions prior to this date are not so complete. I shall place a summary of the Jewish history, from the time of Esther to the Incarnation, at the end of the book.

We have already seen what the feast of Purim means, and why it was instituted: nothing remains but that we show the manner in which it is celebrated among the Jews in the present time, which is probably very little, if any thing, different from the manner in which it was celebrated from the time of its institution.

The day before the feast the Jews observe as a fast, because on this day the fathers fasted when they were threatened with utter destruction by Haman, and when they were gathering together to stand for their lives. The two following days are merely bacchanalian, or days of high feasting, drinking, and mirth; for, on these days, they hold it lawful to drink till they are unable to discern between the curses on Haman, and the blessings on Mordecai. The chassan reads the whole Book of Esther, not out of a printed copy, but from a roll, generally containing this book alone. All men, women, and children, who are able to attend, are required to come to this feast, and to join in the reading, for the better preservation of the memory of this important fact. When the roll is unfolded, the chassan says, "Blessed be God, the King of the World, who hath sanctified us by his precepts, and commanded us to read the Megillah! Blessed be God, who in those days worked miracles for our fathers!" As often as the name of Haman occurs, all the auditory cry out, Let his name be blotted out! May the memory of the wicked rot! The children at the same time hissing, and striking loudly on the forms with little wooden hammers, made for the purpose.

When the reader comes to the viiith, viiith, and ixth verses of the ixth chapter, where the names of Haman's ten sons occur, he pronounces them with great rapidity, and in one breath, to intimate that they were all hanged, and expired in the same moment. In most MSS. and printed editions of the Book of Esther, the ten names, contained in the verses already mentioned, are written under each other in ten lines, no other word being connected with them. The reason of this is, to exhibit the manner in which they were hanged, viz. on a pole fifty cubits, that is seventy-five feet high: each of the brothers being immediately suspended, the one under the other, in one perpendicular line.

When the chassan has finished the reading, all cry aloud, Cursed be Haman! Blessed be Mordecai! Cursed be Zeresh! Blessed be Esther! Cursed be all idolaters! Blessed be all the Israelites! And blessed likewise be Harbonah, at whose instance Haman was hanged!

On this feast they send portions to each other, and particularly to the poor, that they may be able to partake of the general happiness.

To excite and increase mirth, the men put on the women's apparel, and the women the men's; for, though this is positively forbidden by the law, yet they consider it innocent on this occasion, as it is done only to increase the festivity.

In former times they made a man of straw, which they called Haman, put it on a cross, and burnt both. To this the Targum refers.

It was discovered at last that this was intended, indirectly, to cast contempt on the Christian religion, Haman, the man of straw on the cross, representing our blessed Lord crucified. This part of the ceremony the emperors Justinian and Theodosius ordered them to discontinue, on pain of losing all their secular privileges: and from that time this part of the ceremony has been discontinued.

In some places they bring a large stone to the door of the synagogue, on which the name of Haman is written; and when in the course of the reading that name occurs, they beat on this fictitious Haman, with stones, till they break it all to pieces.

It is said, that the disorders committed in the synagogues on the feast of Purim are so great, that the joiners are sure to have considerable labour at the conclusion, to repair the damages done among the seats, &c. in the synagogue. It seems, on the whole, that the feast is by no means a religious one; and that there is not one act performed in it that has any tendency to enlighten the understanding or improve the heart. Indeed, the Jews, bad as they might have been before the feast of Purim, are much less children of Abraham at the conclusion than they were before.

For farther information on this subject, should the reader think he has not got enough, I beg him to refer to Buxtorf, Leusden, Stehlan, and Calmét's Dictionary, article Pur.

Masoretic Notes on the Book of Esther.

Number of verses, 167. Middle verse, chap. v. ver. 7. Sections 5.

The following excellent remarks on the history of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity I borrow from Dr. John Taylor's scheme of Scripture Divinity; and make no doubt I shall have the thanks of every reader whose thanks are worth having.

"After the Babylonish captivity, the Jews no more lapsed into idolatry; but remained steady in the acknowledgment and worship of the one living and true God. Even then they fell into new ways of perverting religion, and the wise and holy intentions of the divine law:—1st, By laying all the stress on the external and less momentous parts of it, while they neglected the weighty and substantial, true holiness of heart and life. Mankind are too easily drawn into this error: while they retain a sense of religion, they are too apt to listen to any methods by which it may be reduced to a consistency with the gratification of their passions, pride, and avarice. Thus, by placing religion in mere profession, or in the zealous observance of rites and ceremonies, instead of real piety, truth, purity, and goodness, they learn to be religious without virtue. 2dly, By speculating and commenting upon the divine commands and institutions, till their force is quite enervated, and they are refined into a sense that will commodiously allow a slight regard instead of sincere obedience. 3dly, By confirming and establishing the two former methods of corrupting religion by tradition, and the authority of learned rabbins, pretending that there was a system of religious rules delivered by word of mouth from Moses, explanatory of the written law, known only to those rabbins: to whose judgment, therefore, and decision, all the people were to submit.

"This in time (the space of two hundred and nineteen years) became the general state of religion among the Jews, after they had discarded idolatry; and this spirit prevailed among them for some ages, (two hundred and ninety years,) before the coming of Messiah: but, however, it did not interfere with the main system of providence, or the introducing the knowledge of God among the nations, as they still continued steadfast in the worship of the true God, without danger of deviating from it.

"Thus the Jews were prepared by the preceding dispensation for the reception of the Messiah, and the just notions of religion which he was sent to inculcate; inasmuch that their guilt must be highly aggravated, if they rejected him, and his instructions. It could not be for want of capacity, but of integrity: and must be assigned to wilful blindness and obduracy. Out of regard to temporal power, grandeur, and enjoyments; they loved darkness rather than light.

"For many ages the Jews had been well known in the eastern empire among the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Medes, and Persians; but, till the time of Alexander the Great, they had no communication with the Grecians.

"About the year before Christ 332 Alexander built Alexandria in Egypt; and, to people his new city, removed thither many of the Jews, allowing them the use of their own laws and religion, and the same liberties with the Macedonians themselves. The Macedonians who spake the Greek language, and other Greeks, were the principal inhabitants of Alexandria: from them the Jews learned to speak Greek, which was the common language of the city, and which soon became the native language of the Jews that lived there, who, on that account, were called Hellenists, or Greek Jews, mentioned Acts vi. 1, 9, 11, 20. These Greek Jews had synagogues in Alexandria; and for their benefit the Five Books of Moses, which alone at first were publicly read, were translated into Greek, (by whom is uncertain,) and were read in their synagogues every sabbath day: and in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, about 168 years before Christ, the prophets also were translated into Greek for the use of the Alexandrian Jews.

"This translation contributed much to the spreading the knowledge of true religion among the nations in the western parts of the world.

"For the Jews, their synagogues and worship were after Alexander's death dispersed almost every where among the nations. Ptolemy, one of Alexander's successors, having reduced Jerusalem and all Judea about 320 years before Christ, carried one hundred thousand Jews into Egypt, and there raised considerable numbers of them to places of trust and power; and several of them he placed in Cyrene, and Libya. Seleucus, another of Alexander's successors, about 300 years before Christ, built Antioch in Cilicia, and many other cities, in all thirty-five, and some of the capital cities in the Greater and Lesser Asia, in all which he planted the Jews, giving them equal privileges and immunities with the Greeks and Macedonians, especially at Antioch, in Syria, where they settled in great numbers, and became almost as considerable a part of that city as they were at Alexandria. On that memoorable day of pentecost, Acts ii. 5; 9, 11, 12, were assembled in Jerusalem Jews, devout men out of every nation under heaven, namely, Parthians, Medes, and Persians, of the province of Elymais, inhabitants of Mesopotamia, Judea, Cappadocia, Pontus, Asia, Phrygia, Pamphylia, Egypt, Cyrene in Libya, and Rome, Cretes, and Arabs, who were all either Jews natural, or devout men, i. e. proselytes to the Jewish religion. And in every city of the Roman empire, where Paul preached, he found a body of his countrymen the Jews, except in Athens, which was at that time, I suppose, a town of no considerable trade; which shows that the Jews and their synagogues, at the time of our Lord's appearance, were providentially scattered over all the Roman empire, and had in every place introduced more or less among the nations the knowledge and worship of God; and so had prepared great numbers for the reception of the Gospel.

"About the time that Alexander built Alexandria in Egypt, the use of the papyrus for writing was found out in that country. This invention was so favourable to literature, that Ptolemy Soter was thereby enabled to erect a museum, or library, which, by his son and successor, Philadelphus, who died two hundred and forty-seven years before Christ, was augmented to seven hundred thousand volumes. Part of this library happened to be burnt when Julius Cæsar laid siege to Alexandria: but, after that loss, it was again much augmented: and soon grew up to be larger, and of more eminent note, than the former; till at length it was burnt and finally destroyed by the Saracens, in the year of our Lord 642. This plainly proves how much the invention of turning the papyrus into paper contributed to the increase of books, and the advancement of learning, for some ages before the coming of our Lord. Add to all this, that the world, after many changes and revolutions, was, by God's all-ruling wisdom, thrown into that form of civil affairs, which best suited with the great intended alteration. The many petty states and tyrannies, whose passions and bigotry might have run counter to the schemes of providence, were all swallowed up in one great power, the Roman, to which all appeals lay: the seat of which, Rome, lay at a great distance from Jerusalem; the spring from which the Gospel was to rise, and flow to all nations: and, therefore, as no material obstruction to the Gospel could come but from one quarter, none could suddenly arise from thence, but only in process of time when the Gospel was sufficiently opened and established; as it did not in the least interfere with the Roman polity and government.

"The Gospel was first published in a time of general peace and tranquillity throughout the whole world, which gave the preachers of it an opportunity of passing freely from one country to another, and the minds of men the advantage of attending calmly to it.

"Many savage nations were civilized by the Romans, and acquainted with the acts and virtues of their conquerors. Thus the darkest countries had their thoughts awakened, and were growing to a capacity of receiving at the stated time the knowledge of true religion: so that all things and circumstances conspired now with the views of Heaven, and made this apparently the fulness of time, (Gal. iv. 4.) or the fittest juncture for God to reveal himself to the Gentiles, and to put an end to idolatry throughout the earth. Now the minds of men were generally ripe for a purer and brighter dispensation; and the circumstances of the world were such as favoured the progress of it." p. 368.

Hated and despised as the Jews were among the proud Romans, and the still more proud and supercilious Greeks, their sojourning among them, and their Greek version of the Scriptures, commonly called the Septuagint; were the means of furnishing them with truer notions, and a more distinct knowledge of vice and virtue, than they ever had before. And, on examination, we shall find that from the time of Alexander's conquest of Judea, a little more than three hundred years before our Lord, both Greeks and Romans became more correct in their theological opinions; and the sect of eclectic philosophers, whose aim was to select from all preceding sects what was most consistent with reason and truth, were not a little indebted to the progress which the light of God, dispensed by means of the Septuagint, had made in the heathen world. And let it be remembered that for Jews, who were settled in Grecian countries, this version was made;

and by those Jews it was carried through all the places of their dispersion.

To this version Christianity, under God, owes much. To this version we are indebted for such a knowledge of the Hebrew originals of the Old Testament, as we could never have had without it; the pure Hebrew having ceased to be vernacular after the Babylonish captivity; and Jesus Christ and his apostles have stamped an infinite value upon it, by the general use they have made of it in the New Testament; perhaps never once quoting, directly, the Hebrew text, or using any other version than some copy of the Septuagint. By this version, though prophecy had ceased from the times of Ezra, Daniel, and Malachi, yet the law and the prophets were continued down to the time of Christ: and this was the grand medium by which this conveyance was made. And why is this version neglected? I hesitate not to assert, that no man can ever gain a thorough knowledge of the phraseology of the New Testament writers who is unacquainted with this version; or has not profited by such writers as derived their knowledge from it.

THE END OF THE NOTES ON THE BOOK OF ESTHER.

PREFACE

BOOK OF JOB.

THIS is the most singular book in the whole of the Sacred Code: though written by the same inspiration, and in reference to the same end, the salvation of men, it is so different from every other book of the Bible, that it seems to possess nothing in common with them; for even the language, in its construction, is dissimilar from that in the Law, the Prophets, and the Historical Books. But on all hands it is accounted a work that contains "the purest morality, the sublimest philosophy, the simplest ritual, and the most majestic creed." Except the two first chapters, and the ten last verses, which are merely prose, all the rest of the book is poetic; and is every where reducible to the hemistich form, in which all the other poetic books of the Bible are written: it is, therefore, properly called a POEM; but whether it belongs to the dramatic or epic species has not been decided by learned men. To try it by those rules which have been derived from Aristotle, and are still applied to ascertain compositions in these departments of poetry, is, in my opinion, as absurd as it is ridiculous. Whoever made a poem on these rules? And is there a poem in the universe worth reading, that is strictly conformable to these rules? Not one! The rules, it is true, were deduced from compositions of this description: and although they may be very useful in assisting poets to methodise their compositions, and to keep the different parts distinct; yet they have often acted as a species of critical trammels, and have cramped genius. Genuine poetry is like a mountain flood: it pours down resistless; bursts all bounds; scoops out its own channel; carries woods and rocks before it; and spreads itself abroad, both deep and wide, over all the plain. Such, indeed, is the poetry which the reader will meet with in this singular and astonishing book. As to Aristotle himself, although he was a keen-eyed plodder of nature, and a prodigy for his time: yet, if we may judge from his poetics, he had a soul as incapable of feeling the true genie createur, as Racine terms the spirit of poetry, as he was by his physics, metaphysics, and analogies, from discovering the true system of the universe.

As to the Book of Job, it is most evidently a poem, and a poem of the highest order; dealing in subjects the most grand and sublime; using imagery the most chaste and appropriate; described by language the most happy and energetic; conveying instruction, both in divine and human things, the most ennobling and useful; abounding in precepts the most pure and exalted, which are enforced by arguments the most strong and conclusive, and illustrated by examples the most natural and striking.

All these points will appear in the strongest light to every attentive reader of the book; and to such its great end will be answered; they will learn from it, that God has way every where:—That the wicked, though bearing rule for a time, can never be ultimately prosperous and happy; and that the righteous, though oppressed with sufferings and calamities, can never be forgotten by him in whose hands are his saints, and with whom their lives are precious; that in this world neither are the wicked ultimately punished, nor the righteous ultimately rewarded: that God's judgments are a great deep, and his ways past finding out; but the issues of all are to the glory of his wisdom and grace, and to the eternal happiness of those who trust in him. This is the grand design of the book; and this design will be strikingly evident to the simplest and most unlettered reader, whose heart is right with God, and who is seeking instruction in order that he may glorify his Maker by receiving and by doing good.

Notwithstanding all this, there is not a book in Scripture on the subject of which more difficulties have been started. None, says Calmet, has furnished more subjects of doubt and embarrassment; and none has afforded less information for the solution of those doubts. On this subject the great questions which have been agitated refer principally,—1. To the person of Job. 2. To his existence. 3. To the time in which he lived. 4. To his country. 5. To his stock or kindred. 6. To his religion. 7. To the author of the book. 8. To its truth. 9. To its authenticity. And, 10. To the time and occasion on which it was written.

With respect to the first and second, several writers, of eminent note, have denied the personality of Job; according to them, no such person ever existed; he is merely fabulous, and is like the Il penseroso, or sorrowful man of Milton; sorrow, distress, affliction, and persecution, personified; as the name imports. According to them, he is a mere ideal being, created by the genius of the poet; clothed with attributes, and placed in such circumstances as gave the poet scope and materials for his work.

Thirdly, as to the time in which those place him who receive this as a true history, there is great variety. According to some, he flourished in the patriarchal age; some make him contemporary with Moses; that he was in the captivity in Egypt, and that he lived at the time of the Exodus. Some place him in the time of the Israelitish judges; others in the days of David; others in those of Solomon; and others in the time of the Babylonish captivity, having been teacher of a school at Tiberias in Palestine; and, with the rest of his countrymen, carried away into Babylon; and that he lived under Ahasuerus and Esther. Fourthly, as to his country: some make him an Arab; others an Egyptian; others a Syrian; some an Israelite; and some an Idumean. Fifthly, as to his origin: some derive him from Nachor; and others from Esau, and make him the fifth in descent from Abraham. Sixthly, as to his religion: some suppose it to have been Sabaism; others that it was patriarchal; and others that he was bred up in the Jewish faith. Seventhly, as to the author of the work, learned men are greatly divided: some suppose the author to have been Elihu; others Job; others Job and his friends; others Moses; some Solomon; others Isaiah; and others Ezra, or some unknown Jew, posterior to the captivity. Eighthly, as to the book: some maintain that it is a history of fact, given by one best qualified to record it; and others, that it is an instructive fiction; facts, persons, dialogues and all, being supposititious: given, however, by the inspiration of God, in a sort of parabolic form, like those employed in the Gospel; and similar to that of the rich man and Lazarus. Ninthly, as to its authenticity: while some, and those not well qualified to judge, have asserted it to be a mere human production, of no divine authority; others have clearly shown that the book itself, whatever questions may arise concerning the person, author, time, place, &c. was ever received by the Jewish church and people as authentic, genuine, and divinely inspired; and incorporated, with the highest propriety, among the most instructive, sublime, and excellent portions of divine revelation. Tenthly, as to the occasion on which it was written, there are considerable differences of opinion. Some will have it to be written for the consolation of the Hebrews in their peregrinations through the wilderness; and others for the comfort and encouragement of the Israelites in the Babylonish captivity. These state that Job represents Nehemiah; and that his three professed friends, but real enemies, Eliphaz the Temanite, Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Nuamathite, represent Sanballat the Horonite, Tobiah the Ammonite, and Geshem the Arabian; and that the whole book should be understood and interpreted on this ground: and that with a little allowance for poetic colouring, all its parts perfectly harmonize, thus understood; showing in a word, that into whatsoever troubles or persecutions God may permit his people to be brought, yet he will sustain them in the fire, bring them safely through it, and discomfit all their enemies;—and that whatsoever is true on this great scale, is true also on that which is more contracted; as he will equally support, defend, and finally render conqueror, every individual that trusts in him.

I shall not trouble my readers with the arguments which have been used by learned men pro and con, relative to the particulars already mentioned: were I to act otherwise, I must transcribe a vast mass of matter, which, though it might display great learning in the authors, would most certainly afford little edification to the great bulk of my readers. My own opinion on those points they may naturally wish to know; and to that opinion they have a right; it is such as I dare avow; and such as I feel no disposition to conceal. I believe Job to have been a real person; and his history to be a statement of facts.

As the preface to this book, I mean the first chapter, states him to have lived in the land of Uz, or Uls, I believe, with Mr. Goode, and several other learned men, this place to have been "situated in Arabia Petrea, on the south-western coast of the lake Asphaltites, in a line between Egypt and Philitia, surrounded with Kedar, Teman, and Midian; all of which were districts of Arabia Petrea; situated in Idumea, the land of Edom, or Esau; and comprising so large a part of it, that Idumea and Ausitis, or the land of Uz, and the land of Edom, were convertible terms, and equally employed to import the same region: thus Lam. iv. 21. Rejoice and be glad, O daughter of Edom, that dwellest in the land of Uz." See Mr. Goode's Introductory Dissertation; who proceeds to observe, "Nothing is clearer than that all the persons introduced into this poem were Idumeans, dwelling in Idumea; or, in other words, Edomite Arabs. These characters are Job himself, dwelling in the land of Uz; Eliphaz of Teman, a district of as much repute as Uz: and upon the joint testimony of Jeremiah xlix. 7. 2. Ezekiel xxv. 13. Amos i. 11, 12. and Obadiah ver. 8, 9. a part, and a principal part, of Idumea: Bildad of Shuah, always mentioned in conjunction with Sheba and Dedan, all of them being uniformly placed in the vicinity of Idumea: Zophar of Nuamah, a city whose name imports pleasantness, which is also stated by Joshua xv. 21, 41. to have been situated in Idumea, and to have lain in a southern direction toward its coast, or the shores of the Red sea: and Elihu of Buz, which, as the name of a place, occurs but once in Sacred Writ: but is there (Jerem. xxv. 22.) mentioned in conjunction with Teman and Dedan; and hence, necessarily like themselves, a border city upon Ausitis, Uz, or Idumea. It had a number of names; it was at first called Horitis from the Horim or Horites, who appear to have first settled there. Among the descendants of these, the most distinguished was Seir; and from him the land was known by the name of the Land of Seir. This chief had a numerous family; and among the most signalized of his grandsons was Uz, or Uls; and from him and not from Hor the son of Nahor, it seems to have been called Ausitis, or the Land of Uz: The family of Uz, Seir, or Uz, were at length dispossessed of the entire region by Esau or Edom; who strengthened himself by his marriage with one of the daughters of Ishmael; and the conquered territory was denominated Idumea, or the land of Edom." See Mr. Goode as above.

The man and his country being thus ascertained, the time in which he lived is the point next to be considered.

I feel all the difficulties of the various chronologies of learned men: all that has been offered on the subject is only opinion or probable conjecture; and, while I differ from the opinion of many respectable authors, I dare not say that I have more to strengthen my conjecture than they have for theirs.

I do not believe that he lived under the patriarchal dispensation; nor in any time previous to the giving of the law, or to the death of Moses. I have examined the opposite arguments, and they have brought no conviction to my mind. That he lived after the giving of the law, appears to me very probable from what I consider frequent references to the Mosaic institutions occurring in the book; and which I shall notice in their respective places. I know it has been asserted there are no such references; and I am astonished at the assertion. The reader will judge whether a plain case is made out where the supposed references occur. An obstinate adherence to a preconceived system is like prejudice—it has neither eyes nor ears.

With this question, that relative to the author of the book is nearly connected. Were we to suppose that Job himself, or Elihu, or Job and his friends, wrote the work, the question would at once be answered that regards the time; but all positive evidence on this point is wanting: and while other suppositions have certain arguments to support them, the above claimants, who are supported only by critical conjecture, must stand where they are for want of evidence. The opinions that appear the most probable, and have plausible arguments to support them, are the following:—1. Moses was the author of this book, as many portions of it harmonize with his acknowledged writings. 2. Solomon is the most likely author, as many of the sentiments contained in it are precisely the same with those in the Proverbs; and they are delivered often in nearly the same words. 3. The book was written by some Jew in, or soon after, the time of the Babylonian captivity.

1. That Moses was the author, has been the opinion of most learned men: and none has set the arguments in support of this opinion in so strong a light as Mr. Mason Goode, in his Intraductory Dissertation to his translation and notes on this book. Mr. G. is a gentleman of great knowledge, great learning, and correct thinking: and whatever he says or writes is entitled to respect. If he have data, his deductions are most generally consecutive and solid. He contends “that the writer of this poem must in his style have been equally master of the simple and of the sublime; that he must have been minutely and elaborately acquainted with astronomy, natural history, and the general science of his age; that he must have been a Hebrew by birth and native language, and an Arabian by long residence and local study; and, finally, that he must have flourished and composed the work before the Exody.” And he thinks that “every one of these features is consummated in Moses, and in Moses alone; and that the whole of them give us his complete lineaments and portraiture. Instructed in all the learning of Egypt, it appears little doubtful that he composed it during some part of his forty years’ residence with the hospitable Jethro, in that district of Idumæa which was named Midian.” In addition to these external proofs of identity, Mr. Goode thinks, “a little attention will disclose to us an internal proof of peculiar force, in the close and striking similarity of diction and idiom which exists between the book of Job and those pieces of poetry which Moses is usually admitted to have composed. This point he proceeds to examine; and thinks, that the following examples may make some progress toward settling the question, by exhibiting a very singular proof of general parallelism.”

“The order of creation, as detailed in the first chapter of Genesis, is precisely similar to that described in Job, chap. xxxviii. ver. 1—20. the general arrangement that occupied the first day;—the formation of the clouds, which employed the second;—the separation of the sea, which took up a part of the third;—and the establishment of the luminaries in the skies, which characterized the fourth.”

“In this general description, as given in Genesis, the vapour in the clouds, and the fluid in the sea, are equally denominated waters: thus, chap. i. ver. 5, 6, 7. “And God said, Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters. And God made the firmament, and divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament.”

“Let us compare this passage with Job xxvi. 8, 10.

He driveth together the waters into his thick clouds;
And the cloud is not rent under them.—
He setteth a bow on the face of the waters,
Till the consummation of light and of darkness.

“These are, perhaps, the only instances in the Bible in which the cloudy vapours are denominated waters, before they become concentrated into rain; and they offer an identity of thought, which strongly suggests an identity of person. The following is another very striking peculiarity of the same kind, occurring in the same description; and is, perhaps, still more in point. The combined simplicity and sublimity of Gen. i. 3. “And God said, Be light! and light was,” has been felt and praised by critics of every age, Pagan and Mohammedan, as well as Jewish and Christian; and has, by all of them, been regarded as a characteristic feature in the Mosaic style. In the poem before us we have the following proof of identity of manner, ch. xxxvii. 6.

Behold! he saith to the snow, Be!
On earth then falleth it.
To the rain—and it falleth;—
The rains of his might.

“This can hardly be regarded as an allusion, but as an instance of identity of manner. In the Psalmist we have an allusion: and it occurs thus, xxxiii. 9. הוא אמר וַיֵּהוּ hu amar-vayehi, ‘He spake, and it existed;’ and I copy it that the reader may see the difference. The eulogy of Longinus upon the passage in Genesis is a eulogy also upon that in Job; and the Koran, in verbally copying the Psalmist, has bestowed an equal panegyric upon all of them:

قال كى فيكون

Dixit 'Esto'; et fuit.—He said, Be thou; and it was.

“With reference to the description of the creation, in the book of Genesis, I shall only farther observe, that the same simplicity of style, adapted to so lofty a subject, characteristically distinguishes the writer of the Book of Job, who commonly employs a diction peculiarly plain, whenever engaged upon a subject peculiarly magnificent, as though trusting to the subject to support itself, without the feeble aid of rhetorical ornaments. Of this the description of the tribunal of the Almighty, given in the first and second chapters of the ensuing poem, is a striking example, as, indeed, I have already remarked; and that of the midnight apparition in the fourth chapter is no less so.

“The following instances are of a more general nature; and lead, upon a broader principle, to the same conclusion:

Ch. ver. Job.
xiii. 26. Wherefore accountest thou me thine enemy?
Wouldst thou hunt down the parched stubble?
iv. 9. By the blast of God they perish;
And by the breath of his nostrils they are consumed.
xv. 24. Distress and anguish dismay him;
They overwhelm him as a king ready for battle.
xx. 26. Terrors shall be upon him—
26. Every horror treasured up in reserve for him.
A fire unblown shall consume him.

Ch. ver. Job.
27. The heavens shall disclose his iniquity,
And the earth shall rise up against him.
xviii. 15. Brimstone shall be rained down upon his dwelling.
16. Below shall his root be burnt up,
And above shall his branch be cut off.
xii. 17. Counsellors he leadeth captive,
And judges he maketh distracted.
24. He bewildereth the judgment of the leaders of the people of a land,
And causeth them to wander in a pathless desert:
25. They grope about in darkness, even without a glimpse;
Yea, he maketh them to reel like the drunkard.
viii. 17. His roots shall be entangled in a rock;
With a bed of stones shall he grapple;
18. Utterly shall it drink him up from his place;
Yea, it shall renounce him, and say, “I never knew thee.”
19. Behold the Eternal exulting in his course,
Even over his dust shall rise up another.

Ch. ver. Exodus.
xiii. 7. Thou sendest forth thy wrath, Consuming them as stubble.
8. And with the blast of thy nostrils
The waters were gathered together.
10. Thou didst blow with thy wind:
The sea covered them.
16. Terror and dread shall fall upon them.
By the might of thine arm they shall be still as a stone.

Ch. ver. Deuteronomy.
xxviii. 22. And Jehovah shall smite thee with a consumption;
And with a fever, and with an inflammation;
And with an extreme burning.
23. And thy heaven over thy head shall be brass;
And the earth under thee iron.
24. And Jehovah shall make the rain of thy land powder and dust;
From heaven shall it come down upon thee,
Until thou be destroyed.
28. Jehovah shall smite thee with destruction,
And blindness, and astonishment of heart.
29. And thou shalt grope at noon day,
As the blind gropeth in darkness;
And thou shalt not prosper in thy ways;
And thou shalt only be oppressed,
And consumed continually.
And it shall come to pass,
As Jehovah exulted over you
To do you good, and to multiply you;
So will Jehovah exult over you.
To destroy you, and reduce you to nought.

“In this specimen of comparison it is peculiarly worthy of remark, that not only the same train of ideas is found to recur; but in many instances the same words, where others might have been employed; and, perhaps, have answered as well: the whole obviously resulting from that habit of thinking upon subjects in the same manner, and by means of the same terms, which is common to every one, and which distinguishes original identity from intentional imitation. I will only advert to one instance: the use of the very powerful, but not very common verb exult, ‘to exult,’ exulto, glorior, γαυριζω, which occurs in the last verse of both the above passages, and is in each instance equally appropriate:—יָשַׁח יְהוָה yasis Yehova—הוֹרָם מֶשֶׁח hu mesos משח

“The same term is again employed Job xxxix. 21. to express the spirited prancing of the high-mettled war-horse.

“The above passage from chap. viii. 19. has not been generally understood, and has been given erroneously in the translations.” Mr. Goode, in his notes, p. 101—103. enters at large into a defence of his version of this passage.

Ch. ver. Job.
viii. 8. For examine, I beseech thee, the past age;
Yea, gird thyself to the study of its forefathers;
10. Shall not they instruct thee, counsel thee,
And swell forth the sayings of their wisdom?
xx. 17. He shall not behold the branches of the river, Brooks of honey and butter.—
xxix. 6. When my path flowed with butter,
And the rock poured out for me rivers of oil.
xxv. 27. Though his face be enveloped with fatness,
And heaped up with fatness on his loins.
vi. 4. The arrows of the Almighty are within me;
Their poison drinketh up my spirit. [me]
The terrors of God set themselves in array against xvii. 13. His arrows fly around me;
He pierceth my reins without mercy.

Ch. ver. Deuteronomy.
xxxii. 7. Reflect on the days of old;
Contemplate the times of ages beyond ages;
Inquire of thy father, and he will show thee;
Thine elders, and they will instruct thee.
13. He gave him to suck honey out of the rock,
And oil out of the flinty rock;
14. Butter of kine, and milk of sheep.
15. But Jeshurun waxed fat; and kicked:
Thou art waxen fat, thou art grown thick;
Thou art enveloped with fatness.
23. I will heap mischiefs upon them;
I will spend my arrows upon them.
42. I will make mine arrows drunk with blood

“The fine pathetic elegy of the ninetieth Psalm has been usually ascribed to Moses; and Dathé imagines it was written by him a little before his death.

“Kennicott and Geddes have some doubt upon this point, chiefly because the ultimate period assigned in it to the life of man is fourscore years; while Moses was, at his death, a hundred and twenty years old, yet “his eye was not dim, nor his natural tone abated.” Deut. xxxiv. 7.

“The following comparison will, perhaps, have a tendency to confirm the general opinion, by rendering it probable that its author and the author of the Book of Job were the same person.

Preface to the Book of Job.

- Ch. ver. Job.
- xiv. 2. He springeth up as a flower, and is cut down ;
Yea, he fleeth as a shadow, and endureth not.
 - 3. And dost thou cast thine eyes upon such a one ?
And wouldest thou bring me into judgment with thyself ?
 - 16. Yet now art thou numbering my steps ;
Thou overlookest nothing of my sins :—
 - 18. And for ever, as the crumbling mountain dissolveth,
And the rock mouldereth away from his place,
 - 19. So consumest thou the hope of man,
Thou harasses him continually till he perish.
 - vii. 21. Why wilt thou not turn away from my transgression,
And let my calamity pass by ?
 - xi. 14. If the iniquity of thy hand thou put away,
And let not wickedness dwell in thy tabernacles,
 - 16. Lo ! then shalt thou forget affliction ;
As waters passed by shalt thou remember it :
 - 17. And brighter shall the time be than noontide ;
Thou shalt shine forth, thou shalt grow vigorous, like the day spring.

- Psa. ver. Psalm.
- 5. They are like the passing grass of the morning ;
 - 6. In the morning it springeth up and groweth,
In the evening it is cut down and withereth.
 - 7. For we are consumed by thine anger,
And by thy wrath are we troubled.
 - 8. Thou hast set our iniquities before thee ;
Our secret sins in the light of thy countenance.
 - 9. Behold, all our days are passed away in thy wrath.
We spend our years as a tale that is told.
 - 10. Their strength is labour and sorrow ;
It is soon cut off, and we flee away.
 - 12. So teach us to number our days
That we may apply our hearts unto wisdom.
 - 14. O satisfy us early with thy mercy,
That we may rejoice and be glad all our days.
 - 15. Make us glad according to the days of our affliction,
To the years we have seen evil :
 - 16. Let thy wonders be shown unto thy servants,
And thy glory unto their children :
 - 47. And let the beauty of Jehovah, our God, be upon us,
And establish thou the work of our hands.

"The strictly and decidedly acknowledged productions of Moses are but few ; and in the above examples I have taken a specimen from by far the greater number. It is, indeed, not a little astonishing that, being so few, they should offer a resemblance in so many points.

"There may at times be some difficulty in determining between the similarity of style and diction resulting from established habit, and that produced by intentional imitation ; yet, in the former case, it will commonly, if I mistake not, be found looser, but more general ; in the latter stricter, but more confined to particular words or idioms ; the whole of the features not having been equally caught, while those which have been laid hold of are given more minutely than in the case of habit. The manner runs carelessly through every part ; and is perpetually striking us unawares : the copy walks after it with measured but unequal pace, and is restless in courting our attention. The specimens of resemblance now produced are obviously of the former kind : both sides have an equal claim to originality, and seem very powerfully to establish a unity of authorship."

Thus far Mr. Goode ; who has, on his own side of the question, most certainly exhausted the subject. The case he has made out is a strong one : we shall next examine whether a stronger cannot be made out in behalf of Solomon as the second candidate for the authorship of this most excellent book.

2. That the Book of Job was the work of Solomon was the opinion of some early Christian writers, among whom was Gregory Nazianzen ; and of several moderns, among whom were Spanheim and Harduin. The latter has gone so far as to place the death of Job in the thirty-fifth year of the reign of David ; and he supposes that Solomon wrote the work in question, about the second or third year of his reign ! On this last opinion no stress whatever should be placed.

As the argument for Moses has been supported by supposed parallelisms between his acknowledged works and the Book of Job ; so has that which attributes the latter to Solomon. That Solomon, from his vast learning and wisdom, was capable of such a work, none can deny. His knowledge in astronomy, natural history, politics, theology, languages, and the general science of his age, must have given him at least equal qualifications to those possessed by Moses. And if he was the author of the Book of Canticles, which most men believe, he had certainly a poetic mind, equal, if not superior, to all the writers who had existed previously to his time. The Book of Proverbs and that of Ecclesiastes are almost universally attributed to him : now, in the Book of Job, there are a multitude of sentiments, sentences, terms, and modes of speech, which are almost peculiar to Solomon, as will appear from the whole books.

In both we find the most exalted eulogium of wisdom. See Job. xxviii. 12. Prov. viii. 11, &c. Job says, "The fear of the Lord, that is wisdom ; and to depart from evil, that is understanding," chap. xxviii. ver. 28. Solomon says, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge ; but fools despise wisdom and instruction." Prov. i. 7.

Job speaks of the state of the dead, nearly in the same terms as Solomon : compare chap. xxi. 33. xxii. 22. xxxvi. 5. with Prov. ix. 18.

Job says, chap. xxvi. 6. Hell is naked before him, and destruction hath no covering. Solomon says, Prov. xv. 11. "Hell and destruction are before the Lord ; how much more the hearts of the children of men." Job says, "Man drinketh iniquity like water," chap. xv. 16. And Elihu charges him with drinking up scorning like water, chap. xxxiv. 7. The same image occurs in Solomon, Prov. xxvi. 6. "He that sendeth a message by the hand of a fool drinketh damage."

In Job xv. 34. it is said, fire shall consume the tabernacle of bribery. The same turn of thought occurs, Prov. xv. 27. He that is greedy of gain troubleth his own house ; but he that hateth gifts shall live.

Both speak of weighing the spirits or winds. See Job. xxviii. 25. Prov. xvi. 2. But to me the parallelism in these cases is not evident ; as both the reason of the saying, and some of the terms in the original, are different. Job tells his friends, If they would hold their peace, it would be their wisdom, chap. xiii. 5. Solomon has the same sentiment in nearly the same words, Prov. xvii. 28. Even a fool, when he holdeth his peace, is counted wise, and he that shutteth his lips is esteemed a man of understanding.

Solomon represents the rephaim or giants as in hell, or the great deep, Prov. ii. 18. ix. 18. vii. 27. The like sentiment is in Job xxvi. 5. See the Hebrew.

In Job xxvii. 16, 17. it is said that, if the wicked heap up silver as the dust, and prepare raiment as the clay ; the just shall put it on, and the innocent shall divide the silver. The like sen-

ment is found, Prov. xxviii. 3. He that by usury and unjust gain increaseth his substance, he shall gather for him that will pity the poor. Solomon says, Prov. xvi. 18. Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall: and, Before destruction the heart of man is haughty; and before honour is humility, xviii. 12. and, A man's pride shall bring him low; but honour shall uphold the humble in spirit, xxix. 23. The same sentiment is found in Job, chap. xxii. 29. When men are cast down, then thou shalt say, There is a lifting up; and he shall save the humble person.

Both speak nearly in the same way concerning the creation of the earth and the sea. Where wast thou when I LAID THE FOUNDATIONS OF THE EARTH? Who shut up the sea with doors, when it brake forth as if it had issued from the womb? Job xxxviii. 4—8. This seems a reference to the flood. In Prov. viii. 22—29. Wisdom says, “The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way—when as yet he had not made the earth—when he gave to the sea his decree that the waters should not pass his commandment: when he appointed the foundations of the earth.” These are precisely the same kind of conceptions, and nearly the same phraseology.

In Job xx. 7. it is said, “The wicked shall perish for ever like his own dung.” And in Prov. x. 7. it is said, “The name of the wicked shall rot.”

It would not be difficult to enlarge this list of correspondencies, by a collation of passages in Job and in Proverbs; but most of them will occur to the attentive reader. There is, however, another class of evidence that appears still more forcible, viz. There are several terms used frequently in the Book of Job, and in the Books of Solomon, which are almost peculiar to those books, and which argue an identity of authorship. The noun תוֹשִׁיָּה tushiah, which may signify essence, substance, reality, completeness, occurs often in Job and Proverbs. See Job v. 12. vi. 13. xi. 6. xii. 16. xxvi. 3. and xxx. 22. Proverbs ii. 7. iii. 21. viii. 14. and xviii. 1. And it occurs only twice, as far as I recollect, in all the Bible besides, viz. Isa. xxviii. 29. and Mic. vi. 9. The word הוֹבָא hovah, used in the sense of misfortune, ruinous downfall, calamity, occurs Job. vi. 2, 30. xxx. 13. and in Prov. x. 3. xi. 6. xvii. 4. and xix. 13. It occurs nowhere else, except once in Ezek. vii. 26. once in Micah vii. 3; and a few times in the Psalms, v. 9. lii. 2, 7. lv. 12. xci. 3. and xciv. 20. xxxviii. 12. lxii. 3.

The word תַּחְבֻּלוֹת tachbuloth, wise counsels, occurs only in Job xxxvii. 12. and in Prov. i. 5. xi. 14. xii. 5. xx. 18. and xxiv. 6; and nowhere else in the Bible, in this form. And תָּהָה potheh, the silly one, simpleton, fool, is used precisely in the same sense in Job v. 2. Prov. xix. 7. and in various other parts of the same book. The word אֲבָדוֹן abadon, destruction, Job xxvi. 6. xxviii. 22. xxxi. 12. connected sometimes with שְׁאוֹל sheol, hell, or the grave; and מַוֶּטֶחַ mavehth, death, occurs as above, and in Prov. xv. 11. and xxvii. 20.

Calmel, who refers to several of the above places, adds, It would be easy to collect a great number of similar parallel passages; but it must make a forcible impression in favour of this opinion, when we observe in Job and Proverbs the same principles, the same sentiments, the same terms, and some that are found only in Job and Solomon. We may add farther, the beauty of the style, the sublimity of the thoughts, the dignity of the matter, the form and order in which the materials of this writer are laid down, the vast erudition and astonishing fecundity of genius; all of which perfectly characterize Solomon.

Besides the above, we find many forms of expression in this book, which prove that its author had a knowledge of the law of God; and many which show that he was acquainted with the Psalms of David; and a few very like what we find in the writings of the prophets. I shall insert a few more:—

Job. xv. 27. Because he covereth his face with fatness.

Job xxiv. 14. If he set his heart upon man, he shall gather unto himself his spirit and his breath.

Job xxi. 9. Their houses are safe from fear; neither is the rod of God upon them.

Job xxi. 10. Their bull-gendereth, and faileth not; their cow calveth, and casteth not her calf.

Job xxi. 18. They (the wicked) are as stubble before the wind; and as chaff that the storm carrieth away.

Job xxii. 19. The righteous see it, and are glad; and the innocent laugh them to scorn.

Job xxxviii. 41. Who provideth for the raven his food? when his young ones cry unto God.

Job xii. 21. He poureth contempt upon princes, and weakeneth the strength of the mighty.

Job iii. 3. Let the day perish in which I was born; and the night in which it was said, There is a man-child conceived. See also chap. x. ver. 16.

Job xxi. 7. Wherefore do the wicked live, become old, and are mighty in power?

Job xxviii. 12. But where shall wisdom be found, and where is the place of understanding?—13. Man knoweth not the price thereof; neither is it found in the land of the living,

Psa. xvii. 10. They are enclosed in their own fat.—lxviii. 7. Their eyes stand out with fatness.

Psa. civ. 29. Thou hidest thy face, and they are troubled; thou takest away their breath; they die, and return to their dust.

Psa. lxxlii. 5. They are not in trouble as other men; neither are they plagued like other men.

Psa. cxlv. 13, 14. Let our sheep bring forth thousands;—and our oxen be strong to labour.

Psa. i. 4. The ungodly are like the chaff which the wind driveth away.

Psa. lvi. 10. The righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance; he shall wash his feet in the blood of the wicked.

Psa. cxlvii. 9. He giveth to the beast his food, and to the young ravens which cry.

Psa. cvii. 40. He poureth contempt upon princes, and causeth them to wander in the wilderness.

Jerem. xx. 10. Wo is me, my mother, that thou hast borne me, a man of strife—xx. 14, 15. Cursed be the day wherein I was born; let not the day wherein my mother bare me be blessed.

Jerem. xii. 1, 2. Wherefore doth the way of the wicked prosper—they grow; yea they bring forth fruit.

Collate these verses with Baruch iii. 14, 15, 29. and see Prov. i. 20—23. ii. 2—7. iii. 13—18. iv. 5—9. viii. 10—35.

The remarkable sentiment that “God, as sovereign of the world, does treat the righteous and the wicked, independently of their respective merits, with a similar lot in this life; and that like events often happen to both,” is maintained in the Book of Job, and the Ecclesiastes of Solomon. Job ix. 22—24. HE DESTROYETH THE PERFECT and the WICKED. If the scourge slay suddenly, he will laugh at the trial of the INNOCENT. The EARTH is GIVEN INTO THE HAND OF THE WICKED; he covereth the faces of the judges thereof; if not, where and who is he?—x. 15. If I be WICKED, wo unto me; and if I be RIGHTEOUS, yet will I not lift up my head.—ix. 15. WHOM though I were RIGHTEOUS, yet would I not ANSWER; I would make supplication to my Judge.—xii. 6. The tabernacles of ROBBERS PROSPER, and they that PROVOKE GOD are SECURE; into whose hand God bringeth abundantly.—xxi. 7—9. Wherefore do the WICKED LIVE. BECOME OLD; yea, are MIGHTY IN POWER? Their SEED IS ESTABLISHED in their SIGHT, and their OFFSPRING BEFORE THEIR EYES. Their HOUSES are SAFE from FEAR, neither is the ROD of GOD UPON THEM.

Similar sentiments, with a great similarity of expression, are found in the following passages from Solomon:—Eccles. vi. 8. For what hath the WISE more than the FOOL?—viii. 14. There be JUST MEN to whom it happeneth ACCORDING to the WORK of the WICKED. Again, there be WICKED MEN to whom it happeneth ACCORDING to the WORK of the RIGHTEOUS.—ix. 2. ALL THINGS COME ALIKE TO ALL: there is ONE EVENT TO THE RIGHTEOUS and to the WICKED; to the GOOD, and to the CLEAN, and to the UNCLEAN; to him that SACRIFICETH, and to him that SACRIFICETH NOT. As is the GOOD, so is the SINNER; and he that SWEARETH, as he that FEARETH an OATH.—vii. 15. There is a JUST MAN that PERISHETH in his RIGHTEOUSNESS; and there is a WICKED MAN that PROLONGETH his life in his WICKEDNESS.

I may conclude this with the words of a learned translator of the Book of Job; and apply in reference to Solomon, what he applies to Moses: "The specimens of resemblance now produced have an equal claim to originality, and seem very powerfully to establish a unity of authorship." I think the argument much stronger in favour of Solomon as its author than of Moses: and while even here I hesitate, I must enter my protest against the conclusions drawn by others; and especially those who profess to show where David, Solomon, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, &c. have copied and borrowed from Job! Some of them, in all probability, never saw the book; and those who did had an inspiration, dignity, manner, and power of their own, that rendered it quite unnecessary to borrow from him. Such plagiarism would appear, in common cases, neither requisite nor graceful. I have a high opinion of the Book of Job; but God forbid that I should ever bring it on a level with the compositions of the sweet singer of Israel, the inimitable threnodies of Jeremiah, or the ultra-sublime effusions of the evangelical prophet. Let each keep his place, and let God be acknowledged the inspirer of all.

Thus, by exactly the same process, we come to different conclusions; for the evidence is now as strong that Job lived posterior to the days of Moses, (that he was acquainted with the law and the prophets; that either he took much from the Psalms and Proverbs, or that David and Solomon borrowed much from him; or that Solomon, the son of David, wrote the history,) as it is that he lived in the days of Moses.

For my own part I think the latter date by far the most probable; and, although I think the arguments that go to prove Solomon to be the author, are weightier than those so skilfully brought forth by learned men in behalf of Moses, yet I think it possible that it was the work of neither, but rather of some learned Idumean, well acquainted with the Jewish religion and writers: and I still hold the opinion which I formed more than thirty years ago, when I read over this book in the Septuagint, and afterward in the Hebrew; that it is most probable the work was originally composed in Arabic, and afterward translated into Hebrew by a person who either had not the same command of the Hebrew as he had of the Arabic; or else purposely affected the Arabic idiom, retaining many Arabic words and Arabisms; either because he could not find appropriate expressions in the Hebrew, or because he wished to adorn and enrich the one language by borrowing copiously from the other. The Hebrew of the Book of Job, differs as much from the pure Hebrew of Moses, and the early prophets, as the Persian of Ferdosy differs from that of Saady. Both these were Persian poets: the former wrote in the simplicity and purity of his elegant native tongue, adopting very few Arabic words; while the latter labours to introduce them at every turn, and has thus produced a language neither Persian nor Arabic. And so prevalent is this custom become with all Persian writers, both in prose and verse, that the pure Persian becomes daily more and more corrupted, inasmuch that there is reason to fear that in process of time it will be swallowed up in the language of the conquerors of that country, in which it was formerly esteemed the most polished language of Asia. Such influence has the language of a conqueror on the country he has subdued: witness our own, where a paltry French phraseology, the remnant of one of the evils brought upon us by our Norman conqueror and tyrant, has greatly weakened the strong current of our mother tongue; so that however amalgamated, filed, and polished by eminent authors, we only speak a very tolerable jargon, enriched, as we foolishly term it, by the spoils of other tongues. The best specimen of our ancient language exists in the Lord's Prayer, which is pure English, or what is called Anglo-Saxon, with the exception of three Frenchified words, trespasses, temptation, and deliver.

But to return to the Book of Job. The collections of Mr. Goode, Dr. Magee, and others, if they do not prove that Moses was the author of the book, prove that the author was well acquainted with the Mosaic writings; and prove that he was also acquainted with the xcth Psalm; and this last circumstance will go far to prove that he lived after the days of David, for we have no evidence whatever that the xcth Psalm was published previously to the collection and publication of the Psalms now generally termed the Psalms of David, though many of them were written by other hands, and not a few even after the Babylonish captivity. And, as to the inscription to this Psalm, תפלה משה איש האלהים tephillah Mosheh ish ha-Elohim, "a prayer of Moses, the man of God." 1. We know not that Moses the Jewish lawgiver is meant: it might be another person of the same name. 2. And even in that case, it does not positively state that this Moses was the author of it. 3. The inscriptions to the Psalms are of dubious, many of them of no authority; some of them evidently misplaced; and others either bearing no relation to the matter of the Psalms, to which they are prefixed; or evidently contradictory to that matter. Hence our translators have considered these inscriptions as of no authority; and have not admitted them, in any case, into the body of their respective Psalms. The paral-telism, therefore, drawn from this Psalm, will not help much to prove that Moses was the author of the Book of Job; but it will go far to prove, as will be seen in other cases, that the author of this book was acquainted with the Book of Psalms, as several of the preceding collections testify: and that there is a probability that he had read the prophets that lived and wrote in the time, and after the time, of the Babylonish captivity, which appears to me the only thing which shakes the argument in favour of Solomon; unless we take the converse of the question, and say that Moses, David, Solomon, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Micah, all knew and borrowed from the Book of Job. But this supposition will, in its turn, be shaken by the consideration that there are several things in the Book of Job which evidently refer to the law as already given, and to some of the principal occurrences in the Israelitish history, if such references can be made out. These considerations have led me to think it probable that the book was written after the captivity, by some unknown, but highly eminent and inspired man. We may wonder, indeed, that the author of such an eminent work has not been handed down to posterity; and that the question should be left at the discretion of the whole limbus of conjecture: but we find not only several books in the Bible, but also other works of minor importance, and a later date, similarly circumstanced. We have no certain evidence of the author of the books of Judges, Samuel, Kings, Chronicles, Ruth, Ezeq, Nehemiah, or Esther: we can, in reference to them, make probable conjectures, but this is all. Even in the New Testament the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews is still unknown: though a pretty general tradition, and strong internal evidence, give it to St. Paul; yet this point is not so proved, as to exclude all doubt.

The finest poems of heathen antiquity, the Ilias and Odyssey, cannot be certainly traced to their author. Of the person called Homer, to whom they have been attributed, no one knows any thing. He is still, for aught we know, a fabulous person; and the relations concerning him are entitled to little more credit than is due to the Life of Æsop by Planudes. Seven different cities have claimed the honour of being his birth-place. They are expressed in the following distich:—

Ἑπτα πόλεις διερίζουσι περὶ ῥίζαν Ὀμηροῦ, Σμύρναν, Ρόδον, Κολοφών, Σαλαμίς, Χίος, Ἀργός, Ἀθῆναι.
Smyrna, Rhodes, Colophon, Salamis, Chios, Argos, Athens, Orbis de Patriâ corat, Homere, tuâ.

Nor have these claims been ever adjusted. Some have gone so far as to attribute the work to Solomon, king of Israel, composed after his defection from the true religion to idolatry! that the word Homer, Ομηρος, Homeros, is merely Hebrew, עמרם Omerim, with a Greek termination, signifying the sayings or discourses, from עמר amar, he spoke; the whole work being little more than the dialogues or conversations of the eminent characters of which it is composed. Even the battles of Homer are full of parleys: and the principal information conveyed by the poem is through the conversation of the respective chiefs.

The Makamat, or assemblies, of the celebrated Arabic author Huriri, show us how conversations were anciently carried on among the Arabs; and even in the same country in which the plan of the poem of Job is laid: and were we closely to compare the sex concessus of that author, published by Schultens, we might find many analogies between them and the turn of conversation in the Book of Job. But the uncertainty relative to the author detracts nothing from the merit and excellency of the Poem. As it is the most singular, so it is the best, as a whole, in the Hebrew canon. It exhibits a full view of the opinions of the Eastern sages on the most important points: not only their religion and system of morals are frequently introduced, but also their philosophy, astronomy, natural history, mineralogy, and arts and sciences in general; as well those that were ornamental, as those which ministered to the comforts and necessities of life. And, on a careful examination, we shall probably find that several arts, which are supposed to be the discoveries of the moderns, were not unknown to those who lived in a very remote antiquity; and who, it is fashionable to consider, as unlettered and uncultivated barbarians.

As the person, family, time, and descendants, of Job are so very uncertain, I shall not trouble my readers with the many genealogical tables which have been constructed by chronologists and commentators: yet it might be considered a defect, were I not to notice what is inserted at the end of the Greek and Arabic versions relative to this point; to which I shall add Dr. Kennicott's tables, and the substance of a letter which contains some curious particulars.

"And he (Job) dwelt in the land of Ausitis, in the confines of Idumea and Arabia; and his former name was Jobab. And he took to wife Arabissa, and begat a son whose name was Ennon. And his (Jobab's) father's name was Zarith, one of the sons of the children of Esau; and his mother's name was Bossora: and thus he was the fifth from Abraham."

"And these are the kings who reigned in Edom; which region he also governed: the first was Balak, the son of Beor, the name of whose city was Dennaba. And after Balak reigned Jobab, who is also called Job. And after him Assom, the governor of the country of the Temanites. After him Adad, the son of Basad, who cut off Madian in the plain of Moab; and the name of his city was Gethaim."

"The friends who came to visit him were Eliphaz, son of Sophan, of the children of Esau, king of the Temanites. Baldad, the son of Ammon, of Chobar, tyrant of the Sauchites. Sophar, king of the Minaites. Thainan, son of Eliphaz, governor of the Idumeans."

"This is translated from the Syriac copy. He dwelt in the land of Ausitis, on the borders of the Euphrates; and his former name was Jobab; and his father was Zareth, who came from the East." This is verbatim from the Codex Alexandrinus.

The Arabic is not so circumstantial, but is the same in substance. "And Job dwelt in the land of Auz, between the boundaries of Edom and Arabia; and he was at first called Jobab. And he married a strange woman, and to her was born a son called Anun. But Job was the son of Zara, a descendant of the children of Esau: his mother's name was Basra; and he was the sixth from Abraham. Of the kings who reigned in Edom: the first who reigned over that land was Balak, the son of Beor; and the name of his city was Danaba. And after him Jobab, the same who is called Job. And after Job, him (Assom) who was prince of the land of Teman. And after him (Adad) the son of Barak, he who slew and put to flight Madian, in the plains of Moab; and the name of his city was Jatham. And of the friends of Job who visited him, was Eliphaz, the son of Esau, king of the Temanites."

Dr. Kennicott says, When Job lived seems deducible from his being contemporary with Eliphaz, the Temanite, thus:

ABRAHAM.

2 Eliphaz.	Levi.	2
3 Teman.	Kohath.	3

The late Miss Mary Freeman Shepherd, well known for her strong masculine genius, and knowledge of various languages, sent me the following genealogy and remarks, which she thought would clearly ascertain the time of Job, which I faithfully transcribe from her letter to me, a short time before her death.

After the deluge 599:

"Shem was the father of Aram, who gave his name to the Aramites, i. e. the Syrians; and he was the father of Uz, who gave his name to the land of Uz, in which Job dwelt, not was born; for the text says, There was a man in the land of Uz called Job."

"In the xlvth chap. of Genesis, ver. 13. one of the sons of Issachar is named Job. In the genealogies of Numb. xxvi. 24. and in 1 Chron. vii. 1. he is called Jashub. It is remarkable that there is no mention in Chronicles of the sons of Jashub, or of any of the sons of Issachar, among the thousands of Israel, sons of Tola, where, might not Job be called Jashub? Mitzraim, i. e. Egypt, was a son of Ham; Uz and Aram, sons of Shem. Ishmael by Hagar, and Midian by Keturah, both sons to Abraham. How well does this account for the nearness of the languages of these people, being sojourners from the same mother tongue."

"Ishmael, the father of the tribes of Arabia; Arabic was, therefore, not their mother tongue. The roots of these languages germinated from the Hebrew roots: and so a new language sprung up; afterward formed according to grammatic rules, and enriched as arts and sciences, and cultivated genius, added new inventions. Things new, and unknown before, gave rise to new words or names. Nouns, and the action, operation, and effects of arts and sciences, produced verbs, or roots. Thus the Arabic became so copious and rich, and has roots not in the pure original Hebrew. All this considered, might not Moses have written the Book of Job, as parts of Ezra, Nehemiah, and Daniel, were written after the captivity, in a mixed language, in order that it might be the better understood by those for whom it was written; those of the people who, being left in Jerusalem, had retained their native Hebrew; and those who had, by long residence in Babylon, corrupted and mingled it with the Chaldaic, which is a dialect of the Hebrew: like the modern language of Italy, when compared with that of ancient Rome; or our modern Latin, when compared with that of the Augustan age."

"By the influence of climate upon the organs of speech, the different avocations, usages, diet, turn of mind, and genius of men, the dialects which all streamed from one language, and pronounced in one and the same speech, confounded, (not annihilated, troubled but not dried up,) no new language then created, yet so confounded in utterance that they understood not one another's speech. The operation was upon the ear of the heart, as in the day of pentecost: one man spoke; and all, although of different tongues, understood; the ear suggested the various sounds to the tongue, and from thence the varied pronunciations of one and the same language often makes it misunderstood."

"Shem, who lived five hundred and two years after the deluge, being still alive, and in the three hundred and ninety-third year of his life, when Abraham was born; therefore, the Jewish tradition that Shem was the Melchisedeck (my righteous king of Salem) an epithet, or title of honour and respect, not a proper name, and, as the head and father of his race, Abraham paid tithes to him: this seems to me well founded, and the idea confirmed by these remarkable words, Psal. cx. Jehovah hath sworn and will not repent, על דרכיו מלכי צדק, attah coheni

leolam al dibarti malki-tsedek. As if he said, Thou, my only begotten son, first-born of many brethren: not according to the substituted priesthood of the sons of Levi, who, after the sin of the golden calf, stood up in lieu of all the first-born of Israel, invested with their forfeited rights of primogeniture of king and priest: the Lord hath sworn, and will not repent (change,) Thou art a priest for ever, after, the (my order of Melchisedek, my own original primitive) order of primogeniture: even as Shem the man of name, the Shem that stands the first and foremost of the sons of Noah. The righteous prince and priest of the Most High God meets his descendant Abraham, after the slaughter of the kings, with refreshments; blessed him as the head and father of his race; and, as such, he receives from Abraham the tithe of all the spoil.

“How beautifully does Paul of Tarsus, writing to the Hebrews, point through Melchisedek (Shem, the head and father of their race,) invested in all the original rights of primogeniture, priest of the Most High God, blessing Abraham as such, as Levi even had existence, and as such receiving tithe from Abraham, and in him from Levi yet in the loins of his forefathers:—when Moses on this great and solemn occasion records simply this: Melchisedek, king of Salem, priest of the Most High God, sine genealogiâ; his pedigree not mentioned, but standing as Adam in St. Luke's genealogy, without father, and without mother, Adam of God. Luke iii. last verse—how beautifully, I say, doth St. Paul point through Melchisedek to Jehoshua our great High Priest and King, whose eternal generation who shall declare! Ha Mashiach, the Lord's Anointed, Priest, and King, after the order of Melchisedek; only begotten, first-born Son. The Levitical priesthood that arose from the sin of the golden calf, and the forfeited rights of the first-born, in whose stead stood the sons of Levi, (the reward of their zeal for God on that sad occasion.) This right of primogeniture, as the streams of Jordan at the presence of God, conversus est retrorsum, to its fountain head; and Judah was his sanctuary, Psalm cxiv. Reuben forfeited by incest his excellence; Simeon and Levi, the right in priority of birth, theirs; and Judah, he to whom his brethren should bow down as their head. From the time of Abraham, who married a sister of Haran, prince of the tribe of Judah, to the time of Jesus, the tribes of Levi and Judah intermarried: thus was incorporated the source and streams in one. And the very names of all the sons of the tribes of Israel lost in one, that of Jehudah, from which they call themselves Jehudim.

“The shebit, tribe, not sceptre, the rod or ensign of the chief of a tribe, ‘The tribe, genealogy, shall not recede from Jehuda until Shiloh come;’ for whose genealogy they subsist. Ten, by the schism of Jeroboam, may be carried away beyond the river, and heard of no more; but Jehudah, Levi, and Benjamin, shall be tribes; and their registers shall be clear and unbroken until the temple, and city, and all the registers of genealogy are destroyed. The people are one: one people worshipping one God. I have prayed, said Jehoshua Mashiach, that ye might be one in me, as I and my Father are one.

“Ham, the son of Noah, begat Cush; and Cush begat Nimrod, and Saba, and others. Nimrod began a monarchy, and founded Babel. Out of that land went forth Ashur, and builded Nineveh. Nimrod was therefore contemporary with Peleg. Compare Gen. ii. 8, 9, with Gen. ix. 10—25.

“Thus, in about two hundred and ten or twenty years after the deluge, by the confusion of tongues, was the earth divided; as its inhabitants, dispersing no doubt in families, together formed themselves into nations, people, and tribes, and kindreds, and from thence into tongues.

“From the knowledge I have of the Hebrew, I have caught a glance of the genius, spirit, and tones, of the general march of the oriental tongues, and even of the expression of their character. To me the Book of Job seems to have much of Chaldee, both in words and idiom; and much of the sublimity and spirit of the writings of Moses. His grand descriptions of the Most High, his wondrous works, his power, wisdom, justice, and truth, all speak the historian of Genesis, the legislator of Israel, the unconsumed fire of the burning bush, the loud thunders of Sinai, and the shinings of the light of God. That pointed exactness and conciseness of narration that distinguishes Moses, is also conspicuous in the Book of Job. If Moses did, indeed, write this book, he wrote it for the nations, as well as for Israel; and took, as the best vehicle of a general conveyance, a language most generally understood. At this day, for the facilitating of intercourse in the Levant, Mediterranean, Archipelago, &c. there is a language called Lingua Franca, the language of the Franks. To Israel Moses conveyed the pure language of their fathers: but rather than the nations should be famished for bread, or die for thirst, he put manna in their coarse earthen vessels, and wine in their wooden cups.

“You see, my dear Sir, how strong is female obstinacy: I struggle and contend for the body of Moses. I admire Moses; I admire Job. God, by the prophet Ezekiel, and the apostle St. James, ascertains the history of Job to be a fact, not a fiction. And thus inspiration sustains its inspiration.

“Will you, dear Sir, think it worth while to collect and put together these scattered scraps, as little pegs to better shelves, which you must furbish, and smooth, and point. Too hard a work for Mary the aged. Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God: and in him see all truth.” M. F. S.

The history of Job, but strangely disguised, is well known among the Asiatics. He is called by the Arabic and Persian historians أيوب Ayoub, which is exactly the same as the Hebrew, איוב Ayoub, which Europeans have strangely metamorphosed into Job. In the Tareekh Muntekheb his genealogy is given thus: “Ayoub the son of Anosh, the son of Razakh, the son of Ais (Esau), the son of Isaac. He was a prophet, and was afflicted by a grievous malady three years, or, according to others, seven years; at the end of which, when eighty years of age, he was restored to perfect health, and had a son named Bash ben Ayoub. Other writers say that he had five sons, with whom he made war on a brutal people called Dsul Kefel, whom he exterminated because they refused to receive the knowledge of the true God, whom he preached to them. Khondemir, who entitles him Job the Patient, gives us his history in the following manner:

"Job, by his father's side, was descended from Esau, and by his mother from Lot. Abou Giasfer al Tabary relates that God sent him to preach to the inhabitants of Thaniah, a people who dwelt between Remla and Damascus; but three persons only received the truth. Nevertheless, as he was very zealous in the service of God, he rewarded his faith and obedience by heaping riches upon him, and giving him a numerous family. This excited the envy of the devil, who, presenting himself before God, accused Job as one who was selfish in his devotion; and, were it not for the temporal blessings which he received from his Maker, he would not worship even once in the day. God having given Satan permission to spoil Job of his goods, and deprive him of his children, he gave the same proofs of his piety; worshipping God as before, and patiently bearing his great losses. Satan, enraged to be thus baffled, presented himself once more before God; and asserted that Job continued thus faithful, because he knew that God would reward his constancy with an equal or even greater portion of earthly blessings: but, if he would afflict his body by some grievous disease, he would soon abandon his service, and be at the end of his patience. In order fully to show the piety of this exemplary man, God permitted Satan to afflict his body as he pleased, with the exception of his eyes, his ears, and his tongue. The devil, having received this permission, blew up the nostrils of Job such a pestilential heat, as immediately turned his whole mass of blood into corruption, so that his whole body became one ulcer, the smell of which was so offensive that his greatest intimates could not approach him; and he was obliged to be carried out of the city, and laid in a distant place, entirely by himself. Notwithstanding, Job continued both his patience and piety. His wife, Rosima, never forsook him; but continued daily to bring him the necessaries of life. Satan, observing this, stole from her the provision she had made for her husband; and, when reduced to the lowest ebb, he appeared to her under the form of an old bald woman; and told her, that if she would give her the two tresses of hair that hung down on her neck, she would provide her daily with what was necessary for her husband's support. This offer appearing so very advantageous in behalf of her afflicted husband, she accepted the offer, and gave the two tresses to the old woman.

"Satan, overjoyed at the success of his plots, went to Job; told him that his wife had been caught in the act of adultery; and that her tresses had been cut off, and here was the proof of the fact. Job seeing this, and finding his wife without her tresses, not supposing that he was deceived by the devil, lost his patience; and bound himself by an oath, that if he should ever recover his health, he would inflict on her the most exemplary punishment. Satan, supposing he had now gained his end, transformed himself into an angel of light; and went throughout the country as a messenger of God, informing the people that Job, who was counted a prophet, had fallen from his piety, and brought the wrath of God upon him; that they should no more listen to his preaching, but banish him from among them, lest the curse of God should fall on the whole country.

"Job, coming to understand how the matter stood, had recourse to God by faith and prayer; and said these remarkable words, which are found in the KORAN: Distress closes me in on every side; but thou, O Lord, art more merciful than all those who can feel compassion. On this all his pains and sufferings immediately ceased; for Gabriel, the faithful servant of the Most High, descended from heaven; took Job by the hand; and, lifting him up from the place where he lay, stamped on the ground with his foot; and immediately a spring of water rose up from the earth, out of which Job having drunk, and washed his body, he was instantly cleansed of all his ulcers, and restored to perfect health.

"God, having thus restored him, greatly multiplied his goods, so that the rain and the snow which fell around his dwelling were precious; and his riches became so abundant, as if showers of gold had descended upon him."

This is the sum of the account given by the oriental historians; who, forsaking the truth of the Sacred History, have blended the story with their own fables. The great facts are, however, the same in the main; and we find that with them the personality, temptation, and deliverance of Job, are matters of serious credibility. Abul Faragius says that the trial of Job happened in the twenty-fifth year of Nahor, son of Serug; thus making him prior to Abraham. He calls him إيوب الصديق. Ayoub assadeek, Job the righteous. See Abul Faragius, Ebn Batric, D'Herbelot, &c.

Commentators have considered this book as being divided into distinct parts. Mr. Goude, who considers it a regular Hebrew epic, divides it into six parts, or books; which he considers to be its natural division, and unquestionably intended by the author. These six parts are, an opening or exordium, containing the introductory history or decree concerning Job;—three distinct series of arguments, in each of which the speakers are regularly allowed their respective turns;—the summing up of the controversy;—and the close of the catastrophe, consisting of the suffering hero's grand and glorious acquittal, and restoration to prosperity and happiness.

PART I.—The TEMPTATION of Job decreed.

Which contains, 1. A brief narrative of Job. 2. The tribunal of the Almighty. 3. His remarks to Satan concerning Job's fidelity. 4. Satan's reply. 5. The Almighty consents to his temptation. 6. Return of the celestial tribunal. 7. The fidelity of Job proved and declared. 8. Satan insinuates that he would not have stood true, had the attack been made on his person. 9. The Almighty consents to a second trial. 10. The trial made. 11. Job's utter misery. 12. The visit of his three friends, to condole with him. Chap. i. and ii

Preface to the Book of Job.

PART II.—FIRST Series of CONTROVERSY.

1. Exclamation of Job on his miserable condition. 2. Speech of Eliphaz, accusing him of want of firmness; and suspecting his integrity, on account of the affliction with which he is visited. 3. Job's reply; reproaching his friends with cruelty; bewailing the disappointment he had felt in them; calling for death as the termination of his miseries; then longing for life, expostulating with the Almighty, and supplicating his forgiveness. 4. Bildad resumes the argument of Eliphaz with great severity; openly accuses Job with hypocrisy; and exhorts him to repentance, in order that he may avoid utter ruin. 5. Job, in reply, longs to plead his cause before God; but is overwhelmed at the idea of his majesty. 6. He again desponds; and calls for death, as the only refuge from his sorrows. 7. Zophar continues the argument on the side of his companions; condemns Job acrimoniously, for still daring to assert his innocence; and once more exhorts him to repentance, as the only means of obtaining a restoration of the favour of the Almighty. 8. Job is stimulated to a still severer reply. 9. Accuses his companions of declaiming on the part of God, with the base hope of propitiating him. 10. Boldly demands his trial at the tribunal of the Almighty; and, realizing the tribunal before him, commences his pleading in an address, variegated by every side of opposite feelings: fear, triumph, humiliation, expostulation, despondency. Chap. iii.—xiv.

PART III.—SECOND Series of CONTROVERSY.

1. Eliphaz commences the discussion in his regular turn; accuses Job of vehemence and vanity; asserts that no man is innocent; and that his own conduct sufficiently proves himself not to be so. 2. Job replies; and complains bitterly of the unjust reproaches heaped upon him; and accuses his companions of holding him up to public derision. 3. He pathetically bemoans his lot; and looks forward to the grave with glimmering through despair, of a resurrection from its ruins. 4. Bildad perseveres in his former argument of Job's certain wickedness, from his signal sufferings; and, in a string of lofty traditions, points out the constant attendants of misery upon wickedness. 5. Job rises superior to this attack; appeals to the pity and generosity of his friends; asserts the Almighty to have afflicted him for purposes altogether unknown; and then soars to a full and triumphant hope of a future resurrection, and vindication of his innocence. 6. Zophar repeats the former charge; and Job replies, by directly controverting his argument, and proving, from a variety of examples, that in the present world the wicked are chiefly prosperous, and the just for the most part subject to affliction. Chap. xv.—xxi.

PART IV.—THIRD Series of CONTROVERSY.

1. Eliphaz, in direct opposition to Job's last remarks, contends that certain and utter ruin is the uniform lot of the wicked; and adduces the instances of the deluge, and of Sodom, and the other cities of the plain. 2. Job supports his position by fresh and still more forcible examples. Though he admits that, in the mystery of Providence, prosperity and adversity are often equally the lot of both the righteous and the wicked; yet he denies that this ought to be held as an argument in favour of the last, whose prosperity is in the utmost degree precarious, and who, in calamity, are wholly destitute of hope and consolation. 3. Bildad replies in a string of lofty but general apophthegms, tending to prove that Job cannot be without sin, since no man is so in the sight of God. 4. Job rejoins with indignation; takes a general survey of his life, in the different capacities of a magistrate, a husband, and a master; and challenges his companions to point out a single act of injustice he had committed. Chap. xxii.—xxxii.

PART V.—The SUMMING UP of the CONTROVERSY.

1. Zophar, who ought to have concluded the last series, having declined to prosecute the debate any farther, the general argument is summed up by Eliphaz, who has not hitherto spoken, though present from the first. 2. He condemns the subject matter of the opponents of Job, as altogether irrelevant; accuses Job himself, not of suffering for any past impiety, but of speaking irreverently during the controversy. 3. He contests several of Job's positions; asserts that afflictions are often sent by the Almighty for the wisest and most merciful purposes; and that, in every instance, our duty is submission. 4. He closes with describing the Creator as supreme, and uncontrollable; and as creating, upholding, and regulating, all nature according to his own will and pleasure; incomprehensively and mysteriously, yet ever wisely and benevolently. Chap. xxxii.—xxxvii.

PART VI.—The ACQUITTAL and RESTORATION of Job.

1. The Almighty appears to pronounce judgment; speaks to Job in a sublime and magnificent address out of a whirlwind. 2. Job humbles himself before God, and is accepted. 3. His friends are severely reprov'd for their conduct during the controversy: a sacrifice is demanded of them, and Job is appointed their intercessor. 4. He prays for his friends, and his prayer is accepted. 5. He is restored to his former state of prosperity, and his substance in every instance doubled. Chap. xxxviii.—xlii.

On this plan Mr. Goode has constructed his learned translation and excellent observations on this book.

The following synopsis or general view of this book is very intelligible, and may serve as an index to the work:

Historical Narration concerning the restoration of Job to health and great worldly prosperity; with the account of his age and death, chap. xlii. ver. 7—17.

Some have contended that the whole of this book is written in verse: but I can see no rule or method by which the two first chapters, and the ten last verses of chap. xlii. can be reduced to poetry, or poetic arrangement. They are merely narrative; and are utterly destitute of that dignity and pathos every where evident in this poem, and in every part of the Hebrew hemistich poetry wherever it occurs. I could almost suppose these places the work of another hand; a preface and a conclusion written by some person who was well acquainted with the fact of Job's temptation, and found such additions necessary to cast light upon the poem. But they are most probably the work of the same hand. There are, in different parts of the body of the poem, sentences in prose, which are the headings to the different speeches. This is frequent among the Arabic and Persian poets. Such headings are generally, in rubric, and should here stand by themselves.

BOOK OF JOB.

At the time in which Job lived is so very uncertain, (see the preface, and the observations at the end of the notes on the first chapter,) the date found in our common English Bibles, (which is upon the supposition that Moses wrote the book while among the Midianites, about one thousand five hundred and twenty years before the commencement of the Christian era,) is inserted in the margin, not because it is the most probable, but because it is the most generally received.

NOTES ON CHAPTER I.

Verse 1. In the land of Uz] This country was situated in Idumea, or the land of Edom, in Arabia Petrea, of which it comprised a very large district. See the preface.

Whose name was Job] The original is אִיּוֹב Ayob; and this orthography is followed by the Chaldees, Syriac, and Arabic. From the Vulgate we borrow Job, not very dissimilar from the Ιωβ Iob of the Septuagint. The name signifies sorrowful, or he that weeps. He is supposed to have been called Jobab. See more in the introduction.

Perfect and upright] תָּמִיד וְיָשָׁר tam ve yashar; COMPLETE as to his mind and heart; and STRAIGHT or CORRECT as to his moral deportment.

Feared God] Had him in continual reverence as the fountain of justice, truth, and goodness.

Eschewed evil] שָׂר מֵרָע sar mera, departing from, or avoiding evil. We have the word eschew, from the old French eschever, which signifies to avoid. All within was holy, all without was righteous: and his whole life was employed in departing from evil, and drawing nigh to God. Coverdale translates, an innocent and virtuous man, such one as feared God an eschewed evil. From this translation we retain the word eschew.

^d Or, cattle.—^e Or, husbandry.—^f Heb. sons of the East.

Verse 3. His substance also was seven thousand sheep] A thousand, says the Chaldee, for each of his sons. Three thousand camels: a thousand for each of his daughters. Five hundred yoke of oxen for himself. And five hundred she asses for his wife. Thus the Targum divides the substance of this eminent man.

A very great household] עֲבֹדָה רַבָּה abudah rabbah meod, "a very great estate." The word עֲבֹדָה abudah, refers chiefly to husbandry, including all manner of labour in the field, and with cattle, and every description of servants.

The greatest of all the men of the East] He was more eminent than any other person in that region in wisdom, wealth, and piety. He was the chief emir of that district.

Verse 4. Feasted in their houses, every one his day] It is likely that a birthday festival is here intended. When the birthday of one arrived, he invited his brothers and sisters to feast with him; and each observed the same custom.

Verse 5. When the days of their feasting were gone about] At the conclusion of the year, when the birthday of each had been celebrated, the pious father appears to have gathered them all together, that the whole family might hold a feast to the Lord, offering burnt-offerings in order to make an atonement for sins of all kinds; whether presumptuous, or committed sent and sanctified them, and through ignorance. This we may consider as a general custom among the godly, in those ancient times.

And cursed God in their hearts. וברכו אלהים U bircu Elohim. In this book, according to most interpreters, the verb ברכך barak, signifies both to bless and to curse: and the noun אלהים Elohim, signifies the true God, false gods, and great or mighty. The reason why Job offered the burnt-offerings appears to have been this: In a country where idolatry flourished, he thought it possible that his children might, in their festivity, have given away to idolatrous thoughts, or done something prescribed by idolatrous rites: and, therefore, the words may be rendered thus; it may be that my children have blessed the gods in their hearts. Others think that the word ברכך barak, should be understood as implying farewell, bidding adieu, lest my children have bidden adieu to God; that is, renounced him, and cast off his fear. To me this is very unlikely. Mr. Mason Goode contends that the word should be understood in its regular and general sense, to bless; and that the conjunction vau should be translated nor. "Peradventure my sons may have sinned, nor blessed God in their hearts." This version he supports with great learning. I think the sense given above is more plain, and less embarrassed. They might have been guilty of some species of idolatry. This is possible even among those called Christians, in their banquets: witness their songs to Bacchus, Venus, &c. which are countless in number, and often sung by persons who would think themselves injured not to be reputed Christians. Coverdale, in his translation, (1535) renders the passage thus: Peradventure my sonnes have done some offence and have been unthankful to God in their hertes.

Thus did Job continually. At the end of every year, when all the birthday festivals had gone round.

Verse 6. There was a day when the sons of God [All the versions, and indeed all the critics, are puzzled with the phrase sons of God; בני האלהים beney ha-Elohim, literally sons of the God; or, sons of the gods. The Vulgate has simply fili Dei, sons of God. The Septuagint οὐρανίου τοῦ Θεοῦ, the angels of God. The Chaldee כְּבָרֵי מַלְאָכָיָא kiltey mala'caiya, "troops of angels." The Syriac retains the Hebrew words and letters, only leaving out the demonstrative ה he in the word האלהים ha-Elohim, thus, בְּנֵי אֱלֹהִים baney Elohim. The Arabic nearly copies the Hebrew also بنو الوهيم banoo Iloheem; to which, if we give not the literal translation of the Hebrew, we may give what translation we please. Coverdale, 1535, translates it gerhaunts of God. The Targum supposes that this assembly took place on the day of the great atonement, which occurred once each year. And there was a day of judg-did Job continually.

6 ¶ Now^k there was a day^l when the sons of God came to present themselves before the LORD, and^m Satan came alsoⁿ among them.

ment in the beginning of the year; and the troops of angels came that they might stand in judgment before the Lord. But what are we to make of this whole account? Expositions are endless. That of Mr. Peters appears to me to be at once the most simple and most judicious:—"The Scripture speaks of God after the manner of men; for there is a necessity of condescending to our capacities, and of suiting the revelation to our apprehension. As kings, therefore, transact their most important affairs in a solemn council or assembly: so God is pleased to represent himself as having his council likewise; and as passing the decrees of his providence in an assembly of his holy angels. We have here, in the case of Job, the same grand assembly held; as was before in that of Ahab, 1 Kings xxi. the same host of heaven called here the sons of God, presenting themselves before Jehovah, as in the vision of Micaiah they are said to stand on his right hand, and on his left. A wicked spirit appearing among them, here called Satan, or the adversary; and there, a lying spirit: both bent on mischief, and ready to do all the hurt they were permitted to do; for both were under the control of his power. The imagery is just the same; and the only difference is in the manner of the relation. That mentioned above, Micaiah as a prophet, and in the actual exercise of his prophetic office, delivers, as he received it, in a vision. I saw the Lord sitting on his throne, and all the host of heaven standing by him, on his right hand and on his left—and there came forth a LYING SPIRIT, and stood before the Lord, and said—1 Kings xxii. 19—22. The other as a historian interweaves it with his history; and tells us, in his plain narrative style, There was a day when the sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord; and SATAN came also among them. And this he delivers in the same manner as he does, There was a man in the land of Uz, whose name was Job.

The things delivered to us by these two inspired writers are the same in substance, equally high, and above the reach of human sight and knowledge; but the manner of delivering them is different, each as suited best to his particular purpose. This, then, is the prophetic way of representing things as to the manner of doing them; which, whether done exactly in the same manner concerns us not to know; but which are really done; and God would have them described as done in this manner, to make the more lively and lasting impression on us. At the same time it must not be forgotten that representations of this kind are founded in a well known and established truth, viz. the doctrine of good and bad angels; a point revealed from the beginning, and without a previous knowledge of which the visions of the prophets could scarcely be intelligible. See Gen. xxviii.

7 And the LORD said unto Satan, Whence comest thou? Then Satan answered the LORD, and said, From going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it.

8 And the LORD said unto Satan, Hast thou considered my servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God, and escheweth evil?

o Ch. 2. 2. Matt. 12. 43. 1 Pet. 5. 8.—p Heb. Hast thou set thine heart on?

And Satan came also] This word, also is emphatic in the original שָׂטָן ha-Satan, the Satan, or, the adversary; translated by the Septuagint ὁ διάβολος. The original word is preserved by the Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic: indeed, in each of them the word signifies an adversary. St. Peter, 1 Epist. chap. v. ver. 8. plainly refers to this place; and fully proves that שָׂטָן ha-Satan, which he literally translates ὁ ἀντίδικος, the ADVERSARY, is no other than ὁ διάβολος, the DEVIL, or chief of bad demons, which he adds to others by way of explanation. There are many δαίμονες, demons, mentioned in Scripture: but the word Satan or devil is never found in the originals of the Old and New Testaments in the plural number. Hence we reasonably infer, that all evil spirits are under the government of one chief, the DEVIL, who is more powerful and more wicked than the rest. From the GREEK διάβολος, comes the LATIN Diabolus, the SPANISH Diablo, the FRENCH Diable, the ITALIAN Diavolo, the GERMAN Teufel, the DUTCH Duivel, the ANGLO-SAXON deofel, and the ENGLISH Devil, which some would derive from the compound THE-DEVIL; ὁ πονηρός, the evil one, or wicked one.

It is now fashionable to deny the existence of this evil spirit; and this is one of what St. John (Rev. ii. 24.) calls τα βάθη του σατανα, the depths of Satan; as he well knows that they who deny his being will not be afraid of his power and influence; will not watch against his wiles and devices; will not pray to God for deliverance from the evil one; will not expect him to be trampled down under their feet, who has no existence; and, consequently, they will become an easy and unopposing prey to the enemy of their souls. By leading men to disbelieve and deny his existence, he throws them off their guard: and is then their complete master, and they are led captive by him at his will. It is well known that among all those who make any profession of religion, those who deny the existence of the devil are they who pray little or none at all; and are, apparently, as careless about the existence of God, as they are about the being of a devil. Piety to God is with them out of the question; for those who do not pray, especially in private, (and I never met with a devil-denier who did,) have no religion of any kind, whatsoever pretensions they may choose to make.

Verse 7. From going to and fro on the earth] The translation of the Septuagint is curious: Περὶπαῖον τὴν γῆν καὶ ἐμπεριπατήσας τὴν οὐρανόν, παρῖσιμα, "Having gone round the earth, 9 Then Satan answered the LORD, and said, Doth Job serve God for nought?

and walked over all that is under heaven, I am come hither." The Chaldee says, "I am come from going round the earth to examine the works of the children of men; and from walking through it." Coverdale, who generally hits the sense, translates thus: I have gone about the land and walked thorough it. Mr. Goode, From roaming round the earth, and walking about it.

St. Peter, as has already been stated, ver. 6. refers to this. Be sober, be vigilant; for your ADVERSARY the DEVIL, GOETH ABOUT as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour. I rather think, with Coverdale, that אֵרֶץ arets, here signifies rather that land, than the habitable globe. The words are exceedingly emphatic; and the latter verb הִיחָלֵחַ hithhalech being in the hithpael conjugation, shows how earnest and determined the devil is in his work: he sets himself to walk; he is busily employed in it; he is seeking the destruction of men; and while they sleep, he wakes; while they are careless, he is alert. The spirit of this saying is often expressed by the simple inhabitants of the country: when they perceive a man plotting mischief, and frequent in transgression, they say, The devil is busy with him.

Verse 8. Hast thou considered my servant Job] Literally, Hast thou placed thy heart on my servant Job? Hast thou viewed his conduct with attention, while thou wert roaming about, seeking whom thou mightest devour? viz. the careless, prayerless, and profligate in general.

Verse 9. Doth Job serve God for nought?] Thou hast made it his interest to be exemplary in his conduct: for this assertion Satan gives his reasons in what immediately follows.

Verse 10. Hast thou not made a hedge about him] Thou hast fortified him with spikes and spears. Thou hast defended him as by an unapproachable hedge. He is an object of thy peculiar care: and is not exposed to the common trials of life.

Verse 11. But put forth thine hand] Shoot the dart of poverty and affliction against him.

And he will curse thee to thy face.] אִם יָרֶךְ im lo al paneycha Yebarchicha, "If he will not bless thee only in proportion to the temporal good thou bestowest upon him:—to the providential and gracious appearances or displays of thy power in his behalf. man has his price." But you have not bought such a one; "No, because I would not go up to his price. He valued himself at more than I thought him worth; and I could get others cheaper, who, in the general, muster, would do as well." No doubt Sir R. met with many such; and the devil many more. But still God has multitudes that will neither sell their souls, their consciences, nor their country, for any price; who, though God should slay them, will, nevertheless, trust in him, and be honest men, howsoever tempted by the devil and his vicegerents. So did Job; so have done thousands: so will all do in whose hearts Christ dwells by faith.

Verse 12. All that he hath is in thy power] Satan cannot deprive a man even of an ass, a sheep, or a pig, but by especial permission of God. His power and malice are ever bounded, and under control.

So Satan went forth] The Targum adds, with authority from the presence of the Lord.

Verse 13. There was a day] The first day of the week, says the Targum. It no doubt refers to one of those birthday festivals mentioned before.

Verse 14. The asses feeding beside them] mim atonoth, the she-asses, which appear to have been more domesticated, as of more worth and use than the others, both for their milk and their work.

Verse 15. And the Sabeans fell] The Vulgate alone understands this of a people. The Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic, understand it as implying a marauding party. The Chaldee says, "Lilith, queen of Zamargad, rushed suddenly upon them, and carried them away." The Sabeans mentioned here are supposed to have been the same with those who were the descendants of Abraham by Keturah, whose son Jokshan begat Sheba. The sons of Keturah were sent by Abraham into the East, Gen. xxv. 6. and inhabited Arabia Deserta, on the east of the land of Uz. Hordes of predatory banditti were frequent in those countries; and continue so to the present day. They made sudden incursions, and carried off men, women, children, cattle, and goods of every description; and immediately retired to the desert, whither it was in vain to pursue them.

Verse 16. The fire of God is fallen] Though the fire of God may mean a great, a tremendous fire; yet it is most natural to suppose lightning is meant: for, as thunder was considered to be the voice of God, so lightning was the fire of God. And as the prince of the power of the air was permitted now to arm himself with this dreadful artillery of heaven, he might easily direct the zig-zag lightning to every part of the fields where the sheep were feeding, and so destroy the whole in a moment.

Verse 17. The Chaldeans made out three bands] The Chaldeans inhabited each side of the Euphrates, near to Babylon, which was their capital. They were also mixed with the wandering Arabs; and lived, like them, on rapine. They were the descendants of Chesed, son of Nahor, and brother of Huz, from whom they had their name Chesedim, which we translate Chaldeans. They divided themselves into three bands, in order the more speedily and effectually to encompass, collect, and drive off the three thousand camels: probably they mounted the camels, and rode off.

Verse 19. A great wind from the wilderness] Here was another proof of the influence of the prince of the power of the air. What mischief might he not do with this tremendous agent, were he not constantly under the control of the Almighty? He seems to have directed four different currents, which, blowing against the four corners or sides of the house, crushed it together, and involved all within in one common ruin.

Verse 20. Rent his mantle] Tearing the garments, shaving or pulling off the hair of the head, throwing dust or ashes on the head, and sitting on the ground, were acts by which immoderate grief was expressed. Job must have felt the bitterness of anguish when he was told that, in addition to the loss of all his property, he was deprived of his ten children by a violent death. Had he not felt this most poignantly, he would have been unworthy of the name of man.

Worshipped] Prostrated himself: lay all along upon the ground, with his face in the dust.

Verse 21. Naked came I out of my mother's womb] I had no earthly possessions when I came into the world; I cannot have less going out of it. What I have the Lord gave: as it was his free gift, he has a right to resume it when he pleases; and I owe him gratitude for the time he has permitted me to enjoy this gift.

Naked shall I return thither] Whither? Not to his mother's womb surely; nor does he call the earth his mother in this place. In the first clause of the verse he speaks without a metaphor; and in the latter he speaks in reference to the ground on which he was about to fall. As I came out of my mother's womb, destitute of all earthly possessions; so shall I return now shammah, THERE; i. e. to the earth on which he was now falling. That mother earth was a common expression in different nations I allow; but I believe no such metaphor was now in the mind of Job.

The Lord gave] The Chaldee has, "The Word of the Lord, מֵימְרָא דַּיָּאֵי meymra dayai, gave; and the Word of the Lord, and the house of his judgment, have taken away!" Word is used here personally, as in many other places of all the Targums.

Blessed be the name of the Lord] The following is a fine paraphrase on the sentiment in this verse:—

"Good when he gives, supremely good;
Nor less when he denies:
Afflictions from his sovereign hand
Are blessings in disguise."

Seeing I have lost my temporal goods, and all my domestic comforts, may God alone be all my portion! The Vulgate, Septuagint, and Coverdale, add, The Lord hath done as he pleased.

Verse 22. In all this Job sinned not] He did not give way to any action, passion, or expression, offensive to his Maker. He did not charge God with acting unkindly toward him: but felt as perfectly satisfied with the privation which the hand of God had occasioned, as he was with the affluence and health which that hand had bestowed. This is the transaction that gave the strong and vivid colouring to the character of Job: in this, and in this alone, he was a pattern of patience and resignation. In this Satan was utterly disappointed: he found a man who loved his God more than his earthly portion. This was a rare case, even in the experience of the devil. He had seen multitudes who bartered their God for money; and their hopes of blessedness in the world to come, for secular possessions in the present. He had been so often successful in this kind of temptation, that he made no doubt he should succeed again. He saw many who, when riches increased, set their hearts on them, and forgot God: he saw many also who, when deprived of earthly comforts, blasphemed their Maker. He, therefore, inferred that Job, in similar circumstances, would act like the others: he was disappointed. Reader, by riches or poverty has he succeeded with thee? Art thou pious when affluent, and patient and contented when in poverty?

THAT Job lived after the giving of the law, seems to me clear from many references to the rites and ceremonies instituted by Moses. In chap. i. ver. 5. we are informed that he sanctified his children, and offered burnt-offerings daily in the morning for each of them. This was a general ordinance of the law, as we may see Lev. ix. 7. Moses said unto Aaron, Go unto the altar, and offer thy sin-offering and thy burnt-offering, and make an atonement for thyself and for the people. Ver. 22. And Aaron lifted up his hand toward the people, and blessed them, and came down from offering the burnt-offering.

This sort of offering, we are told above, Job offered continually:—and this also was according to the law; Exod. xxix. 42. This shall be a continual burnt-offering throughout your generations. See also Numb. xxviii. 3, 6, 10, 15, 24, 31.

This custom was observed after the captivity, Ezra iii. 5. They offered the continual burnt-offering. And of every one that offered a free-will-offering, see also Neh. x. 33. Ezekiel, who prophesied during the captivity, enjoins this positively, chap. xvi. 13—16. Thou shalt daily prepare a burnt-offering unto the Lord: thou shalt prepare it every morning.

Job appears to have thought that his children might have sinned through ignorance, or sinned privately: and it was consequently necessary to make the due sacrifices to God in order to prevent his wrath, and their punishment: he, therefore, offered the burnt-offering, which was prescribed by the law in cases of sins committed through ignorance. See the ordinances Lev. iv. 1—35. v. 15—19. and particularly, Numb. xv. 24—29. I think it may fairly be presumed that the offerings which Job made for his children were in reference to these laws.

The worship of the sun, moon, and stars, as being the most prevalent and most seductive idolatry, was very expressly forbidden by the law, Deut. iv. 19. Take heed lest thou lift up thine eyes to heaven; and when thou seest the sun, and the moon, and the stars, all the host of heaven, shouldst be driven to worship them, and serve them. Job purges himself from this species of idolatry, chap. xxxi. ver. 26—28. If

I beheld the SUN when it shined, or the MOON walking in brightness, and my heart hath been secretly enticed, or my mouth hath kissed my hand. This also were an iniquity to be punished by the judge; for I should have DENIED the God that is ABOVE.

He clears himself also from adultery in reference to the law enacted against that sin, Job. xxxi. 9—12. If mine heart have been deceived by a woman, or if I have laid wait at my neighbour's door, then let my wife grind to another—for this is a heinous crime, yea it is an iniquity to be punished by the judges. See the law against this sin, Exod. xx. 14—17. Thou shalt not commit ADULTERY: thou shalt not COVET thy NEIGHBOUR'S WIFE. Lev. xx. 10. The man that committeth ADULTERY with another man's wife shall surely be put to death. See Deut. xxii. 22. And for the judge's office in such cases, see Deut. xvii. 9—12. Thou shalt come unto the priests and Levites, and unto the JUDGE that shall be in those days; and they shall show thee the sentence of JUDGMENT. 1 Sam. ii. 25. If one man sin against another, the JUDGE shall JUDGE him.

The following will, I think, be considered an evident allusion to the passage of the Red sea, and the destruction of the proud Egyptian king, Job. xxvi. 11, 12. The pillars of heaven tremble, and are astonished at thy reproof. He DIVIDETH the SEA with his power; and by his understanding he SMITETH through the PROUD. These, with several others that might be adduced, are presumptive proofs that the writer of this book lived after the giving and establishment of the law, if not much later, let Job himself live when he might. See other proofs in the notes.

NOTES ON CHAPTER II.

Verse 1. Again there was a day] How long this was after the former trial we know not: probably one whole year, when, as the Targum intimates, it was the time of the annual atonement; which, if so, must have been at least one whole year after the former; and during which period the patience and resignation of Job had sufficient scope to show themselves. This appearance of the sons of God and Satan is to be understood metaphorically—there could be nothing real in it—but it is intended to instruct us in the doctrine of the existence of good and evil spirits; that Satan pursues man with implacable enmity, and that he can do no man hurt either in his person or property but by the especial permission of God; and that God gives him permission only when he purposes to overrule it for the greater manifestation of his own glory, and the greater good of his tempted followers.

Verse 3. To destroy him without cause.] Thou wishest me to permit thee to destroy a man whose sins have not called for so heavy a judgment. This seems to be the meaning of this saying. The original word לבלע le balen, signifies to swallow down or devour; and this word St. Peter had no doubt in view in the place quoted on ver. 7. of the preceding chapter. Your adversary the devil goeth about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may DEVOUR; ζαρκὴν λέοντα zarkēn leōntin, seeking whom he may swallow or GULP DOWN. See my note on 1 Pet. v. 8.

Verse 4. Skin for skin] That is, a man will part with all he has in the world to save his life; and he will part with all by piecemeal till he has left nothing on earth, and even be thankful, provided his life be spared. Thou hast only destroyed his property; thou hast left him his life and his health. Thou hast not touched his flesh nor his bone; therefore, he is patient and resigned. Man, through the love of life, will go much farther: he will give up one member to save the rest: yea, limb after limb, as long as there is hope that, by such sacrifices, life may be spared or prolonged. This is the meaning given to the passage by the Targum; and I believe, the true one: hence, ver. 7. The Lord says, Save his life.

Verse 5. He will curse thee to thy face.] Literally, If he will bless thee to thy face, or appearances. His piety to thee will be always regulated by thy bounty to him. See the note on chap. i. ver. 11.

9 ¶ Then said his wife unto him,

Verse 6. But save his life]. His body thou shalt have permission to afflict, but against his life thou shalt have no power; therefore, take care of his life. The original נָפְשׁוֹ naphsho shemor, may be translated, keep his soul: but the word also signifies life; yet in the hands of the destroyer the life of this holy man is placed! How astonishing is the economy of salvation! it is so managed by the unlimited power and skill of God that the grand adversary of souls becomes himself, by the order of God, the preserver of that which the evil of his nature incessantly prompts him to destroy!

Verse 7. Sore biles] נִשְׁכֵּי רֶמֶס shechein ra, "with an evil inflammation." What this diabolical disorder was interpreters are not agreed. Some think it was the leprosy; and this is the reason why he dwelt by himself, and had his habitation in an unclean place, without the city, Septuagint, ἐξω τῆς πόλεως, or in the open air: and the reason why his friends beheld him as far off, ver. 12. was because they knew that the disorder was infectious.

His scraping himself with a potsherd indicates a disease accompanied with intolerable itching, one of the characteristics of the small-pox. Query, Was it not this disorder? And in order to save his life, for that he had in especial command, did not Satan himself direct him to the cool regimen, without which, humanly speaking, the disease must have proved fatal! In the elephantiasis and leprosy there is, properly speaking, no bile, or detached inflammation, or swelling; but one uniform disordered state of the whole surface, so that the whole body is covered with loathsome scales, and the skin appears like that of the elephant, thick and wrinkled, from which appearance the disorder has got its name. In the small-pox it is different: each pock or pustule is a separate inflammation, tending to suppuration; and, during this process, the fever is in general very high, and the anguish and distress of the patient intolerable. When the suppuration is pretty far advanced, the itching is extreme; and the hands are often obliged to be confined to prevent the patient from literally tearing his own flesh.

Verse 9. Then said his wife] To this verse the Septuagint add the following words: "Much time having elapsed, his wife said unto him, How long dost thou stand steadfast, saying, 'Behold I wait yet a little longer looking for the hope of my salvation.' Behold thy memorial is already blotted out from the earth, together with thy sons and thy daughters, the fruits of my pains and labours, for whom, with anxiety, I have laboured in vain. Speak, therefore, some word against God, and die." We translate Curse God and die, בָּרַךְ אֱלֹהִים וּמָוֶת barach Elohim vamuith. The verb בָּרַךְ barach is supposed to include in it the ideas of cursing and blessing: but it is not clear that it has the former meaning in any part of the Sacred Writings, though we sometimes translate it so.

Here it seems to be a strong irony. Job was exceedingly afflicted; and apparently dying, through sore disease: yet his soul was filled with gratitude to God. His wife, destitute of the salvation which her husband possessed, gave him this ironical reproof. Bless God and die—What! bless him for his goodness, while he is destroying all that thou hast! bless him for his support, while he is casting thee down and destroying thee! Bless on, and die.

The Targum says, that Job's wife's name was Dinah, and that the words which she spake to him on this occasion were בִּרְיָךְ מֵמַרָּא דַּיָּאֵל וּמִיִּת berich meymra dayai umith. Bless the Word of the Lord, and die.

Ovid has such an irony as I suppose this to to have been:

Verse 10. Thou speakest as one of the foolish] Thou speakest like an infidel: like one, who has no knowledge of God, of religion, or of a future state.

The Targum, who calls this woman Dinah, translates thus: "Thou speakest like one of those women who have wrought folly in the house of their father." This is in reference to an ancient rabbinical opinion, that Job lived in the days of the patriarch Jacob, whose daughter Dinah he had married.

We have had the long, the free, the unmerited use of them; and shall we be offended at the owner, when he comes to reclaim his own property! This would be foolish, ungrateful, and wicked. So may every one reason who is suffering from adversity. But who, besides Job, reasons thus? Man is naturally discontented and ungrateful.

[In all this did not Job sin with his lips.] The Chaldee adds, But in his heart he thought words. He had surmisings of heart, though he let nothing escape from his lips.

Verse 11: Job's three friends] The first was Eliphaz, the Temanite; or, as the Septuagint has it, Ελιφαζ ὁ Θαυμανων βασιλευς, Eliphaz the king of the Thaimanites. Eliphaz was one of the sons of Esau; and Teman, of Eliphaz, Gen. xxvi. 10, 11. Teman was a city of Edom, Jer. xlix. 7—20. Ezek. xxv. 13. Amos i. 11, 12.

Bildad the Shuhite] Or, as the Septuagint, Βαλδαδ, ὁ Σουχων τυραννος, Baldad, tyrant of the Suchites. Shuah was the son of Abraham, by Keturah; and his posterity is reckoned among the Easterns. It is supposed he should be placed with his brother Midian, and his brother's sons Sheba and Dedan. See Gen. xxv. 2, 3. Dedan was a city of Edom, see Jer. xlix. 8. and seems to have been situated in its southern boundary, as Teman was in its western, Ezek. xxv. 13.

Zophar the Naamathite] Or, according to the Septuagint, Σωφορ Μιναιων βασιλευς, Sophar king of the Minaites. He most probably came from that Naamah, which was bordering upon the Edomites to the south, and fell by lot to the tribe of Judah, Josh. xv. 21—41. These circumstances which have already been mentioned in the introduction, prove that Job must have dwelt in the land of Edom; and that all his friends dwelt in Arabia Petrea, or in the countries immediately adjacent. That some of those Eastern people were highly cultivated we have at least indirect proof in the case of the Temanites, Jer. xlix. 7. Concerning Edom thus saith the Lord of Hosts, Is wisdom no more in Teman? Is counsel perished from the prudent? Is their wisdom vanished? They are celebrated also in Baruch iii. 22, 23. Speaking of wisdom, he says, "It hath not been heard of in Chanaan; neither hath it been seen in Theman." The Agarenes that seek wisdom upon earth, the merchants of Meran and of Theman, the expounders of fables, and searchers out of understanding, none of these have known the way of wisdom." It is evident enough from these quotations, that the inhabitants of those districts were celebrated for their knowledge; and the sayings of Job's three friends are proofs that their reputation for wisdom stood on very solid foundations.

Verse 12: They rent every one his mantle] I have already had frequent occasions to point out, and illustrate by quotations from the ancients, the actions that were used in order to express profound grief, such as wrapping themselves in sackcloth, covering the face, strewing dust or ashes upon the head, sitting upon the bare ground, &c. &c. significant actions which were in use among all nations.

Verse 13: They sat down with him upon the ground seven days] They were astonished at the unprecedented change which had taken place in the circumstances of this most eminent man: they could not reconcile his present situation with any thing they had met with in the history of divine providence. The seven days mentioned here were the period appointed for mourning. The Israelites mourned for Jacob seven days, Gen. i. 10. And the men of Jabesh mourned so long for the death of Saul, 1 Sam. xxxi. 13. 1 Chron. x. 12. And Ezekiel sat on the ground with the captives at Chebar, and mourned with and for them seven days, Ezek. iii. 15. The wise son of Sirach says, "Seven days do men mourn for him that is dead." Eccles. xxii. So calamitous was the state of Job, that they considered him as a dead man; and went through the prescribed period of mourning for him.

They saw that his grief was very great.] This is the reason why they did not speak to him: they believed him to be suffering for heavy crimes; and, seeing him suffer so much, they were not willing to add to his distresses by invectives or reproach. Job himself first broke silence,

NOTES ON CHAPTER III.

Verse 1. After this Job opened his mouth.] After the seven days' mourning was over, there being no prospect of relief, Job is represented as thus cursing the day of his birth. Here the poetic part of the book begins; for most certainly there is nothing in the preceding chapters either in the form or spirit of Hebrew poetry. It is easy, indeed, to break the sentences into hemistichs; but this does not constitute them poetry: for, although Hebrew poetry is in general in hemistichs, yet it does not follow that the division of narrative into hemistichs must necessarily constitute it poetry.

In many cases the Asiatic poets introduce their compositions with prose narrative; and, having in this way prepared the reader for what he is to expect, begin their deevans, casidehs, gazels, &c. This appears to be the plan followed by the author of this book. Those who still think, after examining the structure of those chapters, and comparing them with the undoubted poetic parts of the book, that they also, and the ten concluding verses, are poetry, have my consent, while I take the liberty to believe most decidedly the opposite.

Cursed his day.] That is, the day of his birth; and thus he gave vent to the agonies of his soul; and the distractions of his mind, and his execrations have something in them awfully solemn, tremendously deep, and strikingly sublime. But let us not excuse all the things which he said in his haste, and in the bitterness of his soul, because of his former well-established character of patience. He bore all his privations with becoming resignation to the divine will and providence: but now, feeling himself the subject of continual sufferings, being in heaviness through manifold temptation, and probably the light of God withdrawn from his mind, as his consolations most undoubtedly were, he regrets that ever he was born; and in a very high strain of impassioned poetry, curses his day. We find a similar execration to this in Jeremiah, chap. xx. 14—18. and in other places; which, by the way, are no proofs that the one borrowed from the other; but that this was the common mode of Asiatic thinking, speaking, and feeling, on such occasions.

Verse 3. There is a man-child conceived.] The word הרה harah, signifies to conceive; yet here, it seems, it should be taken in the sense of being born, as it is perfectly unlikely that the night of conception should be either distinctly known or published.

Verse 4. Let that day be darkness.] The meaning is exactly the same with our expression, "Let it be blotted out of the calendar." However distinguished it may have been, as God regard it from above; neither let the light shine upon it.

5 Let darkness and ^c the shadow of death ^d stain it; let a cloud dwell upon it; ^e let the blackness of the day terrify it.

6 As for that night, let darkness seize upon it; ^f let it not be joined unto the the birthday of a man once celebrated for his possessions, liberality, and piety, let it no longer be thus noted; as he who was thus celebrated is now the sport of adversity, the most impoverished, most afflicted, and the most wretched of human beings.

Let not God regard it from above.] אל ידרשהו al yidreshehu, "Let him not require it"—let him not consider it essential to the completion of the days of the year: and, therefore, he adds, neither let the light shine upon it. If it must be a part of duration, let it not be distinguished by the light of the sun.

Verse 5. Let darkness and the shadow of death stain it.] יגאלוהו yigaluhu, "pollute or avenge it," from גאל gael, to vindicate, avenge, &c. hence, גאל gael, the nearest of kin, whose right it was to redeem an inheritance, and avenge the death of his relative by slaying the murderer. Let this day be pursued, overtaken, and destroyed. Let natural darkness, the total privation of the solar light, rendered still more intense by death's shadow projected over it, seize on and destroy this day, ἐλαβοι αὐτὴν, Septuagint, alluding, perhaps, says Mr. Parkhurst, to the avenger of blood seizing the offender.

Let a cloud dwell upon it.] Let the thickest clouds fall upon it. Coverdale. Let the thickest clouds have there their dwelling-place; let that be the period of time on which they shall constantly rest, and never be dispersed. This seems to be the import of the original תשכן עליו tishcan alav ananah. Let it be the place in which clouds shall be continually gathered together, so as to be the storehouse of the densest vapours, still in the act of being increasingly condensed.

Let the blackness of the day terrify it.] And let it be lapped in with sorrow.—Coverdale. This is very expressive: lap signifies to fold up, or envelope any particular thing, with fold upon fold, so as to cover it every where, and secure it in all points. Leaving out the semicolon, we had better translate the whole clause thus: "Let the thickest cloud have its dwelling-place upon it, and let the bitternesses of a day fill it with terror." A day similar to that, says the Targum, in which Jeremiah was distressed for the destruction of the house of the sanctuary; or like that in which Jonah was cast into the sea of Tarsis. Such a day as that on which some great or national misfortune has happened: probably in allusion to that in which the darkness that might be felt enveloped the whole land of Egypt; and the night in which the destroying angel slew all the first-born in the land.

Verse 6. As for that night, let darkness seize upon it.] I think the Targum has hit the sense days of the year, let it not come into the number of the months.

of this whole verse: "Let darkness seize upon that night; let it not be reckoned among the annual festivals; in the number of the months of the calendar let it not be computed."

Some understand the word hix ophel, as signifying a dark storm: hence the Vulgate, tenebrosus turbo; "a dark whirlwind." And hence Coverdale, Let the dark storme overcome that night, let it not be reckoned among the dapes off the peare, nor counted in the monethes. Every thing is here personified, day, night, darkness, shadow of death, cloud, &c. And the same idea of the total extinction of that portion of time, or its being rendered ominous and portentous, is pursued through all these verses, from the third to the ninth, inclusive. The imagery is diversified, the expressions varied, but the idea is the same.

Verse 7. Lo, let that night be solitary] The word hinneh, behold, or lo! is wanting in one of De Rossi's MSS. nor is it expressed in the Septuagint, Vulgate, Syriac, or Arabic.

The word galmut, which we translate solitary, is properly Arabic. From ghalama or jalama, signifying to cut off, make bare, amputate, comes jalmut, a rock, a great stone; and jalameedet, weight, a burden, trouble, from which we may gather Job's meaning—"Let that night be grievous, oppressive, as destitute of good as a bare rock is of verdure." The Targum gives the sense, In that night let there be tribulation.

Let no joyful voice come therein] Let there be no choirs of singers: no pleasant music heard; no dancing or merriment. The word renannah, signifies any brisk movement, such as the vibration of the rays of light, or the brisk modulation of the voice in a cheerful ditty. The Targum has, Let not the crowing of the rural or wild cock resound in it. Let all work be intermitted; let there be no sportive exercises; and let all animals be totally silent.

Verse 8. Let them curse it that curse the day] This translation is scarcely intelligible. I have waded through a multitude of interpretations, without being able to collect from them such a notion of the verse as could appear to me probable. Schultens, Rosenmüller, and after them Mr. Goode, have laboured much to make it plain. They think the custom of sorcerers, who had execrations for peoples, places, things, days, &c. is here referred to; such as Balaam, Elymas, and many others were: but I cannot think that a man who knew the Divine Being, and his sole government of the world, so well as Job did, would make such an allusion, who must have known that such persons and their pretensions were impostors and execrable vanities. I shall give as near a translation as I can of the words, and subjoin a short paraphrase, yikkibehu orirey יום העידים קבר ארירי yom, ha atidim orer leviathan. "Let them curse it who detest the day; them who are ready to raise up the leviathan." That is, Let them curse my birthday who hate daylight, such as adulterers, murderers, thieves, and banditti, for whose practices the night is more convenient; and let them curse it who being, like me, weary of life, are desperate enough to provoke the leviathan, the crocodile, to tear them to pieces. This version is nearly the same as that given by Coverdale, Let them that curse the day, give it their curse also, even those that be ready to raise up leviathan. By leviathan some understand the greatest and most imminent dangers; and others the devil, whom the enchanters are desperate enough to attempt to raise by their incantations.

Cabmet understands the whole to be spoken of the Atlantes, a people of Ethiopia, a people who curse the sun, because it parches their fields and their bodies; and who fearlessly attack, kill, and eat, the crocodile. This seems a good sense.

Verse 9. Let the stars of the twilight thereof] The stars of the twilight may here refer to the planets Venus, Jupiter, Mars, and Mercury, as well as to the brighter fixed stars.

Let it look for light] Here the prosopopœia or personification is still carried on. The darkness is represented as waiting for the lustre of the evening star, but is disappointed; and then for the Aurora or dawn, but equally in vain. He had prayed that its light, the sun, should not shine upon it, ver. 4. and here he prays that its evening star may be totally obscured, and that it might never see the dawning of the day. Thus his execration comprehends every thing that might irradiate or enliven it.

Verse 10. Because it shut not up the doors] Here is the reason why he curses the day and night in which he was conceived and born; because, had he never been brought into existence, he would never have seen trouble. It seems, however, very harsh that he should have wished the destruction of his mother, in order that his birth might have been prevented: and I rather think Job's execration did not extend thus far. The Targum understands the passage as speaking of the umbilical cord, by which the fetus is nourished in its mother's womb: had this been shut up, there must have been a miscarriage, or he must have been dead born; and thus sorrow would have been hidden from his eyes. This seeming gloss is much nearer the letter and spirit of the Hebrew than is generally imagined. I shall quote the words, ki lo sagar daltey bitni, because it did not shut up the doors of my belly. This is much more consistent with the feelings of humanity, than to wish his mother's womb to have been his grave.

Verse 11. Why died I not from the womb?] As the other circumstance did not take place, why was I not still-born, without the possibility of revivescence? or, as this did not occur, why did I not die as soon as born? These three things appear to me to be clearly intended here:—1. Dying in the womb; or never coming to maturity, as in the case of a miscarriage. 2. Being still-born, without ever being able to breathe. 3. Or, if born alive, dying within a short time after. And to these states, he seems to refer in the following verses.

Verse 12. Why did the knees prevent me?] Why was I dandled on the knees? Why was I nourished by the breasts? In either of the above cases I had neither been received into a mother's lap, nor hung upon a mother's breasts.

Verse 13. For now should I have lain still] In that case I had been insensible, quiet, without these overwhelming agitations; slept, unconscious of evil; been at rest, been out of the reach of calamity and sorrow.

Verse 14. With kings and counsellors of the earth] I believe this translation to be perfectly correct. The counsellors, viz yoatsey, I suppose to mean the privy council, or advisers of kings; those without whose advice kings seldom undertake wars, expeditions, &c. These mighty agitators of the world are at rest in their graves, after the lives of commotion which they have led among men: most of whom, indeed, have been the troublers of the peace of the globe.

Which build desolate places] Who erect mausoleums, funeral monuments, sepulchral pyramids, &c. to keep their names from perishing, while their bodies are turned to corruption. I cannot think, with some learned men, that Job is here referring to those patriotic princes who employed themselves in repairing the ruins and desolations which others had occasioned. His simple idea is that, had he died from the womb, he would have been equally at rest, neither troubling nor troubled, as those defunct kings and planners of wars and great designs are; who have nothing to keep even their names from perishing, but the monuments which they have raised to contain their corrupting flesh, mouldering bones, and dust.

Verse 15. Or with princes that had gold] Chief or mighty men, lords of the soil, or fortunate adventurers in merchandise, who got gold in abundance, filled their houses with silver, left all behind, and had nothing reserved for themselves but the empty places which they had made for their last dwelling; and where their dust now sleeps, devoid of care, painful journeys, and anxious expectations. He alludes here to the case of the covetous, whom nothing can satisfy, as an Asiatic writer has observed, but the dust that fills his mouth when laid in the grave. SAADY.

Verse 16. Or as a hidden untimely birth] An early miscarriage, which was scarcely perceptible by the parent herself: and in this case he had not been; he had never had the distinguishable form of a human being, whether male or female.

As infants] Little ones; those farther advanced in maturity, but miscarried long before the time of birth.

Verse 17. There the wicked cease] In the grave the oppressors of men cease from irritating, harassing, and distressing their fellow-creatures, and dependants.

And there the weary be at rest] Those who were worn out with the cruelties and tyrannies of the above. The troublers and the troubled; the restless and the submissive; the toils of the great, and the labours of the slave, are here put in opposition.

Verse 18. The prisoners rest together] Those who were slaves, feeling all the troubles, and scarcely tasting any of the pleasures of life, are quiet in the grave together; and the voice of the oppressor, the hard unrelenting taskmaster, which was more terrible than death, is heard no more. They are free from his exactions, and his mouth is silent in the dust. This may be a reference to the Egyptian bondage. The children of Israel cried by reason of their oppressors or taskmasters.

Verse 19. The small and great are there] All sorts and conditions of men are equally blended in the grave, and ultimately reduced to one common dust: and of the bond and the free there is no difference. The grave is

"The appointed place of rendezvous where all These travellers meet."

Equality is absolute among the sons of men in their entrance into and exit from the world: all the intermediate states is disparity. All men begin and end life alike; and there is no difference between the king and the cottager. A contemplation of this should equally humble the great and the small. The saying is trite, but it is true,

And why do not the living lay these things

There is a fine saying in Seneca ad Marciam, cap. 20. on this subject, which may serve as a comment on this place: *Mors--servitutem invito domino remittit; hæc captivorum catenas levat;
hæc è carcere educit, quos exire imperium im-pôts vetuerat. Hæc est in quo nemo humilitatem

It brings out of the dungeon those whom impotent authority had forbidden to go at large.
This is the state in which none is sensible of his humiliation. Death obeys no man. It does nothing according to the will of another. It reduces by a just law, to a state of equality, all who, in their families and circumstances, had unequal lots in life."

Verse 20. Wherefore is light given] Why is life granted to him who is incapable of enjoying it; or of performing its functions?

Verse 21. Which long for death] They look to it as the end of all their miseries; and long more for a separation from life than those who love gold do for a rich mine.

Verse 22. Which rejoice exceedingly] Literally, They rejoice with joy, and exult when they find the grave.

There is a various reading here in one of Kennicott's MSS. which gives a different sense.
Instead of who rejoice גיל אלו ali gil, with גור,
it has גל אלו ali gal, who rejoice at the tomb;
and exult when they find the grave.

Verse 23. To a man whose way is hid] Who knows not what is before him in either world; but is full of fears and trembling concerning both.

whose futurity God hath overwhelmed. But I cannot see any necessity for departing from the common text, which gives both an easy and natural sense.

Verse 24. For my sighing cometh] Some think that this refers to the ulcerated state of Job's body, mouth, hands, &c. He longed for food: but was not able to lift it to his mouth with his hands, nor masticate it when brought thither. This is the sense in which Origen has taken the words. But perhaps it is most natural to suppose that he means his sighing took away all appetite, and served him in place of meat.
There is the same thought in Psa. xlii. 3. My tears have been my meat day and night: which place is not an imitation of Job; but more likely Job an imitation of it; or rather both an imitation of nature.

My roarings are poured out] My lamentations are like the noise of the murmuring stream, or the dashings of the overswollen torrent.

Verse 25. For the thing which I greatly feared] Literally, the fear that I feared; or,
I feared a fear, as in the margin. While I was in prosperity I thought adversity might come, and I had a dread of it. I feared the loss of my family and my property; and both have occurred. I was not lifted up: I knew what I possessed I had from the divine providence; and that he who gave might take away. I am not stripped of my all as a punishment of my self-confidence.

Verse 26. I was not in safety] If this verse be read interrogatively, it will give a good and easy sense: Was I not in safety? Had I not rest? Was I not in comfort? Yet trouble came.
It is well known that, previously to this attack of Satan, Job was in great prosperity and peace.
Mr. Goode translates, I had no peace; yea, I had no rest. Yea, I had no respite as the trouble came on: and refers the whole to the quick succession of the series of heavy evils by which he was tried. There is a similar thought in the psalmist, Deep crieth unto deep at the noise of thy water-sports; all thy waves and thy billows have gone over me, Psa. xlii. 7. One evil trends on the heels of another.

In this chapter Job's conflict begins. Now, and not before. Satan appears to have access to his mind. When he deprived him of his property, and what was still dearer, of his sons and his daughters, the hope of his family, he bore all with the most exemplary patience, and the deepest resignation to the divine will. When his adversary was permitted to touch his body, and afflict it in the most grievous and distressing manner, rendered still more intolerable by his being previously deprived of all the comforts and necessities of life; still he held fast his integrity: no complaint, no murmur, was heard. From the Lord's hand he received his temporal good; and from that hand he received his temporal evil, the privation of that good. Satan was, therefore, baffled in all his attempts; Job continued to be a perfect and upright man, fearing God and avoiding evil. This was Job's triumph, or rather the triumph of divine grace, and Satan's defeat and confusion.

It is very seldom God ever permits Satan to waste the substance, or afflict the body, of any man; but at all times this malevolent spirit may have access to the mind of any man; and inject doubts, fears, diffidence, perplexities, and even unbelief. And here is the spiritual conflict. Now, their wrestling is not with flesh and blood, with men like themselves; nor about secular affairs; but they have to contend with angels, principalities, and powers, and the rulers of the darkness of this world, and spiritual wickednesses in heavenly places. In such cases Satan is often permitted to diffuse darkness into the understanding, and envelope the heavens with clouds. Hence are engendered false views of God and his providence; of men, of the spiritual world, and particularly of the person's own state and circumstances. Every thing is distorted, and all seen through a false medium. Indescribable distractions and uneasiness are hereby induced: the mind is like a troubled sea, tossed by a tempest that seems to confound both heaven and earth. Strong temptations to things which the soul contemplates with abhorrence are injected; and which are followed by immediate accusations, as if the injections were the offspring of the heart itself: and the trouble and dismay produced are represented as the sense of guilt, from a consciousness of having, in heart, committed these evils! Thus Satan tempts, accuses, and upbraids, in order to perplex the soul, induce scepticism, and destroy the empire of faith. Behold here the permission of God; and behold also his sovereign control: all this time the grand tempter is not permitted to touch the heart, the seat of the affections; nor offer even the slightest violence to the will. The soul is cast down, but not destroyed; perplexed, but not in despair. It is on all sides harassed: without are fightings; within are fears; but the will is inflexible on the side of God and truth; and the heart, with all its train of affections and passions, follows it. The man does not wickedly depart from his God: the outworks are violently assailed, but not taken: the city is still safe, and the citadel impregnable. Heaviness may endure for the night, but joy cometh in the morning. Jesus is soon seen walking upon the waters. He speaks peace to the winds and the sea; immediately there is a calm. Satan is bruised down under the feet of the sufferer; the clouds are dispersed; the heavens reappear; and the soul, to its surprise, finds that the storm, instead of hindering, has driven it nearer to the haven whither it would be.

The reader who closely examines the subject, will find that this was the case of Job. The following chapters show the conflict of the soul; the end of the book, God's victory, and his exaltation. Satan sifted Job as wheat; but his faith failed not.

NOTES ON CHAPTER IV.

Verse 1. Then Eliphaz the Temanite answered] For seven days this person and his two friends had observed a profound silence, being awed and confounded at the sight of Job's unprecedented affliction. Having now sufficiently contemplated his afflicted state, and heard his bitter complaint, forgetting that he came as a comforter, and not as a reprover, he loses the feeling of the friend in the haughtiness of the censor, endeavouring to strip him of his only consolation, the testimony of his conscience, (that, in simplicity and godly sincerity, not in fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, he had his conversation among men,) by insinuating that if his ways had been upright he would not have been abandoned to such distress and affliction; and if his heart possessed that righteousness of which he boasted, he could not have been so suddenly cast down by adversity.

Verse 2. If we assay to commune with thee] As if he had said, Should I and my friends endeavour to reason with thee ever so mildly, because we shall have many things to say by way of reprehension, thou wilt be grieved and faint; and this we may reasonably infer from the manner in which thou bearest thy present afflictions. Yet, as thou hast uttered words which are injurious to thy Maker, who can forbear speaking? It is our duty to rise up on the part of God, though thereby we shall grieve him who is our friend. This was a plausible beginning, and certainly was far from being insincere.

Verse 3. Thou hast instructed many] Thou hast seen many in affliction and distress, and thou hast given them such advice as was suitable to their state, and effectual to their relief; and by this means thou hast strengthened the weak hands and the feeble knees; the desponding have been encouraged, and the irresolute confirmed and excited to prompt and proper actions, by thy counsel and example.

Verse 5. But now it is come upon thee] Now it is thy turn to suffer, and give an example of the efficacy of thy own principles; but, instead of this, behold thou faintest. Either, therefore, thou didst pretend to what thou badst not; or, thou art not making a proper use of the principles which thou didst recommend to others.

Verse 6. Is not this thy fear] I think Coverdale hits the true meaning; Where is now thy feare of God, thy stedfastnesse, thy patience, and the perfectnesse of thy life? If these be genuine, surely there is no cause for all this complaint, vexation, and despair. That this is the meaning the next words show.

Verse 7. Remember, I pray thee] Recollect, if thou canst, a single instance where God abandoned an innocent man, or suffered him to perish. Didst thou ever hear of a case in which God abandoned a righteous man to destruction? Wert thou a righteous man, and innocent of all hidden crimes, would God abandon thee thus to the malice of Satan? or let loose the plagues of affliction and adversity against thee?

Verse 8. They that plough iniquity] A proverbial form of speech drawn from nature. Whatever seed a man sows in the ground, he reaps the same kind; for every seed produces its like. Thus Solomon, Prov. xx. 8. "He that soweth iniquity shall reap vanity." And St. Paul, Gal. vi. 7, 8. "Be not deceived, God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he who soweth to the spirit, shall of the spirit reap life everlasting." And of the same nature is that other saying of the apostle, He that soweth sparingly shall reap sparingly, 2 Cor. ix. 6.

The same figure is employed by the prophet Hosea, viii. 7. They have sown the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind, and chap. x. ver. 12, 13: Sow to yourselves in righteousness; reap in mercy. Ye have ploughed wickedness; ye have reaped iniquity. The last sentence contains not only the same image, but almost the same words as those used by Eliphaz.

Our Lord expresses the same thing, in the following words—Matt. vii. 16—18. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but plough iniquity, and sow wickedness, reap the same.

9 By the blast of God they perish, and^k by the breath of his nostrils are they consumed.

10 The roaring of the lion, and the voice of the fierce lion, and the teeth of the young lions are broken.

11 The old lion perisheth for lack of prey, and the stout lion's whelps are scattered abroad.

Isa. 30. 33. See Exod. 15. 8. Ch. 1. 19. & 15. 30. Isa. 11. 4. 2 Thess. 2. 8.—1 Psal. 58. 6.—m Psal. 34. 10.

a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. So the Greeks,

Ατης αρουρα θανατον εκκαριζεται.

ÆSCH. Επτα επι Θηβαις, ver. 607.

The field of iniquity produces the fruit of death.

Υςεις γαρ εξαρθους' ακαρπιας σαχυν

Ατης, οθεν παγκλαυτον εξαμα θερος.

Id. Περσαι, ver. 823.

"For oppression, when it springs, puts forth the blade of vengeance; and its fruit yields a ripe harvest of repentant wo." Potter.

The image is common every where, because it is a universal law of nature.

Verse 9. By the blast of God they perish] As the noxious and parching east wind blasts and destroys vegetation, so the wicked perish under the indignation of the Almighty.

Verse 10. The roaring of the lion] By the roaring lion, fierce lion, old lion, stout lion, and lion's whelps, tyrannous rulers of all kinds are intended. The design of Eliphaz, in using these figures, is to show that even those who are possessed of the greatest authority and power, the kings, rulers, and princes of the earth, when they become wicked and oppressive to their subjects, are cast down, broken to pieces, and destroyed, by the incensed justice of the Lord; and their whelps, their children and intended successors scattered without possessions over the face of the earth.

Verse 11. The old lion perisheth] In this and the preceding verse the word lion occurs five times; and in the original the words are all different.

1. אריה ariyeh, from ארה arah, to tear off. 2. שחל shachal; which, as it appears to signify black, or dark, may mean the black lion, which is said to be found in Ethiopia and India. 3. כפיר Kephir, a young lion, from כפר capfar, to cover, because he is said to hide himself in order to surprise his prey: which the old one does not. 4. ליש layish, from לש lash, to knead, trample upon; because of his method of seizing his prey. 5. לבית labia, from לב laba, to suckle with the first milk: a lioness giving suck; at which time they are peculiarly fierce. All these words may point out some quality of the lion: and this was probably the cause why they were originally given; but it is likely that in process of time, they served only to designate the beast, without any particular reference to any of his properties. We have one and the same idea, when we say the lion—the king of beasts—the monarch of the forest—the most noble of quadrupeds, &c.

Verse 12. Now a thing was secretly brought to me] To give himself the more authority, he professes to have received a vision from God, by which he was taught the secret of the divine dispensations in providence; and a confirmation of the doctrine which he was now stating to Job; and which he applied in a different way to what was designed in the divine communication.

Mine ear received a little thereof.] Mr. Goode translates, "And mine ear received a whisper along with it." The apparition was the general subject; and the words related ver. 17, &c. were the whispers which he heard when the apparition stood still.

Verse 13. From the visions of the night] "It is in vain," says Mr Goode, "to search through ancient or modern poetry for a description that has any pretensions to rival that upon which we are now entering. Midnight; solitude; the deep sleep of all around; the dreadful chill and horripilation or erection of the hair over the whole body; the shivering, not of the muscles only, but of the bones themselves; the gliding approach of the spectre; the abruptness of his pause; his undefined and indescribable form; are all powerful and original characters, which have never been given with equal effect by any other writer."

Mr. Hervey's illustration is also striking and natural. "Twas in the dead of night; all nature lay shrouded in darkness; every creature was buried in sleep. The most profound silence reigned through the universe. In these solemn moments Eliphaz alone, all wakeful and solitary, was musing on sublime subjects. When lo! an awful being burst into his apartment. A spirit passed before his face. Astonishment seized the beholder. His bones shivered within him, his flesh trembled all over him, and the hair of his head stood erect with horror. Sudden and unexpected was its appearance; not such its departure. It stood still, to present itself more fully to his view. It made a solemn pause, to prepare his mind for some momentous message. After which a voice was heard. A voice, for the importance of its meaning, worthy to be had in everlasting remembrance. It spoke, and these were its words."

and mighty man be pure before his Maker? Is any man, considered merely in and of himself, either holy in his conduct, or pure in his heart? No. He must be justified by the mercy of God, through an atoning sacrifice: he must be sanctified by the holy spirit of God, and thus made a partaker of the divine nature. Then he is justified before God, and pure in the sight of his Maker: and this is a work which God himself alone can do; so the work is not man's work, but God's. It is false to infer from the words of this spectre (which, whether it came from heaven or hell, we know not, for its communication shows and rankles a wound, without providing a cure,) that no man can be justified before God, and no man can be purified; when God both justifies the ungodly, and sanctifies the unholy. The meaning can be no more than this: no man can make an atonement for his own sins, nor purify his own heart. Hence all boasting is for ever excluded. Of this Eliphaz believed Job to be guilty, as he appeared to talk of his righteousness and purity, as if they had been his own acquisition.

Verse 18. Behold, he put no trust in his servants] This verse is generally understood to refer to the fall of angels; for these were some of those heavenly beings who kept not their first estate: they did not persevere to the end of their probation; and, therefore, fell into condemnation, and are reserved in chains of darkness for the judgment of the great day. Jude 6. It is said he put no trust in them. He knew that nothing could be absolutely immutable but himself; and that no intelligent beings could subsist in a state of purity, unless continually dependent on himself, and deriving constant supplies of grace, power, and light, from him who gave them their being.

And his angels he charged with folly] Not chargeth, as many quote the passage. He charged those with folly, who kept not their first estate. It does not appear that he is charging the others in the same way, who continue steadfast.

The several translations of this verse, both ancient and modern, are different from each other. Here are the chief:—

In angelis suis reperit pravitatem. In his angels he found perverseness, VULGATE. The SEPTUAGINT is nearly the same. Il met la lumiere dans ses anges. He puts light into his angels, FRENCH BIBLE. Even those pure intelligences have continual need of being irradiated by the Almighty. אנוש בלתי נשחך ונחמד va-bemalakui neshim temcho, SYRIAC; and he hath put amazement in his angels. The Arabic is the same. In angelis suis ponet gloriationem. MONTANUS: In his angels he will put exultation. The Hebrew is תהלה taholah, irradiation, from הלל halah, to irradiate, glisten, or shine. In this place we may consider angels (מלאכים malacim) as heavenly or earthly messengers or agents of the Lord: and the glory, influence, and honour of their office as being put in them by the Most High. They are as planets which shine with a borrowed light. They have nothing but what they have received. Coverdale translates the whole verse thus: Behoide he hath founde unfaithfulnessse amonge his owne serbautes and proude disobedience amonge his angels. The sense is among all these interpreters; and if the fallen angels are meant, the passage is plain enough.

Verse 19. How much less? Rather, with the Vulgate, How much more? If angels may be unstable, how can man arrogate stability to himself who dwells in an earthly tabernacle, and who must shortly return to dust.

Crushed before the moth! The slightest accident oftentimes destroys. "A fly, a grape-stone, or a hair, can kill." Great men have fallen by all these. This is the general idea in the text; and it is useless to sift for meanings.

Verse 20. They are destroyed from morning to evening In almost every moment of time some human being comes into the world, and some one departs from it. Thus are they destroyed from morning to evening.

They perish for ever יובדו yobedu, peribunt; they pass by; they go out of sight; they moulder with the dust, and are soon forgotten. Who regards the past generation now among the dead?

Isaiah has a similar thought, chap. lvii. 1. The righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart: and merciful men are taken away, none considering that the righteous is taken away from the evil to come. Some think that Isaiah borrowed from Job: this will appear possible when it has been proved, which has never yet been done, that the writer of this book flourished before Isaiah. If, however, he borrowed the above thought, it must be allowed that it has been wondrously improved by coming through his hands.

Verse 21. Doth not their excellency—go away? Personal beauty, corporeal strength, powerful eloquence, and various mental endowments, pass away, or are plucked up by the roots: they are no more seen or heard among men; and their memory soon perisheth.

They die, even without wisdom. If wisdom means a pursuit of the best end, by the most legitimate and appropriate means, the great mass of mankind appear to perish without it. But, if we consider the subject more closely, we shall find that all men die in a state of comparative ignorance. With all our boasted science and arts how little do we know! Do we know any thing to perfection that belongs either to the material or spiritual world! Do we understand even what matter is? What is its essence? Do we understand what spirit is? Then what is its essence? Almost all the phenomena of nature, its grandest operations, and the laws of the heavenly bodies, have been explained on the principle of gravitation or attraction: but in what does this consist? Who can answer? We can traverse every part of the huge and trackless ocean by means of the compass;—but who understands the nature of magnetism on which all this depends? We eat and drink in order to maintain life:—but what is nutrition; and how is it effected? This has never been explained. Life depends on respiration for its continuance:—but by what kind of action is it, that in a moment the lungs separate the oxygen, which is friendly to life, from the nitrogen, which would destroy it; suddenly absorbing the one, and expelling the other? Who, among the generation of hypothesis-framers, has guessed this out? Life is continued by the circulation of the blood:—but by what power and law does it circulate? Have the systole and diastole of the heart, on which this circulation depends, been ever satisfactorily explained? Most certainly not. Alas! we die without wisdom; and must die, to know these, and ten thousand other matters equally unknown, and equally important. To be safe, in reference to eternity, we must know the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom he has sent: whom to know is life eternal. This knowledge, obtained and retained, will entitle us to all the rest in the eternal world.

CHAPTER V.

Eliphaz proceeds to show that the wicked are always punished by the justice of God, though they may appear to flourish for a time, 1—8. Extols the providence of God, by which the counsels of the wicked are brought to nought, and the poor fed and supported, 9—16. Shows the blessedness of being corrected by God, in the excellent fruits that result from it; and exhorts Job to patience and submission, with the promise of all secular prosperity, and a happy death in a mature and comfortable old age, 17—27.

NOTES ON CHAPTER V.

Verse 1. Call now, if there be any] This appears to be a strong irony. From whom among those whose foundations are in the dust, and who are crushed before the moth, canst thou expect succour?

To which of the saints wilt thou turn?] To whom among the holy ones, קדושים kadoshim, (those who kept not their first estate, or those who are equally dependant on divine support with thyself, and can do no good but as influenced and directed by God,) canst thou turn for help? Neither angel nor saint can help any man unless sent especially from God: and all prayers to them must be foolish and absurd, not to say impious. Can the channel afford me water, if the fountain cease to emit it?

Verse 2. For wrath killeth the foolish man] Foolish, silly, and simple, are epithets given by Solomon, to sinners and transgressors of all kinds. Such parallelisms have afforded a presumptive argument that Solomon was the author of this book. See preface, pp. 712, 713. The words of Eliphaz may be considered as a sort of maxim, which the wisdom and experience of ages had served to establish: viz. The wrath of God is manifested only against the wicked and impious; and, if thou wert not such God would not thus contend with thee.

Verse 3. I have seen the foolish taking root] I have seen wicked men for a time in prosperity, and becoming established in the earth: but I well knew, from God's manner of dealing with men, that they must soon be blasted. I even ventured to pronounce their doom: for I knew that, in the order of God's providence, that was inevitable. I cursed his habitation.

Verse 4. His children are far from safety] His posterity shall not continue in prosperity. Ill gotten, ill spent: whatever is got by wrong, must have God's curse on it.

They are crushed in the gate] The Targum says, They shall be bruised in the gate of hell, in the day of the great judgment. There is reference here to a custom which I have often had occasion to notice; viz. that in the Eastern countries the court-house, or tribunal of justice, was at the GATE of the city: here the magistrates attended, and hither the plaintiff and defendant came for justice.

Verse 5. Whose harvest] Their possessions, because acquired by unjust means, shall not be under the protection of God's providence; He shall abandon them to be pillaged and destroyed by the wandering half-starved hordes of the desert banditti. They shall carry it suddenly off: even the thorns, grain, weeds, thistles, and all, shall they carry off in their rapacious burry.

The robber swalloweth up] Or, more properly, the thirsty דמם tsammim, as is plain

4 His children are far from safety, and they are crushed in the gate, neither is there any to deliver them.

5 Whose harvest the hungry eateth up, and taketh it even out of the thorns, and the robber swalloweth up their substance.

from their swallowing up, or gulping down: opposed to the hungry or half-starved, mentioned in the preceding clause. The hungry shall eat up their grain; and the thirsty shall drink down their wine and oil, here termed cheylam, their strength or power, for the most obvious reasons.

There seems to be two allusions in this verse:

1. To the hordes of wandering predatory banditti, or half-starved Arabs of the desert, who have their scanty maintenance by the plunder of others: These descendants of Ishmael have ever had their hands against all men; and live to this day in the same predatory manner in which they have lived for several thousands of years. M. Volney's account of them is striking. "These men are smaller, leaner, and blacker, than any of the Bedouens yet discovered. Their wasted legs had only tendons without calves. Their belly was shrunk to their back. They are in general small, lean, and swarthy; and more so in the bosom of the desert, than on the borders of the more cultivated country. They are ordinarily about five feet, or five feet two inches high: they seldom have more than about six ounces of food for the whole day. Six or seven dates, soaked in melted butter, a little milk or curd, serve a man for twenty-four hours: and he seems happy when he can add a small portion of coarse flour, or a little ball of rice. Their camels also, which are their chief support, are remarkably meagre, living on the meanest and most scanty provision. "Nature," says Volney, "has given it a small head without ears, at the end of a long neck without flesh. She has taken from its legs and thighs every muscle not immediately requisite for motion; and in short has bestowed on its withered body only the vessels and tendons necessary to connect its frame together. She has furnished it with a strong jaw that it may grind the hardest aliments; and, lest it should consume too much, she has straitened its stomach, and obliged it to chew the cud." Such is the description given of the Bedouin and his camel, by M. Volney; who, while he denies the true God, finds out a deity which he calls Nature, whose works evince the highest providence, wisdom, and design! And where does this most wonderful and intelligent goddess dwell? Nowhere, but in the creed of the infidel; while the genuine believer knows that nature is only the agent created and employed by the great and wise God to accomplish, under his direction, the greatest and most stupendous beneficial effects.

The second allusion in the verse I suppose to be the loss Job had sustained of his cattle by the predatory Sabceans; and all this, for the support of his grand argument, Eliphaz introduces to convict Job of hidden crimes, on which account his enemies were permitted to this wickedness, being placed out of the protection of God's providence.

Verse 6. Affliction cometh not forth of the dust] If there were not an adequate cause, thou couldst not be so grievously afflicted.

Spring out of the ground] It is not from mere natural causes that affliction and trouble come;
God's justice inflicts them upon offending man.

Verse 7. Yet man is born unto trouble] ^{למלחמה} le-amal to labour. He must toil, and be careful: and if, in the course of his labour, he meet with trials and difficulties, he should rise superior to them; and not sink as thou dost.

Are they not bold, intrepid, ardent, fearless men, who rise superior to all their trials;

rence; succumb under no difficulties; and rise superior to time, tide, fate, and fortune?
I prefer this to all the various meanings of the place with which I have met. Coverdale translates, It is man that is borne unto misery, like as the hyrde far to fle. Most of the ancient versions give a similar sense.

Verse 8. I would seek unto God]. Were I in your place, instead of wasting my time, and irritating my soul with useless complaints, I would apply to my Maker; and, if conscious of my innocence, would commit, confidently, my cause to him.

Verse 9. Which doeth great things] No work, however complicate, is too deep for his counsel to plan; none, however stupendous, is too great for his power to execute.
He who is upright is always safe in referring his cause to God, and trusting in him.

Verse 10. Who giveth rain upon the earth]
The Chaldee gives this verse a fine turn:
"Who gives rain on the face of the land of Israel, and sends waters on the face of the provinces of the people." Similar to our Lord's saying, which is expressed in the half of the compass:—Your Father which is in heaven—SENDETH RAIN ON THE JUST AND ON THE UNJUST. Matt. v. 45.

^{חֲטוּלֹת} chutsoth, which we translate fields, and plantations which are laid out in ridges, or plots, in an orderly, regular manner. God does not only send rain upon the earth in a general manner; but, by an especial providence, waters the cultivated ground, so that not one ridge is left destitute of its due proportion of fructifying moisture.

Verse 11. To set up on high those that be low]
He so distributes his providential blessings, without partiality, that the land of the poor man is as well sunned and watered as that of the rich; so that he is thus set upon a level with the lords of the soil.

Verse 12. He disappointeth the devices of the crafty] All these sayings refer to God's particular providence, by which he is ever working for the good, and counterworking the plots of the wicked. And as various as are the contingent, capricious, and malevolent acts of men, so varied are his providential inter-ferences; disappointing the devices, snares, and plots of the crafty, so that their plans being confounded, and their machinery broken in pieces, their hands cannot perform their enterprises.

Verse 13. He taketh the wise in their own craftiness] So counterworks them, as to cause their feet to be taken in their own snares;
and their evil dealings to fall on their own pate.
Such frequent proofs has God given of his especial interference in behalf of the innocent who have been the objects of the plots and evil designs of the wicked, by turning those evil devices against their framers, that, He who digs a pit for his neighbour shall fall into it himself, has become a universal adage; and has passed either in so many words, or in sense, into all the languages of all the people of the earth. Lucretius expresses it strongly:

*Circumretit enim vis atque injuria quemque,
Atque, unde exortus est, ad eum plerumque revertit.*

Lucret. lib. v. ver. 1151.

"For force and wrong entangle the man that uses them;
And, for the most part, recoil on the head of the con-sures; and, with all their cunning and dexterity, they are outwitted; and often act on their own projects, planned with care and skill.

as if they had been the crudest conceptions of the most disordered minds. They act in noon-day as if the sun were extinct, and their eyes put out. Thus does God "abate their pride, assuage their malice, and confound their devices."

Verse 15. He saveth the poor from the sword, from their mouth] This is rather a harsh construction. To avoid this, some have proposed to render מַחֲרֵב mechereb; which we translate from the sword, the persecuted: but I am afraid on very slender authority. Instead of מַחֲרֵב mechereb מִפִּיהֶם mepihem, "from the sword from their mouth," eleven of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. read מַחֲרֵב מִפִּיהֶם mechereb pihem, from the sword of their mouth; and with these MSS. the Chaldee, Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic agree. The verse, therefore, may be translated thus:—

*He saveth from the sword of their mouth;
The poor from the hand of the mighty.*

Or, thus:—

*He saveth from the sword of their mouth;
And with a strong hand the impoverished.*

Verse 16. So the poor] דַּל dal, he who is made thin, who is wasted, extenuated, hath hope. He sees what God is accustomed to do, and he expects a repetition of gracious dealings in his own behalf: and because God deals thus with those who trust in him; therefore, the mouth of impiety is stopped.

Religion is kept alive in the earth, because of God's signal interventions in behalf of the bodies and souls of his followers.

Verse 17. Behold, happy is the man] הֵנָּה hinneh, behold, is wanting in five of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. and also in the Syriac, Vulgate, and Arabic.

We have had fathers of our flesh who corrected us for their pleasure, or according to their caprices; and we were subject to them: how much more should we be subject to the Father of spirits, and live; for he corrects us that we may be partakers of his holiness, in order that we may be rendered fit for his glory. medicine against; though he smyte, his hande maketh whole againe.

Verse 19. He shall deliver thee in six troubles] The numbers six and seven are put here for many. Though a number of troubles should come upon thee all at once, and there should be no hope, humanly speaking; yet God would rid thee out of them all: for he saves as well from many as from few. We may also understand the words, He who hath been thy deliverer in past troubles, will not deny his help in those which are to come.

Verse 20. In famine he shall redeem thee] The Chaldee, which understands this chapter as speaking of the troubles, and deliverances of the Israelites in Egypt and the wilderness, renders this verse as follows:—"In the famine of Egypt he redeemed thee from death; and in the war of Amalek from the slaying of the sword."

Verse 21. Thou shalt be hid from the scourge of the tongue] The Targum refers this to the incantations of Balaam:—"From injury by the tongue of Balaam thou shalt be hidden in the clouds; and thou shalt not fear from the blasting of the Midianites when it shall come."

Perhaps no evil is more dreadful than the scourge of the tongue: evil-speaking, detraction, backbiting, calumny, slander, tale-bearing, whispering, and scandalizing; are some of the terms which we use when endeavouring to express the baleful influence and effects of that member, which is a world of fire, kindled from the nethermost hell. The Scripture abounds with invectives and execrations against it. See Psa. xxxi. 20. lii. 2—4. Prov. xii. 18. xiv. 3. James iii. 5—8.

Neither shalt thou be afraid] "Thou shouldst have such strong confidence in God that, even in the presence of destruction, thou shouldst not fear death:" the God of life and power being with thee.

Verse 22. At destruction and famine thou shalt laugh] This most forcibly expresses the strongest security, and confidence in that security. "In the desolation of Sihon, and in the famine of the desert, thou shalt laugh; and of the camps of Og, who is compared to a wild beast of the earth, thou shalt not be afraid." Targum.

stones of the field] Instead of אבני abney, stones, Mr. Goode reads בני beney, sons, or produce: but this reading is not supported by any ancient version, nor, as far as I know, by any MS. yet collated. We must, therefore, take up the text as we find it; and make the best we can of the present reading.

The Chaldee gives a plausible sense: Thou needest not to fear, "because thy covenant is on tables of stone, which are publicly erected in the field: and the Canaanites, which are compared to the beasts of the field, have made peace with thee."

Perhaps the reference is to those rocks or strong-holds where banditti secured themselves and their prey, or where the emirs or neighbouring chiefs had their ordinary residence. Eliphaz may be understood as saying: Instead, then, of taking advantage of thee, as the Sabæans have done, the circumjacent chieftains will be confederate with thee; and the very beasts of the field will not be permitted to harm thy flocks.

Coverdale seems to have had an idea of this kind, as we find he translates the verse thus:—

But the castles in the londe shall be confederate with thee.

And the beastes of the felde shall give the peace.

I believe the above to be the meaning of the place. See the next verse.

Verse 24. Thou shalt know] Thou shalt be so fully satisfied of the friendly disposition of all thy neighbours, that thou shalt rest secure in thy bed, and not be afraid of any danger, though sleeping in thy tent in the field; and, when thou returnest from thy country excursions, thou shalt find that thy habitation has been preserved in peace and prosperity; and that thou hast made no mistake in thy trust, in thy confidence, or in thy confederates.

The word אהול aholca, "thy tabernacle," means simply a tent, a moveable dwelling, composed of poles, pins, and cloth, or skin, to be pitched any where, in a few moments; and struck again with the same ease.

The word נח naveca, which we properly translate habitation, signifies a solid permanent dwelling-place. See Josh. xxii. 4, 6, 7, 8. 2 Sam. xviii. 17. xix. 8. 1 Kings xii. 16. Psa. lii. 7. & cxi. 10. cxxxii. 3. Lam. ii. 4, Mal. ii. 12, and with them the place in the text.

As to טעה techeta, which we translate thou shalt not sin, it comes from טה chata, to err, to mistake, to miss the mark; hence to sin, transgress God's laws, seeking for happiness in forbidden and unlawful things, and therefore missing the mark, because in them happiness is not to be found; and it is very likely, from the connexion above, that to mistake, or err, is its meaning in this place. I need not add, that the Arab chiefs, who had their castles or strong-holds, frequently in their country excursions lodged in tents in the open fields; and that on such occasions a hostile neighbour sometimes took advantage of their absence, attacked and pillaged their houses, and carried off their families and household. See at the end of this chapter.

Verse 25. Thine offspring as the grass] Thou shalt have a numerous and permanent issue.

Verse 26. Thou shalt come to thy grave] Thou shalt not die before thy time: thou shalt depart from life like a full-fed guest; happy in what thou hast known, and in what thou hast enjoyed.

Like as a shock of corn] Thou shalt completely run through the round of the spring, summer, autumn, and winter of life: and thou shalt be buried, like a wholesome seed, in the earth; from which thou shalt again rise up into an eternal spring!

Verse 27. Lo this, we have searched it] What I have told thee is the sum of our wisdom and experience on these important points. These are established maxims, which universal experience supports. Know, understand, and reduce them to practice for thy good. Thus ends Eliphaz, the Temanite, "full of wise saws and ancient instances;" but he miserably perverted them in his application of them to Job's case and character. They contain, however, many wholesome truths, of which the wise in heart may make a very advantageous practical use.

THE predatory excursions referred to in verse 23. were not unfrequent among our own barbarous ancestors. An affecting picture of this kind is drawn by Shakespeare, from Holinshed's Chronicles, of the case of Macduff, whose castle was attacked in his absence by Macbeth, and his wife and all his children murdered. A similar incident was the ground of the old heroic ballad of Hardicanute. When the veteran heard that a host of Norwegians had landed to pillage the country, he armed, and posted to the field to meet the invading foe. He slew the chief in battle, and routed his pillaging banditti. While this was taking place, another party took the advantage of his absence, attacked his castle, and carried off or murdered his lovely wife and family; which, being perceived on his return by the war and age-worn chief, is thus affectingly described by the unknown poet:—

Loud and chill blew the westlin wind,
Sair beat the heavy shower;
Mirk grew the nicht eir Hardyknut
Wan neir his stately tower.

His tower that us'd with torches bleise;
To shine sae far at night,
Seim'd now as black as mourning weid,
Nae marvel sair he sich'd,

"Their's nae light in my lady's bowin;
Their's nae light in my hall;
Nae blink shyness round my Fairly fair:
Nor ward stands on my wall.

What bodes it, Thomas! Robert! say?
Nae answer—sparks their dreid;
"Stand back, my sons, I'll be your gyde,"
But bye they pass'd with aheid.

"As fast I haif sped ower Scotland's foes—
There ceis'd his brag of weir.
Sair scham'to mind ocht but his dame,
And maiden Fairly fair.

Black feir he felt; but what to feir
He wist not yet with dreid;
Sair schook his body, sair his limbs,
And all the warrior fled.

The ending of this poem is lost: but we here see that the castle of Hardicanute was surprised, and his family destroyed, or carried off, while he and his sons had been employed in defeating the invading Norwegians. Thank God, civilization, the offspring of the spread of Christianity, has put an end to these barbarous practices among us: but in the East, where Christianity is not, they flourish still. Britons! send out your Bible and your missionaries to tame these Barbarians; for whom Heathenism has done nothing, and the Koran next to nothing. Civilization itself, without the Bible, will do as little; for the civilized Greeks and Romans were barbarians, fell and murderous; living in envy and malice, hateful, hating one another, and offering hundreds at a time of human victims to their ruthless deities. Nothing but Christianity ever did, or ever can, cure these evils.

CHAPTER VI.

Job answers, and vindicates himself; and shows that the great affliction which he suffered was the cause of his complaining, by which life was rendered burdensome to him, 1—13. Complains that whereas he expected consolation from his friends, he had received nothing but the bitterest reproaches, on the assumed ground that he must be a wicked man, else God would not so grievously afflict him, 14—20. Shows them that they knew nothing of his case, and that they had no compassion, 21—23. Entreats them, if they can, to show him in what he has offended, as he is ready to acknowledge and correct every trespass, 24—30.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VI.

Verse 2. Oh that my grief were thoroughly weighed. Job wished to be dealt with according to justice; as he was willing that his sins, if they could be proved, should be weighed against his sufferings; and, if this could not be done, he wished that his sufferings and his complaining might be weighed together; and it would then be seen that bitter as his complaint had been, it was little when compared with the distress which occasioned it.

Verse 3. Heavier than the sand of the sea. This includes two ideas: their number was too great to be counted; their weight was too great to be estimated.

Verse 4. The arrows of the Almighty. There is an evident reference here to wounds inflicted by poisoned arrows: and to the burning fever occasioned by such wounds, producing such an intense parching thirst as to dry up all the moisture in the system, stop all the salivary ducts, thicken and inflame the blood, induce putrescency, and terminate in raging mania, producing the most terrifying images, from which the patient is relieved only by death. This is strongly expressed in the fine figure, the poison drinketh up my spirit; the terrors of God set themselves in array against me. That calamities are represented among the Eastern writers as the arrows of the Almighty, we have abundant proofs. In reference to this, I shall adduce that fine saying attributed to Aaly, the son-in-law of Mohammed, in the Toozuki Teemor; which I have spoken of elsewhere. "It was once demanded of the fourth califf (Aaly.) If the canopy of heaven were a bow; and if the earth were the cord thereof; and if calamities were the arrows; if mankind were the mark for those arrows; and if Almighty God, the tremendous and glorious, were the unerring archer;—to whom could the sons of Adam flee for protection?" The califf answered, "The sons of Adam must flee unto the Lord." This fine image Job keeps in view in the 8th and 9th verses, wishing that the unerring marksman may let fly these arrows, let loose his hand, to destroy and cut him off.

Verse 5. Doth the wild ass was peré translated onager, by the Vulgate, from the ægyptios of the Septuagint, which we, properly enough, translate wild ass. It is the same with the tame ass; only in a wild state, it grows to a larger size, is stronger, and more fleet. The meaning of Job appears to be this: you condemn me for complaining—Do I complain without a cause? The wild ass will not bray, and the ox will not low, unless in want. If they have plenty of provender they are silent. Were I at rest, at ease, and happy, I would not complain.

Verse 6. Can that which is unsavoury. Mr. Goode renders this verse as follows: "Doth insipid food without a mixture of salt, yea, doth the white of the egg give forth pungency?"

Which he thus illustrates: "Doth that which hath nothing of seasoning, nothing of a pungent or irritable power within it, produce pungency or irritation? I too should be quiet and complain not, if I had nothing provocative or acrimonious: but, alas! the food I am doomed to partake of is the very calamity which is most acute to my soul—that which I most loathe, and which is most grievous or trying to any palate."

There have been a great variety of interpretations given of this verse; I could add another, but that of Mr. Goode is as likely to be correct as that of any other critic.

Verse 8. Oh that I might have] As Job had no hope that he should ever be redeemed from his present helpless state, he earnestly begs God to shorten it by taking away his life.

Verse 9. Let loose his hand] A metaphor taken from an archer drawing his arrow to the head, and then losing his hold, that the arrow may fly to the mark. See on ver. 4.

Verse 10. Then should I yet have comfort] Instead of yet, three of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. have not, this. And this should be my comfort. The expectation that he will speedily make an end of me would cause me to rejoice with great joy. This reading is supported by the Vulgate and the Chaldee.

I would harden myself in sorrow: let him not spare] To know that I should shortly have an end put to my miseries would cause me to endure the present with determinate resolution.
Let him not spare—let him use whatever means he chooses, for I will not resist his decree: he is holy, and his decrees must be just.

Verse 11. What is my strength] I can never suppose that my strength will be restored; and, were that possible, have I any comfortable prospect of a happy termination of my life?
Had I any prospect of future happiness, I might well bear my present ills; but the state of my body and the state of my circumstances preclude all hope.

Verse 12. Is my strength the strength of stones?—I am neither a rock, nor is my flesh brass, that I can endure all these calamities.
This is a proverbial saying, and exists in all countries. Cicero says, Non enim est è saxo sculptus, aut è robore dolatus homo; habet corpus, habet animum; movetur mente, movetur sensibus. "For man is not chiselled out of the rock, nor hewn out of the oak; he has a body, and he has a soul; the one is actuated by intellect, the other by the senses." Quæst. Acad.

iv. 31. So Homer, where he represents Apollo urging the Trojans to attack the Greeks:

Νημεσθε δ' Ἀπολλων,
Περγᾶντι ἐγκατὶδὼν Τρῶαςσι δὲ κεκλιτ' αὐτὰρ Ὀρυσθ', ἰπποδάμοι Τρῶες, μὴδ' εἰσέτε χαρμῆς ρός.

Χαλκὸν ἀνασχέσθαι ταμειχόρῳ βαλλόμενοι-σιν.
—ILIAD, lib. iv. ver. 507.

But Phœbus now from Ilion's towering height Shines forth revealed, and animates the fight.
Trojans, be bold, and force to force oppose;
Your foaming steeds urge headlong on the foes!
Nor are their bodies rocks, nor ribb'd with steel;
Your weapons enter, and your strokes they feel. Pope.

These are almost the same expressions as those in Job.

Verse 13. Is not my help in me?] My help is all in myself; and, alas that is perfect weakness: and my subsistence תשׁוּיָה tushiyah, all that is real, stable, and permanent, is driven quite from me. My friends have forsaken me, and I am abandoned to myself: my property is all taken away, and I have no resources left.
I believe Job neither said, nor intended to say, as some interpreters have it, reason is utterly driven from me. Surely there is no mark in this chapter of his being deranged, or at all impaired in his intellect.

Verse 14. To him that is afflicted pity should be showed from his friend; but he forsaketh the fear of the Almighty.] The Vulgate gives a better sense, "Qui tollit ab amico suo misericordiam, timorem Domini dereliquit,
He who takes away mercy from his friend, hath cast off the fear of the Lord." The word למנאס lammaas, which we render to him who is AFFLICTED, from מסאח masah, to dissolve, or waste away, is in thirty-two of Dr. Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. למנאס lemaas, "to him that despiseth his friend." And hence the passage may be read, To him who despiseth his friend, it is a reproach; and he will forsake the fear of the Almighty; or, as Mr. Goode translates,

"Shame to the man who despiseth his friend!
He indeed hath departed from the fear of the Almighty."

Eliphaz had, in effect, despised Job; and on this ground, acted any thing but the part of a friend toward him; and he well deserved the severe stroke which he here receives. A heathen said, Amicus certus in re incertâ cernitur; the full sense of which we have in our common adage;—

A friend in need is a friend indeed.

Job's friends, so called, supported each other in their attempts to 'blacken the character of this worthy man; and their hand became the heavier, because they supposed the hand of God was upon him. To each of them, individually, might be applied the words of another heathen:—

Absentem qui roast amicum,
Qui non defendit alio culpante: solutus
Qui captat risus hominum, famaque dicacis;
Fingere qui non visa est; commissa tacere
Qui nequit; hic niger est; hunc tu, Romane, caveto.
Hor. Satir. lib. i. s. iv. ver. 81.

Or, when attacked by others, don't defend;
Who trivial bursts of laughter strives to raise,
And courts, of prating petulance, the praise
Of things he never saw; who tells his tale,
And friendship's secrets knows not to conceal;
This man is vile; here, Roman, fix your mark;
His soul's as black as his complexion's dark. Francis.

Verse 15. Have dealt deceitfully as a brook] There is probably an allusion here to those land torrents which make a sudden appearance, and as suddenly vanish; being produced by the rains that fall upon the mountains during the rainy season, and are soon absorbed by the thirsty sands over which they run. At first they seem to promise a permanent stream, and are noticed with delight by the people who fill their tanks or reservoirs from their waters; but sometimes are so large and rapid as to carry every thing before them; and then suddenly fail, so that there is no time to fill the tanks. The approach of Job's friends promised much of sympathy and compassion. His expectations were raised; but their conduct soon convinced him that they were physicians of no value; therefore he compares them to the deceitful torrents that soon pass away.

Verse 16. Blackish by reason of the ice] He represents the waters as being sometimes suddenly frozen, their foam being turned into the semblance of snow or hoar frost; when the heat comes they are speedily liquefied; and the evaporation so strong from the heat, and the absorption so powerful from the sand, that they soon disappear.

Verse 18. The paths of their way] They sometimes forsake their ancient channels, which is a frequent case with the river Ganges: and,

20 They were ° confounded because they had hoped; they came thither, and were ashamed.

21 ° For now ° ye are ° nothing; ye see my casting down, and ° are afraid.

22 Did I say, Bring unto me? or, Give a reward for me of your substance?

23 Or, Deliver me from the enemy's hand? or, Redeem me from the hand of the mighty?

growing smaller and smaller from being divided into numerous streams, they go to nothing, and perish: are at last utterly lost in the sands.

Verse 19. The troops of Tema looked] The caravans coming from Tema are represented as arriving at those places where it was well known torrents did descend from the mountains; and they were full of expectation that here they could not only slake their thirst, but fill their girbas or water-skins; but when they arrive they find the waters totally dissipated and lost. In vain did the caravans of Sheba wait for them; they did not reappear: and they were confounded because they had hoped to find here refreshment and rest.

Verse 21. For now ye are nothing] Ye are just to me as those deceitful torrents to the caravans of Tema and Sheba; they were nothing to them; ye are nothing to me.

Ye see my casting down] Ye see that I have been hurried from my eminence into want and misery, as the flood from the top of the mountains, which is divided, evaporated, and lost on the desert.

And are afraid] Ye are terrified at the calamity that has come upon me; and, instead of drawing near to comfort me, ye start back at my appearance.

Verse 22. Did I say, Bring unto me?] Why do you stand aloof? Have I asked you to bring me any presents? or to supply my wants out of your stores?

Verse 23. Or, Deliver me] Did I send to you to come and avenge me of the destroyers of my property, or to rescue my substance out of the hands of my enemies?

Verse 24. Teach me] Show me where I am mistaken. Bring proper arguments to convince me of my errors; and you will soon find that I shall gladly receive your counsels, and abandon the errors of which I may be convicted.

Verse 25. How forcible are right words] A well constructed argument that has truth for its basis is irresistible.

But what doth your arguing reprove?] Your reasoning is defective, because your premises are false; and your conclusions prove nothing because of the falsity of the premises whence they are drawn. The last clause, literally rendered, is, What reproof in a reproof from you. As you have proved no fault; you have, consequently, reproved no vice, instead of מה נמרצו mah nimretsu, "how forcible;" מה נמלטו mah nimletsu, "how savoury or pleasant," is the reading of two MSS. the Chaldee, and some of the rabbins. Both senses are good, but the common reading is to be preferred.

Verse 26. Do ye imagine to reprove words] Is it some expressions which in my hurry, and under the pressure of unprecedented affliction which I have uttered, that ye catch at? You can find no flaw in my conduct:—would ye make me an offender for a word? Why endeavour to take such advantage of a man who complains, in the bitterness of his heart, through despair of life and happiness?

Verse 27. Ye overwhelm the fatherless] Ye see that I am as destitute as the most miserable orphan;—would ye overwhelm such a one; and would you dig a pit for your friend? do ye lay wait for me, and endeavour to entangle me in my talk? I believe this to be the spirit of Job's words.

Verse 28. Look upon me] View me, consider my circumstances, compare my words; and you must be convinced that I have spoken nothing but truth.

Verse 29. Return, I pray you] Reconsider the whole subject. Do not be offended. Yea, reconsider the subject; my righteousness is in it; my argumentation is a sufficient proof of my innocence.

Verse 30. Is there iniquity in my tongue?] Am I not an honest man; and if, in my haste, my tongue had uttered falsity, would not my conscience discern it; and do you think that such a man as your friend is, would defend what he knew to be wrong?

I have done what I could to make this chapter plain, to preserve the connexion, and show the dependance of the several parts on each other; without which many of the sayings would have been very obscure. The whole chapter is an inimitable apology for what he had uttered, and a defence of his conduct. This might have ended the controversy, had not his friends been determined to bring him in guilty. They had prejudged his cause, and assumed a certain position, from which they were determined not to be driven.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VII.

Verse 1. Is there not an appointed time to man] The Hebrew, with its literal rendering, is as follows: הלא צמח לנפש עלי ארץ Halo tsaba teenosh alei arets, "Is there not a warfare to miserable man upon the earth?" And thus most of the versions have understood the words. The SEPTUAGINT, Ποτερον ουχι πεπαρισμηνος εστις ο εως ανθρωπου επι της γης; "Is not the life of man a place of trial upon earth?" The VULGATE, Militia est vita hominis super terram. "The life of man is a warfare upon earth." The CHALDEE is the same. N'y a-t-il pas comme un train de guerre ordonné aux mortels sur la terre? FRENCH BIBLE. "Is there not a continual campaign ordained for mortals upon the earth?" The GERMAN and DUTCH the same. COVERDALE, Is not the life off man upon earth a wep bataple. CARDMARDEN, Rouen, 1566. Hath man any certayne tyme upon earth. SYRIAC and ARABIC, "Now, man has time upon the earth." Non è egli il tempo determinato à l'uomo sopra la terra, "Is there not a determined time to man upon the earth," Bib. Ital. 1562. I believe the simple sentiment which the writer wished to convey is this:—human life is a state of probation, and every day and place is a time and place of exercise to train us up for eternal life. Here is the exercise, and here the warfare: we are enlisted in the bands of the church militant, and must accomplish our time of service, and be honourably dismissed from the warfare, having conquered through the blood of the Lamb; and then receive the reward of the heavenly inheritance.

Verse 2. Earnestly desireth the shadow] As a man who labours hard in the heat of the day, earnestly desires to get under a shade; or wishes for the long evening shadows, that he

Verse 3. So am I made to possess] But night is no relief to me; it is only a continuance of my anxiety and labour. I am like the hireling, I have my appointed labour for the day.
I am like the soldier harassed by the enemy;
I am obliged to be continually on the watch, always on the look out, with scarcely any rest.

Verse 4. When I lie down] I have so little rest, that when I do lie down, I long for the return of the light, that I may rise. Nothing can better depict the state of a man under continual afflictions, which afford him no respite, his days and his nights being spent in constant anguish, utterly unable to be in any one posture, so that he is continually changing his position in his bed, finding ease nowhere: thus as himself expresses it, he is full of tossings.

Verse 5. My flesh is clothed with worms]
This is perhaps no figure: but is literally true; the miserably ulcerated state of his body, exposed to the open air, and in a state of great destitution, was favourable to those insects who sought such places in which to deposite their ova, which might have produced the animals in question. But the figure is too horrid to be farther illustrated.

Clods of dust] I believe all the commentators have here missed the sense. I suppose Job to allude to those incrustations of indurated or dried pus, which are formed on the tops of pustules in a state of decay; such as the scales which fall from the pustules of the smallpox, when the patient becomes convalescent. Or, if Job's disease was the elephantiasis, it may refer to the furfuraceous scales which are continually falling off the body in that disorder.
It is well known that in this disease the skin becomes very rigid, so as to crack across; especially at the different joints, out of which issues a loathsome ichor is continually exuding. To something like this the words may refer, My skin is broken, and become LOATH-SOME.

Verse 6. Swifter than a weaver's shuttle]
The word arag, signifies rather the weaver, than his shuttle. And it has been doubted whether any such instrument were in use in the days of Job; as Dr. Russell, in his account

5 My flesh is s clothed with worms and clods of 6 h My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle, and are spent without hope.

7 O remember that i my life is wind:

& 17. 14. Psal. 90. 6. & 102. 11. & 103. 15. & 144. 4. Isa. 23.

of Aleppo, shows that though they wove many kinds of curious cloth, yet no shuttle was used, as they conducted every thread of the woof
by their fingers. That some such instrument as the shuttle was in use from time immemorial, there can be no doubt; and it is certain that such an instrument must have been in the view of Job, without which the figure would lose its expression and force. In almost every nation the whole human existence has been compared to a web; and the principle of life, through the continual succession of moments, hours, days, weeks, months, and years, to a thread woven through that web.
Hence arose the fable of the Parcæ or Fates, called also the Destinies or Fatal Sisters.
They were the daughters of Erebus and Nox; (darkness and night), and were three in number, and named Clotho, Lachesis, and Atropos.
Clotho held the distaff; Lachesis spun off the thread; and Atropos cut it off with her scissors, when it was determined that life should end. Job represents the thread of his life as being spun out with great rapidity and tenacity, and about to be cut off.

And are spent without hope.] Expectation of future good was at an end: hope of the alleviation of his miseries no longer existed. The hope of future good is the balm of life; where that is not, there is despair; where despair is, there is hell. The fable above-mentioned is referred to by Virgil, Ecl. iv. ver. 46. but is there applied to time.

Talia Sæcla suis dixerunt currere fustis,
Concordes stabili fatorum numine Parcæ.

The fates, when they this happy thread have spun,
Shall bless the sacred clue, and bid it smoothly run.

Dryden.

Isaiah uses the same figure, chap. xxxviii. 12.

My life is cut off, as by the weaver:

He will sever me from the loom.

In the course of the day thou wilt finish my web.

Louth.

Coverdale translates thus: My days passe over more speedely then a weaver can weave out his webbe, and are gone or I am awarre.

A fine example of this figure is found in the Teemour Nameh, which I shall give in Mr.

Goode's translation:
"Praise be to God who hath woven the web of human affairs in the loom of his will, and of his wisdom; and hath made the waves of times and of seasons to flow from the fountain of his providence, into the ocean of his power." The simile is fine, and elegantly expressed.

Verse 7. My life is wind] Mr. Goode translates, "O remember that if my life pass away, mine eye shall turn no more to scenes of goodness." Which he paraphrases thus: "O remember that, if my life pass away, never more shall I witness those scenes of divine favour, never more adore thee for those proofs of unmerited mercy, which, till now, have been so perpetually bestowed upon me." I think the common translation gives a very good sense.

Verse 8. Shall see me no more] If I die in my present state, with all this load of undeserved odium, which is cast upon me by my friends, I shall never have an opportunity of vindicating my character, and regaining the good opinion of mankind.

Thine eyes are upon me, and I am not.] Thou canst look me into nothing. Or, let thine eye be upon me as judged to death; and I shall immediately cease to live among men.

Verse 9. As the cloud is consumed] As the cloud is dissipated, so is the breath of those that go down to the grave. As that cloud shall never return, so shall it be with the dead: they return no more to sojourn with the living. See on the following verse.

Verse 10. He shall return no more to his house, neither shall his place know him any more.] He does not mean that he shall be annihilated; but that he shall never more become an inhabitant of the earth.

The word ^q which we, properly enough, translate grave, here signifies also the state of the dead, hades; and, sometimes, any deep pit, or even hell itself.

Verse 11. Therefore I will not refrain] All is hopeless; I will, therefore, indulge myself in complaining.

Verse 12. Am I a sea, or a whale] "Am I condemned as the Egyptians were, who were drowned in the Red sea? or am I as Pharaoh, who was drowned in it in his sins, that thou settest a keeper over me?" Targum. Am I as dangerous as the sea, that I should be encompassed about with barriers, lest I should hurt mankind? Am I like an ungovernable wild beast, or dragon, that I must be put under locks and bars? I think our own version less exceptionable than any hitherto given of this verse. On it, the meaning is sufficiently plain.
Job was hedged about, and shut in with insur-passable difficulties of various kinds—he was entangled as a wild beast in a net—the more he struggled, the more he lost his strength, and the less probability there was of his being extricated from his present situation. The sea is shut in with barriers, over which it cannot pass;

14 Then thou scarest me with dreams, for God has placed the sand for the bound of the sea by a perpetual decree, that it cannot pass it: and though the waves thereof toss themselves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not pass over it. Jer. v. 22. For thou hast set a bound that they may not pass over;

that they turn not again to cover the earth.
Psal. civ. 9. Or who shut up the sea with doors, when it brake forth, as if it had issued out of the womb? When I made the cloud the garment thereof; and thick darkness a swaddling band for it, and brake up for it my decreed place, and set bars and doors; and said, Hitherto shalt thou come, but no farther:
and here shall thy proud waves be stayed?
Job. xxxviii. 8.

Here then is Job's allusion:—the bounds, doors, garment, swaddling-bands, decreed place, and bars, are the watches or keepers which God had set to prevent the sea from overflowing the earth: so Job's afflictions and distresses were the bounds and bars which God had apparently set to prevent him from injuring his fellowcreatures. At least Job, in his complaint, so takes it. Am I like the sea (which thou hast imprisoned within bounds) ready to overwhelm and destroy the country? or am I like a dragon, which must be cooped up in the same way, that it may not have the power to kill and destroy?
Surely, in my prosperity, I gave no evidence of such a disposition; therefore, should not be treated as a man dangerous to society. In this Job shows that he will not refrain his mouth.

Verse 14. Thou scarest me with dreams] There is no doubt that Satan was permitted to haunt his imagination with dreadful dreams and horrid appearances; so that, as soon as he fell asleep, he was suddenly roused and alarmed with those appalling images. He needed rest by sleep; but was afraid to close his eyes because of the horrid images which were presented to his imagination. Could there be a state more deplorable than this?

Verse 15. Chooseth strangling] It is very likely that he felt, in those interrupted and dismal slumbers, an oppression and difficulty of breathing, something like the incubus or nightmare; and, distressing as this was, he would prefer death by this means, to any longer life in such miseries.

Verse 16. I loathe it; I would not live always] Life, in such circumstances, is hateful to me:

my days are vanity.

17 ^v What is man, that thou that thou shouldest set thine heart upon ment ?

and, though I wish for long life ; yet, if length of days were offered to me, with the sufferings which I now undergo, I would despise the offer, and spurn the boon.

Mr. Goode is not satisfied with our common version ; and has adopted the following, which,
in his notes, he endeavours to illustrate and defend : —

Verse 15. So that my soul coveteth suffocation,
And death, in comparison with my suffering.

16. No longer would I live ! O, release me !
How are my days vanity !

Verse 17. What is man that thou shouldest magnify him ? and that thou shouldest set thine heart upon him ?] Two different ideas have been drawn from these words : —

1. Man is not worth thy notice : why, therefore, dost thou contend with him ?

2. How astonishing is thy kindness, that thou shouldest fix thy heart, thy strongest affections, on such a poor, base, vile, impotent, creature as man (עוֹשֵׂה עֲוֹן enosh;) that thou shouldest so highly exalt him beyond all other creatures, and mark him with the most particular notice of thy providence and grace !

The paraphrase of Calmet is as follows :
“ Does man, such as he at present is, merit thy attention ! What is man that God should make it his business to examine, try, prove, and afflict him ! Is it not doing him too much honour, to think thus seriously about him ? O Lord ! I am not worthy that thou shouldest concern thyself about me ! ”

Verse 19. Till I swallow down my spittle]
This is a proverbial expression, and exists among the Arabs to the present day ; the very language being nearly the same. It signifies the same as, let me draw my breath ; give me a moment's space ; let me have even the twinkling of an eye. I am urged by my sufferings to continue my complaint ; but my strength is exhausted, my mouth dry with speaking. Suspend my sufferings even so short a space as is necessary to swallow my spittle, that my parched tongue may be moistened, so that I may renew my complaint.

Verse 20. I have sinned ; what shall I do]
Dr. Kennicott contends that these words are spoken to Eliphaz, and not to God ; and would paraphrase them thus : “ You say I must have 20 I have sinned ; what shall I do unto thee, ² O thou preserver of men ? why ^a hast thou set me as a mark against thee, so that I am a burden to myself ?

21 And why dost thou not pardon my transgression, and take away mine iniquity ? for now shall I sleep in the dust ; and thou shalt seek me in the morning, but I shall not be.

3. Heb. 2. 6. — ^x Ps. 36. 6. — ^a Ch. 16. 12. Ps. 21. 12. Lam. 3. 12 been a sinner. What then ? I have not sinned against thee ! O thou spy upon mankind !

Why hast thou set up me as a butt or mark to shoot at ? Why am I become a burden unto thee ! Why not rather overlook my transgression, and pass by mine iniquity ! I am now sinking to the dust ! To-morrow, perhaps, I shall be sought in vain ! ” See his vindication of Job at the end of these notes on this book.
Others consider the address as made to God.
Taken in this light, the sense is plain enough.

Those who suppose that the address is made to God, translate the 20th verse thus : “ Be it that I have sinned, what injury can I do unto thee, O thou Observer of man ? Why hast thou set me up as a mark for thee, and why am I made a burden to thee ? ” The Septuagint is thus : Εἰ ἐγὼ ἥμαρτον, τί δύναμαι πράξει, ὁ ἐπιστάμενος τὸν νόον τῶν ἀνθρώπων ; If I have sinned, what can I do, O thou who knowest the mind of men ? Thou knowest that it is impossible for me to make any restitution. I cannot blot out my offences : but whether I have sinned so as to bring all these calamities upon me, thou knowest, who searchest the hearts of men.

Verse 21. And why dost thou not pardon]
These words are spoken after the manner of men. If thou have any design to save me ; if I have sinned, why dost thou not pardon my transgression, as thou seest that I am a dying man ; and to-morrow morning thou mayest seek me to do me good ; but in all probability I shall then be no more, and all thy kind thoughts toward me shall be unavailing. If I have sinned, then why should not I have a part in that mercy that flows so freely to all mankind ?

That Job does not criminate himself here, as our text intimates, is evident enough from his own repeated assertions of his own innocence. And it is most certain that Bildad, who immediately answers, did not consider him as criminating but as justifying himself ; and this is the very ground on which he takes up the subject. Were we to admit the contrary, we should find strange inconsistencies, if not contradictions, in Job's speeches : on such a ground the controversy must have immediately ended, as he would then have acknowledged that of which his friends accused him.

CHAPTER VIII.

Bildad answers, and reproves Job for his justifying himself, 1, 2. Shows that God is just, and never punishes but for iniquity; and intimates that it was on account of their sins that his children were cut off, 3, 4. States that, if Job would humble himself to the Almighty, provided he were innocent, his captivity would soon be turned, and his latter end be abundantly prosperous, 5—7. Appeals to the ancients for the truth of what he says; and draws examples from the vegetable world, to show how soon the wicked may be cut off, and the hope of the hypocrite perish, 8—19. Asserts that God never did cast off a perfect man, nor help the wicked; and if Job be innocent, his end shall be crowned with prosperity, 20—22.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VIII.

Verse 1. Bildad the Shuhite] Supposed to be a descendant of Shuah, one of the sons of Abraham, by Keturah, who dwelt in Arabia Deserta, called in Scripture the East country. See Gen. xxv. 1, 2, 6.

Verse 2. How long wilt thou speak these things?] Wilt thou still go on to charge God foolishly? Thy heavy affliction proves that thou art under his wrath; and his wrath thus manifested proves that it is for thy sins that he punisheth thee.

Be like a strong wind?] The Arabic, with which the Syriac agrees, is رُحْلَزَامَاتِي rucholazamati, the spirit of pride. Wilt thou continue to breathe forth a tempest of words? This is more literal.

Verse 3. Doth God pervert judgment?] God afflicts thee; can he afflict thee for nought? As he is just, his judgment is just; and he could not inflict punishment unless there be a cause.

Verse 4. If thy children have sinned] I know thy children have been cut off by a terrible judgment;—but was it not because by transgression they had filled up the measure of their iniquity?

And he have cast them away] Has sent them off, says the Targum, to the place of their transgression; to that punishment due to their sins.

Verse 5. If thou wouldest seek unto God] Though God has so severely afflicted thee, and removed thy children by a terrible judgment; yet if thou wilt now humble thyself before him, and implore his mercy, thou shalt be saved. He cut them off in their sins, but he spares thee; and this is a proof that he waits to be gracious to thee.

Verse 6. If thou wert pure and upright] Concerning thy guilt there can be no doubt; for if thou hadst been a holy man, and these calamities had occurred through accident, or merely by the malice of thy enemies, would not God, long ere this, have manifested his power and justice in thy behalf; punished thy enemies; and restored thee to affluence?

6 If thou wert pure and upright; surely now he would awake for thee, and make the habitation of thy righteousness prosperous.

7 Though thy beginning was small, yet thy latter end should greatly increase.

8 ^e For inquire, I pray thee, of the former age, and prepare thyself to the search of their fathers:

The habitation of thy righteousness] Strongly ironical. If thy house had been as a temple of God, in which his worship had been performed, and his commandments obeyed, would it now be in a state of ruin and desolation?

Verse 7. Though thy beginning was small] Thy former state, compared to that into which God would have brought thee, would be small: for, to show his respect for thy piety, because thou hadst through thy faithful attachment to him suffered the loss of all things, he would have greatly multiplied thy former prosperity, so that thou shouldest now have vastly more than thou didst ever before possess.

Verse 8. Inquire—of the former age] לְדוֹר רִשְׁוֹן ledor rishon, of the first age of the patriarchs; the first generation of men that dwelt upon the earth; not of the age that was just past, as Mr. Peters and several others have imagined, in order to keep up the presumption of Job's high antiquity. Bildad most evidently refers to an antiquity exceedingly remote.

Verse 9. For we are but of yesterday, and know nothing] It is evident that Bildad refers to those times in which human life was protracted to a much longer date than that in which Job lived; when men, from the long period of eight or nine hundred years, had the opportunity of making many observations, and treasuring up a vast fund of knowledge and experience. In comparison with them, he considers that age as nothing; and that generation as being only of yesterday, not having had opportunity of laying up knowledge; nor could they expect it, as their days upon earth would be but a shadow, compared with that substantial time in which the fathers had lived. Perhaps there may be an allusion here to the shadow projected by the gnomon of a dial, during the time the sun is above the horizon. As is a single solar day, so is our life. The following beautiful motto I have seen on a sun dial: UMBRA SUMUS! "We are shadows!" referring to the different shadows by which the gnomon-marked the hours, during the course of the day: and all intended to convey this moral lesson to the passengers: Your life is composed of time, marked out by such shadows as these. Such as time is, such are you; as fleeting, as transitory, as unsubstantial. These shadows lost, time is lost; time lost, soul lost! Reader, take heed!

The writer of this book probably had before his eyes these words of David, in his last prayer, 1 Chron. xxix. 15. "For we are strangers before thee, and sojourners, as all our fathers were; our days upon earth are as a shadow, and there is no expectation." There is no reason to hope that they shall be prolonged; for our lives are limited down to threescore years and ten, as the average of the life even of old men.

Verse 10. Shall not they teach thee? Wilt thou not treat their maxims with the utmost deference and respect? They utter words from their heart; what they say is the fruit of long and careful experience.

Verse 11. Can the rush grow? The word נוֹרָה gomé, which we translate rush, is, without doubt, the Egyptian flag papyrus, on which the ancients wrote, and from which our paper derives its name. The Septuagint, who made their Greek translation in Egypt, (if this book made a part of it,) and knew well the import of each word in both languages, render נוֹרָה gomé, by πapyrus papyrus, thus: Μὴ βαλλῇ πapyrus αὐτὸν ἰδατός; Can the PAPYRUS flourish without water? Their translation leaves no doubt concerning the meaning of the original. They were probably writing on the very substance in question, while making their translation. The technical language of no science is so thoroughly barbarous as that of botany: the description of this plant, by Linnaeus, shall be a proof. The plant he calls "Cyperus Papyrus. CLASS Triandria. ORDER Monogynia. Culm three-sided, naked; umbel longer than the involucre; involucre, three-leaved, setaceous, longer; spikelets in threes.—Egypt, &c. Involucre eight-leaved; general umbel copious, the rays sheathing at the base; partial on very short peduncles; spikelets alternate, sessile; culm leafy at the base; leaves hollow, ensiform."

Hear our plain countryman, John Gerarde, who describes the same plant:—"Papyrus Nilotica, Paper Reed, hath many large flaggie leaves, somewhat triangular and smooth, not much unlike those of Cats-taile; rising immediately from a tuft of roots, compact of many strings; amongst the which it shooteth up two or three naked stalkes, square, and rising some six or seven cubits high above the water: at the top whereof there stands a tuft or bundle of chaffie threds, set in comely order, resembling a tuft of floures, but barren and void of seed." GERARDE'S Herbal, page 40. Which

and not cut down, it withereth before any other herb.

13 So are the paths of all that forget God; and the hypocrite's hope shall perish:

14 Whose hope shall be cut off, and whose trust shall be ^k a spider's web.

¹¹² 10. Prov. 10. 28. — ^k Heb. a spider's house. Isa. 59. 5, 6.

of the two descriptions is easiest to be understood by common sense, either with or without a knowledge of the Latin language? This plant grows in the muddy banks of the Nile, as it requires an abundance of water for its nourishment.

Can the flag grow without water? Parkhurst supposes that the word נוֹרָה achu, which we render flag, is the same with that species of reed which Mr. Hasselquist found growing near the river Nile. He describes it page 97, as "having scarcely any branches, but numerous leaves, which are narrow, smooth, channelled on the upper surface; and the plant about eleven feet high. The Egyptians make ropes of the leaves. They lay the plant in water, like hemp; and then make good and strong cables of them." As נוֹרָה ach signifies to join, connect, associate; hence נוֹרָה achi, a brother, נוֹרָה achu, may come from the same root, and have its name from its usefulness in making ropes, cables, &c. which are composed of associated threads; and serve to tie, bind together, &c.

Verse 12. While it is yet in his greenness We do not know enough of the natural history of this plant to be able to discern the strength of this allusion: but we learn from it that, although this plant be very succulent, and grows to a great size, yet it is short-lived, and speedily withers; and this we may suppose to be in the dry season, or on the retreat of the waters of the Nile. However, soon ripe, soon rotten, is a maxim in horticulture.

Verse 13. So are the paths The papyrus and the rush flourish while they have a plentiful supply of ooze and water; but take these away, and their prosperity is speedily at an end; so it is with the wicked and profane; their prosperity is of short duration, however great it may appear to be in the beginning. Thou, also, O thou enemy of God, hast flourished for a time; but the blast of God is come upon thee, and now thou art dried up from the very roots.

The hypocrite's hope shall perish. A hypocrite, or rather profligate, has no inward religion; for his heart is not right with God: he has only hope, and that perishes when he gives up the ghost.

This is the first place in which the word hypocrite occurs; or the noun חָנָפֵה chaneph, which rather conveys the idea of pollution and defilement than of hypocrisy. A hypocrite is one who only carries the mask of godliness, to serve secular purposes; who wishes to be taken for a religionist, though he is conscious he has no religion. Such a person cannot have hope of any good, because he knows he is insincere: but the person in the text has hope: therefore hypocrite cannot be the meaning of the original word. But all the vile, the polluted, and the profligate, have hope; they hope to end their iniquities before they end life; and they hope to get at last to the kingdom of heaven. Hyppocrite is a very improper translation of the Hebrew.

Verse 14. Whose hope shall be cut off] Such persons, subdued by the strong habits of sin, hope on fruitlessly, till the last thread of the web of life is cut off from the beam; and then they find no more strength in their hope than is in the threads of the spider's web.

Mr. Goode renders, Thus shall their support rot away. The foundation on which they trust is rotten; and by and by the whole superstructure of their confidence shall tumble into ruin.

Verse 15. He shall lean upon his house] This is an allusion to the spider. When he suspects his web, here called his house, to be frail or unsure, he leans upon it in different parts, propping himself on his hinder legs, and pulling with his fore claws, to see if all be safe. If he find any part of it injured, he immediately adds new cordage to that part, and attaches it strongly to the wall. When he finds all safe and strong, he retires into his hole at one corner, supposing himself to be in a state of complete security; when, in a moment, the brush or the besom sweeps away both himself, his house, and his confidence. This I have several times observed: and it is in this that the strength and point of the comparison consists. The wicked, whose hope is in his temporal possessions, strengthens and keeps his house in repair; and thus leans on his earthly supports: in a moment, as in the case of the spider, his house is overwhelmed by the blast of God's judgments, and himself probably buried in its ruins. This is a very fine and expressive metaphor, which not one of the commentators which I have seen has ever discovered.

Verse 16. He is green before the sun] This is another metaphor. The wicked is represented as a luxuriant plant, in a good soil; with all the advantages of a good situation; well exposed to the sun; the roots intervolving themselves with stones, so as to render the tree more stable; but suddenly a blast comes, and the tree begins to die. The sudden fading of its leaves, &c. shows that its root is become as rottenness, and its vegetable life destroyed. I have often observed sound and healthy trees, which were flourishing in all the pride of vegetative health, suddenly struck by some unknown and incomprehensible blast, begin to die away, and perish from the roots. I have seen also the prosperous wicked, in the inscrutable dispensations of the divine providence, blasted, stripped, made bare, and despoiled in the same way.

Verse 18. If he destroy him from his place] Is not this a plain reference to the alienation of his inheritance? God destroys him from it; it becomes the property of another: and, on his revisiting it, the place, by a striking prosopopœia, says, "I know thee not; I have never seen thee." This also have I witnessed; I looked on it, felt regret, received instruction, and hastened away.

Verse 19. Behold, this is the joy of his way] A strong irony. Here is the issue of all his mirth, of his sports, games, and pastimes! See the unfeeling, domineering, polluting, and polluted scape-grace, levelled with those whom he had despised, a servant of servants, or unable to work through his debaucheries, cringing for a morsel of bread, or ingloriously ending his days in that bane of any well-ordered and civilized state, a parish work-house. This also I have most literally witnessed.

Out of the earth shall others grow] As in the preceding case, when one plant or tree is blasted or cut down, another may be planted in the same place; so, when a spendthrift has run through his property, another possesses his inheritance, and grows up from that soil in which he himself might have continued to flourish, had it not been for his extravagance and folly.

This verse Mr. Goode applies to God himself, with no advantage to the argument, nor elucidation of the sense, that I can see. I shall give his translation, and refer to his learned notes for his vindication of the version he has given:—

"Behold the Eternal (רוח) exulting in his course; Even over his dust shall rise up another.

In this way none of the ancient versions have understood the passage. I believe it to be a strong irony, similar to that which some think flowed from the pen of the same writer. Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth; and walk in the ways of thine own heart, and in the sight of thine eyes. But know thou that for all these God will bring thee into judgment. Eccles. chap. xi. ver. 9. These two places illustrate each other.

Verse 20. Behold, God will not cast away a perfect man] This is another of the maxims of the ancients, which Bildad produces: "As sure as he will punish and root out the wicked, so surely will he defend and save the righteous."

Verse 21. Till he fill thy mouth with laughing]

Perhaps it may be well to translate after Mr. Goode, "Even yet may he fill thy mouth with laughter!" The two verses may be read as a prayer: and probably they were thus expressed by Bildad, who speaks with less virulence than his predecessor; though with equal positiveness in respect to the grand charge, viz. If thou wert not a sinner of no mean magnitude, God would not have inflicted such unprecedented calamities upon thee.

This most exceptionable, and contrary to matter of fact position, was founded upon maxims which they derived from the ancients. Surely observation must have, in numberless instances, corrected this mistake. They must have seen many worthless men, in high prosperity; and many of the excellent of the earth in deep adversity and affliction. But the opposite was an article of their creed, and all appearances and facts must take its colouring.

Job's friends must have been acquainted, at least, with the history of the ancient patriarchs; and most certainly they contained facts of an opposite nature. Righteous Abel was persecuted and murdered by his wicked brother Cain. Abram was obliged to leave his own country, on account of worshipping the true God: so all tradition has said. Jacob was persecuted by his brother Esau; Joseph was sold into slavery by his brothers; Moses was obliged to flee from Egypt, and was variously tried and afflicted, even by his own brethren. Not to mention David, and almost all the prophets. All these were proofs that the best of men were frequently exposed to sore afflictions and heavy calamities: and it is not by the prosperity or adversity of men in this world, that we are to judge of the approbation or disapprobation of God toward them. In every case our Lord's rule is infallible: By their fruits ye shall know them.

NOTES ON CHAPTER IX.

Verse 2. I know it is so of a truth] I acknowledge the general truth of the maxims you have advanced. God will not ultimately punish a righteous person; nor shall the wicked finally triumph: and though righteous before man, and truly sincere in my piety, yet I know, when compared with the immaculate holiness of God, all my righteousness is nothing.

Verse 3. If he will contend with him] God is so holy, and his law so strict, that if he will enter into judgment with his creatures, the most upright of them cannot be justified in his sight.

One of a thousand.] Of a thousand offences which he may be accused, he cannot vindicate himself even in one. How little that any man does, even in the way of righteousness, truth, and mercy, can stand the penetrating eye of a just and holy God, when all motives, feelings, and objects, come to be scrutinized! In his sight, on this ground, no man living can be justified. O, how necessary to fallen, weak, miserable, imperfect, and sinful man is the doctrine of justification by faith, and sanctification through the Divine Spirit; by the sacrificial death and mediation of the Lord Jesus Christ!

Verse 4. He is wise in heart, and mighty in strength] By his infinite knowledge, he searches out and sees all things: and by his Almighty power he can punish all delinquencies. He that rebels against him must be destroyed.

Verse 5. Removeth the mountains, and they know not] This seems to refer to earthquakes. By those strong convulsions, mountains, valleys, hills, even whole islands, are removed in an instant: and to this latter circumstance the words they know not, most probably refer. The work is done in the twinkling of an eye; no warning is given; the mountain that seemed to be as firm as the earth on which it rested, was in the same moment both visible and invisible; so suddenly was it swallowed up.

Verse 6. The pillars thereof tremble.] This also refers to an earthquake; and to that tremulous motion which sometimes gives warning of the approaching catastrophe, and from which this violent convulsion of nature has got its name. Earthquakes also, in Scripture language, signify violent commotions and disturbances in states: mountains often signify rulers; sun, empires; stars, petty states. But it is most likely that the expressions here are to be understood literally.

Verse 7. Which commandeth the sun] Either obscures it with clouds, with thick darkness, or with an eclipse.

Sealeth up the stars.] Like the contents of a letter, wrapped up and sealed, so that it cannot be read. Sometimes the heavens become as black as ebony; and no star, figure, or character, in this great book of God can be read.

Verse 8. And treadeth upon the waves] This is a very majestic image. God not only walks upon the waters; but when the sea runs mountains high, he steps from billow to billow in his almighty and essential majesty. There is a similar sentiment in David, Psa. xxix. 10.
“The Lord sitteth upon the flood; yea, the Lord sitteth king for ever.” But both are far outdone by the Psalmist, Psa. xviii. 9—15. and especially in these words, ver. 10. He did fly on the wings of the wind. Job is great; but in every respect David is greater.

Verse 9. Which maketh Arcturus, Orion, and Pleiades, and the chambers of the south] For this translation the original words are וְיָשִׁיב וְיִסְמֹךְ אֶת הַכְּסִיל וְיִסְמֹךְ אֶת הַכְּסִיל osheh aash, kesil, ve-chimah, ve-hadrey leman, which are thus rendered by the SEPTUAGINT: ‘Ο ποίως Πασαδα, καὶ Ἑσπερος, καὶ Ἀρκτουρος, καὶ Ταμεια νότον.
Who makes the Pleiades, and Hesperus, and Arcturus, and Orion, and the chambers of the south.

THE VULGATE, Qui facit Arcturum, et Oriona, et Hyadas, et interiora Austri. “Who maketh Arcturus and Orion, and the Hyades, and the innermost chambers of the south.”

THE TARGUM follows the Hebrew; only paraphrases the latter clause thus: And the chambers or houses of the planetary domination in the southern hemisphere.

THE SYRIAC AND ARABIC, Who maketh the Pleiades, and Arcturus, and the giant (Orion or Hercules,) and the boundaries of the south.

COVERDALE has, He maketh the waynes of heaven, the Orions, the hii starres, and the secrete places of the south. And on the vii starres he has this marginal note: some call these seven starres, the clock henne with hie chickens. See below.

Edmund Becke, in his edition, 1549, follows Coverdale; but puts VAYNES of heaven for waynes, which Cardmarden, in his Bible, Rouen, 1516, mistaking, changes into WAVES of heaven.

Barker's Bible, 1615, reads, He maketh the starres Arcturus, Orion, and Pleiades, and the climates of the south. On which he has this note, “These are the names of certain starres, whereby he meaneth that all starres, both known and unknown, are at his appointment.”

Our early translators seem to agree much with the German and Dutch: Er machet den wagen am himmel, und Orion, und die Glücken, und die Sterne gegen mittag. He maketh the wagon of heaven, (Charles's wain)

The Dutch version is not much unlike the German, from which it was taken: Die den wagen maecht, den Orion, ende het sebhengesternte, ende de binnenkameren ban't Zupden.

The European versions, in general, copy one or other of the above; or make a compound translation from the whole: but all are derived ultimately from the Septuagint and Vulgate.

As to the Hebrew words, they might as well have been applied to any of the other constellations of heaven: indeed, it does not appear that constellations are at all meant. Parkhurst and Bate, have given, perhaps, the best interpretation of the words, which is as follows:—

“Kimah כִּמָּה from כָּמָה camah, to be hot, or warm, denotes genial heat or warmth, as opposed to אֵשׁ ash, a parching, biting air, on the one side; and kesil כֶּסֶל the rigid contracting cold, on the other: and the chambers (thick clouds) of the south.” See more in Parkhurst, under כָּמָה.

I need scarcely add that these words, by critics and commentators, have been variously translated. Dr. Hales translates kimah and kesil by Taurus and Scorpio; and, if this translation were indubitably correct, we might follow him to his conclusion, viz. that Job lived 2337 years before Christ! See at the end of this chapter.

Verse 10. Great things past finding out].
Great things without end; wonders without number. Targum.

Verse 11. Lo, he goeth by me, and I see him not] He is incomprehensible in all his ways, and in all his works; and he must be so if he be God, and work as God: for his own nature and his operations are past finding out.

Verse 12. He taketh away] He never gives;
but he is ever lending: and while the gift is useful, or is improved, he permits it to remain; but when it becomes useless, or is misused, he recalls it.

Who can hinder him?] Literally, Who can cause him to restore it?

What doest thou?] He is supreme, and will give account of none of his matters. He is infinitely wise, and cannot mistake. He is infinitely kind, and can do nothing cruel. He is infinitely good, and can do nothing wrong. No one, therefore, should question either his motives, or his operations.

Verse 13. If God will not withdraw his anger].

be successfully resisted; all his opposers must perish.

Verse 14. How much less shall I answer] I cannot contend with my Maker. He is the lawgiver and the judge:—how shall I stand in judgment before him?

Verse 15. Though I were righteous] Though clear of all the crimes, public and secret, of which you accuse me, yet I would not dare to stand before his immaculate holiness. Man's holiness may profit man; but, in the sight of the infinite purity of God, it is nothing. Thus sung an eminent poet:—

"I loathe myself when God I see,
And into nothing fall;
Content that thou exalted be,
And Christ be all in all."

I would make supplication to my judge.] Though not conscious of any sin, I should not think myself thereby justified; but would, from a conviction of the exceeding breadth of the commandment, and the limited nature of my own perfection, cry out, "Cleanse thou me from secret faults!"

Verse 16. If I had called, and he had answered] I could scarcely suppose, such is his majesty, and such his holiness, that he could condescend to notice a being so mean, and in every respect so infinitely beneath his notice. These sentiments sufficiently confuted that slander of his friends, who said he was presumptuous; had not becoming notions of the majesty of God; and used blasphemous expressions against his sovereign authority.

Verse 17. He breaketh me with a tempest] The Targum, Syriac, and Arabic, have this sense: He powerfully smites even every hair of my head; and multiplies my wounds without cause. That is, there is no reason known to myself, or to any man, why I should be thus most oppressively afflicted. It is, therefore, cruel and inconsequent to assert, that I suffer for my crimes.

Verse 18. He will not suffer me to take my breath] I have no respite in my afflictions: I suffer continually in my body; and my mind is incessantly harassed.

Verse 19. If I speak of strength, lo, he is strong] Human wisdom, power, and influence, avail nothing before him.

Who shall set me a time] מי יקדני mi yqodeni, "Who would be a witness for me?" or, Who would dare to appear in my behalf? Almost all the terms in this part of the speech of Job, from ver. 11, to ver. 24, are forensic, or juridical, and are taken from legal processes and pleadings, in their gates, or courts of justice.

Verse 20. If I justify myself] God must have some reason for his conduct toward me: I, therefore, do not pretend to justify myself; the attempt to do it would be an insult to his majesty and justice. Though I am conscious of none of the crimes of which you accuse me, and know not why he contends with me; yet he must have some reason, and that reason he does not choose to explain.

Verse 21. Though I were perfect] Had I the fullest conviction that in every thought, word, and deed, I were blameless before him, yet I would not plead this; nor would I think it any security for a life of ease and prosperity; or any proof that my days should be prolonged.

Verse 22. This is one thing] My own observation shows, that in the course of providence the righteous and the wicked have an equal lot, for, when any sudden calamity comes, the innocent and the guilty fall alike. There may be a few exceptions; but they are very extraordinary, and very rare.

Verse 24. The earth is given into the hand of the wicked] Is it not most evident that the worst men possess most of this world's goods; and that the righteous are scarcely ever in power or affluence! This was the case in Job's time; it is the case still. Therefore, prosperity and adversity in this life, are no marks either of God's approbation or disapprobation.

He covereth the faces of the judges thereof] Or, the faces of its decisions he shall cover. God is often stated in Scripture as doing a thing which he only permits to be done. So he permits the eyes of judgment to be blinded: and hence false decisions. Mr. Goode translates the verse thus:—

"The earth is given over to the hand of injustice,
She hoodwinketh the faces of its judges.
Where every one liveth, is it not so?"

And vindicates the translation in his learned notes: but I doubt the Hebrew will not bear this rendering; especially that in the third line.

Where, and who is he? If this be not the case, who is he that acts in this way; and where is he to be found? If God do not permit these things, who is it that orders them? Coverdale translates, As for the world, he getheth it over into the power of the wicked, such as the rulers be wherof all lordes are full. Is it not so? Where is there any, but he is such one: This sense is clear enough, if the original will bear it. The last clause is thus rendered by the Syriac and Arabic, Who can bear his indignation?

Verse 25. Swifter than a post מינין minni rats, "than a runner." The light-footed messenger or courier, who carries messages from place to place.

They flee away] The Chaldee says, My days are swifter than the shadow of a flying bird. So swiftly do they flee away that I cannot discern them; and, when past, they cannot be recalled. There is a sentiment like this in VIRGIL, Geor. lib. iii. ver. 284.

Sed fugit interea, fugit irreparabile tempus!

"But in the mean while time flies! irreparable time flies away!"

Verse 26. As the swift ships אוניות oniotoh ebeh. Ships of desire; or ships of ebeh, says our margin; perhaps more correctly insulated ships, the sails belling out with a fair brisk wind, tide favourable, and the vessels themselves lightly freighted.

The Vulgate has, Like ships freighted with apples. Ships laden with the best fruits, TARGUM. Ships well adapted for sailing, ARABIC. Ships that be good under sale, COVERDALE. Probably this relates to the light fast-sailing ships on the Nile, which were made of reeds or papyrus.

Perhaps the idea to be seized is not so much the swiftness of the passage, as their leaving no trace or track behind them. But instead of אוניות ebeh, אויביות oibeh, hostile ships, or the ships of enemies, is the reading of forty-seven of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. and of the Syriac version. If this be the true reading, what is its sense? My days are gone off like the light vessels of the pirates, (having stripped me of my property, and carried all irrecoverably away) under the strongest press of sail, that they may effect their escape, and secure their booty.

The next words, As the eagle that hasteth to the prey, seem at least to countenance, if not

Verse 27. I will forget my complaint] I will forsake, or forego my complaining. I will leave off my heaviness. VULGATE, I will change my countenance; force myself to smile, and endeavour to assume the appearance of comfort.

Verse 28. I am afraid of all my sorrows] Coverdale translates after the Vulgate, Then am I afraid of all my works. Even were I to cease from complaining, I fear lest not one of my works, however well intentioned, shall stand thy scrutiny, or meet with thy approbation.

Thou wilt not hold me innocent.] Coverdale, after the Vulgate, For I knowe thou shalt notest not an evil doer; but this is not the sense of the original:—Thou wilt not acquit me so as to take away my afflictions from me.

Verse 29: If I be wicked] If I am the sinner you suppose me to be, in vain should I labour to counterfeit joy, and cease to complain of my sufferings.

Verse 30. If I wash myself with snow water] Supposed to have a more detergent quality than common water; and it was certainly preferred to common water by the ancients. Of this we find an example in an elegant but licentious author: Tandem ergo discubimus, pueris Alexandrinis aquam in manus nivatam infundentibus, alisque insequentibus ad pedes. PETR. Satir. cap. xxxi. "At length we sat down, and had snow water poured on our hands by lads of Alexandria," &c.

Mr. Goode supposes that there is an allusion here to the ancient rite of washing the hands in token of innocence. See Psal. xxvi. 6. I will wash my hands in innocence. And lxxiii. 13. Verily I have cleansed my heart in vain, and washed my hands in innocence. And by this ceremony Pilate declared himself innocent of the blood of Christ, Matt. xxvii. 24.

Verse 31. And mine own clothes shall abhor me] Such is thine infinite purity, when put in opposition to the purity of man, that it will bear no comparison. Searched and tried by the eye of God, I should be found as a leper, so that my own clothes would dread to touch me, for fear of being infected by my own corruption. This is a strong and bold figure; and is derived from the corrupted state of his body, which his clothes dreaded to touch, because of the contagious nature of his disorder.

cannot contend with him as with one of my fellows in a court of justice.

Verse 33. Neither is there any day's-man בֵּינֵנוּ מוֹצִיחַ beyneyno mociach, a reprover, arguer, or umpire between us. DAY'S-MAN, in our law, means an arbitrator or umpire between party and party; as it were bestowing a day, or certain time on a certain day, to decree, judge, or decide a matter. Minshieu. DAY is used in law, for the day of appearance in court, either originally or upon assignation, for hearing a matter for trial. Idem. But arbitrator is the proper meaning of the term here: one who is, by the consent of both parties, to judge between them, and settle their differences.

Instead of וְאֵין לוֹ יֵשׁ lo yesh, there is not, fifteen of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. with the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic, read וְאֵין לוֹ יֵשׁ, I wish there were; or, O that there were! Εἰς ἡν ὁ μεσίωνς ἦεν, καὶ ἐρχομαι καὶ διαλλάξω ἀνταμύσειν ἀμφοτέρων. O that we had a mediator, an advocate, and judge between us both! SEPT. Poor Job! he did not yet know the Mediator between God and man: the only means by which God and man can be brought together and reconciled. Had St. Paul this in his eye when he wrote 1 Tim. ii. 5, 6. For there is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; who gave himself a ransom for all. Without this Mediator, and the ransom price which he has laid down, God and man can never be united: and that this union might be made possible, Jesus took the human into conjunction with his divine nature; and thus God was manifest in the flesh.

Verse 34. Let him take his rod away]. In the Masoretic Bibles the word שִׁבְטוֹ shibto, his rod, is written with a large sheth, as above; and as the letter in numerals stands for 9, the masora says the word was thus written to show the nine calamities under which Job had suffered, and which he wished God to remove!

As שֶׁבֶט shebet, not only signifies rod, but also sceptre, or the ensign of royalty, Job might here refer to God sitting in his majesty upon the judgment-seat; and this sight so appalled him, that, filled with terror, he was unable to speak. When a sinful soul sees God in his majesty, terror seizes upon it, and prayer is impossible. We have a beautiful illustration of this, Isa. vi. 1—7. "I saw the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple. Then said I, Wo is me, for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the king, the Lord of hosts."

Verse 35. But it is not so with me. I am not in such circumstances as to plead with my judge. I believe the sense of these words is nearly as Coverdale has expressed it:—For as long as I am in such fearfulness, I can make no answer. A natural picture of the state of a penitent soul which needs no additional colouring.

On the names of the constellations mentioned ver. 9. and again, chap. xxxviii. ver. 31, &c. much has been written; and to little effect. I have already in the notes expressed my doubts whether any constellation be intended. Dr. Hales, however, finds in these names, as he thinks, astronomical data, by which he ascertains the time of Job. I shall give his words:

"The cardinal constellations of spring and autumn, in Job's time, were Chimah and Chesil, or Taurus and Scorpio; noticed xi. 9; and again, xxxviii. 31, 32. of which the principal stars are Aldebaran, the bull's eye, and Antares, the scorpion's heart. Knowing, therefore, the longitudes of these stars, at present, the interval of time from thence to the assumed date of Job's trial will give the difference of the longitudes; and ascertain their positions then, with respect to the vernal and autumnal points of intersection of the equinoctial and ecliptic; according to the usual rate of the precession of the equinoxes, one degree in 71½ years. See that article, vol. i. page 185.

The following calculations I owe to the kindness and skill of the respectable Dr. Brinkley, Andrew's Professor of Astronomy, in the University of Dublin:

"In A. D. 1808, Aldebaran was in two signs, 7 degrees east longitude. But since the date of Job's trial, B. C. 2333, i. e. 4138 years, the precession of the equinoxes amounted to 1 sign, 27 degrees, 53 minutes; which, being subtracted from the former quantity, left Aldebaran in only 9 degrees, 7 minutes longitude, or distance from the vernal intersection; which, falling within the constellation Taurus, consequently rendered it the cardinal constellation of spring; as Pisces is at present:

"In A. D. 1800, Antares was in 8 signs, 6 degrees, 53 minutes, east longitude; or 2 signs, 6 degrees, 53 minutes, east of the autumnal intersection: from which subtracting, as before, the amount of the precession, Antares was left only 9 degrees, 5 minutes east. Since then the autumnal equinox was found within Scorpio: this was then the cardinal constellation of autumn, as Virgo is at present.

"Such a combination and coincidence of various rays of evidence, derived from widely different sources, history, sacred and profane, chronology, and astronomy, and all converging to the same focus, tend strongly to establish the time of Job's trial, as rightly assigned in the year B. C. 2337; or 818 years after the deluge; 184 years before the birth of Abraham; 474 years before the settlement of Jacob's family in Egypt; and 689 years before their exode or departure from thence." New Analysis of Chronology, vol. ii. p. 57.

Now all this is specious; and, were the foundation sound, we might rely on the permanence of the building, though the rains should descend, the floods come, and the winds blow and beat on that house. But all these deductions and conclusions are founded on the assumption that Chemah and Chesil

Job states that he is weary of

JOB. life; and expostulates with God.

mean Taurus and Scorpio; but this is the very point that is to be proved; for proof of this is not offered, nor indeed can be offered; and such assumptions are palpably nugatory. That vy ash, has been generally understood to signify the Great Bear; כֶּסֶל Kesil, Orion; and כֶּמַח Keimah, the Pleiades; may be seen every where; but that they do signify these constellations is perfectly uncertain. We have only conjectures concerning their meaning; and on such conjectures no system can be built. Genuine data, in Dr. Hales' hands, are sure to be conducted to legitimate conclusions: but neither he nor any one else can construct an astronomical fabric in the limbus of conjecture. When Job lived is perfectly uncertain: but that this book was written 818 years after the deluge; 184 years before the birth of Abram, and 689 before the Exodus; and that all this is demonstrable from Chemah and Chesil signifying Taurus and Scorpio, whence the positions of the equinoxes at the time of Job's trial can be ascertained; can never be proved, and can never be credited.

In what many learned men have written on this subject I find as much solidity and satisfaction as from what is piously and gravely stated in the Glossa Ordinaria.

Qui facit Arcturum. Diversæ sunt constellationes, varios status ecclesiæ signantes. Per Arcturum, qui semper super horizontem nostrum apparet, significatur status apostolorum qui in episcopis remanet. Per Oriona, qui est tempestatis signum, significatur, status martyrum. Per Hyadas, quæ significant pluvios, status doctorum doctrinæ pluvium effundentium. Per interiora auri, quæ sunt nobis occulta, status Anachoretarum, hominum aspectus declinantium. "These different constellations signify various states of the church. By Arcturus, which always appears above our horizon, is signified the apostolic state, which still remains in episcopacy. By Orion, which is a tempestuous sign, is signified the state of the martyrs. By the hyades, (kids) which indicate rain, the state of the doctors, pouring out the rain of doctrine, is signified. And by the inner chambers of the south, which are hidden from us, the state of the Anchores (hermits) is signified, who always shun the sight of men."

Much more of the same allegorical matter may be found in the same place, the Glossa Ordinaria, of Strabus of Fulda, on the ixth chapter of Job. But how unreal and empty are all these things! What an uncertain sound do such trumpets give!

NOTES ON CHAPTER X.

Verse 1. My soul is weary of my life] Here is a proof that נֶפֶשׁ nephesh, does not signify the animal life, but the soul or immortal mind, as distinguished from חַי chai, that animal life: and is a strong proof that Job believed in the distinction between these two principles; was no materialist; but, on the contrary, credited the proper immortality of the soul!

I will leave my complaint] I will charge myself with the cause of my own calamities; and shall not charge my Maker foolishly: but I must deplore my wretched and forlorn state.

Verse 2. Do not condemn me] Let me not be afflicted in thy wrath.

Show me wherefore thou contendest] If I am afflicted because of my sin, show me what that sin is. God never afflicts but for past sin; or to try his followers; or, for the greater manifestation of his grace in their support and deliverance.

Verse 3. Is it good unto thee] Surely it can be no gratification to thee, to distress the children of men, as if thou didst despise the work of thy own hands.

And shine upon the counsel] For by my afflictions the harsh judgments of the wicked will appear to be confirmed: viz. that God regards not his most fervent worshippers; and it is no benefit to lead a religious life.

Verse 4. Hast thou eyes of flesh?] Dost thou judge as man judges? Illustrated by the next clause, Seest thou as man seeth?

Verse 5. Are thy days as the days of man?] עֲנֹשׁ Enosh, wretched miserable man, thy years as man's days. גָּבֵר gaber, the strong man. Thou art not short-lived, like man in his present imperfect state; nor can the years of the long-lived patriarchs be compared with thine. The difference of the phraseology in the original justifies this view of the subject. Man in his low estate cannot be likened unto thee; nor can he, in his greatest excellence, though made in thy own image and likeness, be compared to thee.

Verse 6. That thou inquirest] Is it becoming thy infinite dignity to concern thyself so much with the affairs or transgressions of a despicable mortal? A word spoken in the heart of most sinners.

Verse 7. Thou knowest that I am not wicked While thou hast this knowledge of me, and my conduct, why appear to be sifting me as if in order to find out sin: and, though none can be found, treating me as though I were a trans-

Verse 8. Thine hands have made me Thou art well acquainted with human nature, for thou art its Author.

And fashioned me together round about All my powers and faculties have been planned and executed by thyself. It is thou who hast refined the materials out of which I have been formed, and modified them into that excellent symmetry and order in which they are now found: so that the union and harmony of the different parts (יחד yachad) and their arrangement and completion (סבב sabib,) proclaim equally thy wisdom, skill, power, and goodness.

Yet thou dost destroy me. ואכלני va-tiballéni, “and thou wilt swallow me up.” Men generally care for, and prize those works on which they have spent most time, skill, and pains; but although thou hast formed me with such incredible skill and labour, yet thou art about to destroy me. How dreadful an evil must sin be, when, on its account, God has pronounced the sentence of death on all mankind!
And that body, so curiously and skilfully formed, must be decomposed, and reduced to dust!

Verse 9. Thou hast made me as the clay
Thou hast fashioned me according to thy own mind, out of a mass of clay;—after so much skill and pains expended, men might naturally suppose they were to have a permanent being;
but thou hast decreed to turn them into dust!

Verse 10. Hast thou not poured me out as milk After all that some learned men have said on this subject, in order to confine the images here to simple nutrition; I am satisfied that generation is the true notion. Respicit ad fœtus in matris utero primam formationem, quum in embryonem ex utriusque parentis dammodo referente, me formasti—In interpretando, inquit Hieronymus, omnino his accedo qui de genitali semine accipiunt, quod ipsa tanquam natura emulget, ac dein condescere in utero ac coalescere jubet. I make no apology for leaving this untranslated.

The different expressions in this and the following verse are very appropriate: the pouring out like milk, coagulating, clothing with skin and flesh, fencing with bones and sinews.

12 Thou hast granted me life and favour; and thy visitation hath preserved my spirit.

If I believed that Job referred to nutrition, which I do not, I might speak of the chyle, the chylipotetic organs, the lacteal vessels, and the generation of all the solids and fluids from this substance, which itself is derived from the food taken into the stomach. But this process, properly speaking, does not take place till the human being is brought into the world, it being previously nourished by the mother through means of the funis umbilicus, without that action of the stomach by which the chyle is prepared.

Verse 12. Thou hast granted me life and favour Thou hast brought me from my mother's womb; given me an actual existence among men; by thy favour or mercy thou hast provided me with the means of life; and thy visitation, thy continual providential care, has preserved me in life, has given me the air I breathe, and furnished me with those powers which enable me to respire it as an agent and preserver of life. It is by God's continual visitation or influence, that any life of man is preserved. In him we live, move, and have our being.

Verse 13. And these things hast thou hid in thine heart Thou hast had many gracious purposes concerning me which thou hast not made known: but thy visitations and mercy are sufficient proofs of kindness toward me; though, for purposes unknown to me, thou hast sorely afflicted me, and continuest to treat me as an enemy.

Verse 14. If I sin From thee nothing can be hidden; if I sin, thou takest account of the transgression; and canst not hold me for innocent, when thou knowest I am guilty.

Verse 15. If I be wicked I must meet with that punishment that is due to the workers of iniquity.

If I be righteous I am only in the state which my duty to my Creator requires me to be in; and I cannot, therefore, suppose that on this account I can deserve any thing by way of favour from the justice of my Maker.

my state and circumstances. I know that thou art merciful, and dost not afflict willingly the children of men: I know I have not wickedly departed from thee, and yet I am treated by thee as if I were an apostate from every good. I am, therefore, full of confusion: see thou to my affliction, and bring me out of it in such a way as shall at once prove my innocence, the righteousness of thy ways, and the mercy of thy nature.

Verse 16. For it increaseth.] Probably this refers to the affliction mentioned above, which increased in proportion to its duration. Every day made his escape from such a load of evils less and less probable.

Thou hunteth me as a fierce lion.] As the hunters attack the king of beasts in the forest, so my friends attack me. They assail me on every side.

Thou showest thyself marvellous.] Thy designs, thy ways, thy works, are all incomprehensible to me: thou dost both confound and overpower me. Mr. Goode translates thus:

For uprousing as a ravenous lion dost thou spring upon me; And again, thou shovest over me thy vast power.

Verse 17. Thou renewest thy witnesses.] In this speech of Job, he is ever referring to trials in courts of judicature; and almost all his terms are forensic. Thou bringest witnesses in continual succession, to confound and convict me.

Changes and war.] I am as if attacked by successive troops; one company being wearied, another succeeds to the attack; so that I am harassed by continual warfare.

Verse 18. Wherefore then.] Why didst thou give me a being when thou didst foresee I should be exposed to such incredible hardships? See on chap. iii. ver. 10, &c.

Verse 19. I should have been as though.] Had I given up the ghost as soon as born, as I could not then have been conscious of existence; it would have been, as it respects myself, as though I had never been; being immediately transported from my mother's womb to my grave.

Verse 20. Are not my days few?] My life cannot be long, let me have a little respite before I die.

Verse 21. I shall not return.] I shall not return again from the dust, to have a dwelling among men.

To the land of darkness.] See the notes on chap. iii. ver. 5. There are here a crowd of obscure and dislocated terms, admirably ex-not been; I should have been carried from the womb to the grave.

20 Are not my days few?

pressive of the obscurity and uncertainty of the subject. What do we know of the state of separate spirits? What do we know of the spiritual world? How do souls exist separate from their respective bodies? Of what are they capable, and what is their employment?—Who can answer these questions? Perhaps nothing can be said much better of the state, than is here said, a land of obscurity like darkness.

The shadow of death.] A place where death rules, over which he projects his shadow, intercepting every light of every kind of life:—without any order ^{וְלֹא סֵדֶרִים} velo sedarim, having no arrangements, no distinctions of inhabitants, the poor and the rich are there, the master and his slave, the king and the beggar, their bodies in equal corruption and disgrace, their souls distinguished only by their moral character. Stripped of their flesh, they stand in their naked simplicity before God; in that place.

Verse 22. Where the light is as darkness.]

A palpable obscure! it is space and place, and has only such light or capability of distinction as renders "darkness visible." It is, as the Vulgate expresses it, Terra tenebrosa, et operata mortis caligine: Terra miserie et tenebrarum, ubi umbra mortis, et nullus ordo, sed sempiternus horror inhabitat. "A murky land, covered with the thick darkness of death: a land of wretchedness and obscurities, where is the shadow of death; and no order but sempiternal horror dwells every where." Or, as Coverdale expresses this last clause, Wheretas is no order but terribil feare as in the darknesse. A duration not characterized or measured by any of the attributes of time; where there is no order of darkness and light, night and day, heat and cold, summer and winter. It is the state of the dead! The place of separate spirits! It is out of time, out of probation, beyond change or mutability. It is on the confines of eternity! But what is this? And Where? Eternity! how can I form any conception of thee? In thee there is no order, no bounds, no substance, no progression, no change, no past, no present, no future! It is an indescribable something, to which there is no analogy in the compass of creation. It is infinity, and incomprehensibility to all finite beings. It is what living I know not, and what I must die to know; and even then I shall apprehend no more of it than merely to know that it is E-T-E-R-N-I-T-Y.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XI.

Verse 1. Zophar the Naamathite] Of this man and his friends, see chap. ii. ver. 11. He is the most inveterate of Job's accusers, and generally speaks without feeling or pity. In our godliness he excelled all the rest. This chapter and the xth, comprehends all that he said. He was too crooked to speak much in measured verse.

Verse 2. Should not the multitude of words be answered?] Some translate, "to multiply words profiteth nothing."

And should a man full of talk be justified?] יש שפתיים ish shepatalayim, "a man of lips," a proper appellation for a great talker: he is "a man of lips," i. e. his lips are the only active parts of his system.

Verse 3. Should thy lies make men hold their peace?] This is a very severe reproof, and not justified by the occasion.

And when thou mockest] As thou despisest others, shall no man put thee to scorn? Zophar could never think that the solemn and awful manner in which Job spoke could be called babbling; as some would translate the term לילל lilal. He might consider Job's speech as sarcastic and severe; but he could not consider it as nonsense.

Verse 4. My doctrine is pure] לכחי likachi, "my assumptions." What I assume or take as right, and just, and true, are so: the precepts which I have formed, and the practice which I have founded on them, are all correct and perfect. Job had not exactly said, My doctrine and way of life is pure, and I am clean in thine eyes; but he had vindicated himself against their charges of secret sins and hypocrisy, and appealed to God for his general uprightness and sincerity; but Zophar here begs the question, in order that he may have something to say, and room to give vent to his invective.

Verse 5. But Oh that God would speak] How little feeling, humanity, and charity, is there in this prayer.

Verse 6. The secrets of wisdom] All the depths of his own counsels; the heights, lengths, and breadths of holiness; that they are double to that which is. תשחיה tushiah, which we translate that which is, is a word frequent in Job, and in the Book of Proverbs; and is one of the evidences brought in favour of Solomon, as the author of this book. It signifies substance or essence; and is translated by a great variety of terms; enterprise, completeness, substance, the whole constitution, wisdom, law, sound wisdom, solid complete happiness, solidity of reason, and truth, the complete total sum, &c. &c. See Taylor's Heb. and Eng. Concord. under נח. In this place the versions are various. Coverdale, following the Vulgate, translates: That he might shew thee (the out of his secret wisdom) how manifold his law is. The Septuagint, οτι διπλους εστι των νανδ ον; that it is double to what it is with thee. Mr. Goodé translates, "For they are intricacies to iniquity." This is a meaning never before given to תשחיה tushiah, and a meaning which even his own learned note will not make generally prevalent. Perhaps Zophar is here, in mind, comparing the wisdom which has been revealed with the wisdom not revealed. The perfection and excellence of the divine nature, and the purity of his law, are, in substance and essence, double or manifold to the revelation already made.

Less than thine iniquity deserveth.] Mr. Goode translates, and the knowledge which God hath withdrawn from thee because of thy sins; and represents Zophar as praying that God would reveal to him the secrets of wisdom, and the knowledge which he had withdrawn from him because of his transgressions. That Zophar intends to insinuate that God afflicted Job because of his iniquities is evident; and that he thought that God had inflicted less chastisement upon him than his sins deserved is not less so; and that, therefore, Job's complaining of harsh treatment was not at all well founded.

Verse 7. Canst thou by searching find out God?] What is God? A being self-existent; eternal; infinite; immense; without bounds; incomprehensible either by mind, or time, or space. Who then can find this being out? Who can fathom his depths, ascend to his heights, extend to his breadths, and comprehend the infinitude of his perfections!

thou know? Long beyond the earth, and broad beyond the sea, is its measure. These are instances in the immensity of created things; and all out of the reach of human power and knowledge: and if these things are so, how incomprehensible must he be, who designed, created, preserves, and governs, the whole!

We find the same thought in Thomson:

"These are thy glorious works, parent of good!

Almighty! thine this universal frame:

How wondrous fair! thyself how wondrous then!"

Verse 10. If he cut off] As he is unlimited and almighty, he cannot be controlled. He will do whatsoever he pleases: and he is pleased with nothing but what is right. Who then will dare to find fault! Perhaps Zophar may refer to Job's former state, his losses, and afflictions. If he cut off, as he has done, thy children; if he shut up, as he has done, thyself by this sore disease; or gather together hostile bands to invade thy territories and carry away thy property; who can hinder him? He is sovereign, and has a right to dispose of his own property as he pleases.

Verse 11. He knoweth vain men] מְדַבְּרֵי שָׁוְיָ medabberi shavi, "men of falsehood."

He seeth wickedness] He sees as well what is in man, as what man does; and of his actions and propensities he cannot be an indifferent spectator.

Verse 12. For vain man would be wise] The original is difficult and uncertain, וַיִּשְׁתַּבַּח יִלְלָבֶבֶת ve-ish nabub yillabeb, "And shall the hollow man assume courage," or "pride himself?" Or, as Mr. Goode rather paraphrases it, Will he then accept the hollow-hearted person? The Chaldee gives two renderings:—An eloquent man shall become wiser in his heart, and the colt of the wild ass is born as the son of man. Or, The wise man shall ponder it; and the refractory youth, who at last becomes prudent, shall make a great man. Coverdale: A hapne body exalteth him self; and the son of man is like a wilde asse's foale. Houbigant translates thus:—A man who hath understanding will become prudent; but he who is as the wild ass hath no heart, i. e. sense. According to this critic, the meaning is this:—A man of sense, should he at any time transgress, will learn wisdom from it: but a man of a brutish mind, uncultivated, and unreflecting, will plunge yet deeper into iniquity.

Though man be born like a wild ass's colt] Is translated by Mr. Goode, Or shall the wild ass colt assume the man. This is making a sense, but such as I fear the original will never allow. There is no end to the translations of this verse, and conjectures relative to its meaning. I shall conclude with the Vulgate: Vir vanus in superbiam erigitur, et tanquam pullum onagri se liberum natum putat. "Vain man is puffed up with pride; and he supposes himself to be born free like the wild ass's colt." Man is full of self-conceit; and imagines himself born to act as he pleases, to roam at large, to be under no control, and to be accountable to none for his actions.

Verse 13. If thou prepare thine heart] Make use of the powers which God has given thee, and be determined to seek him with all thy soul.

And stretch out thine hands toward him] Making fervent prayer and supplication, putting away iniquity out of thy hand, and not permitting wickedness to dwell in thy tabernacle; then thou shalt lift up thy face without a blush, thou wilt become established, and have nothing to fear, ver. 14, 15.

There is a sentiment in Prov. xvi. 1. very similar to that in the 13th verse which we translate very improperly:

לֹא־אֶדָּרֵךְ לֵאדָם Le-adam me'adkey leb.

To man are the preparations of the heart

וּמִיִּהוָה מַעֲנֶה לָשׁוֹן U-mihova me'aneh lashon.

But from Jehovah is the answer to the tongue.

It is man's duty to pray; it is God's prerogative to answer. Zophar, like all the rest, is true to his principle. Job must be a wicked man, else he had not been afflicted. There must be some iniquity in his hand; and some wickedness tolerated in his family. So they all supposed.

Verse 16. Because thou shalt forget thy misery] Thou shalt have such long and complete rest, that thou shalt scarcely remember thy labour.

As waters that pass away] Like as the mountain floods which sweep every thing before them, houses, tents, cattle, and the produce of the field, and are speedily absorbed by the sandy plains over which they run—so shalt thou remember thy sufferings; they were wasting and ruinous for the time, but were soon over and gone.

the noon] The rest of thy life shall be unclouded prosperity.

Thou shalt shine forth] Thou shalt be in this unclouded state, as the sun in the firmament of heaven, giving light and heat to all around thee.

Thou shalt be as the morning.] Thus the sun of thy prosperity shall arise, and shine more and more unto the perfect day. This is the image which the sacred writer employs; and it is correct and elegant.

Verse 18. And thou shalt be secure] Thou shalt not fear any farther evils to disturb thy prosperity, for thou shalt have a well-grounded hope and confidence that thou shalt no more be visited by adversity.

Yea, thou shalt dig] I believe this neither refers to digging his grave, nor to curiously investigating surrounding circumstances; but to the custom of digging for water in the places where they pitched their tents. It was a matter of high importance in Asiatic countries to find good wells of wholesome water; and they were frequently causes of contention among neighbouring chiefs, who sometimes stopped them up; and, at other times, seized them as their own. Through envy of Isaac's prosperity the Philistines stopped up all the wells which Abraham had digged, Gen. xxvi. 12—16. And we find the herdsmen of Gerar contending with Isaac's servants about the wells which the latter had digged: so that they were obliged to abandon two of the chief of them, and remove to a distance in order to dig and find quiet possession. See Gen. xxvi. 17—22. Zophar, in reference to all these sorts of contentions and petty wars about wells and springs, tells Job, that in the state of prosperity to which he shall be brought by the good providence of God, he shall dig, find wells of living water; none shall contend with him: and he shall rest in safety, all the neighbouring chieftains cultivating friendship with him; see on chap. v. 23, 24. and that this is the meaning of the passage the following verse shows:—Thou shalt lie down, and none shall make thee afraid; yea, many shall make suit unto thee. Thou shalt be in perfect security; no enemy shall molest thee, and many shall seek thy friendship.

Verse 20. The eyes of the wicked shall fail] They shall be continually looking out for help and deliverance; but their expectation shall be cut off.

And they shall not escape] They shall receive the punishment due to their deserts; for God has his eye continually upon them, וְנִסָּה אֶת-מַנּוֹסֵיכֶם U-manos abad minnehem, literally, And escape perishes from them. Flight from impending destruction is impossible.

And their hope shall be as the giving up of the ghost.] וְנִפְּשָׁם נִפְּשָׁם וְנִפְּשָׁם ve-tikkivathem mapach nephesh, "And their hope an exhalation of breath." They retain their hope to the last; and the last breath they breathe is the final and eternal termination of their hope. They give up their hope and their ghost together: for a vain hope cannot enter into that place where shadow and representation exist not; all being substance and reality. And thus endeth Zophar the Naamathite, whose premises were in general good; his conclusions legitimate: but his application of them, to Job's case, totally erroneous; because he still proceeded on the ground that Job was a wicked man, if not ostensibly, yet secretly; and that the sufferings he was undergoing were the means by which God was unmasking him to the view of men.

But, allowing that Job had been a bad man, the exhortations of Zophar were well calculated to enforce repentance, and excite confidence in the divine mercy. Zophar seems to have had a full conviction of the all-governing providence of God; and that those who served him with an honest and upright heart would be ever distinguished in the distribution of temporal good. He seems, however, to think, that rewards and punishments were distributed in this life; and does not refer, at least very evidently, to a future state. Probably his information on subjects of divinity did not extend much beyond the grave: and we have much cause to thank God for a clearer dispensation. Deus nobis hæc otia fecit. God grant that we may make a good use of it.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XII.

Verse 2. No doubt but ye are the people] Doubtless ye are the wisest men in the world; all wisdom is concentrated in you; and when ye die there will no more be found on the face of the earth! This is a strong irony.

Verse 3. I am not inferior to you] I do not fall short of any of you in understanding, wisdom, learning, and experience.

Who knoweth not such things as these?] All your boasted wisdom consists only in strings of proverbs which are in every person's mouth; and are no proof of wisdom and experience in them that use them.

Verse 4. I am as one mocked of his neighbour] Though I am invoking God for help and salvation, yet my friends mock me in this most solemn and sacred work. But God answereth me.

The just upright man is laughed to scorn.] This is a very difficult verse, on which no two critics seem to be agreed. Mr. Goode translates the 4th and 5th verses thus:—

This brother is become a laughing stock to his companions, While calling upon God that he would succour him. The just, the perfect man, is a laughing stock to the proud, A derision amidst the sunshine of the prosperous, While ready to slip with his foot.

For a vindication of this version I must refer to his notes. Coverdale gives at least a good sense. Thus he that calleth upon God, and whom God heareth, is mocked of his neighbours: the godly and innocent man is laughed to scorn. Godliness is a light despised in the hearts of the rich; and is set for them to stumble upon. The fifth verse is thus rendered by Mr. Parkhurst:—"A torch of contempt, or contemptible link (see Isa. vii. 4. xl. 2, 3.) le-âsetuth, to the splendours of the prosperous, (is he who is) ready (nach) Job. xv. 23. xviii. 12. Psal. xxxviii. 17.) to slip with his foot." The general sense is tolerably plain: but to emendations and conjectures there is no end.

Verse 6. The tabernacles of robbers prosper] Those who live by the plunder of their neighbours are often found in great secular prosper-secure; into whose hand God bringeth abundantly.

7 But ask now the beasts, and they shall teach thee; and the fowls of the air, and they shall tell thee:

8 Or speak to the earth, and it shall teach thee; and the fishes of the sea shall declare unto thee.

9 Who knoweth not in all these that the hand of the LORD hath wrought this?

10 ⁱ In whose hand is the ^k soul of every living thing, and the breath of ^l all mankind.

11 ^m Doth not the ear try words? and the ⁿ mouth taste his meat?

12 ^o With the ancient is wisdom; and ^h Ch. 21. 7. Psal. 37. 1, 35. & 73. 11, 12. & 92. 7. Jer. 12. 1. Mal. 3. 15.—ⁱ Num. 16. 22. Dan. 5. 23. Acts 17. 28.—^k Or, life. ^l Heb. all flesh of man.—^m Ch. 34. 3.—ⁿ Heb. palate, Ch. 6. 30. ^o Ch. 32. 7.

ity; and they that provoke God, by impiety and blasphemy, live in a state of security and affluence. These are administrations of providence which cannot be accounted for; yet the Judge of all the earth doth right. Therefore prosperity and adversity are no evidences of a man's spiritual state, nor of the place he holds in the approbation or disapprobation of God.

Verse 7. But ask now the beasts, and they shall teach thee] Mr. Goode's paraphrase here is very just. "Why tell ye me that the Almighty hath brought this calamity upon me? Every thing in nature; the beasts of the field, the fowls of heaven, every inhabitant of earth and sea, and every thing that befalls them, are the work of his hands; and every thing feels and acknowledges him to be the universal Creator and controller. It is the common doctrine of all nature: but to apply it as ye would apply it to me, and to assert that I am suffering for being guilty of hypocrisy, is equally impertinent and impious. He ordains every thing in wisdom as well as in power: but why events happen as they happen, why good and evil are promiscuously scattered throughout nature or human life, ye are as ignorant of as myself."

Verse 10. In whose hand is the soul of every living thing] נפש כל חי nephesh col chai, "the soul of all life."

And the breath of all mankind.] רוח כל בשר ve-ruach col besar, "and the spirit or breath of all flesh." Does not the first refer to the immortal soul, the principle of all intellectual life; and the latter to the breath, the grand means, respiration, by which animal existence is continued?

Verse 11. Doth not the ear try words?] All these are common-place sayings. Ye have advanced nothing new; ye have cast no light upon the dispensations of providence.

Verse 12. With the ancient is wisdom] Men who have lived in those primitive times, when the great facts of nature were recent, such as the creation, fall, flood, confusion of tongues, migration of families, and consequent settlement of nations, had much knowledge from those facts; and their length of days, the many hundreds of years to which they lived, gave them such an opportunity of accumulating wisdom by experience, that they are deservedly considered as oracles.

Verse 13. With him is wisdom and strength]
But all these things come from God: he is the fountain of wisdom, and the source of power.
He alone can give us unerring counsel, and understanding to comprehend and act profitably by it. See on ver. 16.

Verse 14. He breaketh down] He alone can create; and he alone can destroy. Nothing can be annihilated but by the same power that created it. This is a most remarkable fact.
No power, skill, or cunning of man, can annihilate the smallest particle of matter: man, by chemical agency, may change its form; but,
to reduce it to nothing, belongs to God alone.
In the course of his providence, God breaks down, so that it cannot be built up again. See proofs of this in the total political destruction of Nineveh, Babylon, Persepolis, Tyre, and other cities, which have been broken down never to be rebuilt; as well as the Assyrian, Babylonian, Grecian, and Roman empires, which have been dismembered, and almost annihilated, never more to be regenerated.

He shutteth up a man] He often frustrates the best laid purposes, so that they can never be brought to good effect.

Verse 15. He withholdeth the waters] This is, I think, an allusion to the third day's work of the creation, Gen. i. 9. And God said, Let the waters be gathered together unto one place, and let the dry land appear. Thus the earth was drained, and the waters collected into seas, and bound to their particular places.

Also he sendeth them out] Here is also an allusion to the flood; for, when he broke up the fountains of the great deep, then the earth was overturned.

Verse 16. With him is strength and wisdom] ^{וְעִזָּתוֹ וְחִכְמוֹתָיו} oz ve-tushiah, strength and sufficiency.
Strength or power, springing from an exhaust-less and infinite source of potency. In the thirteenth verse it is said, With him is wisdom and strength; but the expressions are not the same, ^{חֹכְמָה וְעִזָּה} chocmeh u-geburah, intelligence and fortitude, or strength in action; the wisdom ever guiding the exertions of power; but here is strength or power in essence; and an eternal potentiality. With him is every excellence, in potentiâ and in esse. He *borrow*s nothing; he derives nothing. As he is, self-them out, and they overturn the earth.

existent, so is he self-sufficient. We have had the word ^{וְעִזָּה} tushiah before. See the note on chap. xi. ver. 6.

The deceived and the deceiver are his.] Some think this refers to the fall: even Satan, the deceiver or beguiler, and Adam and Eve, the deceived or beguiled, are his. Satan, as this book shows, cannot act without especial per- mission; and man, whom the seducer thought to make his own property for ever, is claimed as the peculium, or especial property of God, for the seed of the woman was then appointed to bruise the head of the serpent; and Jesus Christ has assumed the nature of man, and thus brought human nature into a state of fel- lowship with himself. Thus he who sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one, for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren, Hebr. ii. 11.

Verse 17. He leadeth counsellors away spoiled.] The events of war are also in his hand. It is he who gives victory; through him even the counsellors, the great and chief men, are often led into captivity, and found among the spoils.

And maketh the judges fools.] He infatuates the judges. Does this refer to the foolish conduct of some of the Israelitish judges, such as Samson?

Verse 18. He looseth the bond of kings] He takes away their splendid robes, and clothes them with sackcloth; or he dissolves their authority; permits their subjects to rebel and overthrow the state, to bind them as captives, and despoil them of all power, authority, and liberty. Many proofs of this occur in the Is- raelitish history, and in the history of the principal nations of the earth; and not a few in the history of Britain.

Verse 19. He leadeth princes away spoiled, and overthroweth the mighty.] What multitudes of proofs of this does the history of the world present! Even in the late disastrous war with the French Republic and Empire, which began in 1793, and did not terminate till 1815. How many princes, or rather priests ^{כֹּהֲנִים} cohanim, have been spoiled of their power, influence, and authority; and how many mighty men, captains, generals, admirals, &c. have been overthrown! But supposing that the writer of the Book of Job lived, as some think, after the captivity, how many priests were led away spoiled, both from Israel and Judah; and how many kings and mighty men were overthrown in the disastrous wars between the Assyrians, Babylonians, and Jews!

Verse 20. He removeth away the speech of the trusty] The faithful counsellor, and the eloquent orator. avail nothing: Quos Deus vult perdere, prius dementat, God infatuates those whom he is determined to destroy. The writer might have had his eyes on Isa. iii. 1—3. which the reader will do well to consult.

The understanding of the aged.] זקונים zekonim, signifies the same here as our word elders, or eldermen; which include in themselves the two ideas of seniority, or considerably advanced age; and official authority. These can do no more to save a state which God designs to destroy, notwithstanding their great political wisdom and knowledge, than the child who can neither reason nor speak.

Verse 21. He poureth contempt upon princes] נדבבים nedibim, those of royal extraction; widely different from the כהנים cohanim, mentioned ver. 19.

Weakeneth the strength of the mighty.] אפיקים aphikim, the compact; the well-strung together; the nervous and sinewy. Perhaps there is a reference here to the crocodile, as the same term is applied, chap. xl. ver. 13. to the compactness of his bones: and as רפה riphah mezich, which we translate weakeneth the strength, signifies more properly looseth the girdle, as the margin has properly rendered it, the reference seems still more pointed; for it is known that "the crocodile, from the shoulders to the extremity of the tail, is covered with large square scales; disposed like parallel girdles, fifty-two in number. In the middle of each girdle are four protuberances, which become higher as they approach the end of the tail, and compose four rows." See the quotation in Parkhurst, under the word אפח aphak. What is human strength against this? We may say as the Lord said, Job xl. 19. He that made him can make his sword to approach unto him. He alone can loose the girdles of this mighty one.

Verse 22. He discovereth deep things out of darkness] This may either refer to God's works in the great deep, or to the plots and stratagems of wicked men; conspiracies that were deeply laid, well digested, and about to be produced into existence, when death, whose shadow had hitherto concealed them, is to glut himself with carnage.

Verse 23. He increaseth the nations] Mr. Goode translates, He letteth the nations grow licentious. Pride, fullness of bread, with extensive trade and commerce, produce luxury; and this is ever accompanied with profligacy of manners. When, then, the cup of this iniquity is full, God destroys the nation, by bringing, or permitting to come, against it, a nation less pampered, more necessitous, and injured to toil.

He enlargeth the nations] Often permits a nation to acquire an accession of territory; and afterward shuts them up within their ancient boundaries, and often contracts even those. All these things seem to occur as natural events, and the consequences of state intrigues, and such like causes: but, when divine inspiration comes to pronounce upon them, they are shown to be the consequence of God's acting in his judgment and mercy; for it is by him that kings reign: it is he who putteth down one, and raiseth up another.

Verse 24. He taketh away the heart of the chief] Suddenly deprives the leaders of great counsels, or mighty armies, of courage; so that, panic-struck, they flee when none pursue; or are confounded when about to enter on the accomplishment of important designs.

And causeth them to wander in a wilderness] A plain allusion to the journeyings of the Israelites in the deserts of Arabia, on their way to the promised land. Their chief, Aaron, had his courage all taken away, by the clamours of the people; and so made them a mollen calf to be the object of their worship; which defection from God was the cause of their wandering nearly forty years on the trackless wilderness. The reference is so marked, that it scarcely admits of a doubt; yet Houbigant and some others have called it in question, and suppose that those chiefs or heads of families which led out colonies into distant parts are principally intended. It answers too well to the case of the Israelites in the wilderness, to admit of any other interpretation.

Verse 25. They grope in the dark] The writer seems to have had his eye on those words of Moses, Deut. xxviii. 28, 29. The Lord shall smite thee with madness, and blindness, and astonishment of heart: and thou shalt grope at noonday, as the blind gropeth in darkness. And this also may refer to the unaccountable errors, transgressions, and judicial blindness, of the Israelites in their journeying to the promised land: but it will apply also to the state of wicked nations under judicial blindness. The writer is principally indebted for his imagery, and indeed for the chief expressions used here, to Psa. cvii. 27.—They reel to and fro, and stagger like a drunken man. 39, 40.—Again, they are diminished and brought low through oppression, affliction, and sorrow.

He POURETH CONTEMPT UPON PRINCES, AND CAUSETH THEM TO WANDER IN THE WILDERNESS, where there is no way.

Mr. Goode has some judicious reflections on this chapter; particularly on ver. 13—22. "It should be observed," says he, "that the entire passage has a reference to the machinery of a regular and political government; and that its general drift is to imprint on the mind of the hearer the important doctrine that the whole of the constituent principles of such a government, its officers and institutions; its monarchs and princes; its privy counsellors, judges, and ministers of state; its chieftains, public orators, and assembly of elders; its nobles, or men of hereditary rank; and its stout robust peasantry, as we should express it in the present day; nay, the deep designing villains that plot in secret its destruction; that the nations themselves, and the heads or sovereigns of the nations; are all, and equally in the hands of the Almighty; that with him human pomp is poverty, human excellence turpitude, human judgment error, human wisdom folly, human dignities contempt, human strength weakness."

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIII.

Verse 1. Lo, mine eye hath seen all this] Ye have brought nothing new to me; I know those maxims as well as you; nor have you any knowledge of which I am not possessed.

Verse 3. Surely I would speak to the Almighty אֵלֹהִים alam, O that, I wish I could speak to the Almighty!

I desire to reason with God.] He speaks here in reference to the proceedings in a court of justice. Ye pretend to be advocates for God, but ye are forgers of lies: O that God himself would appear! Before him I could soon prove my innocence of the evils of which ye charge me.

Verse 4. Ye are forgers of lies] Ye frame deceitful arguments: ye reason sophistically, and pervert truth and justice, in order to support your cause.

Physicians of no value.] Ye are as feeble in your reasonings as ye are inefficient in your skill. Ye can neither heal the wound of my mind, nor the disease of my body. In ancient times every wise man professed skill in the healing art; and probably Job's friends had tried their skill on his body as well as on his mind. He therefore had, in his argument against their teaching, a double advantage:—Your skill in divinity and physic is equal: in the former ye are forgers of lies; in the latter, you are good-for-nothing physicians. I can see no reason to depart from the general meaning of the original to which the ancient versions adhere. The Chaldee says, "Ye are idle physicians; and, like the mortified flesh which is cut off with the knife, so are the whole of you." The imagery in the former clause is chirurgical, and refers to the sewing together, or connecting, the divided sides of wounds: for תִּפְתֵּל topheley, which we translate forgers, comes from פָּתַל taphal, to fasten, tie, connect, sew together. And I question whether תִּפְתֵּל topheley, here may not as well express SURGEONS, as תִּפְתֵּל rophey in the latter clause express PHYSICIANS. Ye are CHIRURGEONS of falsity, and worthless PHYSICIANS.

Verse 5. Hold your peace; and it should be your wisdom.] In Prov. xvii. 28. we have the following apophthegm, "Even a fool, when he holdeth his peace, is counted wise: and he that shutteth his lips a man of understanding." There is no reason to say that Solomon quotes from Job: I have already expressed my opinion that the high antiquity attributed to this book is perfectly unfounded; and that there is much more evidence that Solomon was its author, than there is, that it was the composition of Moses. But, whenever Job lived, whether before Abraham, or after Moses, the book was not written till the time of Solomon, if not later. But as to the saying in question, it is a general apophthegm, and may be found among the wise sayings of all nations.

I may observe here that a silent man is not likely to be a fool: for a fool will be always prating; or, according to another adage, a fool's bolt is soon shot. The Latins have the same proverb, Vir sapit qui pauca loquitur, A wise man speaks little.

Verse 5. Hear now my reasoning] The speeches in this book are conceived as if delivered in a court of justice, different counsellors pleading against each other. Hence most of the terms are forensic.

Verse 7. Will ye speak wickedly for God?] In order to support your own cause, in contradiction to the evidence which the whole of my life bears to the uprightness of my heart, will ye continue to assert that God could not thus afflict me, unless flagrant iniquity were found in my ways; for it is on this ground alone that ye pretend to vindicate the providence of God. Thus ye tell lies for God's sake; and thus ye wickedly contend for your Maker.

Verse 8. Will ye accept his person? Do you think to act by him as you would by a mortal; and, by telling lies in his favour, attempt to conciliate his esteem?

Verse 9. Is it good that he should search you out? Would it be to your credit if God should try your hearts, and uncover the motives of your conduct. Were you tried as I am, how would you appear?

Do ye so mock him? Do ye think that you can deceive him; and by flattering speeches bring him to your terms, as you would bring an undiscerning empty mortal like yourselves?

Verse 10. He will surely reprove you You may expect not only his disapprobation, but his hot displeasure.

Verse 11. His dread fall upon you? The very apprehension of his wrath is sufficient to crush you to nothing.

Verse 12. Your remembrances are like unto ashes Your memorable sayings are proverbs of dust. This is properly the meaning of the original:—זִכְרוֹנֵיכֶם מִשְׁלֵי אֶפֶר Zicroneycem mishley epher. This he speaks in reference to the ancient and reputedly wise sayings which they had so copiously quoted against him.

Your bodies to bodies of clay. This clause is variously translated:—your swelling heaps are swelling heaps of mire. That is, your high-flown speeches are dark, involved, and incoherent:—they are all sound, no sense; great swelling words, either of difficult or no meaning, or of no point as applicable to my case.

Verse 13. Hold your peace You have perverted righteousness and truth, and your pleadings are totally irrelevant to the case; you have travelled out of the road; you have left law and justice behind you: it is high time that you should have done.

Let come on me what will. I will now defend myself against you, and leave the cause to its issue.

thing on the justice of my cause. I put my life in my hand, 1 Sam. xxviii. 21. I run all hazards: I am fearless of the consequences.

Verse 15. Though he slay me I have no dependence but God; I trust in him alone. Should he even destroy my life by this affliction, yet will I hope that when he has tried me, I shall come forth as gold. In the common printed Hebrew text we have לוֹא אֵיכָל, I will not hope: but the Vulgate, Syriac, Arabic, and Chaldean, have read, לוֹ, HIM, instead of לוֹ, NOT; with twenty-nine of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. and the Complutensian and Antwerp Polyglotts. Our translators have followed the best reading. Coverdale renders the verse thus: No, there is neither comforte ner hope for me pf he wil slaye me.

But I will maintain mine own ways I am so conscious of my innocence, that I fear not to defend myself from your aspersions, even in the presence of my Maker.

Verse 16. He also shall be my salvation He will save me, because I trust in him.

A hypocrite A wicked man shall never be able to stand before him. I am conscious of this; and were I, as you suppose, a secret sinner, I should not dare to make this appeal.

Verse 18. Behold now, I have ordered I am now ready to come into court; and care not how many I have to contend with, provided they speak truth.

Verse 19. Who is he that will plead with me? Let my accuser, the plaintiff, come forward; I will defend my cause against him.

I shall give up the ghost. I shall cease to breathe. Defending myself will be as respiration to me; or, while he is stating his case, I will be so silent as scarcely to appear to breathe.

Verse 20. Only do not two things unto me These two things are the following:—1. Withdraw thine hand far from me. Remove the heavy affliction which thy hand has inflicted. 2. Let not thy dread make me afraid. Terrify me not with dreadful displays of thy majesty. The reasons of this request are sufficiently evident:—1. How can a man stand in a court of justice and plead for his life, when under

Verse 22. Then call thou] Begin thou first will first state and defend my own case, and then answer thou me.

Verse 23. How many are mine iniquities] Job being permitted to begin first, enters immediately upon the subject; and as it was a fact that he was grievously afflicted, and this his friends asserted was in consequence of grievous iniquities, he first desires to have them tied to the feet of slaves, to prevent them from Indies, among slave-dealers; and is there called the pudding, being a large collar of iron, locked around the ankle of the unfortunate man. Some have had them twenty pounds' weight: and, having been condemned to carry them for several years, when released, could not walk without them! A case of this kind I knew: — The slave had learnt to walk well with his pudding: — but, when taken off, if he attempted to walk, he fell down; and was obliged to resume it occasionally, till practice had taught him the proper centre of gravity, which had been so materially altered by wearing so large a weight; the badge at once of his oppression, and of the cruelty of his task-masters!

And lookest narrowly] Thou hast seen, all my goings out and comings in: and there is no step I have taken in life with which thou art unacquainted.

Thou settest a print upon the heels of my feet.] Some understand this as the mark left on the foot by the clog: or the owner's mark, indented on this clog; or, thou hast pursued me as a hound does his game, by the scent.

Verse 28. And he, as a rotten thing] I am like a vessel made of skin; rotten, because of old age; or like a garment corroded by the moth.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIV.

Verse 1. Man—born of a woman] There is a delicacy in the original not often observed: אָדָם יָלֵד אִשָּׁה Adam yelud ishah, "Adam born of a woman, few of days, and full of tremour."
Adam who did not spring from woman, but was immediately formed by God, had many days, for he lived nine hundred and thirty years: during which time neither sin nor death had multiplied in the earth, as they were found in the days of Job. But the Adam who springs now from woman, in the way of ordinary generation, has very few years.

Seventy, on an average, being the highest term, may be well said to be few in days; and all matter of fact shows that they are full of fears and apprehensions, in rogez, cares, anxieties, and tremours. He seems born not indeed to live, but to die; and by living, he forfeits the title to life.

Verse 2. He cometh forth like a flower] This is a frequent image both in the Old and New Testament writers: I need not quote the places here, as the readers will find them all in the margin.

He fleeth also as a shadow] Himself, as he appears among men, is only the shadow of his real, substantial, and eternal being. He is here compared to a vegetable; he springs up, bears his flower, is often nipped by disease, blasted by afflictions, and at last cut down by death. The bloom of youth, even in the most prosperous state, is only the forerunner of hoary hairs, enfeebled muscles, impaired senses, general debility, anility, and dissolution! All these images are finely embodied, and happily expressed in the beautiful lines of a very nervous and correct poet, too little known, but whose compositions deserve the first place among what may be called the minor poets of Britain. See at the end of the chapter.

Verse 3. Dost thou open thine eyes upon such a one] The whole of this chapter is directed to God alone; in no part of it does he take any notice of his friends.

Verse 4. Who can bring a clean thing] This verse is thus rendered by the Chaldee:—"Who will produce a clean thing from man, who is polluted with sins, except God, who is one?" By Coverdale thus: Who can make it cleane, that commeth of an uncleane thinge? No body.

The text refers to man's original and corrupt nature. Every man that is born into the world comes into it in a corrupt or sinful state. This is called original sin; and is derived from fallen Adam, who is the stock, to the utmost ramifications of the human family. Not one human spirit is born into the world without this corruption of nature. All are impure and unholy, and from this principle of depravity all transgression is produced. And from this corruption of nature God alone can save.

The Septuagint, in the Codex Alexandrinus, reads the verse thus;—Τίς γὰρ ἐστὶν καθάρος ἀπὸ πύκου; οὐδὲ εἷς, εὖν καὶ μίας ἡμετέρας γέννηται ὁ βίος αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς. "Who is pure from corruption? Not one, although he had lived but one day upon the earth."

Verse 5. Seeing his days are determined] The general term of human life is fixed by God himself: in vain are all attempts to prolong it beyond this term. Several attempts thou hast appointed his bounds that he cannot pass;

6ⁱ Turn from him, that he may rest, till he shall accomplish, as a hireling, his day.

have been made in all nations to find an elixir that would expel all the seeds of disease, and keep men in continual health; but all these attempts have failed. Basil Valentine, Norton, Dastin, Ripley, Sandivogius, Artephius, Geber, Van Helmont, Paracelsus, Philalethes, and several others, both in Europe and Asia, have written copiously on the subject, and have endeavoured to prove that a tincture might be produced by which all imperfect metals may be transmuted into perfect; and an elixir, by which the human body may be kept in a state of endless repair and health. And these profess to teach the method by which this tincture and this elixir may be made! Yet all these are dead: and dead, for aught we know, comparatively young! Artephius is, indeed, said to have lived ninety years, which is probable: but some of his foolish disciples, to give credit to their thriftless craft, added another cypher, and made his age nine hundred! Man may endeavour to pass the bound; and God may, here and there, produce a Thomas Parr, who died in 1635, aged one hundred and fifty-two; and a Henry Jenkins, who died in 1670, aged one hundred and sixty-nine: but these are rare instances, and do not affect the general term. Nor can death be avoided. Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return, is the law; and that will ever render nugatory all such pretended tinctures and elixirs.

But, although man cannot pass his appointed bounds, yet he may so live as never to reach them; for folly and wickedness abridge the term of human life; and, therefore, says the Psalmist, Bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days, Psa. lv. 23. for, by indolence, intemperance, and disorderly passions, the life of man is shortened in cases innumerable. We are not to understand the bounds as applying to individuals, but to the race in general. Perhaps there is no case in which God has determined absolutely this man's age shall be so long, and shall neither be more nor less. The contrary supposition involves innumerable absurdities.

Verse 6. Turn from him that he may rest] Cease to try him by afflictions and distresses, that he may enjoy some of the comforts of life, before he be removed from it: and thus, like a hireling, who is permitted by his master to take a little repose in the heat of the day, from severe labour, I shall also have a breathing time from affliction, before I come to that bound over which I cannot pass. See chap. x. 20. where there is a similar request.

Verse 7. For there is hope of a tree] We must not, says Calmel, understand this of an old tree, the stem and roots of which are dried up and rotted; but there are some trees which grow from cuttings; and some which, though pulled out of the earth, and have had their roots dried and withered by long exposure to the sun and wind, will, on being replanted, resume their verdure, and take root. There are also certain trees, the fibres of which are so solid, that if after several years they be steeped in water, they resume their vigour, the tubes dilate, and the blossoms or flowers which were attached to them expand, as I have often witnessed in what is called the rose of Jericho. There are few trees which will not send forth new shoots, when the stock is cut down level with the earth.

Verse 9. Through the scent of water it will bud] A fine metaphor; the water acts upon the decaying and perishing tree, as strong and powerful odours from musk, attar of roses, ammonia, &c., act on a fainting or swooning person.

Verse 10. But man dieth] No human being ever can spring from the dead body of man; that wasteth away, corrupts, and is dissolved; for the man dies: and when he breathes out his last breath, and his body is reduced to dust, then where is he? There is a beautiful verse in the Persian poet Khosroo, that is not unlike the saying of Job:—

^a "I passed by the burying place, and wept sorely
To think how many of my friends were in the mansions of the dead.

And in an agony of grief I cried out, Where are they?
And Echo gave answer, and said, Where are they?

Verse 11. The waters fail from the sea] I believe this refers to evaporation, and nothing else. As the waters are evaporated from the sea, and the river in passing over the sandy desert is partly exsiccated, and partly absorbed; and yet the waters of the sea are not exhausted, as these vapours, being condensed, fall down in rain, and by means of rivers return again into the sea: so man is imperceptibly removed from his fellows by death and dissolution; yet the human race is still continued, the population of the earth being kept up by perpetual generations.

Verse 12. So man lieth down] He falls asleep in his bed of earth.

And riseth not] Men shall not, like cut down trees and plants, reproduce their like: nor shall they arise till the heavens are no more; till the earth and all its works are burnt up, and the general resurrection of human beings shall take place. Surely, it would be difficult to twist this passage to the denial of the resurrection of the body. Neither can these expressions be fairly understood as implying Job's belief in the materiality of the soul, and that the whole man sleeps from the day of his death to the morning of the resurrection. We have already seen that Job makes a distinction between the animal life, and rational soul in man; and it is most certain that the doctrine of the materiality of the soul, and its sleep till the resurrection, have no place in the Sacred Records. A more cold and comfortless philosophy was never invented. The next verse shows that Job did not entertain this view of the subject.

Verse 13. O that thou wouldest hide me in the grave] Dreadful as death is to others, I shall esteem it a high privilege; it will be to me a covert from the wind and from the tempest of this affliction and distress.

Keep me secret] Hide my soul with thyself, where my enemies cannot invade my repose; or, as the poet expresses it,

"My spirit hide with saints above,
My body in the tomb."

Job does not appear to have the same thing in view when he entreats God to hide him in the grave; and, to keep him secret, until his wrath be past. The former relates to the body, the latter to the spirit.

That thou wouldest appoint me a set time] As he had spoken of the death of his body before, and the secreting of his spirit in the invisible world, he must refer here to the resurrection; for what else can be said to be an object of desire to one whose body is mingled with the dust?

And remember me!] When my body has paid that debt of death which it owes to thy divine justice, and the morning of the resurrection is come, when it may be said thy wrath, אפעה, "thy displeasure," against the body is past, it having suffered the sentence denounced by thyself, Dust thou art, and into dust thou shalt return; for, in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die; then remember me; raise my body, unite my spirit to it, and receive both into thy glory for ever!

Verse 14. If a man die, shall he live again?] The Chaldee translates, If a wicked man die, can he ever live again? or, he can never live again. The Syriac and Arabic thus:—"If a man die, shall he revive? Yea, all the days of his youth he awaits till his old age come." The Septuagint.—If a man die, shall he live, having accomplished the days of his life? I will endure till I live again. Here is no doubt, but a strong persuasion, of the certainty of the general resurrection.

All the days of my appointed time] ^{לְכָל יְמֵי מִשְׁכָּלִי} lshai, of my warfare. See on chap. vii. 1. Will I await till ^{לְיָמֵי חַיָּיִךְ} chalipati, my renovation come. This word is used to denote the springing again of grass, Psa. xc. 5, 6. after it had once withered, which is in itself a very expressive emblem of the resurrection.

Verse 15. Thou shalt call] Thou shalt say, There shall be time no longer: Awake, ye dead! and come to judgment!

And I will answer thee] My dissolved frame shall be united at thy call; and body and soul shall be rejoined.

Thou wilt have a desire] ^{תִּשְׁכַּח} ticesoph, "Thou wilt pant with desire;" or, "Thou wilt yearn over the work of thy hands." God has subjected the creature to vanity, in hope; having determined the resurrection. Man is one of the noblest works of God. He has exhibited him as a master-piece of his creative skill, power, and goodness. Nothing less than the strongest call upon justice could have induced him thus to destroy the work of his hands. No wonder that he has an earnest desire toward it; and that although man dies, and is as water spilt upon the ground that cannot be gathered up again; yet doth he devise means that his banished be not expelled from him. Even God is represented as earnestly longing for the ultimate reviviscence of the sleeping dust. He cannot, he will not, forget the work of his hands.

Verse 16. For now thou numberest my steps] ^{כִּי יָדָה} ki attah, ALTHOUGH thou now numberest, &c. Though thou, by thy conduct toward me, seemest bent on my utter destruction, yet thou delightest in mercy, and I shall be saved.

Verse 17. My transgression is sealed up in a bag] An allusion to the custom of collecting evidence of state transgressions, sealing them up in a bag, and presenting them to judges and officers of state to be examined, in order to trial and judgment. Just at this time, July 1820, charges of state transgressions, sealed up in a GREEN BAG, and presented to the two houses of parliament, for the examination of a secret committee, are making a considerable noise in the land. Some suppose the allusion is to money, sealed up in bags; which is common in the East. This includes two ideas:—

out of the dust of the earth; A. M. cir. 2484. B. C. cir. 1520. And thou destroyest the ^{Ante I. Ol. cir. 744. Ante U. C. cir. 767.} hope of man.

20 Thou prevailest for ever against him, and he passeth: thou changest his countenance, and sendest him away.

21 His sons come to honour, and ^y he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them.

22 But his flesh upon him shall have pain, and his soul within him shall mourn.

* Deut. 32. 34. Hos. 13. 12.—† Heb. fadeth.—‡ Heb. overflowest.—§ Ch. 11. 20. & 27. 8.—|| Eccles. 9. 5. Isa. 63. 16.

1. Job's transgressions were all numbered; not one was passed by. 2. They were sealed up; so that none of them could be lost. These bags were indifferently sewed or sealed, the two words in the text.

Verse 18. The mountain falling cometh to nought] Every thing in nature is exposed to mutability and decay; even mountains themselves may fall from their bases, and be dashed to pieces; or be suddenly swallowed up by an earthquake; and, by the same means, the strongest and most massive rocks may be removed.

Verse 19. The waters wear the stones] Even the common stones are affected in the same way. Were even earthquakes and violent concussions of nature wanting, the action of water, either running over them as a stream, or even falling upon them in drops, will wear these stones. Hence the proverb:—

Gutta cavat lapidem non vi sed sæpe cadendo.
"Constant droppings will make a hole in a flint."

Thou wastest away the things] Alluding to sudden falls of rain occasioning floods, by which the fruits of the earth are swept away; and thus the hope of man, (the grain for his household, and provender for his cattle,) is destroyed.

Verse 20. Thou prevailest for ever against him] It is impossible for him to withstand thee: every stroke of thine brings him down.

Thou changest his countenance] Probably an allusion to the custom of covering the face, when the person was condemned, and sending him away to execution. See the case of Haman, in the note on Esther, chap. vii. 8.

Verse 21. His sons come to honour] When dead, he is equally indifferent and unconscious whether his children have met with a splendid or oppressive lot in life: for, as to this world, when man dies, in that day all his thoughts perish.

Verse 22. But his flesh upon him shall have pain] The sum of the life of man is this: pain of body, and distress of soul; and he is seldom without the one or the other, and often oppressed by both. Thus ends Job's discourse on the miserable state and condition of man.

The latter verse of the preceding chapter has been differently translated and explained.

Mr. Goodell's version is the following, which he vindicates in a learned note:—

For his flesh shall drop away from him;
And his soul shall become a waste from him.

The Chaldee, thus: "Nevertheless his flesh, on account of the worms, shall grieve over him; and his soul, in the house of judgment, shall wail over him." In another copy of this version it is thus:—"Nevertheless his flesh, before the window is closed over him, shall grieve: and his soul, for seven days of mourning, shall bewail him in the house of his burial." I shall give the Hebrew.

אך בשרו עליו יכאב
Ach be-saro Alai yicab, ונפשו עליו חאבל:
Ve-naphsho Alai te-ebal.

Which Mr. Stoek translates thus, both to the spirit and letter:

But over him his flesh shall grieve;
And over him his breath shall mourn.

"In the daring spirit of oriental poetry," says he, "the flesh, or body, and the breath, are made conscious beings; the former lamenting its putrefaction in the grave, the latter mourning over the mouldering clay which it once enlivened."

This version is, in my opinion, the most natural yet offered. The Syriac and Arabic present nearly the same sense:—"But his body shall grieve over him; and his soul be astonished over him."

Coverdale follows the Vulgate:—"While he lyeth, his flesh must have travail: and while the soul is in him, he must be in sorrow."

On ver. 2. I have referred to the following beautiful lines, which illustrate these finely figurative texts:

He cometh forth as a FLOWER, and is cut down; he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not.

All flesh is GRASS, and all the goodness thereof is as the FLOWER of the field.

The GRASS withereth, the FLOWER fadeth; but the word of our God shall stand for ever.

The morning flowers display their sweets,
And gay their siltan leaves unfold
As careless of the noonday heats,
And fearless of the evening cold.

Nipp'd by the wind's unkindly blast,
Farch'd by the sun's directer ray,
The momentary glories waste,
The short-liv'd beauties die away.

So blooms the human face divine,
When youth its pride of beauty shows;
Fairer than spring the colours shine,
And sweeter than the virgin rose.

Or worn by slowly-rolling years,
Or broke by sickness in a day;
The fading glory disappears,
The short-liv'd beauties die away.

Yet these, new rising from the tomb,
With lustre brighter far, shall shine;
Revive with ever-during bloom,
Safe from diseases and decline.

Let sickness blast, and death devour,
If heaven must recompense our pains:
Perish the grass, and fade the flower,
If firm the word of God remains.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XV.

Verse 2. Should a wise man utter vain knowledge] Or, rather, Should a wise man utter the science of wind? A science without solidity or certainty.

And fill his belly with the east wind? ^{אין} beten, which we translate belly, is used to signify any part of the cavity of the body, whether the region of the thorax, or abdomen: here it evidently refers to the lungs, and may include the cheeks and fauces. The east wind, ^{קריס} kadim, is a very stormy wind in the Levant or eastern part of the Mediterranean sea; supposed to be the same with that called by the Greeks εὐροκλύδων, euroclydon, the east storm, mentioned Acts xxvii. 14. Eliphaz, by these words, seems to intimate that Job's speech was a perfect storm, or tempest of words.

Verse 3. Should he reason with unprofitable talk?] Should a man talk disrespectfully of his Maker, or speak to him without reverence? and should he suppose that he has proved any thing when he has uttered words of little meaning, and used sound instead of sense?

^c Or, speech.—^d Heb. teacheth.—^e Luke 19. 22.

Verse 4. Thou castest off fear] Thou hast no reverence for God.

And restrainest prayer] Instead of humbling thyself, and making supplication to thy judge, thou spendest thy time in arraigning his providence, and justifying thyself.

When a man has any doubts whether he has grieved God's spirit, and his mind feels troubled, it is much better for him to go immediately to God, and ask forgiveness, than spend any time in finding excuses for his conduct, or labouring to divest it of its seeming obliquity. Restraint or suppressing prayer, in order to find excuses or palliations for infirmities, indiscretions, or improprieties of any kind, which appear to trench on the sacred limits of morality and godliness, may be to a man the worst of evils; humiliation and prayer for mercy and pardon can never be out of their place to any soul of man, who, surrounded with evils, is ever liable to offend.

Verse 5. For thy mouth uttereth] In attempting to justify thyself, thou hast added iniquity to sin; and hast endeavoured to impute blame to thy Maker.

The tongue of the crafty.] Thou hast varnished thy own conduct, and used sophistical arguments to defend thyself. Thou resemblest rive their skill and dexterity from the old serpent, “the nachash, who was אֲרֻם arum, subtle or crafty, beyond all the beasts of the field.”

Gen. iii. 1. Thy wisdom is not from above, but from beneath.

Verse 7. Art thou the first man that was born? Literally, “Wert thou born before Adam?” Art thou in the pristine state of purity and innocence? Or art thou like Adam, in his first state? It does not become the fallen descendant of a fallen parent to talk as thou dost.

Made before the hills?] Did God create thee the beginning of his ways? or, wert thou the first intelligent creature which his hands have formed?

Verse 8. Hast thou heard the secret of God?
“Hast thou hearkened in God’s council?”
Wert thou one of the celestial cabinet, when God said, Let us make man in our image, and in our likeness?

Dost thou restrain wisdom to thyself?] Dost thou wish us to understand that God’s counsels were revealed to none but thyself? And dost thou desire that we should give implicit credence to whatsoever thou art pleased to speak?
These are all strong sarcastic questions; and apparently uttered with great contempt.

Verse 9. What knowest thou?] Is it likely that thy intellect is greater than ours; and that thou hast cultivated it better than any of us?

What understandest thou?] Or, Dost thou understand any thing, and it is not with us?
Show us any point of knowledge possessed by thyself, of which we are ignorant.

Verse 10. With us are both the gray-headed
One copy of the Chaldee Targum paraphrases the verse thus:—“Truly Eliphaz the hoary-headed, and Bildad the long-lived, are among us; and Zophar, who in age surpasseth thy father.” It is very likely that Eliphaz refers to himself and his friends in this verse, and not either to the old men of their tribes, or to the masters by whom they themselves were instructed. Eliphaz seems to have been the eldest of these sages; and, therefore, he takes the lead in each part of this dramatic poem.

Verse 11. Are the consolations of God small with thee?] Various are the renderings of this verse. Mr. Goode translates the verse thus:
“Are, then, the mercies of God of no account with thee.” Or, “The addresses of kindness before thee?”

The VULGATE thus:—“Can it be a difficult thing for God to comfort thee? But thou hin-derest this, by thy intemperate speeches.”

The SYRIAC and ARABIC thus:—“Remove from thee the threatenings (Arabic, re-proaches) of God, and speak tranquilly with thy own spirit.”

The SEPTUAGINT thus:—“Thou hast been scourged lightly for the sins which thou hast committed; and thou hast spoken greatly beyond measure; or, with excessive insolence.”

Houbigant thus:—“Dost thou not regard the threatenings of God: or, has there been any thing darkly revealed to thee?”

Coverdale:—“Dost thou no more regarde the comforte of God? But thy wicked wordes wil not suffice thee.”

Scarcely any two translators or interpreters agree in the translation, or even meaning, of this verse. The sense, as expressed in the Vulgate, or in our own version, or that of Coverdale, is plain enough:—“Hast thou been so unfaithful to God, that he has withdrawn his consolations from thy heart? And is there any secret thing, any bosom sin, which thou wilt not give up, that has thus provoked thy Maker.” This is the sense of our version: and I believe it to be as near the original as any yet offered. I may just add the Chaldee:—“Are the consolations of God few to thee? And has a word in secret been spoken unto thee?” And I shall close all these with the Hebrew text, and the literal version of Arius Montanus:—

הֲמֵט מִכֶּר הַנְּחֻמוֹת אֵל ha-meit mi-ken tanchumoth el, דַּבַּר לֹאֵט עִמָּךְ ve-dabar laot immah.

Nonne parant à te, consolationes Dei? Et verbum lalet tecum?

“Are not the consolations of God small to thee? And does a word (or thing) lie hidden with thee?”

Now, let the reader choose for himself.

Verse 12. Why doth thine heart carry thee away?] Why is it that thou dost conceive and entertain such high sentiments of thyself?

And what do thy eyes wink at?] With what splendid opinion of thyself is thine eye dazzled?
Perhaps there is an allusion here to that sparkling in the eye, which is excited by sensations of joy, and pleasing objects of sight: or to that furious rolling of the eyes, observed in deranged persons. Rosenmuller translates thus:

Quo te tuus animus rapit?
Quid oculi tui vibrantes?

“Whither does thy soul hurry thee! What mean thy rolling eyes?”

Thou seemest transported beyond thyself; thou art actuated by a furious spirit. Thou art beside thyself: thy words and thy eyes show it. None but a madman could speak and act as thou dost: for thou turnest thy spirit against God, and lettest such words go out of thy mouth, ver. 13. This latter sense seems to agree best with the words of the text; and with the context.

Verse 13. That thou turnest thy spirit against God] The ideas here seem to be taken from an archer, who turns his eye and his spirit, his desire, against the object which he wishes to hit; and then lets loose his arrow, that it may attain the mark.

Verse 14. What is man, that he should be clean] מאן מה ענוש; what is weak, sickly, dying, miserable man, that he should be clean? This is the import of the original word enosh.

And—born of a woman, that he should be righteous?] It appears from many passages in the Sacred Writings, that natural birth was supposed to be a defilement; and that every man born into the world was in a state of moral pollution. Perhaps the word מאן yitsedak, should be translated that he should justify himself, and not, that he should be righteous.

Verse 15. Behold, he putteth no trust in his saints; yea, the heavens are not clean in his sight.] The Vulgate has, “Behold, among his saints, none is immutable; and the heavens are not clean in his sight.”

Coverdale, Beholde, he hath found unfaithfulness among his own sanctes, yea, the very heavens are unclean in his sight.

Eliphaz uses the same mode of speech, chap. iv. 17, 18, where see the notes. Nothing is immutable but God: saints may fall; angels may fall; all their goodness is derived and dependent. The heavens themselves have no purity compared with his.

Verse 16. How much more abominable and filthy is man] As in the preceding verse it is said, he putteth no trust in his saints, it has appeared both to translators and commentators that the original words כך אף כי, should be rendered how much less, not how much more; how much less would he put confidence in man, who is filthy and abominable in his nature, and profligate in his practice, as he drinks down iniquity like water. A man who is under the power of sinful propensities commits sin as greedily as the thirsty man or camel drinks down water. He thinks he can never have enough. This is a finished character of a bad man: he hungers and thirsts after sin. On the contrary, the good man hungers and thirsts after righteousness.

Verse 17. I will show thee, hear me; and that which I have seen I will declare] Eliphaz is now about to quote a whole collection of wise sayings from the ancients: all good enough in themselves, but sinfully misapplied to the case of Job.

Verse 19. Unto whom alone the earth was given] He very likely refers to the Israelites, who got possession of the promised land from God himself; no stranger being permitted to dwell in it, as the old inhabitants were to be exterminated. Some think that Noah and his sons may be intended; as it is certain that the whole earth was given to them, when there were no strangers, no other family of mankind, in being. But, system apart, the words seem to apply more clearly to the Israelites.

Verse 20. The wicked man travaileth with pain] This is a most forcible truth: a life of sin is a life of misery; and he that will sin must suffer. One of the Targums gives it a strange turn.—“All the days of the godly Esau, he was expected to repent; but he did not repent: and the number of years was hidden from the sturdy Ishmael.” The sense of the original מרחק מיתחול, is, he torments himself: he is a true heautontimorumenos, or self-tormentor; and he alone is author of his own sufferings, and of his own ruin.

Verse 21. A dreadful sound is in his ears] If he be an oppressor or tyrant, he can have no rest: he is full of suspicions that the cruelties he has exercised on others, shall be one day exercised on himself; for even in his prosperity, he may expect the destroyer to rush upon him.

Verse 22. That he shall return out of darkness] If he take but a few steps in the dark, he expects the dagger of the assassin. This appears to be the only meaning of the place. Some think the passage should be understood to signify, that he has no hope of a resurrection; he can never escape from the tomb. This I doubt: in the days of the writer of this book, the doctrine of a future judgment was understood in every part of the East, where the knowledge of the true God was diffused.

Verse 23. He wandereth abroad for bread] He is reduced to a state of the utmost indigence; he who was once in affluence requires a morsel of bread; and can scarcely by begging procure enough to sustain life.

Is ready at his hand.] Is beyado, in his hand; in his possession. As he cannot get bread, he must soon meet death.

Verse 24. Trouble and anguish shall make him afraid] He shall be in continual fear of death; being now brought down by adversity, and stripped of all the goods which he had got by oppression, his life is a mark for the meanest assassin.

As a king ready to the battle.] The acts of his wickedness and oppression are as numerous as the troops he commands; and when he comes to meet his enemy in the field, he is not only deserted, but slain, by his own troops. How true are the words of the poet:—

Ad generum Oeris sine cæde et vulnere pauci, Descendunt reges; et siccâ morte tyranni.

Juv. Sat. ver. 112.

For few usurpers to the shades descend

By a dry death, or with a quiet end.

Verse 25. He stretcheth out his hand against God] While in power, he thought himself supreme. He not only did not acknowledge God, by whom kings reign; but stretched out his hand, used his power not to protect but to oppress those over whom he had supreme rule; and thus strengthened himself against the Almighty.

Verse 26. He runneth upon him] Calmet has properly observed that this refers to God, who, like a mighty conquering hero, marches against the ungodly; rushes upon him; seizes him by the throat, which the mail by which it is encompassed cannot protect. Neither his shield nor spear can save him when the Lord of hosts comes against him.

Verse 27. Because he covereth his face] He has lived in luxury and excess; and, like a man overloaded with flesh, he cannot defend himself against the strong gripe of his adversary.

flanks, has وجعل الدنيا فوق العيق He lays the Pleiades upon the Hyades; or he places Sureau upon airyuk: a proverbial expression for, his ambition is boundless; he aspires as high as heaven; his head touches the stars: or, like the giants of old, who were fabled to have attempted to scale heaven, by placing one high mountain upon another:

Scilicet, atque Ossæ frondosum involvere Olympum.*

Ter Pater extractos disjecit fulmine montes.

Virg. Geor. i. ver. 231.

To scale the steepy battlements of Jove;
And thrice his lightning and red thunder play'd,
And their demolished works in ruin laid. Dryden.

To the lust of power, and the schemes of ambition, there are no bounds. But see the end of such persons:—the haughty spirit preceeds a fall: their palaces become desolate, and their heaven is reduced to a chaos.

Verse 28. He dwelleth in desolate cities] It is sometimes the fate of a tyrant to be obliged to take up his habitation in some of those cities which have been ruined by his wars, and in a house so ruinous as to be ready to fall into heaps. Ancient and modern history afford abundance of examples to illustrate this.

Verse 29. He shall not be rich] The whole of what follows, to the end of the chapter, seems to be directed against Job himself, whom Eliphaz indirectly accuses of having been a tyrant and oppressor. The threatened evils are—1. He shall not be rich: though he labours greatly to acquire riches. 2. His substance shall not continue: God will blast it, and deprive him of power to preserve it. 3. Neither shall he prolong the perfection thereof: all his works shall perish, for God will blot out his remembrance from under heaven.

Verse 30. He shall not depart out of darkness] 4. He shall be in continual afflictions and distress. 5. The flame shall dry up his branches; his children shall be cut off by sudden judgments. 6. He shall pass away by the breath of his mouth: for by the breath of his mouth doth God slay the wicked.

Verse 31. Let not him that is deceived] 7. He has many vain imaginations of obtaining wealth, power, pleasure, and happiness; but he is deceived, and he finds that he has trusted in bashave, in a lie; and this lie is his recompense.

in vanity; for vanity shall be his recompense.

32 It shall be ^a accomplished ^a before his time, and his branch shall not be green.

33 He shall shake off his unripe grape as the vine, and shall cast off his flower as the olive.

^a Or, cut off.—Ch. 22. 16. Psal. 55. 23.

Verse 32. It shall be accomplished before his time] I believe the Vulgate gives the true sense: Antequam dies ejus impleatur, peribit; he shall perish before his time; before his days are completed. 3. He shall be removed by a violent death; and not live out half his days. 9. And his branch shall not be green: There shall be no scion from his roots; all his posterity shall fail.

Verse 33. He shall shake off his unripe grape] 10. Whatever children he may have they shall never survive him, nor come to mature age. They shall be like wind-fall grapes, and blasted olive blossoms. As the vine and olive are among the most useful trees, affording wine and oil, so necessary for the worship of God and the comfort of man, are mentioned here, they may be intended to refer to the hopeful progeny of the oppressor; but who fell, like the untimely grape or the blasted olive flower, without having the opportunity of realizing the public expectation.

Verse 34. The congregation of hypocrites] 11. Job is here classed with hypocrites, or rather the impious of all kinds. The congregation, or my adeth, society of such, shall be desolate; or a barren rock, גֵּלְעָמֻד, gelemud. See this Arabic word explained in the note on chap. iii. ver. 7.

Verse 35. They conceive mischief] The figure here is both elegant and impressive. The wicked conceive mischief from the seed which Satan sows in their hearts; in producing of which they travail with many pangs; for sin is a sore labour: and at last their womb produces fraud or deception. This is the accursed birth, from the iniquitous conception. St. James gives the figure at full length, most beautifully touched in all its parts:—When lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin; and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death, James i. 15. where see the note.

Poor Job! what a fight of affliction had he to contend with! His body wasted and tortured with sore disease; his mind harassed by Satan; and his heart wrung with the unkindness and false accusations of his friends. No wonder he was greatly agitated; often distracted; and sometimes even thrown off his guard. However, all his enemies were chained; and beyond that chain they could not go. God was his unseen protector, and did not suffer his faithful servant to be greatly moved.

CHAPTER XVI.

Job replies to Eliphaz, and through him to all his friends; who, instead of comforting, had added to his misfortunes; and shows that, had they been in his circumstances, he would have treated them in a different manner, 1–5. NOTES ON CHAPTER XVI.

Verse 2. I have heard many such things] These sayings of the ancients are not strange to me; but they do not apply to my case: ye see me in affliction; ye should endeavour to console me. This ye do not; and yet ye pretend to do it! Miserable comforters are ye all.

Verse 3. Vain words.] Literally words of air. What emboldeneth thee] Thou art totally ignorant of the business;—what then can induce thee to take part in this discussion?

Verse 4. I also could speak] It is probably better to render some of these permissives or potential verbs; literally in the future tense, as in the Hebrew;—I also will speak. Mr. Goode has adopted this mode.

If your soul were in my soul's stead] “If you were in my place, I also could quote many wise sayings, that might intend to show that you were hypocrites and wicked men;—but would this be fair? Even when I might not choose to go farther in assertion, I might shake my head, by way of insinuation, that there was much more behind, of which I did not choose to speak;—but, would this be right? That such sayings are in memory, is no proof that they were either made for me, or apply to my case.”

Verse 5. I would strengthen you with my mouth] Mr. Goode translates thus:—

^d With my own mouth will I overpower you, Till the quivering of my lips shall fail;

for which rendering he contends in his learned notes. This translation is countenanced by the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic versions.

Verse 6. Though I speak] But it will be of no avail thus to speak; for reprehensions of your conduct will not serve to mitigate my sufferings.

Verse 7. But now he hath made me weary].
The Vulgate translates thus:—Nunc autem oppressit me dolor meus; et in nihilum redacti sunt omnes artus mei. “But now my grief oppresses me, and all my joints are reduced to nothing.” Perhaps Job alluded here to his own afflictions, and the desolation of his family.
Thou hast made me weary with continual affliction; my strength is quite exhausted; and thou hast made desolate all my company, not leaving me a single child to continue my name, or to comfort me in sickness or old age. Mr.
Goode translates:

ⁱ Here, indeed, hath he distracted me;
Thou hast struck apart all my witnesses.”

Verse 8. Thou hast filled me with wrinkles].
If Job's disease were the elephantiasis, in which the whole skin is wrinkled, as the skin of the elephant, (from which this species of leprosy has taken its name,) these words would apply most forcibly to it. But the whole passage, through its obscurity, has been variously rendered. Calmet unites it with the preceding, and Houbigant is not very different. He translates thus:—“For my trouble hath now weakened all my frame, and brought wrinkles over me: he is present as a witness, and riseth against me, who telleth lies concerning me; he openly contradicts me to my face.” Mr. Goode translates nearly in the same way. Others still differently.

the person is that is spoken of in this verse and onward to the end of the fourteenth, has been a question on which commentators have greatly differed. Some think God, others Eliphaz, is intended; I think, neither. Probably God permitted Satan to show himself to Job; and the horrible form which he and his demons assumed increased the misery under which Job had already suffered so much. All the expressions, from this to the end of the fourteenth verse, may be easily understood on this principle; c. g. He (Satan) gnasheth upon me with his teeth; mine enemy sharpeneth his eyes upon me: Ver. 10. They (demons) have gaped on me with their mouth; they have gathered themselves together against me. Ver. 11. God hath delivered me to the ungodly, my evil one: he hath turned me over to the hands of the wicked. He hath abandoned me to be tortured by the tempter and his host.

If we consider all these expressions as referring to Job's three friends, we must, in that case, acknowledge that the figures are all strained to an insufferable height, so as not to be justified by any figure of speech.

Verse 13. His archers compass me] rav-nabhair, his great ones. The Vulgate and Septuagint translate this, his spears: the Sy-riac, Arabic, and Chaldee, his arrows. On this and the following verse Mr. Heath observes:—“The metaphor is here taken from huntsmen: first, they surround the beast;
then he is shot dead: his entrails are next taken out; and then his body is broken up limb from limb.”

Verse 15. I have sowed sackcloth] pr sak, a word that has passed into almost all languages; as I have already had occasion to notice in other parts of this work.

Defiled my horn in the dust.] The horn was an emblem of power: and the metaphor was originally taken from beasts, such as the urus, horns. Hence the horn was frequently worn on crowns and helmets, as is evident on ancient coins; and to this day it is an appendage to the diadem of the kings and chiefs of Abyssinia.

In the second edition of Mr. Bruce's Travels in Abyssinia, vol. viii. plates ii. and
iii. we have engravings of two chiefs, Kesta Yasous, and Woodage Asahel, who are represented with this emblem of power on their forehead. Mr. Bruce thus describes it: "One thing remarkable in this cavalcade, which I observed, was the head-dress of the governors of provinces. A large broad fillet was bound upon their forehead, and tied behind their head. In the middle of this was a horn, or a conical piece of silver, gilt; about four inches in length, much in the shape of our common candle extinguishers. This is called kirn, or horn; and is only worn in reviews, or parades after victory. This, I apprehend, like all other of their usages, is taken from the Hebrews; and the several allusions made in Scripture to it arise from this practice. I said unto fools, Deal not foolishly; and to the wicked, Lift not up the horn. Lift not up your horn on high, speaks not with a stiff neck. For promotion cometh not, &c., but my horn shall thou exalt like the horn of a unicorn. And the horn of the righteous shall be exalted with honour. And so in many other places throughout the Psalms."
In a note on the same page we have the following observation: "The crooked manner in which they hold their neck, when this ornament is on their forehead, for fear it should fall forward, perfectly shows the meaning of Speak not with a stiff neck when you hold the horn on high, or erect, like the horn of the unicorn."— Bruce's Travels, vol. iv. pag. 407.

Defiling, or rolling the horn in the dust, signifies the disgrace or destruction of power, authority, and eminence.

Mr. Goode translates; I have rolled my turban in the dust, which he endeavours to justify in a long note. But in this, I think, this very learned man is mistaken. The Hebrew kipkarn, is the same as the Ethiopic kirn; and both mean, exactly in such connexion, what Mr. Bruce has noticed above. The horn on the diadem is the emblem of power, authority, and eminence.

Verse 16. On my eyelids is the shadow of death] Death is now fast approaching me:
already his shadow is projected over me.

Verse 17. Not for any injustice] I must assert, even with my last breath, that the charges of my friends against me are groundless. I am afflicted unto death, but not on account of my iniquities

20 My friends scorn me: but mine eye poureth out

Also my prayer is pure.] I am no hypocrite, God knoweth.

Verse 18. O earth, cover not thou my blood]
This is evidently an allusion to the murder of Abel: and the verse has been understood in two different ways:—1. Job here calls for justice against his destroyers. His blood is his life, which he considers as taken away by violence; and, therefore, calls for vengeance.
Let my blood cry against my murderers, as the blood of Abel cried against Cain. My innocent life is taken away by violence, as his innocent life was: as, therefore, the earth was not permitted to cover his blood, so that his murderer should be concealed; let my death be avenged in the same way. 2. It has been supposed that the passage means that Job considered himself accused of the shedding of innocent blood; and, conscious of his own perfect innocence, he prays that the earth may not cover any blood shed by him. Thus Mr.
Scott:

"O earth, the blood accusing me reveal;
Its piercing voice in no recess conceal."

And this notion is followed by Mr. Goode.
But, with all deference to these learned men,
I do not see that this meaning can be supported by the Hebrew text; nor was the passage so understood by any of the ancient versions.
I, therefore, prefer the first sense, which is sufficiently natural; and quite in the manner of Job, in his impassioned querulousness.

Verse 19. My witness is in heaven] I appeal to God for my innocence,

Verse 20. My friends scorn me] They de-ride and insult me; but my eye is toward God: I look to him to vindicate my cause.

Verse 21. O that one might plead] Let me only have the liberty to plead with God, as a man hath with his fellow.

Verse 22. When a few years are come] I prefer Mr. Goode's version:

"But the years numbered to me are come,
And I must go the way whence I shall not return."

Job could not, in his present circumstances, expect a few years of longer life: from his own conviction he was expecting death every hour. The next verse, the first of the following chapter, should come in here: My breath is corrupt, &c. He felt himself as in the arms of death; he saw the grave as already digged, which was to receive his dead body. This verse shows that our translation of the twenty-second verse is improper, and vindicates Mr.
Goode's version.

I have said on verse 9. that a part of Job's sufferings probably arose from appalling representations made to his eye, or to his imagination, by Satan and his agents. I think this neither irrational, nor improbable. That he and his demons have power to make themselves manifest on especial occasions has been credited in all ages of the world; not by the weak, credulous, and superstitious only, but also by the wisest, the most learned, and the best of men. I am persuaded that many passages in the book of Job refer to this; and admit of an easy interpretation on this ground.

CHAPTER XVII.

Job complains of the injustice of his friends, and compares his present state of want and woe with his former honour and affluence, 1—6. God's dealings with him will even astonish upright men; yet the righteous shall not be discouraged, but hold on his way, 7—9. Asserts that there is not a wise man among his friends, and that he has no expectation but of a speedy death, 10—16.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XVII.

Verse 1. My breath is corrupt] Rather, My spirit is oppressed, רוחי חבֵּל ruchi chubalah—my days are extinct, and the sepulchral cells are ready for me. PARKHURST. There is probably a reference here to cemetaries, where were several niches, in each of which a corpse was deposited. See on ver. 16. For חבֵּל chubelah, corrupted, or oppressed, some MSS. have חלה chalah, is made weak; and one has נבלה is worn down, consumed: this is agreeable to the Vulgate, “Spiritus meus attenuabatur.” My spirit is exhausted.

Verse 2. Are there not mockers with me?] This has been variously translated. The VULGATE:—“I have not sinned, and yet my eye dwells upon afflictions.” SEPTUAGINT:—“I conjure you, labouring under afflictions, what evil have I done? Yet strangers have robbed me of my substance.” MR. GOODE:—“But are not revilers before me? Alas, mine eye penetrateth their rebukes.” CALMET thinks the Hebrew might be translated thus:—“If I have not been united in friendship with the wicked, why are my eyes in bitterness?” COVERDALE translates both verses thus:—“My breth fayleth. my dayes are shortened, I am harde at deathes dore. I have disceaied to man, yet must myne eye continue in heavynesse.” MR. HEATH:—“Were it not so, I have sarcasms enow in store; and I could spend the whole night unmoved at their aggravations.” The general meaning is plain enough: and the reader has got translations enough.

Verse 3. Lay down now] Deposit a pledge—stake your conduct against mine, and your life and soul on the issue;—let the cause come before God; let him try it, and see whether any of you shall be justified by him, while I am condemned.

Verse 4. For thou hast hid their heart] This address is to God; and here he is represented as doing that which, in the course of his providence, he only permitted to be done.

5 He that speaketh flattery of his children shall fail.

time I was as a tabret.

7 Mine eye also is dim by reason of 8 Upright men shall be astonished at this, and the innocent shall stir up himself against the hypocrite.

Shalt thou not exalt them.] This was exactly fulfilled: not one of Job's friends was exalted; on the contrary, God condemned the whole; and they were not received into the divine favour, till Job sacrificed, and made intercession for them.

Verse 5. He that speaketh flattery] There are a great variety of meanings given to the terms in this verse. The general sense is, The man who expects much from his friends will be disappointed: while depending on them, his children's eyes may fail in looking for bread.

Verse 6. He hath made me also a byword] My afflictions and calamities have become a subject of general conversation, so that my poverty and affliction are proverbial. As poor as Job, as afflicted as Job, are proverbs that have even reached our times, and are still in use.

Aforetime I was as a tabret.] This is not the translation of the Hebrew רֶחֱטָן לְפָנַי rehetan lepanim cheiyeh. Instead of lepanim, I would read לְפָנַי lepaneyhem; and then the clause might be translated thus: I shall be as a furnace, or consuming fire (Tophet) before them. They shall have small reason to mock, when they see the end of the Lord's dealings with me: my example will be a consuming fire to them; and my false friends will be confounded. COVERDALE translates thus:—He hath made me as it were a byworde of the roman people. I am his gestinge stocke amonge them.

Verse 7. Mine eye also is dim] Continual weeping impairs the sight: and indeed any affliction that debilitates the frame generally weakens the sight in the same proportion.

All my members are as a shadow.] Nothing is left but skin and bone. I am but the shadow of my former self.

Verse 8. Upright men shall be astonished] In several of these verses Job is supposed to speak prophetically of his future restoration; and of the good which religious society should derive from the history of his original affluence, consequent poverty and affliction, and final restoration to health, peace, and prosperity. The upright will receive the account with astonishment, and wonder at the dispensations of the Almighty; while hypocrites, false professors, and the sourheaded godly, shall be unmasked; and innocent men, whether in affliction or affluence, shall be known to be favourites of the Almighty.

Verse 9. The righteous also shall hold on his way] There shall be no doubt concerning the dispensations of the divine providence. My case shall illustrate all seemingly intricate displays of God's government. None shall be stumbled at seeing a godly man under oppression, knowing that God never permits any thing of the kind but for the good of the subject, and the manifestation of his own mercy, wisdom, and love. Therefore, whatever occurs to the righteous man, he will take it for granted that all is well and justly managed, and that the end will be glorious.

Shall be stronger and stronger.] He shall take encouragement from my case, stay himself on the Lord, and thus gain strength by every blast of adversity. This is one grand use of the Book of Job. It casts much light on seemingly partial displays of divine providence; and has ever been the great text book of godly men in a state of persecution and affliction. This is what Job seems prophetically to declare.

Verse 10. But as for you all] Ye are too proud, and too full of self-importance, to profit by what ye see. Return, enter into yourselves, consider your ways, go again to school, get back to your own houses, and endeavour to acquire humility and knowledge: for there is not one wise man among you.

Verse 11. My days are past] Job seems to relapse here into his former state of gloom. These transitions are very frequent in this poem: and they strongly mark the struggle of piety and resignation with continued affliction, violent temptation, and gloomy providences.

The thoughts of my heart] All my purposes are interrupted; and all my schemes and plans, in relation to myself and family, are torn asunder, destroyed, and dissipated.

Verse 12. They change the night into day] These purposes and thoughts are so very gloomy, that they change day into night.

have scarcely any light; what is called light is so near akin to darkness, that it is scarcely severed from it. There is either no light, or such merely as is sufficient to render darkness visible. A fine picture of the state of his mind—he was generally in darkness; but had occasional gleams of hope.

Verse 13. The grave is mine house] Let me live long or short, the grave at last will be my home. I expect soon to lie down in darkness—There is my end; I cannot reasonably hope for any thing else.

Verse 14. I have said to corruption] I came from a corrupted stock, and I must go to corruption again. The Hebrew might be thus rendered:—To the ditch I have called, thou art my father. To the worm, Thou art my mother and my sister. I am in the nearest state of affinity to dissolution and corruption: I may well call them my nearest relations, as I shall soon be blended with them.

Verse 15. And where is now my hope?] In the circumstances in which I am found, of what use can hope be? Were I to form the expectation of future good, who could ever see it realized? Is it then any wonder that I should complain, and bemoan my wretched lot?

Verse 16. They shall go down to the bars of the pit] All that I have must descend into the depths of the grave. Thither are we all going; and there alone can I rest.

^c baddey, which we translate bars, signifies also branches, distended limbs, or claws, and may here refer either to a personification of the grave, a monster who seizes on human bodies, and keeps them fast in his deadly gripe; or to the different branching-off alleys in subterranean cemeteries, or catacombs, in which niches are made for the reception of different bodies.

When our rest together is in the dust.] That is, according to some critics, my hope and myself shall descend together into the grave. It shall never be realized: for the time of my departure is at hand.

In those times what deep shades hung on the state of man after death; and on every thing pertaining to the eternal world! Perplexity and uncertainty were the consequences; and a corresponding gloom often dwelt on the minds of even the best of the Old Testament believers. Job's friends, though learned in all the wisdom of the Arabians, connected with the advantages derivable from the Mosaic writings, and perhaps those of the earlier prophets, had little clear or distinct in their minds relative to all subjects post mortem, or of the invisible world. Job himself, though sometimes strongly confident, is often harassed with doubts and fears upon the subject, insomuch that his sayings and experience often appear contradictory. Perhaps it could not be otherwise; the true light was not then come: Jesus alone brought life and immortality to light by his Gospel.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XVIII.

Verse 1. Then answered Bildad] The following analysis of this speech by Mr. Heath is judicious. "Bildad, irritated to the last degree that Job should treat their advice with so much contempt, is no longer able to keep his passions within the bounds of decency. He proceeds to downright abuse; and finding little attention given by Job to his arguments, he tries to terrify him into a compliance. To that end he draws a yet more terrible picture of the final end of wicked men than any yet preceding, throwing in all the circumstances of Job's calamities, that he might plainly perceive the resemblance; and, at the same time, insinuating that he had much worse still to expect, unless he prevented it by a speedy change of behaviour. That it was the highest arrogance in him to suppose that he was of consequence enough to be the cause of altering the general rules of providence, ver. 4. And that it was much more expedient for the good of the whole, that he, by his example, should deter others from treading in the same path of wickedness and folly." Ver. 5—7.

Verse 2. How long will it be ere ye make an end] It is difficult to say to whom this address is made; being in the plural number, it can hardly be supposed to mean Job only. It probably means all present; as if he had said, It is vain to talk to this man, and follow him through all his quibbles; take notice of this, and then let us all deliver our sentiments fully to him, without paying any regard to his self vindications. It must be owned that this is the plan which Bildad followed; and he amply unburdens a mind that was labouring under the spirit of rancour and abuse. Instead of How long will it be ere ye make an end of words, Mr. Goode translates:—"How long will ye plant thorns (irritating, lacerating, wounding invectives) among words?" translating the unusual term קִטְסֵי kintsey, thorns, instead of bounds or limits. The word קִטְסֵי kintsey, may be the Chaldee form for קִטְסֵי kitsey, the nun being inserted by the Chaldeans for the sake of euphony, as is frequently done; and it may be considered as the contracted plural from קִטְסֵי kats, a thorn, from קָטַס kats, to lacerate, rather than קָטַס kats, an end, from קָטַס katsah, to cut off.

Schultens and others have contended that קָטַס kanats, is an Arabic word used also in Hebrew; that קָטַס kanasa, signifies to hunt, to lay snares; and hence מַקְנָסִים maknas, a snare: and that the words should be translated, "How long will you put captious snares in words?" But I prefer קָטַס kantsey, as being the Chaldee form for קָטַס katsey, whether it be considered as expressing limits or thorns; as the whole sentence is formed after the Chaldee model, as is evident not only in the word in question, but also in לְמִלִּין lemillin, to words, the Chaldee plural, instead of לְמִלִּים lemillin, the Hebrew plural.

Verse 3. Counted as beasts] Thou treatest us as if we had neither reason nor understanding.

Verse 4. He teareth himself in his anger] Literally, Rending his own soul in his anger: as if he had said, Thou art a madman: thy fury has such a sway over thee that thou eatest thy own flesh. While thou treatest us as beasts, we see thee to be a furious maniac, destroying thy own life.

Shall the earth be forsaken for thee?] To say the least, afflictions are the common lot of men. Must God work a miracle in providence, in order to exempt thee from the operation of natural causes? Dost thou wish to engross all the attention and care of providence to thyself alone? What pride and insolence!

Verse 5. The light of the wicked shall be put out] Some think it would be better to translate the original, "Let the light of the wicked be extinguished!" Thou art a bad man; and thou hast perverted the understanding which God hath given thee. Let that understanding, that abused gift, be taken away. From this verse to the end of the chapter is a continual invective against Job.

Verse 6. The light shall be dark in his tabernacle] His property shall be destroyed, his house pillaged, and himself and his family come to an untimely end.

His candle shall be put out] He shall have no posterity.

He walketh upon a snare.] He is continually walking on the meshes of a net, by which he must soon be entangled and overthrown.

Verse 9. The gin shall take him] Houbigant reads the tenth before the ninth verse thus:—"The snare is laid for him in the ground, and a trap for him in the way. The gin shall take him by the heel, and the robber shall prevail against him."

From the beginning of the seventh verse, to the end of the thirteenth, there is an allusion to the various arts and methods practised in hunting. 1. A number of persons extend themselves in a forest, and drive the game before them, still straitening the space from a broad base to a narrow point in form of a triangle, so that the farther they go the less room have they on the right and left, the hunters lining each side, while the drovers with their dogs are coming up behind. The steps of his strength shall be straitened, ver. 7. 2. Nets, Gins, and pitfalls, are laid or formed in different places, so that many are taken before they come to the point where the two lines close. He is cast into a net, he walketh upon a snare—the trap is laid for him in the way—the snare in the ground, ver. 8, 9, 10. 3. The howling of the dogs, with the shouts of the huntsmen, fill him with dismay, and cause him to run himself beyond his strength and out of breath. Terrors shall make him afraid on every side, and shall drive him to his feet, ver. 11. 4. While spent with hunger and fatigue, and he is entangled in the spread nets; and the huntsman either pierces him with an arrow or spear, or cuts the sinews of his legs, so that he is easily captured and destroyed. The robber shall prevail against him, ver. 9. His strength is hunger-bitten, and destruction is ready at his side, ver. 12. This latter verse is thus paraphrased by the Chaldee:—Let his first-born son be famished; and affliction be prepared for his wife.

Verse 13. It shall devour the strength of his skin] This may refer to the elephant, or to the 12 His strength shall be hunger-bitten, and destruction shall be ready at his side.

13 It shall devour the strength of his skin: even the first-born of death shall devour his strength.

rhinoceros, whose skin scarcely any dart can pierce: but in the case referred to above the animal is taken in a pitfall, and then the first-born of death, a sudden and overwhelming stroke, deprives him of life. See the account of hunting the elephant in the East, at the end of the chapter. The Chaldee has:—"The strength of his skin shall devour his flesh; and the angel of death shall consume his children."

Verse 14. His confidence shall be rooted out] His dwelling-place, how well soever fortified, shall now be deemed utterly insecure.

And it shall bring him to the king of terrors.] Or, as Mr. Goode translates,—"And dissolution shall invade him as a monarch." He shall be completely and finally overpowered.

The phrase king of terrors has been generally thought to mean death; but it is not used in any such way in the text. For בלמלך le meleck ballahoth, to the king of destructions, one of De Rossi's MSS. has כמלך ke meleck, as a king; and one, instead of בלמלך ballahoth, with וואו, holem, to indicate the plural, terrors or destructions, has בלמלח ballahuth, with וואו, shurek, which is singular, and signifies terror; destruction. So the Vulgate seems to read, as it translates, Et calcet super eum quasi rex, interitus, "And shall tread upon him as a king or destroyer." Or as a king who is determined utterly to destroy him. On this verse the bishop of Killala, Dr. Stock, says, "I am sorry to part with a beautiful phrase in our common version, the king of terrors, as descriptive of death: but there is no authority for it in the Hebrew text."

It may, however, be stated, that death has been denominated by similar epithets both among the Greeks and Romans.

Verse 15. It shall dwell in his tabernacle Desolation is here personified: and it is said that it shall be the inhabitant, its former owner being destroyed. Brimstone shall be scattered upon his habitation; so that, like Sodom and Gomorrah, it may be an everlasting monument of the divine displeasure.

In the Persian poet Saady we find a couplet which contains a similar sentiment:

پرده داری میکند در قصر تیسر عنکبوت
بومی نوبت میزند بر کنبه افراسیاب

Purdeh daree meekund, dar keesri Keesar ānkeboot Boomee Noobat meezund, ber kumbed Afrāsēāb.

The spider holds the veil in the palace of Cæsar;
The owl stands sentinel on the watch-tower of Afrasiab.

The palaces of those mighty kings are so desolate that the spider is the only chamberlain, and the owl the only sentinel. The web of the former is all that remains as a substitute for the costly veil furnished by the chamberlain in the palace of the Roman monarch; and the hooting of the latter is the only remaining substitute for the sound of drums and trumpets by which the guards were accustomed to be relieved at the watch-tower of the Persian king.

The word تیسر keesur, the same as Kaisar or Cæsar, is the term which the Asiatics always use when they designate the Roman emperor.

Afrasiab was an ancient king who invaded and conquered Persia about seven hundred years before the Christian era. After having reigned twelve years, he was defeated and slain by Zazer and his son, the famous Rustem. The present reigning family of Constantinople claim descent from this ancient monarch.

Brimstone shall be scattered upon his habitation] This may either refer to the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, as has been already intimated; or to an ancient custom of fumigating houses with brimstone, in order to purify them from defilement. PLINY says, Hist. Nat. lib. xxv. c. 15. speaking of the uses of sulphur, "Habet et in religionibus locum ad expiandas suffitu domos," which Dr. Holland paraphrases thus;—"Moreover, brimstone is employed ceremoniously in hallowing of houses: for many are of opinion that the perfume and burning thereof will keep out all enchantments; yea, and drive away foul fiends and evil sprites that do haunt a place."

OVID refers to the same, De Arte Amat. lib. ii. ver. 329.

19 He shall neither have son nor nephew among his people, nor any remaining in his dwellings.

20 They that come after him shall be astonished at his day, as they that went before were affrighted.

21 Surely such are the dwellings of the wicked, and this is the place of him that knoweth not God.

Isa. 14. 32. Jer. 22. 30.—Psa. 37. 16.—Or, lined with him.—Heb. laid hold on horror.—Jer. 9. 3. & 10. 25. 1 Thess. 4. 5. 2 Thess. 1. 8. Tit. 1. 16.

This alludes to the ceremony of purifying the bed or place in which a sick person was confined; an old woman, or nurse, was the operator, and eggs and sulphur were the instruments of purification.

On this and other methods of purgation, see an excellent note in Servius on these words of Virgil, Æn. vi. ver. 740.

*Alia panduntur inanis
Supensa ad ventos: altis sub gurgite vasto
Infectum cluitur scotus, aut exurit igni.*
For this are various penances subjoin'd;
And some are hung to bleach upon the wind;
Some plung'd in waters, others plung'd in fires.

Unde etiam (says Servius) in sacris Liberi omnibus tres sunt istæ purgationes: nam aut tædâ purgantur et sulphure, aut aquâ abluuntur, aut aëre ventilantur.

"These three kinds of purgation are used in the rites of Bacchus:—they are purged by flame and sulphur, or washed in water, or ventilated by the winds." But it is most likely that Bildad, in his usual uncharitable manner, alludes to the destruction of Job's property and family, by winds and fire: for the FIRE of GOD fell down from heaven, and burnt up the sheep and the servants, and consumed them; and a great wind, probably the sulphureous suffocating simoom, smote the four corners of the house, where Job's children were feasting, and killed them, see chap. i. ver. 16, 19.

Verse 16. His roots shall be dried up—his branch be cut off.] He shall be as utterly destroyed both in himself, his posterity, and his property, as a tree is, whose branches are all lopped off, and whose every root is cut away.

Verse 17. His remembrance shall perish.] He shall have none to survive him to continue his name among men.

No name in the street.] He shall never be a man of reputation: after his demise, none shall talk of his fame.

Verse 18. He shall be driven from light] He shall be taken off by a violent death.

And chased out of the world.] The wicked is DRIVEN AWAY in his iniquity. This shows his reluctance to depart from life.

Verse 19. He shall neither have son nor nephew] Coverdale, following the Vulgate, translates thus:—"He shall neither have children nor kinsges folk among his people, no ner eny posterite in his counre: ponge and olde shal be astonysht at his death."

Verse 20. They that come after him] The young shall be struck with astonishment when they hear the relation of the judgments of God upon this wicked man:—as they that went before. The aged, who were his contemporaries, and who saw the judgments that fell on him, were affrighted, וַיַּחַזְקוּ אֶחָזִיז שָׂאֵר, seized with horror, were horrified; or, as Mr. Goode has well expressed it, were panic-struck.

Verse 21. Such are the dwellings] This is the common lot of the wicked: and it shall be particularly the case with him who knoweth not God; that is, Job; for it is evident he alludes to him. Poor Job! hard was thy lot, and severe thy sufferings!

ON the elephant hunt, to which I have referred, ver. 13. I shall borrow the following account extracted from Mr. Cordiner's History of Ceylon by Mr. Goode:

We have a curious description of the elephant hunt, which is pursued in a manner not essentially different from the preceding, except that the snares are palisadoed, instead of being nettled, with the strongest possible stakes, still farther fortified by interlacings. They are numerous, but connected together; every snare or enclosure growing gradually narrower, and opening into each other by a gate or two, that will only admit the entrance of a single animal at a time.

The wood in which elephants are known to abound is first surrounded, excepting at the end where the foremost and widest enclosure is situated, with fires placed on moveable pedestals, which, in every direction, are drawn closer and closer; and, aided by loud and perpetual shouts, drive the animals forward till they enter into the outer snare. After which the same process is continued; and they are driven by fear into a second, into a third, and into a fourth; till at length the elephants become so much subdivided that, by the aid of cordage carefully fastened round their limbs, and the management of decoy elephants, they are easily capable of being led away, one by one, and tamed. A single hunt, thus conducted, will sometimes occupy not less than two months of unremitted labour; and the entrance of the elephants into the snares is regarded as an amusement or sport of the highest character, and, as such, is attended by all the principal families of the country.—Account of Ceylon, p. 218—226.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIX.

Verse 2. How long will ye vex my soul] Every thing that was irritating, vexatious, and opprobrious, his friends had recourse to, in order to support their own system, and overwhelm him. Not one of them seems to have been touched with a feeling of tenderness toward him; nor does a kind expression drop at any time from their lips! They were called friends; but this term, in reference to them, must be taken in the sense of cold-blooded acquaintances: However, there are many in the world that go under the sacred name of friends, who, in times of difficulty, act a similar part. Job's friends have been, by the general consent of posterity, consigned to endless infamy. May all those who follow their steps be equally enrolled in the annals of bad fame!

Verse 3. These ten times] The exact arithmetical number is not to be regarded here: ten times being put for many times, as we have already seen. See particularly the note on Gen. xxxi. 7.

profess to consider me a wicked man because I am in adversity. Of this you had no suspicion, when I was in prosperity! Circumstances change men's minds.

Verse 4. And be it indeed (or if indeed) that I have erred] Suppose indeed that I have been mistaken in any thing, that in the simplicity of my heart I have gone astray, and that this matter remains with myself, for most certainly there is no public stain on my life; you must grant that this error, whatsoever it is, has hurt no person except myself. Why then do you treat me as a person whose life has been a general blot, and whose example must be a public curse?

Verse 6. Know now that God hath overthrown me.] The matter is between him and me; and he has not commissioned you to add reproaches to his chastisements.

And hath compassed me with his net.] There may be an allusion here to the different modes of hunting which have been already referred to in the preceding chapter. But if we take the whole verse together, and read the latter clause before the former, thus:—“Know, therefore, that God hath encompassed me with his net, and overthrown me;” the allusion may be to an ancient mode of combat practised among the ancient Persians, ancient Goths, and among the Romans. The custom among the Romans was this:—"One of the combatants was armed with a sword and shield, the other with a trident and net. The net he endeavoured to cast over the head of his adversary; in which, when he succeeded, the entangled person was soon pulled down by a noose that fastened round the neck, and then despatched. The person who carried the net and trident was called Retiarius; and the other, who carried the sword and shield, was termed Secutor, or the Pursuer, because, when the Retiarius missed his throw, he was obliged to run about the ground till he got his net in order for a second throw; while the Secutor followed hard to prevent and despatch him. The Persians in old times used what was called كمان kumand, the noose. It was not a net, but a sort of running loop, which horsemen endeavoured to cast over the heads of their enemies that they might pull them off their horses.

That the Goths used a hoop net fastened to a pole, which they endeavoured to throw over the heads of their foes, is attested by Olaus Magnus, Hist. de Gentibus Septentrionalibus, Rom. 1555, lib. xi. cap. 13. De diversis Modis preliandi Fimorum. His words are, "Quidam restilius instar retium ferinorum ductilibus sublimi jactatione utuntur: ubi enim cum hoste congressi sunt, injiciunt eos restes quasi laqueos in caput resistentis, ut equam aut hominem ad se trahant." Some use elastic ropes formed like hunting nets, which they throw aloft: and, when they come in contact with the enemy, they throw these ropes over the head of their opponent; and, by this means, they can drag either man or horse to themselves. At the head of the page he gives a wooden cut, representing the net, and the manner of throwing it over the head of the enemy. To such a device Job might allude, God hath encompassed me with his net, and overthrown me.

Verse 7. I cry out of wrong] I complain of violence and of injustice; but none comes to my help.

Verse 8. He hath fenced up my way] This may allude to the mode of hunting the elephant, described at the conclusion of the preceding chapter, or to the operations of an invading army. See under ver. 11.

Verse 9. He hath stripped me of my glory] I am reduced to such circumstances, that I have lost all my honour and respect.

Verse 11. And he counteth me unto him as one of his enemies.] From the seventh to the thirteenth verse there seems to be an allusion to a hostile invasion, battles, sieges, &c. 1. A neighbouring chief, without provocation, invades his neighbour's territories, and none of his friends would come to his help. I cry out of wrong, but I am not heard, ver. 7. 2. and dependance, are very forcibly described. Formerly revered by all: now esteemed by none. Pity to those who have fallen into adversity is rarely shown. The rich have many friends. And to him who appears to be gaining worldly substance, much court is paid; for, many worship the rising sun, who think little of that which is gone down. Some are even reproached with that emience which they have lost, though not culpable of the loss. A bishop, perhaps Bate, of Ossory, being obliged to leave his country and fly for his life, in the days of bloody Queen Mary, and who never regained his bishopric, being met one morning by one like those whom Job describes, who, intending to be witty at the expense of the venerable prelate, accosted him thus:—"Good morrow, BISHOP quondam." To which the bishop smartly replied, "Adieu, KNAVE semper."

Verse 17. Though I entreated for the children's sake of mine own body. This may imply no more than adjuring her by the tenderest ties, by their affectionate intercourse; and, consequently, by the children which had been the seals of their mutual affection; though those children were no more.

But the mention of his children in this place may intimate that he had still some remaining; that there might have been young ones, who, not being of a proper age to attend the festival of their elder brothers and sisters, escaped that sad catastrophe. The Septuagint have προσκαρτερήσας δὲ κοίτης αὐτοῦ παραλαβὴν αὐτοῦ, "I affectionately entreated the children of my concubines." But there is no ground in the Hebrew text for such a strange exceptionable rendering. Coverdale has, I am fayne to speake fayne to the children of myne own body.

Verse 19. My inward friends] Those who were my greatest intimates.

Verse 20. My bone cleaveth to my skin] My flesh is entirely wasted away; and nothing but skin and bone left.

To escape with the skin of the teeth seems to have been a proverbial expression, signifying great difficulty. I had as narrow an escape from death, as the thickness of the enamel on the teeth. I was within a hair's breadth of destruction, see on ver. 11.

distress; and that his spirit was worn down with the length and severity of his suffering.

Verse 22. Why do ye persecute me as God] Are not the afflictions which God sends enough? Do you not see that I have as much as I can bear? When the Papists were burning Dr. Taylor, at Oxford, while wrapped in the flames, one of the true sons of the church took a stick out of the fagots, and threw it at his head, and split open his face. To whom he calmly said, Man, why this wrong? Do not I suffer enough?

And are not satisfied with my flesh?] Will ye persecute my soul, while God is persecuting my body? Is it not enough that my body is destroyed,—why then labour to torment my mind?

Verse 23. Oh that my words were now written] Job introduces the important subject which follows, in a manner unusually solemn; and he certainly considers the words which he was about to utter of great moment; and, therefore, wishes them to be recorded in every possible way. All the modes of writing, then in use, he appears to refer to. As to printing, that should be out of the question, as no such art was then discovered, nor for nearly two thousand years after. Our translators have made a strange mistake by rendering the verb ἔγραψα yechaku, printed, when they should have used described, traced out. O that my words were fairly traced out in a book! It is necessary to make this remark, because superficial readers have imagined that the art of printing existed in Job's time, and that it was not a discovery of the fifteenth century of the Christian era: whereas there is no proof that it ever existed in the world before A.D. 1440, or thereabouts; for the first printed book with a date is a Psalter, printed by John Pust, in 1457, and the first Bible with a date is that by the same artist in 1460.

Three kinds of writing Job alludes to, as being practised in his time:—1. Writing in a book, formed either of the leaves of the papyrus, already described, see on chap. viii. ver. 11. or on a sort of linen cloth. A roll of this kind, with unknown characters, I have seen taken out of the envelopments of an Egyptian mummy. Denon, in his travels in Egypt, gives an account of a book of this kind, with an engraved fac simile, taken also out of an Egyptian mummy. 2. Cutting with an iron stile on plates of lead. 3. Engraving on large stones or rocks, many of which are still found in different parts of Arabia.

tree are used in the East instead of paper ; and a stile of brass, silver, iron, &c. with a steel point, serves for a pen. By this instrument the letters are cut, or engraved, on the substance of the leaf ; and afterward some black colouring matter is rubbed in, in order to make the letters apparent. This was probably the oldest mode of writing, and it continues among the Cingalese to the present day. It is worthy of remark that PLINY, Hist. Nat. lib. xiii. c. 11. mentions most of these methods of writing, and states that the leaves of the palm tree were used before other substances were invented. After showing that paper was not used before the conquest of Egypt by Alexander the Great, he proceeds :—In palmarum foliis primò scriptitatum ; deinde quarundam arborum libris ; postea publica monumenta plumbeis voluminibus, mox et privata linteis facti cepta, aut ceris. "At first men wrote on palm tree leaves ; and afterward on the bark or rind of other trees. In process of time, public monuments were written on rolls of lead ; and those of a private nature on linen books, or tables covered with wax."

Pausanias lib. xii. c. 31. giving an account of the Boeotians, who dwelt near fount Helicon, states the following fact :—Και μοιμολιζέον μοι εδικοῦσαν εἶνα ἡ πηγή, τὰ πολλὰ ὑπο τοῦ χρόνου λευμασμένα, γράσσεται γὰρ αὐτὰ τὰ ἔργα. "They showed me a leaden table near to the fountain, on which his works (Hesiod's) were written ; but a great part had perished by the injuries of time."

Verse 24. Iron pen and lead] Some suppose that the meaning of this place is this ; the iron pen is the chisel by which the letters were to be deeply cut in the stone or rock ; and the lead was melted into those cavities in order to preserve the engraving distinct. But this is not so natural a supposition as what is stated above ; that Job refers to the different kinds of writing or perpetuating public events used in his time : and the quotations from Pliny and Pausanias confirm the opinion already expressed.

Verse 25. For I know that my redeemer liveth] Any attempt to establish the true meaning of this passage is almost hopeless. By learned men and eminent critics, the words have been understood very differently : some vehemently contending that they refer to the resurrection of the body, and the redemption of the human race by Jesus Christ ; while others, with equal vehemence and show of argument, have contended that they refer only to Job's restoration to health, family comforts, and general prosperity, after the present trial should be ended. In defence of these two opinions larger treatises have been written than the whole Book of Job would amount to, if written even in capitals. To discuss the arguments on either side, the nature of this work forbids ; but my own view of the subject will be reasonably expected by the reader. I shall, therefore, lay down one principle, without which no mode of interpretation hitherto offered can have any weight. The principle is this :—Job was now under the special inspiration of the Holy Spirit, and spoke prophetically.

Now, whether we allow that the passage refers to the general resurrection and the redemption by Christ, or to Job's restoration to health, happiness, and prosperity, this principle is equally necessary. 1. In those times no man could speak so clearly concerning the general resurrection and the redemption by Jesus Christ as Job, by one class of interpreters, is supposed here to do ; unless especially inspired for this very purpose. 2. Job's restoration to health and happiness, which, though it did take place, was so totally improbable to himself all the way through, so wholly unexpected, and, in every sense, impossible, except to the almighty power of God, that it could not be inferred from any thing that had already taken place, and must be foreshown by direct inspiration. Now, that it was equally easy to predict either of these events will be at once evident, because both were in futurity, and both were previously determined. Nothing contingent could exist in either : with them man had nothing to do ; and they were equally within the knowledge of him to whose ubiquity there can be neither past nor future time ; in whose presence absolute and contingent events subsist in their own distinctive characters, and are never resolved into each other.

But another question may arise, Which was most likely to be the subject of this oracular declaration, the general resurrection and redemption by Christ ; or the restoration of Job to health and affluence !

If we look only to the general importance of these things, this question may be soon decided ; for the doctrine of human redemption, and the general resurrection to an eternal life, are of infinitely greater importance than any thing that could affect the personal welfare of Job. We may therefore say, of two things which only the power of God can effect, and one of which only shall be done, it is natural to conclude, he will do that which is of most importance ; and that is of most importance by which a greater measure of glory is secured to himself, and a greater sum of good produced to mankind.

As, therefore, a revelation by which the whole human race, in all its successive generations, to the end of time, may be most essentially benefited, is superior in its worth and importance to that by which one man only can be benefited, it is natural to conclude here, that the revelation relative to the general resurrection, &c. is that which most likely the text includes.

But to this it may be answered, God does not do always in the first instance, that which is most necessary and important in itself, as every thing is done in that order, and in that time, which seems best to his godly wisdom; therefore, a thing of less importance may be done now, and a thing of greater importance left to a future time. So God made the earth before he made man, produced light before he formed the celestial luminaries, and instituted the Mosaic economy before the Christian dispensation. This is all true, for every thing is done in that season in which it may best fulfil the designs of providence and grace. But the question still recurs, Which of the predictions was most congruous to the circumstances of Job, and those of his companions; and which of them was most likely to do most good on that occasion, and to be most useful through the subsequent ages of the world? The subject is now considerably narrowed, and if this question could be satisfactorily answered, the true meaning of the passage would be at once found out. 1. For the sake of righteousness, justice, and truth, and to vindicate the ways of God with man, it was necessary that Job's innocence should be cleared; that the false judgments of his friends should be corrected; and that, as Job was now reduced to a state of the lowest distress, it was worthy the kindness of God to give him some direct intimation that his sufferings should have a happy termination. That such an event ought to take place there can be no question; and that it did take place is asserted in the book: and that Job's friends saw it, were reprov'd, corrected, and admitted into his favour of whom they did not speak that which was right, and who had, in consequence, God's wrath kindled against them, are also attested facts. But surely there was no need of so solemn a revelation to inform them of what was shortly to take place, when they lived to see it; nor can it be judged essentially necessary to the support of Job, when the ordinary consolations of God's spirit, and the excitement of a good hope, through grace, might have as completely answered the end.

On the other hand, to give men, who were the chiefs of their respective tribes, proper notice of a doctrine of which they appear to have had no adequate conception, and which was so necessary to the peace of society, the good government of men, and the control of unruly and wayward passions, which the doctrine of the general resurrection and consequent judgment is well calculated to produce, and to stay and support the suffering godly under the afflictions and calamities of life, were objects worthy the highest regards of infinite philanthropy and justice, and of the most pointed and solemn revelation which could be given on such an occasion. In short they are the grounds on which all revelation is given to the sons of men: and the prophecy in question, viewed in this light, was, in that dark age and country, a light shining in a dark place; for the doctrine of the general resurrection, and of future rewards and punishments, existed among the Arabs from time immemorial: and was a part of the public creed of the different tribes when Mohammed endeavoured to establish his own views of that resurrection, and of future rewards and punishments, by the edge of the sword. I have thus endeavoured dispassionately to view this subject: and having instituted the preceding mode of reasoning, without foreseeing where it would tend, being only desirous to find out truth; I arrive at the conclusion, that the prophecy in question was not designed to point out the future prosperity of Job; but rather, the future redemption of mankind by Jesus Christ, and the general resurrection of the human race.

After what has been stated above, a short paraphrase on the words of the text will be all that is necessary to be added.

I know ידעתי yadaati, I have a firm and full persuasion: that my redeemer, גואלי goali, my kinsman, he whose right it was among the ancient Hebrews to redeem the forfeited heritages belonging to the family, to vindicate its honour, and to avenge the death of any of his relatives by slaying the murderer, Lev. xxv. 25. Numb. xxxv. 12. Ruth iii. 13. but here it must refer to Christ, who has truly the right of redemption, being of the same kindred, who was born of woman, flesh of our flesh, and bone of our bone.

Liveth, וחי chai, is the living One, who has the keys of hell and death; the Creator and Lord of the spirits of all flesh, and the principle and support of all life.

And that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth. The latter day, אחרון acharon, the latter day, or time, when God comes to judgment, or, finally, or, at last.

He shall stand, יקום yakum, he shall arise, or stand up, i. e. to give sentence in judgment: or, he himself shall arise from the dust, as the passage has been understood by some to refer to the resurrection of Christ from the dead.

Upon the earth, עפר al aphar, over the dead or those who are reduced to dust. This is the meaning of עפר aphar in Ps. xxx. 9. What profit is there in my blood when I go down to the pits? Shall the dust (i. e. the dead) praise thee? He shall arise over the dust, over them who sleep in the dust, whom he shall also raise up.

Verse 26. And though after my skin worms destroy this body] My skin, which is now almost all that remains of my former self, except the bones, see ver. 20. They destroy this—not body. נשנן נשנן nikkphu zoth, they, diseases and affliction, destroy this wretched composition of misery and corruption.

Yet in my flesh shall I see God] Either, I shall arise from the dead, have a renewed body, and see him with eyes of flesh and blood, though what I have now shall shortly moulder into dust: or, I shall see him in the flesh; my kinsman, him who shall partake of my flesh and blood, in order that he may ransom the lost inheritance.

Though my reins be consumed with me.] Though I am now apparently on the brink of death, the thread of life being spun out to extreme tenuity.

This, on the mode of interpretation which I have assumed, appears to be the meaning of this passage. The words may have a somewhat different colouring put on them: but the basis of the interpretation will be the same.

I shall conclude with the version of Coverdale:—

For, I am sure that my redeemer lieth;
And that I shal rase out of the earth in the

That I shal be clothed againe with this skynne;

And ge God in my flesh.

Yee, I myself shal beholde him,

We have founde an occasion against him.

Verse 28. But ye should say] Or, Then ye shall say.

Why persecute we him] Or, as Mr. Goode, How did we persecute him? Alas, we are now convinced that we did wrong.

Seeing the root of the matter] A pure practice, and a sound hope, resting on the solid ground of sound faith, received from God himself. Instead of וְיָבִי, in me, וְיָבִי, in HIM, is the reading of more than one hundred of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. and in several of the versions. Seeing the root of the matter is found in HIM.

Verse 29. Be ye afraid of the sword] Of God's judgments.

For wrath bringeth] Such anger as ye have displayed against me, God will certainly resent and punish.

That ye may know there is a judgment.] That ye may know that God will judge the world—and that the unequal distribution of riches and poverty, afflictions and health, in the present life, is a proof that there must be a future judgment, where evil shall be punished, and virtue rewarded.

It would not be fair, after all the discussion of the preceding verses in reference to the two grand opinions and modes of interpretation instituted by learned men, not to inform the reader that a third method of solving all difficulties has been proposed, viz. That Job refers to a divine conviction which he had just then received, that God would appear in the most evident manner to vindicate his innocence, and give the fullest proofs to his friends, and to the world, that his afflictions had not been sent as a scourge for his iniquities. Dr. Kennicott was the proposer of this third mode of solving these difficulties, and I shall give his method in his own words.

“These five verses, though they contain but twelve lines, have occasioned controversies without number, as to the general meaning of Job in this place; whether he here expressed his firm belief of a resurrection to happiness after death; or of a restoration to prosperity during the remainder of his life.

“Each of these positions has found powerful as well as numerous advocates; and the short issue of the whole seems to be, that each party has confuted the opposite opinion, yet without establishing its own. For, how could Job here express his conviction of a reverse of things in this world, and of a restoration to temporal prosperity, at the very time when he strongly asserts that his miseries would soon be terminated by death? See chap. vi. 11. vii. 21. xvii. 11—15. xix. 10. and particularly in chap. vii. ver. 7. O remember that my life is wind: mine eye shall no more see good.

“Still less could Job here express a hope full of immortality; which sense cannot be extorted from the words without very evident violence. And as the possession of such belief is not to be reconciled with Job's so bitterly cursing the day of his birth in chap. iii. so the declaration of such belief would have solved at once the whole difficulty in dispute.

“But, if neither of the preceding and opposite opinions can be admitted; if the words are not meant to express Job's belief either of a restoration, or of a resurrection;—what then are we to do? It does not appear to me that any other interpretation has yet been proposed by the learned: yet I will now venture to offer a third interpretation, different from both the former; and which, while it is free from the preceding difficulties, does not seem liable to equal objection.

“The conviction then, which I suppose Job to express here, is this: That though his dissolution was hastening on, amidst the unjust accusations of his pretended friends, and the cruel insults of his hostile relations; and though, while he was thus singularly oppressed with anguish of mind, he was also tortured with pains of body, torn by sores and ulcers from head to foot, and sitting upon dust and ashes; yet, that still out of that miserable body, in his flesh thus stripped of skin, and nearly dropping into the grave, HE SHOULD SEE GOD: who would appear in his favour, and vindicate the integrity of his character. This opinion may, perhaps, be fairly and fully supported by the sense of the words themselves, by the context, and by the following remarks.

“We read in chap. ii. ver. 7. that Job was smitten with sore biles from the sole of his foot unto his crown: and ver. 8. he sat down among the ASHES. In chap. vii. ver. 5. Job says, My flesh is clothed with worms and clods of dust; my skin is broken and become loathsome. In chap. xvi. 19. Also now, behold, my witness is in heaven, and my record is on high. Then come the words of Job, chap. xix. 25—29. And then in opposition to what Job had just said, that God would soon appear to vindicate him, and that even his accusing friends would acquit him, Zophar says, chap. xx. 27. that the heaven would reveal his iniquity, and the earth would rise up against him. Lastly, this opinion concerning Job's words (as to God's vindication of him) is confirmed strongly at the end of the book, which records the conclusion of Job's history. His firm hope is here supposed to be that, before his death, he should, with his bodily eyes, see God appearing and vindicating his character. And from the conclusion we learn, that God did thus appear: now, says Job, mine eye seeth thee. And then did God most effectually, and for ever, brighten the glory of Job's fame, by four times calling him his SERVANT; and as his anger was kindled against Job's friends, by speaking to them in the following words: Ye have not spoken of me the thing that is right, as my servant Job hath. Go to my servant Job, and my servant Job shall pray for you:—in that ye have not spoken of me the thing which is right, like my servant Job, chap. xl. 7, 8."

Dr. K. then gives the common version, and proposes the following as a new version:

- Ver. 25. For, I know that my vindicator liveth;
And he at the last shall rise over this dust.
26. And after that mine adversaries have mangled me thus,
Even in my flesh shall I see God.
27. Whom I shall see on my side;
And mine eyes shall behold, but not estranged from me:
All this have I made up in mine own bosom.
28. Verily ye shall say, Why have we persecuted him;
Seeing the truth of the matter is found with him.

CHAPTER XX.

Zophar answers Job, and largely details the wretchedness of the wicked and the hypocrite; shows that the rejoicing of such is short and transitory, 1—9. That he is punished in his family and in his person, 10—14. That he shall be stripped of his ill-gotten wealth, and shall be in misery, though in the midst of affluence, 15—23. He shall at last die a violent death, and his family and property be finally destroyed, 24—29.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XX.

Verse 2. Therefore do my thoughts] It has already been observed that Zophar was the most inveterate of all Job's enemies, for we really must cease to call them friends. He sets no bounds to his invectives, and outrages every rule of charity. A man of such a bitter spirit must have been, in general, very unhappy. With him Job is, by insinuation, every thing that is base, vile, and hypocritical. Mr. Goode translates this verse thus: "Whither would my tumult transport me? And how far my agitation within me?" This is all the modesty that appears in Zophar's discourse. He acknowledges that he is pressed by the impetuosity of his spirit to reply to Job's self-vindication. The original is variously translated; but the sense is as above.

For this I make haste] וּבְקֶרֶב רוּחִי u-ba'abur

Kennicott's Remarks on select passages of Scripture, p. 165

There is something very plausible in this plan of Dr. Kennicott; and in the conflicting opinions relative to the meaning of this celebrated and much controverted passage, no doubt some will be found who will adopt it as a middle course. The theory, however, is better than some of the arguments by which it is supported. Yet had I not been led, by the evidence mentioned before, to the conclusion there drawn, I should probably have adopted Dr. K.'s opinion with some modification; but as to his new version, it is what I am persuaded the Hebrew text can never bear. It is even too loose a paraphrase of the original, as indeed are most of the new versions of this passage. Dr. Kennicott says that such a confidence as those cause Job to express, who make him speak concerning the future resurrection, ill comports with his cursing so bitterly the day of his birth, &c. But this objection has little, if any, strength, when we consider that it is not at all probable that Job had this confidence any time before the moment in which he uttered it: it was then a direct revelation, nothing of which he ever had before; else he had never dropped those words of impatience and irritation which we find in several of his speeches. And this may be safely inferred from the consideration, that after this time no such words escaped his lips. He bears the rest of his sufferings with great patience and fortitude; and seems to look forward with steady hope to that day in which all tears shall be wiped away from off all faces; and it be fully proved that the Judge of all the earth has done right.

Verse 3. I have heard the check of my reproach] Some suppose that Zophar quotes the words of Job, and that some words should be supplied to indicate this meaning; e. g. "I have heard (sayest thou) the check or charge of my reproach?" Or, it may refer to what Job says of Zophar and his companions, chap. xix. 2. How long will ye vex my soul—these ten times have ye reproached me. Zophar, therefore, assumes his old ground, and retracts nothing of what he had said. Like many of his own complexion in the present day, he was determined to believe that his judgment was infallible; and that he could not err.

Verse 4. Knowest thou not this of old] This is a maxim as ancient as the world; it began with the first man: a wicked man shall triumph

but a short time; God will destroy the proud doer.

Since man was placed upon earth.] Literally, since ADAM was placed on the earth. That is, since the fall, wickedness and hypocrisy have existed; but they have never triumphed long. Thou hast lately been expressing confidence in reference to a general judgment: but such is thy character, that thou hast little reason to anticipate with any joy the decisions of that day.

Verse 6. Though his excellency mount up to the heavens] Probably referring to the original state of Adam, of whose fall he appears to have spoken, ver. 4. He was created in the image of God; but, by his sin against his Maker, he fell into wretchedness, misery, death, and destruction.

Verse 7. He shall perish for ever] He is dust, and shall return to the dust from which he was taken. Zophar here hints his disbelief in that doctrine, the resurrection of the body, which Job had so solemnly asserted in the preceding chapter. Or he might have been like some in the present day, who believe that the wicked shall be annihilated, and the bodies of the righteous only be raised from the dead: but I know of no Scripture by which such a doctrine is confirmed.

Like his own dung] His reputation shall be abominable, and his putrid carcass shall resemble his own excrement. A speech that partakes as much of the malevolence, as of the asperity of Zophar's spirit.

Verse 8. He shall fly away as a dream] Instead of rising again from corruption, as thou hast asserted (chap. xix. 26.) with a new body, his flesh shall rot in the earth, and his spirit be dissipated like a vapour; and, like a vision of the night, nothing shall remain but the bare impression, that such a creature had once existed; but shall appear no more for ever.

Verse 10. His children shall seek to please the poor] They shall be reduced to the lowest degree of poverty and want, so as to be obliged to become servants to the poor. Cursed be Ham, a servant of servants shall he be. There are cases where the poor actually serve the poor; and this is the lowest or most abject state of poverty.

His hands shall restore their goods.] He shall be obliged to restore the goods that he has taken by violence.

Mr. Goode translates: His branches shall be involved in his iniquity, i. e. his children shall suffer on his account. "His own hands shall render to himself the evil that he has done to others." Calmet. The clause is variously translated.

Verse 11. His bones are full of the sin of his youth] Our translators have followed the VULGATE, Ossa ejus implebuntur vitiis adolescentiæ ejus; his bones shall be filled with the sins of his youth. The SYRIAC and ARABIC have, his bones are full of marrow; and the TARGUM is to the same sense. At first view it might appear that Zophar refers to those infirmities in old age, which are the consequences of youthful vices and irregularities. why Ahumav, which we translate his youth, may be rendered his hidden things; as if he had said, His secret vices bring down his strength to the dust. For this rendering Rosenmüller contends, and several other German critics. Mr. Goode contends for the same.

Verse 12. Though wickedness be sweet in his mouth] This seems to refer to the secret sins mentioned above.

Hide it under his tongue] This and the four following verses contain an allegory; and the reference is to a man who, instead of taking wholesome food, takes what is poisonous, and is so delighted with it because it is sweet, that he rolls it under his tongue, and will scarcely let it down into his stomach, he is so delighted with the taste; he spares it, and forsakes it not, but keeps it still within his mouth, ver. 13. But when he swallows it, it is turned to the gall of asps within him, ver. 14. which shall corrode and torture his bowels.

Verse 15. He shall vomit them up again] This is also an allusion to an effect of most ordinary poisons; they occasion a nausea, and often excruciating vomiting; nature striving to eject what it knows, if retained, will be its bane.

Verse 16. He shall suck the poison of asps] That delicious morsel, that secret easily be- setting sin, so palatable; and so pleasurable, shall act on the life of his soul as the poison of asps would do on the life of his body.

This poison is called the gall of asps, it being anciently supposed that the poison of serpents consists in their gall, which is thought to be copiously exuded when those animals are en- raged; as it has been often seen that their bite is not poisonous when they are not angry. Pliny, in speaking of the various parts of ani- mals, Hist. Nat. lib. xi. c. 37. states, from this circumstance, that in the gall the poison of serpents consists; ne quis miretur id (fel) venen- um esse serpentum. And in lib. xxviii. c. 9. he ranks the gall of horses among the poisons:—Damnatur (fel) equinum tantum inter venena. We see, therefore, that the gall was considered to be the source whence the poison of serpents was generated, not only in Arabia but also in Italy.

Verse 17. He shall not see the rivers] Mr. Goode has the following judicious note on this passage:—"Honey and butter are the com- mon results of a rich well-watered pasturage, offering a perpetual banquet of grass to kine, and of nectar to bees; and thus loading the possessor with the most luscious luxuries of pastoral life, peculiarly so before the discovery of the means of obtaining sugar. The expres- sion appears to have been proverbial: and is certainly made use of here to denote a very high degree of temporal prosperity." See also chap. xxix. 6. To the Hebrews such expres- sions were quite familiar. See Exod. iii. 8. xiii. 8. xxxiii. 3. 2 Kings xviii. 32. Dent. xxxi. 20. and elsewhere.

The Greek and Roman writers abound in such images.

Milk and honey were such delicacies with the ancients that Pindar compares his song to them for its smoothness and sweetness:

Job employs the same metaphor, chap. xxix. 6:

When I washed my steps with butter,
And the rock poured out to me rivers of oil.

Isaiah also, chap. vii. 22. uses the same when describing the produce of a heifer and two ewes:

From the plenty of milk that they shall produce,
He shall eat butter: butter and honey shall he eat,
Whosoever is left in the midst of the land.

And Joel, iii. 18:

And it shall come to pass in that day
The mountains shall drop down new wine,
And the hills shall flow with milk;
And all the rivers of Judah shall flow with waters.

The expressions denote fertility and abundance; and are often employed to point out the excellence of the promised land, which is frequently denominated a land flowing with milk and honey: and even the superior excellent blessings of the Gospel are thus characterized, Isa. li. 1.

Verse 18. That which he laboured for shall he restore] I prefer here the reading of the Arabic, which is also supported by the Syriac, and is much nearer to the Hebrew text than the common version. He shall return to labour; but he shall not eat; he shall toil, and not be permitted to enjoy the fruit of his labour. The whole of this verse Mr. Goode thus translates:

To labour shall he return, but he shall not eat.

A dearth his recompense: yea, nothing shall he taste

It may be inquired how Mr. Goode arrives at this meaning. It is by considering the word בָּרַךְ yaâloos, which we translate he shall rejoice, as the Arabic عَلَسَ alasa, "he ate, drank, tasted;" and the word כָּחַל kehil, which we make a compound word, ke-chail, "according to substance," to be the pure Arabic word كَاهَلَا kahala, "it was fruitless," applied to a year of dearth: hence kahlan, "a barren year." Conceiving these two to be pure Arabic words, for which he seems to have sufficient authority, he renders תְּמַרְתּוּ "temurato," his recompense, as in chap. xv. 31. and not restitution, as here.

The general meaning is, he shall labour and toil, but shall not reap, for God shall send on his land blasting and mildew. Houbigant translates the verse thus:—Reddet labore partum; neque id absundet; copiosae fuerunt mercaturae ejus, sed illis non fruetur. "He shall restore what he gained by labour, nor shall he consume it; his merchandise were abundant, but he shall not enjoy them." O! how doctors disagree! Old Coverdale gives a good sense, which is no unfrequent thing with this venerable translator:

But labourers shal be, and yet have nothinge to eate; great trabaile shal he make for riches, but he shal not enjoye them.

Verse 19. He hath oppressed and hath forsaken the poor Literally, He hath broken in, pieces the forsaken of the poor, כי רץ עור לרץ ki ratsats azob dallim. The poor have fled from famine, and left their children behind them; and this hard-hearted wretch, meaning Job all the while, has suffered them to perish, when he might have saved them alive.

He hath violently taken away a house which he builded not Or, rather, He has thrown down a house, and hath not rebuilt it. By neglecting or destroying the forsaken orphans of the poor, mentioned above, he has destroyed a house (a family) while he might, by helping the wretched, have preserved the family from becoming extinct.

Verse 20. Surely he shall not feel quietness in his belly I have already remarked that the word bitsen, which we translate belly, means often, in the Sacred Writings, the whole of the human trunk: the regions of the thorax and abdomen with their contents; heart, lungs, liver, &c. and, consequently, all the thoughts, purposes, and inclinations of the mind, of which those viscera were supposed to be the functionaries. The meaning seems to be:—He shall never be satisfied; he shall have an endless desire after secular good; and shall never be able to obtain what he covets."

Verse 21. There shall none of his meat be left Coverdale translates thus:—He deboured so greedily, that he left nothing behinde, therefore his goodes shal not prosper. He shall be stripped of every thing.

Verse 22. In the fulness of his sufficiency he shall be in straits This is a fine saying; and few of the menders of Job's text have been able to improve the version. It is literally true of every great, rich, wicked man; he has no God; and anxieties and perplexities torment him, notwithstanding he has his portion in this life.

Every hand of the wicked shall come upon him. All kinds of misery shall be his portion. Coverdale translates:—Though he had plenty ousnesse of every thinge, yet was he poore; and therefore, he is but a wretch on every syde.

Verse 23. When he is about to fill his belly Here seems a plain allusion to the lustings of the children of Israel in the desert. God showed down quails upon them; and showered down his wrath while the flesh was in their mouth. The allusion is too plain to be mistaken: and this gives some countenance to the bishop of Killala's version of the 20th verse:—

"Because he acknowledged not the quail in his stomach, In the midst of his delight he shall not escape."

That selav, which we translate quietness, means a quail also, the history of the Hebrews' lustings, Exod. xvi. 2—11. and Numb. xi. 31—35, sufficiently proves. Let the reader mark all the expressions here from ver. 20 to 23, and compare them with Numb. xi. 31—35, and he will probably be of opinion that Zophar has that history immediately in view, which speaks of the Hebrews' murmurings for bread and flesh, and the miraculous showers of manna and quails, and the judgments that fell upon them for their murmurings. Let us compare a few passages.

Verse 20. He shall not feel quietness selav selav, the quail. He shall not save of that which he desired. Verse 21. There shall none of his meat be left.—Let no man leave of it till the morning. Exod. xvi. 19.

Verse 22. In the fulness of his sufficiency he shall be in straits.—But some of them left of it until the morning, and it bred worms and stank. Exod. xvi. 20.

Verse 23. When he is about to fill his belly, God shall cast the fury of his wrath upon him, and shall rain it upon him while he is eating.—And while the flesh was yet between their teeth, ere it was chewed, the wrath of the Lord was kindled against the people, and the Lord smote the people with a very great plague. Numb. xi. 33.—He rained flesh upon them as dust, and feathered fowls like as the sand of the sea: so they did eat and were filled—but, while the meat was in their mouth, the wrath of God came upon them, &c. Psal. lxxviii. 26—30. These show to what Job refers.

Verse 24. He shall flee from the iron weapon Or, Though he should flee from the iron armour, the brazen bow shall strike him through. So that if he fle the iron weapon, he shal be shott with the stele bow, Coverdale. That is, he shall most certainly perish: all kinds of deaths await him.

26 All darkness shall be hid in his secret places: a fire not blown shall consume him; it shall go ill with him that is left in his tabernacle.

27 The heaven shall reveal his iniquity; and the earth shall rise up against him.

^c Psa. 21. 9.—^d Ch. 27. 13. & 31. 2, 3.

Verse 25. It is drawn, and cometh out] This refers to archery: The arrow is drawn out of the sheaf or quiver, and discharged from the bow against its mark, and pierces the vitals, and passes through the body. So Coverdale:—The arrow shal be taken forth, and go out at his backe.

Verse 26. A fire not blown shall consume him]. As Zophar is here showing that the wicked cannot escape from the divine judgments, so he points out the different instruments which God employs for their destruction. The wrath of God; any secret or supernatural curse. The iron weapon, the spear, or such like. The bow, and its swift flying arrow. Darkness, deep horror and perplexity. A fire not blown; a supernatural fire; lightning, such as fell on Korah and his company, to whose destruction there is probably here an allusion; hence the words, It shall go ill with him who is left in his tabernacle. “And the Lord spake unto Moses and Aaron, ‘Separate yourselves from among this congregation, that I may consume them in a moment. Get ye up from about the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Depart from the tents of these wicked men. There came out a fire from the Lord, and consumed the two hundred and fifty men that offered incense.” Numb. xvi. 20, 21, 24, 26, 35.

Verse 27. The heavens shall reveal his iniquity; and the earth shall rise up against him]. Another allusion, if I mistake not, to the destruction of Korah and his company. The heavens revealed their iniquity; God declared out of heaven his judgment of their rebellion. “And the glory of the Lord appeared unto all the congregation.” Numbers xvi. 20, &c. And then the earth rose up against them. “The ground clave asunder that was under them, and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up; and they went down alive into the pit, and the earth closed upon them.” Numb. xvi. 31—33.

Verse 28. The increase of his house shall depart, and his goods shall flow away in the day of his wrath]. A farther allusion to the punishment of the rebellious company of Korah, who not only perished themselves, but their houses also, and their goods. “And the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up, and their houses, and all their goods.” Numb. xvi. 32.

These examples were all in point, on the ground assumed by Zophar; and such well attested facts would not be passed over by him, had he known the record of them: and that he did know it, alludes to it, and quotes the very circumstances, is more than probable.

Verse 29. This is the portion]. As God has dealt with the murmuring Israelites, and with the rebellious sons of Korah, so will he deal with those who murmur against the dispensations of his providence; and rebel against his authority. Instead of an earthly portion, and an ecclesiastical heritage, such as Korah, Dathan, and Abiram sought; they shall have fire from God to scorch them, and the earth to swallow them up.

Dr. Stock, bishop of Killala, who has noticed the allusion to the quails, and for which he has been most unmeritedly ridiculed, gives us the following note on the passage:

“Here I apprehend is a fresh example of the known usage of Hebrew poets in adorning their compositions by allusions to facts in the history of their own people. It has escaped all the interpreters; and it is the more important because it fixes the date of this poem, so far as to prove its having been composed subsequently to the transgression of Israel at Kibroth Hattaavah, recorded in Numb. xi. 33, 34. Because the wicked acknowledged not the quail, that is, the meat with which God had filled his stomach; but, like the ungrateful Israelites, crammed and blasphemed his feeder, (as Milton finely expresses it,) he shall experience the same punishment with them; and be cut off in the midst of his enjoyment, as Moses tells us the people were who lusted.”

If I mistake not I have added considerable strength to the prelate’s reasoning, by showing that there is a reference also to the history of the mannâ, and to that which details the rebellion of Korah and his company; and if so (and they may dispute who please) it is a proof that the book of Job is not so old, much less older, than the Pentateuch, as some have endeavoured to prove; but with no evidence of success, at least to my mind. A point which never has been, and I am certain, never can be, proved: which has multitudes of presumptions against it, and not one clear incontestable fact for it. Mr. Goode has done more in this case than any of his predecessors; and yet Mr. Goode has failed: no wonder then that others, unmerciful criticsers of the bishop of Killala, have failed also, who had not a tenth part of Mr. Goode’s learning, nor one hundredth part of his critical acumen.

It is, however, strange that men cannot suffer others to differ from them on a subject of confessed difficulty, and comparatively of little importance, without raising up the cry of heresy against them, and treating them with superciliousness and contempt! Such should know, if they are clergymen, whether dignified or otherwise, that such conduct ill becomes the sacerdotal character; and that ante barbam docet senes, cannot be always spoken to the teacher’s advantage.

As a good story is not the worse for being twice told, the following lines from a clergyman, who, for his humility and piety was as much an honour to his vocation, as he was to human nature, may not be amiss, in point of advice, to all Warburtonian spirits :

"Be calm in arguing, for fierceness makes Error a fault, and truth discourtesy.
Why should I feel another man's mistakes
More than his sickness or his poverty ?
In love I should : but anger is not love
Nor wisdom neither ; therefore, gently move.

Calmness is great advantage : he that lets Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,
Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets ;
As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire.
Truth dwells not in the clouds ; the bow that's there Doth often aim at, never hit, the sphere. Herbert

Dr. Stock's work on the book of Job will stand honourably on the same shelf with the best on this difficult subject.

CHAPTER XXI.

Job expresses himself as puzzled by the dispensations of Divine Providence, because of the unequal distribution of temporal good : he shows that wicked men often live long, prosper in their families, in their flocks, and in all their substance, and yet live in defiance of God and sacred things, 1-16. At other times their prosperity is suddenly blasted, and they and their families come to ruin, 17-21. God however is too wise to err ; and he deals out various lots to all according to his wisdom ; some come sooner, others later to the grave ; but the strong and the weak, the prince and the peasant, come to a similar end in this life ; but the wicked are reserved for a day of wrath, 22-23. He charges his friends with falsehood in their pretended attempts to comfort him.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXI.

Verse 2. Let this be your consolations. וְהָיָה לְךָ נֶחֱמוֹת u-tehi zot tanchumoteycem, may be translated, "And let this be your retractations." Let what I am about to say induce you to retract what you have said, and to recall your false judgments.

נָחַם nacham, signifies not only to comfort, but to change one's mind, to repent : hence the Vulgate translates, et agite poenitentiam, "and repent," which Coverdale follows in his version. and attende yourself. Some suppose the verse is to be understood ironically. I am now about to give you consolations for those you have given me. When I have done, then turn them into mockery if ye please.

Verse 4. As for me הֲאֵנִי ha-anoi, "Alas for me !" Is it not with a man that I speak ? And, if this be the case, why should not my spirit be troubled ? I do not reply against my Maker ; I suffer much from God and man ; why then may I not have the privilege of complaining to creatures like myself ?

Verse 5. Mark me, and be astonished]. Consider and compare the state in which I was once, with that in which I am now, and be astonished at the judgments and dispensations of God. You will then be confounded ; you will put your hands upon your mouths, and keep silence.

Putting the hand on the mouth, or the finger on the lips, was the token of silence. The Egyptian god Harpocrates, who was the god of silence, is represented with his finger compressing his upper lip.

Verse 6. I am afraid]. I am about to speak of the mysterious workings of Providence ; and I tremble at the thought of entering into a detail on such a subject : my very flesh trembles.

Verse 7. Wherefore do the wicked live]. You have frequently asserted that the wicked are invariably punished in this life ; and that the righteous are ever distinguished by the strongest marks of God's providential kindness :—how then does it come that many wicked men live long and prosperously ; at last die in peace without any evidence whatever of God's displeasure ? This is a fact that is occurring daily ; none can deny it ;—how then will you reconcile it with your maxims ?

Verse 8. Their seed is established]. They see their own children grow up, and become settled in the land ; and behold their children's children also ; so that their generations are not cut off. Even the posterity of the wicked continue.

Verse 9. Neither is the rod of God upon them]. They are not afflicted as other men.

Verse 10. Their bull gendereth]. עָבַר abar, passes over, i. e. on the cow, referring to the action of the bull when coupling with the female. Their flocks multiply greatly ; they bring forth in time ; and none of them is barren.

Verse 11. They send forth their little ones]. It is not very clear whether this refers to the young of the flocks, or to their children. The first clause may mean the former, the next

A. M. cir. 2484. like a flock, and their children dance.

B. C. cir. 1520. Ante I. Ol. 12 They take the timbrel and harp, and rejoice at the sound of the organ.

13 They¹ spend their days² in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave.

clause the latter: while the young of their cattle are in flocks: their numerous children are healthy and vigorous, and dance for joy.

Verse 12. They take the timbrel and harp יָסִסוּ, yisseu, they rise up, or lift themselves up, probably alluding to the rural exercise of dancing.

תוף, toph, which we translate timbrel, means a sort of drum, such as the tontom of the Asiatics. קָנָן, kanor, may mean something of the harp kind.

Organ, any ugab, means nothing like the instrument now called the organ, though thus translated both by the Septuagint and Vulgate: it probably means the syrix, composed of several unequal pipes, close at the bottom, which, when blown into at the tops, give a very shrill and lively sound. To these instruments the youth are represented as dancing joyfully. Mr. Goode translates: "They trip merrily to the sound of the pipe." And illustrates his translation with the following verse:

Now pursuing, now retreating,
Now in circling troops they meet:
To brisk notes in cadence beating,
Glance their merry twinkling feet.

The original is intended to convey the true notion of the gambols of the rustic nymphs and swains on festival occasions; and let it be observed, that this is spoken of the children of those who say unto God, "Depart from us; for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways. What is the Almighty, that we should serve him? and what profit should we have if we pray unto him?" Ver. 14, 15. Is it any wonder that the children of such parents should be living to the flesh, and serving the lusts of the flesh? for neither they nor their parents know God, nor pray unto him.

Verse 13. They spend their days in wealth There is a various reading here of some importance. In the text we have יָבִילוּ, yiballu, they grow old, or wear out as with old age, terent vetustate; and, in the margin, יָצִילוּ, yicallu, they consume; and the Masora states, that this is one of the eleven words which are written with a beth, and must be read by a cap. Several editions have the former word in the text, and the latter in the margin; the former being what is called the kethib, the latter keri. יָבִילוּ, yiballu, they grow old, or wear out, is the reading of the Antwerp, Paris, and London, Polyglots: יָצִילוּ, yicallu, they accomplish, or spend, is the reading of the Complutensian Polyglott, thirteen of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., the Septuagint, Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic. The Vulgate has decunt, "they lead or spend," from which our translation is 15^m What is the Almighty, that we should serve him? and what profit should we have if we pray unto him?

borrowed. I incline to the former, as Job's argument derives considerable strength from this circumstance: they not only spend their days in faring sumptuously every day; but they even wear out so as to grow old in it; they are not cut off by any sudden judgment of God. This is fact; therefore, your doctrine, that the wicked are cut off suddenly, and have but a short time, is far from the truth.

In a moment they go down to the grave.] They wear out their years in pleasure; grow old in their gay and giddy life; and die, as in a moment, without previous sickness: or, as Mr. Goode has it, They quietly descend into the grave.

Verse 14. They say unto God.] This is the language of their conduct, though not directly of their lips.

Depart from us.] Let us alone; we do not trouble thee. Thy ways are painful: we do not like cross-bearing. Thy ways are spiritual: we wish to live after the flesh. We have learnt to do our own will: we do not wish to study thine.

Verse 15. What is the Almighty.] What allegiance do we owe to him? We feel no obligation to obey him: and what profit can we derive from prayer? We are as happy as flesh and blood can make us: our kingdom is of this world: we wish for no other portion than that which we have.

Those who have never prayed as they ought, know nothing of the benefits of prayer.

Verse 16. Their good is not in their hand.] With all their boasting and self-dependence, God only lends them his bounty; and, though it appears to be their own, yet it is at his disposal. Some of the wicked he permits to live and die in affluence; provided it be acquired in the ordinary way of his providence, by trade, commerce, &c. Others he permits to possess it for a while only, and then strips them of their illegally procured property.

The counsel of the wicked is far from me.] Some understand the words thus:—"Far be it from me to advocate the cause of the wicked." I have nothing in common with them, and am not their apologist. I state a fact; they are often found in continual prosperity: I state another fact; they are often found in wretchedness and misery: for,

Verse 17. How oft is the candle of the wicked put out?] The candle or lamp is often used, both as the emblem of prosperity and of posterity. Oftentimes the rejoicing of the wicked is short; and, not unfrequently, his seed is cut off from the earth. The root is dried up, and the branch is withered.

God distributeth sorrows in his anger.] He must be incensed against those who refuse to know, serve, and pray unto him. In his anger he, therefore, portions out to each his due share of misery, vexation, and wo.

Verse 18. They are as stubble before the wind] "His fan is in his hand; he will thoroughly cleanse his floor, and the chaff he will burn with unquenchable fire." Therefore the wicked shall not stand in the judgment; but shall be like the chaff which the wind driveth away." Were not this a common thought, I should have supposed that the author of this book borrowed it from Psa. i. 4. The original signifies that they shall be carried away by a furious storm; and borne off as booty is by the swift-riding robbers of the desert, who make a sudden irruption, and then set off full speed with their prey.

Verse 19. God layeth up his iniquity for his children] This is according to the declaration of God, Exod. xx. 5. "Visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me." This always supposes that the children, who are thus visited, have copied their parents' example; or, that ill-gotten property is found in their hands which has descended to them from their wicked fathers; and of this God, in his judgments, strips them. It is, however, very natural to suppose that children brought up without the fear of God, will walk in the sight of their own eyes, and according to the imaginations of their own hearts.

He rewardeth him, and he shall know it.] He shall so visit his transgressions upon him, that he shall at last discern that it is God who hath done it. And thus they will find that there would have been profit in serving him, and safety in praying unto him. But this they have neglected; and now it is too late.

Verse 20. His eyes shall see his destruction] He shall perceive its approach; and have the double punishment of fearing and feeling; feeling a THOUSAND deaths in fearing one.

He shall drink of the wrath.] The cup of God's wrath, the cup of trembling, &c. is frequently expressed or referred to in the Sacred Writings, Deut. xxxii. 33, Isa. li. 17—22. Jer. xxv. 15. Rev. xiv. 8. It appears to be a metaphor taken from those cups of poison which certain criminals were obliged to drink. A cup of the juice of hemlock was the wrath or punishment assigned by the Athenian magistrates to the philosopher Socrates.

Verse 21. For what pleasure hath he in his 21 For what pleasure hath he in his house after him, when the number of his months is cut off in the midst?

22^y Shall any teach God knowledge? seeing he judgeth those that are high.

house after him] What may happen to his posterity he neither knows nor cares, as he is now numbered with the dead; and numbered with them before he had lived out half his years. Some have translated the verse thus: "Behold how speedily God destroys the house of the wicked after him! How he shortens the number of his months!"

Verse 22. Shall any teach God knowledge?] Who, among the sons of men, can pretend to teach God how to govern the world, who himself teaches those that are high, the heavenly inhabitants, who excel us infinitely, both in knowledge and wisdom! Neither angels nor men can comprehend the reason of the divine providence. It is a depth known only to God.

Verse 23. One dieth in his full strength] In this and the three following verses Job shows that the inequality of fortune, goods, health, strength, &c. decides nothing either for or against persons in reference to the approbation or disapprobation of God, as these various lots are no indications of their wickedness or innocence. One has a sudden, another a lingering death; but by none of these can their eternal states be determined.

Verse 24. His breasts are full of milk] The word atanaiv, which occurs nowhere else in the Hebrew Bible, is most likely an Arabic term; but, probably, so provincial as to be now lost. atana, signifies to macerate hides so as to take off the hair; hence Mr. Goode thinks it means here, that sleekness of skin that is the effect of fatness both in man and beast. But as the radical idea signifies to stink, as leather does which is thus macerated, I cannot see how this meaning can apply here. Under the root atana, Mr. Parkhurst gives the following definitions: atana occurs, not as a verb, but as a noun masculine plural, in construction, atana (atenev) the bowels, intestines; once Job xxi. 24. atanaiv (atanaiv) his bowels or intestines, are full of, or abound with, chalab (chalab) fat. So the LXX. τα εσπερα αυτου εστιν αλεουρα. The VULGATE: Viscera ejus plena sunt adipis; "his intestines are full of fat." May not atanim (atanim) be a noun masculine plural from atana (atana) to involve, formed as גלנים (galinim, mirrors) from galah (galah, to reveal?). And may not the intestines, including those fatty parts, the mesentery and omentum, be so called on account of "their wonderful involutions." I think this conjecture to be as likely as any that has yet been formed.

Verse 26. They shall lie down alike in the dust] Death levels all distinctions, and the grave makes all equal. There may be a difference in the grave itself; but the human corpse is the same in all. Splendid monuments enshrine corruption; but the sod must lie close and heavy upon the putrefying carcass, to prevent it from becoming the bane of the living.

Verse 27. I know your thoughts] Ye still think that because I am grievously afflicted, therefore I must be a felonious transgressor.

Verse 28. For ye say, Where is the house of the prince?] In order to prove, your point, ye ask, where is the house of the tyrant and oppressor? Are they not overthrown and destroyed? and is not this a proof that God does not permit the wicked to enjoy prosperity?

Verse 29. Have ye not asked them that go by the way?] This appears to be Job's answer. Consult travellers who have gone through different countries; and they will tell you that they have seen both examples, the wicked in great prosperity in some instances, while suddenly destroyed in others. See at the end of the chapter.

Do ye not know their tokens] Mr. Goode translates the whole verse thus: "Surely thou canst never have inquired of men of travel; or thou couldst not have been ignorant of their tokens. Hadst thou made proper inquiries, thou wouldst have heard of their awful end in a thousand instances." And also of their prosperity.

Verse 30. That the wicked is reserved to the day of destruction] Though every one can tell that he has seen the wicked in prosperity, and even to spend a long life in it; yet this is no proof that God loves him, or that he shall enjoy a prosperous lot in the next world. There, he shall meet with the day of wrath. There, the wicked shall be punished, and the just rewarded.

Verse 31. Who shall declare his way to his face?] But while the wicked is in power, who shall dare to tell him to his face what his true character is? Or who shall dare to repay him the evil he has done? As such a person cannot have his punishment in this life, he must have it in another: and for this the day of wrath, i. e. the day of judgment, is prepared.

Verse 32. Yet shall he be brought to the grave] He shall die like other men; and the corruption of the grave shall prey upon him.

Verse 33. The clods of the valley shall be sweet unto him] Perhaps there is an allusion here to the Asiatic mode of interment for princes, saints, and nobles: a well-watered valley was chosen for the tomb, where a perpetual spring might be secured. This was intended to be the emblem of a resurrection, or of a future life; and to conceal as much as possible the disgrace of the rotting carcass.

Every man shall draw after him] There seem to be two allusions intended here: 1. To death, the common lot of all. Millions have gone before him to the tomb; and kol כל kol adam, all men shall follow him; all past generations have died; all succeeding generations shall die also. 2. To pompous funeral processions: multitudes preceding, and multitudes following the corpse.

Verse 34. How then comfort ye me in vain] Mr. Goode translates: "How vainly then would ye make me retract." See the note on ver. 2. I cannot retract any thing I have said, as I have proved, by fact and testimony, that your positions are false and unfounded. Your pretensions to comfort me are as hollow as the arguments you bring in support of your exceptionable doctrines.

THIS chapter may be called Job's triumph over the insinuated calumnies, and specious but false doctrines, of his opponents. The irritability of his temper no longer appears: from the time he got that glorious discovery of his Redeemer, and the joyous hope of an eternal inheritance, chap. xix. 25, &c. we find no more murmurings, nor unsanctified complainings. He is now full master of himself; and reasons conclusively, because he reasons coolly. Impassioned transports no longer carry him away: his mind is serene, his heart is fixed, his hope steady, and his faith strong. Zophar the Naamathite is now in his presence as an infant in the gripe of a mighty giant. Another of these pretended friends and real enemies comes forward to renew the attack with virulent invective, malevolent insinuation, and unsupported assertion. Him Job meets and vanquishes by pious resignation and fervent prayer. Though, at different times after this Job had his buffetings from his grand adversary, and sometimes of comparative darkness, yet his faith is unshaken; and he stands as a beaten anvil to the stroke. He effectually exculpates himself, and vindicates the dispensations of his Maker.

There appears to be something in the 29th verse which requires to be farther examined. Have ye not asked them that go by the way? And do ye not know their tokens? It is probable that this verse may allude to the custom of burying the dead by the way side, and raising up specious and descriptive monuments over them. Job argues that the lot of outward prosperity fell alike to the just and to the unjust: and the sepulchral monuments by the way side were proofs of his assertion; for his friends as well as himself and other persons, had noted them; and asked the history of such and such from the nearest inhabitants of the place. And the answers in a great variety of cases, would be: "That monument points out the place where a wicked man lies, who was all his lifetime in prosperity and affluence, yet oppressed the poor, and shut up the bowels of his compassion against the destitute; and this belongs to a man who lived only to serve his God, and to do good to man according to his power, yet he had not a day of health, nor an hour of prosperity; God having given to the former his portion in this life, and reserved the recompense of the latter to a future state."

The Septuagint renders the verse thus:—Ἐρωτησατε παραπορευομενους ἰδεν, και τα σημεια αυτων ουκ ἀπαιλλοτριωσατε, "Inquire of those who pass by the way; and their signs (monuments) ye will not alienate." That is, when ye hear the history of these persons, ye will not then assert that the man who lived in prosperity was a genuine worshipper of the true God: and, therefore, was blessed with temporal good: and that he who lived in adversity was an enemy to God; and was, consequently, cursed with the want of secular blessings. Of the former ye will hear a different account from those who dare now speak the truth, because the prosperous oppressor is no more; and of the latter ye shall learn that, though afflicted, destitute and distressed, he was one of those who acknowledged God in all his ways, and never performed an act of religious service to him in hope of secular gain; sought his approbation only, and met death cheerfully in the hope of being eternally with the Lord."

Neither good nor evil can be known by the occurrences of this life. Every thing argues the certainty of a future state, and the necessity of a day of judgment. They who are in the habit of marking casualties (especially if those whom they love not, be the subjects of them) as tokens of divine displeasure, only show an ignorance of God's dispensations, and a malevolence of mind that would fain arm itself with the celestial thunders in order to transfix those whom they deemed their enemies.

CHAPTER XXII.

Charges him with innumerable transgressions; with oppressions toward his brethren, cruelty to the poor, hard-heartedness to the needy, and with uncharitableness toward the widow and the orphan; and that it is on these accounts that snares and desolations are come upon him, 5—11. Speaks of the majesty and justice of God; how he cut off the antediluvians, and the inhabitants of Sodom, and the cities of the plain, 12—20. NOTES ON CHAPTER XXII.

Verse 2. Can a man be profitable unto God? God does not afflict thee because thou hast deprived him of any excellency. A man may be profitable to a man; but no man can profit his Maker. He has no interest in thy conduct; he does not punish thee because thou hast offended and deprived him of some good. Thy iniquities are against justice, and justice requires thy punishment.

Verse 3. Is it any pleasure to the Almighty? Infinite in his perfections, he can neither gain nor lose by the wickedness or righteousness of men.

Verse 4. For fear of thee? Is it because he is afraid that thou wilt do him some injury,

4 Will he reprove thee for fear of thee? will he enter with thee into judgment?

of the Indian devotees are accustomed to stand with a girbah, or skin full of water, on the public roads, to give drink to weary travellers who are parched with thirst.

Verse 8. But as for the mighty man, he had the earth] ישׁוּעָה אֶרֶץ ish zeroa, the man of arm.
Finger, hand, and arm, are all emblems of strength and power. The man of arm is not only the strong man, but the man of power and influence, the man of rapine and plunder.

The honourable man] Literally, the man whose face is accepted, the respectable man, the man of wealth. Thou wert an enemy to the poor and needy; but thou didst favour and flatter the rich and great.

Verse 9. The arms of the fatherless] Whatever strength, or power, or property they had, of that thou hast deprived them. Thou hast been hard-hearted and cruel, and hast enriched thyself with the spoils of the poor and the defenceless.

Verse 10. Therefore snares] As thou hast dealt with others; so has God, in his retribu-tive providence, dealt with thee. As thou hast spoiled, so art thou spoiled. Thou art taken in a net from which thou canst not escape.
There is an allusion here to the hunting of the elephant: he is driven into an enclosure in the woods, passing from strait to strait, till brought into a narrow point, from which he cannot escape; and then his consternation is great, and his roaring terrible. God hath hunted thee down, as men hunt down those wild and dangerous beasts.

Verse 11. Or darkness, that thou canst not see] The sense of this passage, in the connexion that the particle or gives it with the preceding verse, is not easy to be ascertained.
To me it seems very probable that a letter has been lost from the first word; and that אוֹר, which we translate on, was originally אור aur, LIGHT. The copy used by the Septuagint had certainly this reading; and, therefore, they translate the verse thus:—To Darkness of light aur, Thy LIGHT is changed into darkness:
that is, thy prosperity is turned into adversity.

Houbigant corrects the text thus: instead of חֹשֶׁךְ לֹא חֹשֶׁךְ o choshek lo tereh, or darkness thou canst not see, he reads חֹשֶׁךְ לֹא אֹר lo choshek, lo aur, tereh, darkness, not light, shalt thou behold: that is, thou shalt dwell in thick darkness. Mr. Goode translates:—"Or darkness which thou canst not penetrate; and a flood of waters shall cover thee." Thou shalt either be involved in deep darkness, or overwhelmed with a flood.

The versions all translate differently; and neither they nor the MSS. give any light, except what is afforded by the Septuagint. Coverdale is singular:—Shuldest thou then send darknesse? Shulde not the water floude runne over the? Perhaps the meaning is:—
"Thou art so encompassed with darkness, that thou canst not see thy way; and therefore allest into the snares and traps that are laid for thee."

Verse 12. Is not God in the height of heaven?] It appears from this and the following verses, that Eliphaz was attributing infidel and blasphemous speeches or sentiments to Job.
As if he had said, "Thou allowest that there is a God; but thou sayest that he is infinitely exalted above the heavens and the stars; and that there is so much dense ether and thick cloud between his throne and the earth, that he can neither see it nor its inhabitants." These were sentiments which Job never held, and never uttered: but if a man be dressed in a bear's skin, he may be hunted and worried by his own dogs. Job's friends attribute falsities to him; and then dilate upon them, and draw inferences from them injurious to his character. Polemic writers, both in theology and politics, often act in this way.

Verse 14. He walketh in the circuit of heaven.] He confines himself to those infinitely exalted regions, and cares nothing for the inhabitants of the earth.

Verse 15. Hast thou marked the old way]
This is supposed to be another accusation: as if he had said, "Thou followest the same way that the wicked of old have walked in." Here is an evident allusion to the flood; as is particularly noted in the next verse.

Verse 16. Whose foundation was overflown with a flood.] The unrighteous in the days of Noah, who appear to have had an abundance of all temporal good, ver. 18. and who surpassed the deeds of all the former wicked, said, things: but ^v the counsel of the wicked

Noah preached unto them the terrors of the Lord, and the necessity of repentance, they rejected his preaching with, What can the Almighty do for us? Let him do his worst; we care not for him, ver. 17.

For ^u lamo, to THEM, the Septuagint, Sy-riac, and Arabic, have evidently read ^u lanu, to us. This reading quotes their own saying;
the former reading narrates it in the third person. The meaning, however, is the same.

Verse 18. But the counsel of the wicked is far from me. Sarcastically quoting Job's words, chap. xxi. 14, 16. Job having, in the preceding chapter, described the wicked who said unto the Almighty, Depart from us, &c. adds, But the counsel of the wicked is far from me. Eliphaz here, having described the impious, among whom he evidently ranks Job, makes use of the same expression, as if he had said, "Thank God, I have no connexion with you nor your companions; nor is my mind contaminated by your creed."

Verse 19. The righteous see it, and are glad
They see God's judgments on the incorrigibly wicked; and know that the Judge of all the earth does right: hence they rejoice in all the dispensations of his providence.

Verse 20. Whereas our substance is not cut down We, who fear the Lord, still continue in health and peace; whereas they who have departed from him are destroyed even to their very remnant.

Mr. Goode thinks that ^u kimanu, which we translate our substance, is the same as the Arabic ^u qawm our people, or tribe; and hence he translates the clause thus:—"For our tribe is not cut off: while even the remnant of these is a conflagration consumed." The reference here is supposed to be to the destruction of the men of Sodom and Gomorrah. A judgment by a flood took off the world of the ungodly in the days of Noah. Their remnant, those who lived in the same ungodly way, were taken off by a judgment of fire, in the days of Lot. Eliphaz introduces these two examples in order to terrify Job into a compliance with the exhortation which immediately follows.

Verse 21. Acquaint now thyself with him
Perhaps the verb ^u hasken, should be translated here treasure up, or lay up. Lay up, or procure an interest now with him, and be at peace. Get the divine favour, and then thou wilt be at peace with God, and have happiness in thy own soul.

21 Acquaint now thyself with him, and ^a be at peace:
thereby good shall come unto thee.

22 Receive, I pray thee, the law from his mouth, and ^b lay up his words in thine heart.

23 ^c If thou return to the Almighty, thou shalt be built up, thou shalt put away iniquity far from thy tabernacles.

24 Then shalt thou ^d lay up gold ^e as dust, and the gold of Ophir as the stones of the brooks.

z That is, with God.—a Isa. 27. 5.—b Psa. 119. 11.—c Ch. 8.
5, 6. & 11. 13, 14.—d 2 Chron. 1. 15.—e Or, on the dust.

Thereby good shall come unto thee. ^u ba-hem, "in them," shall good come unto thee.
That is, in getting an interest in the divine favour; and in having thy soul brought into a state of peace with him; thereby, in them, that is, these two things, good will come unto thee. First, thou wilt have an interest in his favour, from which thou mayest expect all blessings; and secondly, from his peace in thy conscience, thou wilt feel unutterable happiness. Get these blessings now, for thou know-est not what a day may bring forth. Reader, hast thou these blessings?

Verse 22. Receive, I pray thee, the law from his mouth Some who wish to place Job before the law given by Moses, say that this means the Noahic precepts; others say it is the law of nature, which is intended! Stuff and vanity! The allusion is plainly to the law given by God to the children of Israel, called here, by way of emphasis, thine Torah, the LAW, which contained ^u amraiv, his words, the words or sayings of God himself; consequently, is not the Noahic precepts, nor the law of nature, neither of which were ever written or registered as the words of God's mouth.

Verse 23. Thou shalt be built up God will restore thee to thy wonted state of prosperity; and thou shalt again have a household, not only of servants, but children also. So much may be implied in the words, Thou shalt be BUILT UP.

Verse 24. Then shalt thou lay up gold as dust The original is not fairly rendered in this translation ^u ve-sith al aphabatser, which Montanus renders: Et pone super pulverem munitionem. And fix a tower upon the dust; ^u te-sur ne-chalim Ophir. Et in petrâ torrentes Ophir,
And in the rock, the torrents of Ophir.

The Vulgate is widely different, Dabit pro terrâ silicem, et pro silice torrentes aureos, "He will give thee flint for earth; and torrents of gold for flint;" which Calmet thus paraphrases:
"Instead of brick thou shalt build with solid stone; and for ornaments, instead of stone as formerly, thou shalt have massive gold!"

All the versions are different. Mr. Goode translates: "Then count thou treasure as dust; then shall he make fountains to gush forth amidst the rocks." Coverdale is different from all: He shall give thee the an harvest, which, in plenty and abundance, shall exceed the dust of the earth, and the golde of Ophir like rhyer stones.

29. 23. Jas. 4. 6. 1^o Pet. 5. 5.—^m Heb. him that hath low eyes.—ⁿ Or, The innocent shall deliver the island. Gen. 18. 26, &c.

Verse 25. Thou shalt have plenty of silver.] Here again the versions and critics vary. The critics may disagree; but the doctrine of Eliphaz is sufficiently plain: "To those whom God loves best he gives the most earthly good. The rich and the great are his high favourites; the poor and the distressed he holds for his enemies."

In the above verses there seems to be a reference to the mode of obtaining the precious metals;—1. Gold in dust; 2. Gold in streams from the hills and mountains: 3. Silver in mines. כֶּסֶף קֶסֶף keseph to'aph, silver of giddiness; of mines so deep as to make one giddy by looking into them. See Mr. Goode.

Verse 26. For then shalt thou have thy delight] Thou shalt know from thy temporal prosperity that God favours thee; and for his bounty thou shalt be grateful. How different is this doctrine from that of St. Paul and St. John! Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus. Because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father. The Spirit himself beareth witness with our spirits that we are the children of God. We glory also in tribulation, knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience experience, and experience hope; and this hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, which is given unto us. We love him because he first loved us. Tribulation itself was often a mark of God's favour.

Verse 27. Thou shalt make thy prayer unto him] תַּעֲרִי תַעֲרִי, thou shalt open or unbosom thyself. And, when the heart prays, God hears: and the person being blessed, vows fidelity, prays on, is supported, and enabled to pay his vows.

Verse 28. Thou shalt also decree a thing] Whatsoever thou purposeth in his strength, thou shalt be enabled to accomplish.

Verse 29. When men are cast down] There is a great difficulty in this verse; the sense, however, is tolerably evident, and the following is nearly a literal version: When they shall humble themselves, thou shalt say, Be exalted, or there is exaltation: for the downcast of eye, he will save. The same sentiment as that of our Lord, He that exalteth himself shall be abased; but he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

Verse 30. He shall deliver the island of the innocent] The word נַאִי, which we translate island, is most probably the Arabic particle أَي whosoever, whatsoever, any, whosoever he may be, as أَي رَجُلٌ ai rujili, whatsoever man he may be. And it is most probable that both words are Arabic, أَي نَفْسٌ اي any innocent, chaste, pure, or holy person; for the word has the same meaning both in Hebrew and Arabic. The text may, therefore, be translated, He shall deliver every innocent person: He (the innocent person,) shall be delivered by the pureness of thy hands; i. e. as thou lovest justice, so thou wilt do justice. Instead of كַפַּי capeica, thy hands, the Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic, have read كַפַּי capai, his (or their hands.) Mr. Goode thinks that נַאִי, signifies house, as أَي and أَي in Arabic, signify to reside, to have a home, &c. and, therefore, translates the passage thus: "The house of the innocent shall be delivered: and delivered by the pureness of thy hands." The reader may adopt which he pleases; but the word island must be given up, as it cannot make any consistent sense.

Thus ends Eliphaz, the Temanite, who began with a tissue of the bitterest charges, continued with the most cruel insinuations, and ended with common-place exhortations to repentance, and promises of secular blessings in consequence; and from his whole speech scarcely can one new or important maxim be derived. Blessed be God for Moses and the prophets; for Jesus, the evangelists, and the apostles! Their trumpet gives no uncertain sound: but by that of Job's friends, who can prepare himself for the battle?

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXIII.

Verse 2. Even to-day is my complaint bitter] Job goes on to maintain his own innocence, and shows that he has derived neither conviction nor consolation from the discourses of his friends. He grants that his complaint is bitter; but states that, loud as it may be, the affliction which he endures is heavier than his complaints are loud.

Mr. Goode translates:—"And still is my complaint rebellion?" Do ye construe my lamentations over my unparalleled suffering as rebellion against God? This, in fact, they had done from the beginning: and the original will justify the version of Mr. Goode: for מרי meri, which we translate bitter, may be derived from מרה marah, "he rebelled."

Verse 3. Oh that I knew where I might find him!] This and the following verse may be read thus:—"Who will give me the knowledge of God, that I may find him out? I would come to his establishment (the place or way in which he has promised to communicate himself:) I would exhibit, in detail, my judgment (the cause I wish to be tried) before his face; and my mouth would I fill with convincing or decisive arguments." Arguments drawn from his common method of saving sinners, which I should prove applied fully to my case. Hence the confidence with which he speaks, ver. 6.

Verse 5. I would know the words which he would answer me.] He would speak nothing but what was true, decree nothing that was not righteous, nor utter any thing that I could not comprehend.

Verse 6. Will he plead against me] He would not exhibit his majesty and his sovereign authority to strike me dumb; or so overawe me, that I could not speak in my own vindication.

No; but he would put strength in me.] On the contrary, he would treat me with tenderness, he would rectify my mistakes, he would show me what was in my favour, and would temper the rigid demands of justice by the mild interpretations of equity; and where law could not clear me, mercy would conduct all to the most favourable issue.

Verse 7. There the righteous might dispute with him] נוכח nocach, might argue or plead. To dispute with God, sounds very harsh.

So should I be delivered for ever] Mr. Goode translates: "And triumphantly should I escape from my condemnation." The Hebrew word לנצח lanetsach, may be as well translated to victory, as for ever: and in this sense the Vulgate understood the words Proponat equitatem contra me; et perveniat ad victoriam judicium meum. He would set up equity against me; and would lead on my cause to victory. Coverdale renders thus:—"But let hym give me like power to go to lawe then am I sure to wyne my matter. Nothing less than the fullest conviction of his own innocence could have led Job to express himself thus to the Judge of quick and dead!"

Verse 8. Behold, I go forward] These two verses paint in vivid colours the distress and anxiety of a soul in search of the favour of God. No means are left untried, no place unexplored, in order to find the object of his research. This is a true description of the conduct of a genuine penitent.

Verse 9. On the left hand, where he doth work] In these two verses Job mentions the four cardinal points of the heavens: The EAST, by the word קדם kedem, which signifies before; the WEST, by אחר achor, which signifies after, or the back part; the NORTH, שמאל semol, which signifies the left; and the SOUTH, ימין yamin, which signifies the right. Such is the situation of the world to a man who faces the east; see Gen. xiii. 9, 11. and xxviii. 14. And from this it appears that the Hebrews, Idumeans, and Arabs, had the same ideas of these points of the heavens. It is worthy of remark that Job says, He hideth himself on the right hand, (the south) that I cannot see him: for, in fact, the southern point of heaven is not visible in Idumea where Job was. Hence it comes that when he spake before, chap. ix. 9. of the constellations of the antarctic pole, he terms them the hidden chambers of the south; i. e. those compartments of the celestial concave that never appeared above the horizon in that place. See Calmet.

Mr. Goode translates these verses as follows; Behold! I go forward, and he is not there; And backward, but I cannot perceive him. On the left hand I feel for him, but trace him not: He enshroudeth the right hand, and I cannot see him.

The simple rendering of Coverdale is nervous and correct:

For though I go before, I find him not: If I come behinde, I can get no knowledge of him:

If I go on the left syde to pounce his workes, I cannot attayne unto them:

Agayne, if I go on the right syde, he hydeh himself, work, but I cannot behold him: he hideth himself on the right hand, that I cannot see him:

10 But he knoweth the way that I take: when he hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold.

11 My foot hath held his steps, his way have I kept, and not declined.

12 Neither have I gone back from the commandment of his lips; I have esteemed the words of his mouth more than my necessary food.

Verse 10. But he knoweth the way that I take] He approves of my conduct; my ways please him. He tries me: but, like gold, I shall lose nothing in the fire; I shall come forth more pure and luminous. If that which is reputed to be gold is exposed to the action of a strong fire, if it be genuine, it will lose nothing of its quality, nor of its weight. If it went into the fire gold, it will come out gold; the strongest fire will neither alter nor destroy it. So Job: he went into this furnace of affliction an innocent, righteous man; he came out the same. His character lost nothing of its value, nothing of its lustre.

Verse 11. My foot hath held his steps, his way have I kept] I have carefully marked his providential dealings; and in his way, his pure and undefiled religion, have I walked. I have not only been generally, but particularly religious: I have attended carefully to the weightier matters of the law, and have not forgotten its slightest injunctions.

Coverdale is curious:—Nebertheles my fete kepe his path, his hpe strete have I huthen, and nat gone out of it. The hpe strete, is highway, the causeway, or raised road; formed, as they anciently were, by stones, in the manner of pavement. It has its name from the Latin strata, paved, via being understood; via lapidibus strata, "a way paved with stones:" hence street, a raised road or pavement, either in town or country. And hence the four grand Roman or British roads which intersected this kingdom: viz. Watling-street, Icknild or Ricknild-street, Ermin-street, and Fosse-street. Some say these streets or roads were made by Belinus, a British king.

Fosse-street began in Cornwall, passed through Devonshire, Somersetshire, and along by Tibbury upon Toteswold, beside Coventry, unto Leicester; and thence by the wide plains to Newark, and Lincoln, where it ends.

Watling-street begins at Dover, passes through the middle of Kent, over the Thames by London, running near Westminster, and thence to St. Albans, Dunstable, Stratford, Towcester, Weden, Lilbourn, Atherston, Wreken, by Severn, Worcester, Stratton, through Wales unto Cardigan, and on to the Irish sea.

Ermin, or Erminage-street, running from St. David's, in Wales, to Southampton.

Verse 12. The commandment of his lips] The written law, that proceeded from his own mouth. I have esteemed the words of his mouth] Mr. Goode has given a better version of the original: In my bosom have I stored up the words of his mouth. The Asiatics carry every thing precious or valuable in their bosom, their handkerchiefs, jewels, purse, &c. Job, therefore, intimates that the words of God's mouth were to him a most precious treasure.

Verse 13. But he is in one mind] The original is והוא אחד vehu be-achad, and is literally, But he is in one: properly rendered by the Vulgate, Ipse enim solus est, But he is alone. And not badly rendered by Coverdale:—It is he himself alone. He has no partner; his designs are his own, they are formed in his infinite wisdom, and none can turn his determinations aside. It is vain, therefore, for man to contend with his Maker. He designs my happiness, and you cannot prevent its accomplishment.

Verse 14. For he performeth the thing that is appointed for me] Coverdale translates: He rewardeth me into my bosome, and many other things mo doth he, as he maye by his power. והוא חזק chuki, may as well be translated bosom here, as in the 12th verse; but probably it may mean a portion, lot, sufficiency. For he hath appointed me my lot: and like these there are multitudes with him. He diversifies human affairs: scarcely any two men have the same lot; nor has the same person the same portion at all times. He has multitudes of resources, expedients, means, &c. which he employs in governing human affairs.

Verse 15. Therefore am I troubled] I do not as yet see an end to my afflictions: he has not exhausted his means of trial; therefore, when I consider this, I am afraid of him.

Verse 16. For God maketh my heart soft] Prostrates my strength, deprives me of courage, so that I sink beneath my burden; and I am troubled at the thought of the Almighty, the self-sufficient and eternal Being.

Verse 17. Because I was not cut off] "O why can I not draw darkness over my face!

Why may not thick darkness cover my face?" Mr. Goode. This verse should be read in connexion with the preceding; and then we shall have the following sense, ver. 16. "The Lord hath beaten down my strength, and my soul has been terrified by his fear;" (ver. 17.) for it is not this deep night in which I am enveloped, nor the evils which I suffer, that have overwhelmed me: I sink only through the fear which the presence of his majesty inspires. This is my greatest affliction; sufferings, diseases, yea death itself, are nothing in comparison of the terror which my soul feels in the presence of his tremendous holiness and justice.

Nothing can humble a pious mind so much as scriptural apprehensions of the majesty of God. It is easy to contemplate his goodness, loving-kindness, and mercy; in all these we have an interest; and from them we expect the greatest good. But to consider his holiness and justice, the infinite righteousness of his nature, under the conviction that we have sinned, and broken the laws prescribed by his sovereign majesty, and feel ourselves brought as into the presence of his judgment-seat;—who can bear the thought? If cherubim and seraphim veil their faces before his throne, and the holiest soul cries out;

I loathe myself when God I see
And into nothing fall,

what must a sinner feel whose conscience is not purged from dead works; and who feels the wrath of God abiding on him! And how, without such a mediator and sacrifice as Jesus Christ is, can any human spirit come into the presence of its Judge! Those who can approach him without terror, know little of his justice; and nothing of their sin. When we approach him in prayer, or in any ordinance, should we not feel more reverence than we generally do?

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXIV.

Verse 1. Why, seeing times are not hidden from the Almighty] Mr. Goode translates:—"Wherefore are not doomsdays kept by the Almighty, so that his offenders may eye their periods." Domsdays are here used in the same sense as term-times; and the wish is that God would appoint such times that the falsely accused might look forward to them with comfort; knowing that on their arrival they should have a fair hearing, and their innocence be publicly declared; and their detractors, and the unjust in general, meet with their deserts. But God reserves the knowledge of these things to himself. "The holy patriarch," says Mr. Goode, "has uniformly admitted that in the aggregate scale of providence the just are rewarded and the wicked punished for their respective deeds, in some period or other of their lives. But he has contended in various places, and especially in chap. xxi. 7—13. that the exceptions to this general rule are numerous; so numerous as to be sufficient to render the whole scheme of providential interposition perfectly mysterious and incomprehensible, chap. xxiii. 3—12. so in the passage before us: If the retribution ye speak of be universal, and which I am ready to admit to a certain extent, be true and unquestionable, I not only ask, Why do the just ever suffer in the midst of their righteousness? but, Why do not the wicked see such retribution displayed before their eyes by stated judgments, so that they may at one and the same time know and tremble?"

Verse 2. Some remove the landmarks] Stones or posts were originally set up to ascertain the bounds of particular estates; and this was necessary in open countries, before hedges and fences were formed. Wicked and covetous men often removed the landmarks or termini; set them in on their neighbour's ground, that by contracting their boundaries, they might enlarge their own. The law of Moses denounces curses on those who remove their neighbour's landmarks, see Deut. xix. 14. and xxvii. 17. and the note on the former place, where the subject is considered at large.

They violently take away flocks, and feed thereof.] Mr. Goode translates וַיִּרְאוּ, they destroy, deriving the word, not from וַיִּרְאוּ, to feed, but from וַיִּרְאוּ, to rend, to destroy.

The Septuagint had read וַיִּרְאוּ, a shepherd; and, therefore, have translated ἀποποιήσαντες, "violently carrying off both the flock and the shepherd."

Verse 4. They turn the needy out of the way] They will not permit them to go by the accustomed paths; they oblige them to take circuitous routes. When the Marquis of H. was made ranger of Richmond Park, he thought it his duty to shut up a pathway which had existed for a long time: and those who presumed, after this shutting up, to break the fence, and take that path as formerly, were prosecuted. A cobbler near the place, entered an action against the marquis: the cause was tried, the marquis cast, and the path ordered to be opened, on the ground that it had, time out of mind, been a public undisputed path. When one asked the cobbler "how he could have the boldness to go to law with the marquis of H.!" he answered, "Because I did not like to leave the world worse than I found it." All tolerated oppression and voluntary forfeiture of ancient rights, are injurious to society at large; and they who wink at them, leave the world worse than they found it.

Verse 5. Rising betimes for a prey] The general sense here seems plain enough. There are some who live a lawless roaming life; make a predatory life their employment; for this purpose frequent the wilderness, where they seize on and appropriate whatsoever they find; and, by this method, they and their families are supported.

Mr. Goode says, "the sense has never yet been understood by any commentator;" and hence he proposes a different division of the words, placing arabah, the desert, or wilderness, in the first hemistich, thus:

^h Rising early for the pillage of the wilderness;

The bread of themselves, and of their children."

Others think that the words are spoken solely of the poor under the hand of oppression; who are driven away from their homes and obliged to seek such support as the wilderness can afford. Such was originally the state of the Bedouins, and of the wandering Arab hordes in general; the oppression of their tyrannous governors obliged them to seek refuge in the deserts, where they still live a roaming predatory life.

Verse 6. They reap every one his corn in the field] This is perfectly characteristic. These wandering hordes often make sudden irruptions; and carry off the harvest of grain, olives, vines, &c. and plunge with it into the wilderness, where none can follow them. The Chaldee gives the same sense:—"They reap in a field that is not their own; and cut off the vineyard of the wicked."

Verse 7. They cause the naked to lodge without clothing] Or rather, They spend the night naked, without clothing; and without a covering from the cold. Another characteristic of the wandering Arabs; they are ill-fed, ill-clothed, and often miserably off, even for tents. They can have little household stuff: as they are plunderers, they are often obliged to fly for their lives; and cannot encumber themselves with what is not absolutely needful.

Verse 8. They are wet with the showers of the mountains] Mr. Goode thinks that torrents, not showers, is the proper translation of the original zerein; but I think showers of the mountains strictly proper. I have seen many of these in mountainous countries, where the tails of water-spouts have been intercepted and broken; and the cut-pouring then would be incredible to those who have never witnessed similar phenomena. The rain fell in torrents, and produced torrents on the land, carrying away earth, and stones, and every thing before them, scooping out great gulfs in the sides of the mountains. Mountain torrents are not produced but by such extraordinary out-pourings of rain, formed either by water-spouts; or by vast masses of clouds intercepted and broken to pieces by the mountain tops.

And embrace the rock for want of a shelter.] In such cases as that related above, the firm rock is the only shelter which can be found; or safely trusted.

Verse 9. They pluck the fatherless from the breast] They forcibly take young children in order that they may bring them up in a state of slavery. This verse is the commencement of a new paragraph: and points out the arbitrary dealings of oppressors, under despotic governments.

Take a pledge of the poor.] Oppressive landlords who let out their grounds at an exorbitant rent, which the poor labourers, though using the utmost diligence, are unable at all times to pay; and then the unfeeling wretch sells them up, as the phrase here is; or takes their cave, their horse, their cart, or their bed, in pledge that the money shall be paid in such a time. This is one of the crying sins of some countries in Europe.

Verse 10. They cause him to go naked] These cruel, hard-hearted oppressors seize the cloth made for the family wear, or the wool and flax out of which such clothes should be made:

And they take away the sheaf] Seize the grain as soon as it is reaped, that they may pay themselves the exorbitant rent at which they have leased out their land: and thus the sheaf, the thraves, and ricks, by which they should have been supported, are taken away from the hungry:

Verse 11. Make oil within their walls] Thus stripped of all that on which they depended for clothing and food, they are obliged to become vassals to their lord, labour in the fields on scanty fare, or tread their wine-presses, from the produce of which they are not permitted to quench their thirst.

Verse 12. Men groan from out of the city] This is a new paragraph. After having shown the oppressions carried on in the country, he takes a view of those carried on in the town. Here the miseries are too numerous to be detailed. The poor in such places are often in the most wretched state; they are not only badly fed, and miserably clothed, but also most unwholesomely lodged. I was once appointed to visit a district in St. Giles', London, to know the real state of the poor. I took the district in House-Row; and found each dwelling full of people, dirt, and wretchedness. Neither old nor young had the appearance of health: some were sick, and others lying dead in the same place! Several beds, if they might be called such, on the floor in the same apartment; and, in one single house, sixty souls! These were groaning under various evils; and the soul of the wounded, wounded in spirit, and afflicted in body, cried out to God and man for help! It would have required no subtle investigation to have traced all these miseries to the doors, to the hands, the lips, and the hearts, of ruthless landlords; or to oppressive systems of public expenditure in the support of ruinous wars, and the stagnation of trade and destruction of commerce occasioned by them: to which must be added the enormous taxation to meet this expenditure.

Yet God layeth not folly to them.] He does not impute their calamities to their own folly. Or, according to the Vulgate.—Et Deus inultum abire non patitur, "And God will not leave (these disorders) unpunished." But the Hebrew may be translated:—And God doth not attend to their prayers. Job's object was to show, in opposition to the mistaken doctrine of his friends, that God did not hastily punish every evil work, nor reward every good one. That vice often went long unpunished, and virtue unrewarded; and that we must not judge of a man's state either by his prosperity or adversity. Therefore, there might be cases in which the innocent oppressed poor were crying to God for a redress of their grievances, and were not immediately heard; and in which their oppressors were faring sumptuously every day, without any apparent mark of the divine displeasure.

Verse 13. They—rebel against the light] Speaking of wicked men. They rebel against the light of God in their consciences, and his light in his word. They are tyrants in grain, and care neither for God nor the poor. They know not the ways thereof; they will not learn their duty to God or man. Nor abide in the paths thereof. If brought at any time to a better mind, they speedily relapse; and are steady only in cruelty and mischief. This is the character of the oppressors of suffering humanity, and of sinners audacious and hardened.

This whole verse Mr. Goode translates in the following manner:

They are indignant of the light;
They respect not its progress;
And will not return to its paths.

They hate good; they regard not its operation; go out of the way of righteousness, and refuse to return.

Verse 14. The murderer rising with the light] Perhaps the words should be read as Mr. Goode has done:

With the daylight ariseth the murderer:
Poor and needy, he sheddeth blood.

This description is suitable to a highwayman; one who robs in daylight, and who has been impelled by poverty and distress to use this most unlawful and perilous mode to get bread; and, for fear of being discovered or taken, commits murder, and thus adds crime to crime.

In the night is as a thief.] Having been a highwayman in the daytime, he turns footpad, or housebreaker, by night; and thus goes on from sin to sin.

There have been several instances like the case above; where poverty and distress have induced a man to go to the highway and rob, to repair the ruin of himself and family. I shall introduce an authentic story of this kind, which the reader may find at the end of this chapter.

Verse 15. The eye also of the adulterer] This is another sin particularly of the city. The adulterer, has made his assignation; he has marked the house of her into whose good graces he has insinuated himself, called digging through the house; he waits impatiently for the dusk; and then goes forth, having muffled or disguised his face, and spends a criminal night with the faithless wife of another man. The morning dawns: but it is to him as the shadow of death, lest he should be detected before he can reach his own home. And if one know him—if he happen to be recognized in coming out of the forbidden house, the terrors of death seize upon him, being afraid that the thing shall be brought to light, or that he shall be called to account, a bloody account, by the injured husband.

This seems to be the general sense of the very natural picture which Job draws in the 15th, 16th, and 17th verses.

Mr. Goode's version of this paragraph I shall lay before the reader.

Ver. 15. For the dark too watcheth the eye of the adulterer;
Exclaiming, No eye shall behold me.
Then putteth he the muffer on his face;

^p John 3. 20.—^t Heb. violently take.—^s Prov. 10. 7.—^u Or, he trusted not his own life.

Verse 18. He is swift as the waters] Literally, Light is he on the face of the waters: And cursed shall be their portion on the earth, which Mr. Goode translates:—

Miserable is this man on the waters:
Deeply miserable the lot of those on dry land.

He beholdeth not the way of the vineyards.] These no longer flourish or bring forth fruit. The labour of the vintage fails.

Verse 19. Drought and heat consume the snow waters] The public cisterns or large tanks which had been filled with water by the melting of the snow on the mountains, and which water was stored for the irrigation of their lands, had been entirely exhausted by the intensity of the heat, and the long continuance of drought.

So doth the grave those which have sinned.] For this whole paragraph we have only two words in the original; viz. שְׁחַת שְׁחַת sheol cha- tau, the pit, they have sinned; which Mr. Goode translates:—"They fall to their lowest depth."

I believe the meaning to be—even the deepest tanks which held most water, and retained it longest, had become exhausted; so that expectation and succour were cut off from this as well as from every other quarter.

I have elsewhere shown that שְׁחַת sheol, signifies not only hell and the grave, but any deep pit; and, also, that שְׁחַת chata, signifies, to miss the mark. Mr. Goode, properly aware of these acceptations of the original words, has translated as above; and it is the only ground on which any consistent meaning can be given to the original.

Verse 20. The womb shall forget him] The mother that bare him shall have no affection for him, nor be afflicted at his death. But the word רַחֵם rechem signifies compassion, mercy. Mercy shall be unmindful of him. How dreadful such a state! When mercy itself forgets the sinner, his perdition slumbereth not.

The worm shall feed sweetly on him] The Chal-dee has, "The cruel, who have neglected to com- miserate the poor, shall be sweet to the worms." He shall be brought into a state of the greatest degradation, and shall be no more remembered,

And wickedness shall be broken as a tree.]
He shall be as a rotten or decayed tree, easily broken to pieces. If it were clear that אֵלֶּה avelah, here rendered wickedness, has the same sense as אֵלֶּה aleh, a leaf, sucker, or shoot, then we might translate according to the ingenious version of Mr. Goode; viz. but the shoot shall be broken off as a tree; which might, in this case, be supposed to refer to illicit commerce, the fruit of the womb becoming abortive.

Verse 21. He evil entreateth the barren] I believe the original word אָרַר should be translated he feedeth; and so the Vulgate understood the word; Pavit enim sterilem. He has been kind to the barren woman; but he has done no good to the widow. He has shown no mercy to large families: he has been an enemy to the procreation of children. Though he may, for particular reasons, have provided for a barren woman; yet the widow he has not comforted, she being old or infirm, or such as might not suit his purpose.

Verse 22. He draweth also the mighty] Calmet gives the following version of the original:—"He draws with him guards for his defence; he raises himself up, and does not feel assured of his life." In the midst even of his guards, he is afraid; and dares not put confidence in any person. This is an admirable delineation of the inquietudes and terrors of a tyrant.

Verse 23. Though it be given him to be in safety] The Vulgate gives this verse a singular turn:—Dedit ei Deus locum penitentiae, et ille abutitur eo in superbiam, God gave him space for repentance, but he has abused it through pride. This is by no means conformable to the original. I think the words should be translated thus:—"He gives them, (i. e. the guards) to him for security, and he leans upon them; yet his eyes are upon their ways." Though he have taken the guards, mentioned in the preceding verse, for his personal defence, and for this purpose he uses them; yet he is full of diffidence, and he is continually watching them, lest they should be plotting his destruction. The true picture of an Eastern tyrant. With- out are fightings; within are fears.

Verse 24. They are exalted for a little while] Such tyrants are exalted for a time, for God pulleth down one and raiseth up another: but he turns his hand against them, and they are gone. They are removed by his justice as all of the same character have been, and shall be: time and judgment shall mow them down as the grass, and crop them off as the ears of ripe corn. They may flourish for a time, and continue their oppressions; but they shall at last come to an untimely end. Few tyrants ever visit the eternal world siccâ morte, but by a violent death. All Eastern history is full of this great fact.

Verse 25. And if it be not so now Job has proved by examples that the righteous are often oppressed; that the wicked often triumph over the just; that the impious are always wretched even in the midst of their greatest prosperity: and he defies his friends to show one flaw in his argument, or an error in his illustration of it; and that existing facts are farther proofs of what he has advanced.

In the preceding chapters we find Job's friends having continual recourse to this assertion, which it is the grand object of all their discourses to prove, viz. The righteous are so distinguished in the approbation of God, that they live always in prosperity, and die in peace.

On the other hand, Job contends that the dispensations of providence are by no means thus equal in this life; that experience shows that the righteous are often in adversity, and the wicked in power and prosperity.

Job's friends had also endeavoured to prove that if a reported good man fell into adversity, it was a proof that his character had been mistaken, that he was an internal sinner and hypocrite; and that God, by these manifest proofs of his disapprobation, unmasked him. Hence they charged Job with hypocrisy and secret sins, because he was now suffering adversity: and that his sins must be of the most heinous nature, because his afflictions were uncommonly great. This Job repels by appeals to numerous facts where there was nothing equivocal in the character: where the bad was demonstrably bad, and yet in prosperity; and the good demonstrably good, and yet in adversity. It is strange that none of these could hit on a middle way; viz. The wicked may be in prosperity; but he is ever miserable in his soul: the righteous may be in adversity; but he is ever happy in his God. In these respects, God's ways are always equal.

On ver. 14. I have referred to the case of unfortunate men who, falling into adversity, really have recourse to plunder to restore their ruined circumstances. The following anecdote is told of the justly celebrated Dr. Sharp, archbishop of York, the grandfather of that highly benevolent, useful, learned, and eminent man, Granville Sharp, Esq. lately deceased, with whom I had for several years the honour of a personal acquaintance.

"Never was any man, as well by the tenderness of his nature as by the impulse of religion, better disposed to succour the distressed, and relieve the necessities of the poor; to which merciful offices he had so strong an inclination, that no reasonable solicitations were ever in danger of meeting with a repulse. Nay, he was more prone to seek out proper objects of his bounty, than to reject them when recommended: and so far was his charity from any suspicion of being extorted by importunity, that it appeared rather a delight than uneasiness to him to extend his liberality upon all proper occasions."

For the same reason, a singular anecdote of the archbishop, related in the London Chronicle of August 13, 1785, and always credited by his family, may be thought worth preserving.

"It was his lordship's custom to have a saddle-horse attend his carriage, that, in case of fatigue from sitting, he might take the refreshment of a ride. As he was thus going to his episcopal residence, and was got a mile or two before his carriage, a decent well-looking young man came up with him; and, with a trembling hand and a faltering tongue, presented a pistol to his lordship's breast, and demanded his money. The archbishop, with great composure, turned about; and, looking steadfastly at him, desired he would remove that dangerous weapon, and tell him fairly his condition. 'Sir! Sir!' with great agitation, cried the youth; 'No words, 'tis not a time, your money instantly.' 'Hear me, young man,' said the archbishop, 'you see I am an old man, and my life is of very little consequence; yours seems far otherwise. I am named Sharp, and am archbishop of York; my carriage and servants are behind. Tell me what money you want, and who you are, and I will not injure you, but prove a friend. Here, take this; and now ingenuously tell me, how much you want to make you independent of so destructive a business as you are now engaged in.' 'O Sir,' replied the man, 'I detest the business as much as you. I am—but—but—at home there are creditors who will not stay—fifty pounds, my lord, indeed would do what no tongue besides my own can tell.' 'Well, Sir, I take it on your word: and, upon my honour, if you will in a day or two, call on me at ———, what I have now given shall be made up that sum.' The highwayman looked at him, was silent, and went off; and, at the time appointed, actually waited on the archbishop, and assured his lordship his words had left impressions which nothing could ever destroy."

"Nothing more transpired for a year and a half or more; when one morning a person knocked at his Grace's gate, and with a peculiar earnestness desired to see him. The archbishop ordered the stranger to be brought in. He entered the room where his lordship was; but had scarce advanced a few steps before his countenance changed, his knees tottered, and he sank almost breathless on the floor. On recovering, he requested an audience in private. The apartment being cleared, 'My Lord,' said he, 'you cannot have forgotten the circumstances at such a time and place; gratitude will never suffer them to be obliterated from my mind. In me, my lord, you now behold that once most wretched of mankind; but now, by your inexpressible humanity, rendered equal, perhaps superior, in happiness to millions. Oh, my Lord,' tears for awhile preventing his utterance, 'tis you, 'tis you, that have saved me, body and soul; 'tis you that have saved a dear and much loved wife, and a little brood of children whom I tendered dearer than my life. Here are the fifty pounds; but never shall I find language to testify what I feel. Your God is your witness; your deed itself is your glory; and may heaven and all its blessings be your present and everlasting reward! I was the younger son of a wealthy man; your lordship knows him: his name was ———. My marriage alienated his affection: and my brother withdrew his love, and left me to sorrow and penury. A month since my brother died a bachelor and intestate. What was his, is become mine; and, by your astonishing goodness, I am now at once the most penitent, the most grateful, and happiest of my species."

See Prince Hoar's life of Granville Sharp, Esq. page 13.

I HAVE no doubt there have been several cases of a similar kind, when the first step in delinquency was urged by necessity: but few of such wretched adventurers have met with an Archbishop Sharp. An early and pious education is the only means, under God, to prevent such dangerous steps, which generally lead to the most fearful catastrophe. Teach a child that whom God loveth he chasteneth. Teach him that God suffers men to hunger and be in want, that he may try them if they will be faithful, and do them good in their latter end. Teach him, that he who patiently and meekly bears providential afflictions shall be relieved and exalted in due time. Teach him that it is no sin to die in the most abject poverty and affliction, brought on in the course of divine providence; but that any attempts to alter his condition by robbery, knavery, cozening, and fraud, will be distinguished with heavy curses from the Almighty, and necessarily end in perdition and ruin. A child thus educated is not likely to abandon himself to unlawful courses.

CHAPTER XXV.

Bilddad, the Shuhite, in an irregular speech, shows that God's dominion is supreme, his armies innumerable, and his providence extended over all, 1-3. That man cannot be justified before God; that even the heavenly bodies cannot be reputed pure in his sight; much less man who is naturally weak and sinful, 4-6.

* James 1. 17.—b Ch. 4. 17, &c. & 15. 14, &c.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXV.

Verse 1. Bilddad the Shuhite] This is the last attack on Job: the others felt themselves foiled, though they had not humility enough to acknowledge it; but would not again return to the attack. Bilddad has little to say; and that little is very little to the point. He makes a few assertions, particularly in reference to what Job had said in the commencement of the preceding chapter, of his desire to appear before God, and have his case tried by him, as he had the utmost confidence that his innocence should be fully proved. For this Bilddad reprehends Job with arguments which had been brought forth often in this controversy, and as repeatedly confuted, chap. iv. 18. and xv. 14, 15, 16.

Verse 2. Dominion and fear are with him] God is an absolute sovereign; his fear is on all the hosts of heaven; and, by his sovereignty, he establishes and preserves order in the heavens, and among all the inhabitants of the eternal world:—How canst thou, therefore, dare to appeal to him, or desire to appear before him?

Verse 3. Is there any number of his armies?] He has troops innumerable; he can serve himself of all his creatures; every thing may be a means of help or destruction according to his divine will. When he purposes to save, none can destroy; and when he is determined to destroy, none can save. It is vain to trust in his creatures against himself.

Upon whom doth not his light arise?] That is, his providence rules over all; he is universal Lord; he causes his sun to rise on the evil and good, and he sends his rain on the just and unjust.

Verse 4. How then can man be justified?] Or, u-mah, With what shall a man be justified with God? Though this is no conclusion from 6 How much less man, that is a worm? and the son of man, which is a worm.

Psa. 130. 3. & 143. 2.—o Psa. 22. 6.

Bilddad's premises, yet the question is of the highest importance to man. Neither Bilddad, nor any of his fellows, could answer it: the doctrine of redemption, through the blood of the cross, was then known only through types and shadows. We, who live in the Gospel dispensation, can readily answer the question, With what shall miserable man (u-mah enosh) be justified with God?—Ans. By bringing forward by faith, to the throne of the divine justice, the sacrificial offering of the Lord Jesus Christ; and confiding absolutely in it, as being a full, sufficient, and complete atonement and sacrifice for his sins, and for the salvation of a lost world.

How, or, with what (u-mah) shall he be clean that is born of a woman?—Ans. By receiving that grace, or heavenly influence, communicated by the power and energy of the eternal spirit, applying to the heart the efficacy of that blood which cleanses from all unrighteousness. This, and this only, is the way in which a sinner, when truly penitent, can be justified before God; and in which a believer, convinced of indwelling sin, can be sanctified, and cleansed from all unrighteousness. This is the only means of justification and sanctification, without which there can be no glorification. And these two great works, which constitute the whole of salvation, have been procured for a lost world by the incarnation, passion, death, and resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ, who was delivered for our offences, and rose again for our justification. To whom be glory and dominion now and for evermore, Amen!

Verse 5. Behold even to the moon, and it shineth not] It is continually changing its appearance. It never appears twice in its whole revolution with the same face: it is ever waning or waxing; and its face is variegated with opaque spots. Its changeableness can never be compared with the unchangeable nature of God.

Yea, the stars are not pure in his sight. Whatever their excellence may be as stars, it is nothing in comparison with him from whom they have derived their being and splendour. See the notes on chap. iv. 18. and xv. 14—16. The Targum reads: "Behold, the moon is as yet spotted in her eastern part: the sun shines not; and the stars are not pure in his sight."

Some think that by stars are meant those angels who kept not their first estate: this may be so; but I cannot see it in the text. It may, however, mean the heavenly host, as it is supposed to do, chap. xxviii. 7. but I still must hesitate on the propriety of such applications.

'Tis probable this speech of Bildad was delivered in the night season, when clouds interrupted the bright shining of the moon. The third verse seems to refer immediately to the stars, which, to the naked eye, are innumerable. The sun is not mentioned because of his absence.

This speech of Bildad is both confused and inconclusive. His reasoning is absurd, and he draws false conclusions from his premises. In the third verse, he says, "Is there any number of his armies? and upon whom does not his light arise?" But how absurd is the conclusion which he draws from his questions: "How then can a man be justified with God, or he be clean who is born of a woman?"

This has no relation to the premises: but still to us the question is not difficult, and has already been answered in the notes. "A man can be justified with God," through the blood of Christ—"And he can be clean who is born of a woman," through the sanctification of the Spirit.

Verse 6. How much less man, that is a worm! Or, as the Targum—: "How much more man who in his life is a reptile; and the son of man who in his death is a worm." Almost all the versions read: "Truly man is corruption, and the son of man a worm." The original is degradingly expressive: "Even because enosh, miserable man, is rimmah, a crawling worm; and the son of Adam, who is toleah, a worm, or rather maggot, from its eating into, and dividing, certain substances." Parkhurst.

Thus ended Bildad, the Shuhite, who endeavoured to speak on a subject which he did not understand; and, having got on bad ground, he was soon confounded in his own mind, spoke incoherently, argued inconclusively, and came abruptly and suddenly to an end. Thus Job's three friends being confounded, he was left to pursue his own way: they trouble him no more, and he proceeds in triumph to the end of the thirty-first chapter.

CHAPTER XXVI.

Job, perceiving that his friends could no longer support their arguments on the ground they had assumed, sharply reproves them for their want both of wisdom and feeling, 1—4. Shows that the power and wisdom of God are manifest in the works of creation and providence; gives several proofs; and then adds, that these are a small specimen of his infinite skill, and unlimited power, 5—14.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXVI.

Verse 2. How hast thou helped him? This seems a species of irony. How wonderfully hast thou counselled the unskilful, and strengthened the weak! Alas for you! ye could not give what ye did not possess! In this way the Chaldee understood these verses:—Why hast thou pretended to give succour, when thou art without strength? And save, while thy arm is weak? Why hast thou given counsel, when thou art without understanding? And suppose that thou hast shown the very essence of wisdom!

Verse 4. Whose spirit came from thee? Mr. Goode renders the verse thus: From whom hast thou pillaged speeches? And whose spirit hath issued forth from thee? The retort is peculiarly severe; and refers immediately to the proverbial sayings, which, in several of the preceding answers, have been adduced against the irritated sufferer; for which see chap. viii. 11—19. xv. 20—35. some of which he has already complained of, as in chap. xii. 3. and following. I concur most fully, therefore, with Dr. Stock in regarding the remainder of this chapter as a sample, ironically exhibited by

Job, of the harangues on the power and greatness of God; which he supposes his friends to have taken out of the mouths of other men, to deck their speeches with borrowed lustre. Only, in descanting on the same subject, he shows how much he himself can go beyond them in eloquence and sublimity.

Job intimates that, whatever spirit they had, it was not the spirit of God; because in their answers falsehood was found.

Verse 5. Dead things are formed from under the waters. This verse, as it stands in our version, seems to convey no meaning; and the Hebrew is obscure הרפאים Ha-rephaim, "the R'phaim," certainly means not dead things; nor can there be any propriety in saying that dead things, or things without life, are formed under the waters; for such things are formed every where in the earth, and under the earth, as well as under the waters.

The Vulgate translates:—Ecce gigantes gemunt sub aquis, et qui habitant cum eis. Behold the giants, and those who dwell with them, groan from under the waters.

The Septuagint:—Μη γιγάντες μακροθυοῦται υποκαταβεν ὕδατος, καὶ τῶν συνιτωσιν αὐτοῖς.

Eposhar de gabraiya
de-mithmazmezin yilbarezan ve-innun millera le-maiya u-mashreyatehon. "Can the trembling giants be regenerated, when they and their hosts are under the water?"

The Syriac and Arabic:—"Behold the giants are slain, and are drawn out of the water." None of these appear to give any sense by which the true meaning can be determined.

There is probably here an allusion to the destruction of the earth by the general deluge.
Moses, speaking concerning the state of the earth before the flood, says, Gen. vi. 4. "There were giants נְפִלִים nephelim in the earth in those days." Now it is likely that Job means the same by רֵפְאִים rephaim, as Moses does by the nephelim; and both may refer to the ante-diluvians, who were all, for their exceeding great iniquities, overwhelmed by the waters of the deluge. Can those mighty men, and their neighbours, all the sinners who have been gathered to them since, be regenerated from under the waters, by which they were judicially overwhelmed?

Mr. Goode thinks, the shades of the heroes of former times, the gigantic spectres, the mighty or enormous dead, are meant.

I greatly question whether sea-monsters be not intended, such as porpoises, sharks, nar-wals, grampus, and whales. We know, however, that an opinion anciently prevailed, that the Titans, a race of men of enormous stature, rebelled against the gods, and endeavoured to scale heaven by placing one mountain on the top of another; and that they and their structure were cast down by the thunder of the deities, and buried under the earth and sea; and that their struggles to arise produce the earthquakes which are in certain countries.
Now, although this opinion is supported by the most respectable antiquity among the heathens, it is not to be supposed that in the word of God there can be any countenance given to an opinion at once as absurd as it is monstrous:
but still the poet may use the language of the common people. I must, therefore, either refer the passage here to the antediluvians, or to the vast sea-monsters mentioned above.

Verse 6. Hell is naked before him] Sheol, the place of the dead, or of separate spirits, is always in his view: And there is no covering to Abaddon, the place of the destroyer, where destruction reigns. and where those dwell who are eternally separated from God. The ancients thought that hell or Tartarus was a vast space in the centre, or at the very bottom of the earth. So VIRGIL, Æn. vi. 5.

Pitt.

And some have supposed that there is an allusion to this opinion in the above passage, as well as in several others in the Old Testament:
but it is not likely that the sacred writers would countenance an opinion that certainly has nothing in fact or philosophy to support it.
Yet still a poet may avail himself of popular opinions.

Verse 7. He stretcheth out the north over the empty place] וְהָיָה אֶל תּוֹרָה al tohu, to the hollow waste. The same word as is used Gen. i. 2.
The earth was without form, וְהָיָה תוֹהוּ tohu. The north must here mean the north pole, or northern hemisphere; and, perhaps, what is here stated may refer to the opinion that the earth was a vast extended plain, and the heavens poised upon it, resting on this plain all round the horizon. Of the south the inhabitants of Idumea knew nothing; nor could they have any notion of inhabitants in that hemisphere.

Hangeth the earth upon nothing.] The Chaldee says: "He lays the earth upon the waters, nothing sustaining it."

Verse 8. He bindeth up the waters] Drives the aqueous particles together, which were raised by evaporation, so that, being condensed, they form clouds, which float in the atmosphere till meeting with strong currents of wind, or by the agency of the electric fluid, they are farther condensed; and then, becoming too heavy to be sustained in the air, fall down in the form of rain; then, in this poetic language, the cloud is rent under them.

Verse 9. He holdeth back the face of his throne] Though all these are most evident effects of an omniscient and almighty power, yet the great agent is not personally discover-able; he dwelleth in light unapproachable, and in mercy hides himself from the view of his creatures. The words, however, may refer to those obscurations of the face of heaven, and the hiding of the body of the sun, when the atmosphere is laden with dense vapours, and the rain begins to be poured down on the earth.

Verse 10. He hath compassed the waters with bounds] Perhaps this refers merely to the circle of the horizon, the line that terminates light, and commences darkness, called here

Or, if we take תְּכֵלֶת taklith, here to be the same with תְּכֵלֶת tekleth, Exod. xiv. 4. and elsewhere, which we translate blue, it may mean that sombre sky-blue appearance of the horizon at the time of twilight, i. e. between light and darkness; the line where the one is terminating, and the other commencing; or, he so circumscribes the waters, retaining them in their own place, that they shall not be able to overflow the earth until day and night, that is, time itself, come to an end.

Verse 11. The pillars of heaven tremble
This is probably a poetical description either of thunder, or of an earthquake:

“He shakes creation with his nod;
Earth, sea, and heaven, confess him God.”

But there may be an allusion to the high mountains, which were anciently esteemed by the common people as the pillars on which the heavens rested; and, when these were shaken with earthquakes, it might be said the pillars of heaven tremble. Mount Atlas was supposed to be one of those pillars; and this gave rise to the fable of Atlas being a man who bore the heavens on his shoulders. The Greek and Roman poets frequently use this image. Thus SILIUS ITALICUS, lib. i. ver. 202:

Atlas subducto tracturus vertice cælum:
Sidera nubiferum fulcit caput, æthereasque
Erigit æternum compages æræa cervix:
Caneit barba gelu, frontemque immanibus umbris
Pinea sylva premit; vastant cava tempora venti
Nimbosque ruunt spumantia flumina rictu.
Atlas' broad shoulders prop th' incumbent skies:
Around his cloud-girt head the stars arise.
His towering neck supports th' ethereal way;
And o'er his brow black woods their gloom display.
Hoar is his beard; winds round his temples roar.
And from his jaws the rushing torrents pour. J. B. B. C.

Verse 12. He divideth the sea with his power
Here is a manifest allusion to the passage of the Red sea by the Israelites, and the overthrow of Pharaoh and his host; according to the opinion of the most eminent critics.

He smiteth through the proud רַב רַהַב Rahab,
the very name by which Egypt is called Isa. ii.
9. and elsewhere. Calmet remarks:—“This appears to refer only to the passage of the Red sea, and the destruction of Pharaoh. Were we not prepossessed with the opinion that Job died before Moses, every person at the first view of the subject must consider it in this light.” I am not thus prepossessed. Let Job live when he might, I am satisfied the Book of Job was written long after the death of Moses, and not earlier than the days of Solomon, if not later. The farther I go in the work, the more this conviction is deepened; and the opposite sentiment appears to be perfectly gratuitous.

Goode has well observed, to רָעַם raam, the thunder, mentioned in the next clause. As the thunder is to a whisper; so are the tremendous and infinitely varied works of God to the faint outlines exhibited in the above discourse.
Every reader will relish the dignity, propriety, and sense, of these expressions. They force themselves on the observation of even the most heedless.

By his spirit he hath garnished the heavens.—

Numerous are the opinions relative to the true meaning of this verse. Some think it refers to the clearing of the sky after a storm, such as appears to be described ver. 11, 12, and, suppose his spirit means the wind, which he directs to sweep and cleanse the face of the sky, by which the splendour of the day or the lustre of the night is restored. And by the crooked flying or aerial serpent, (as it is variously rendered) the ecliptic is supposed to be meant, as the sun's apparent course in it appears to be serpentine in his approach to, and recession from, each of the tropics. This tortuous line may be seen on any terrestrial globe. Many will object to this notion as too refined for the time of Job; but this I could easily admit, as astronomy had a very early existence among the Arabians, if not its origin. But with me the chief objection lies against the obscurity of the allusion, if it be one; for it must require no small ingenuity, and almost the spirit of di-vination, to find out the sun's oblique path in the zodiac in the words, His hand hath formed the crooked serpent. Others have imagined that the allusion is to the lightning in that zig-zag form which it assumes, when discharged from one cloud into another, during a thunder storm. This is, at once, a natural and very apparent sense. To conduct and manage the lightning is most certainly a work which requires the skill and omnipotence of God, as much as garnishing the heavens by his spirit, dividing the sea by his power, or causing the pillars of heaven to tremble by his reproof.
Others think that the act of the creation of the solar system is intended to be expressed; which is, in several parts of the Sacred Writings, attributed to the Spirit of God, Gen. i.
2. Psal. xxxiii. 6. And that the crooked serpent means either Satan, who deceived our first parents, or huge aquatic animals, for in Isa.
xxvii. 1. we find the leviathan and dragon of the sea called נחש בריאך nachash bariach, the very terms that are used by Job in this place. In that day the Lord with his sore, and great, and strong sword, shall punish leviathan, the piercing serpent, (נחש בריאך nachash bariach) even leviathan that crooked serpent (נחש בריאך nachash bariach) and he shall slay the dragon (תנין ha-tannin) that is in the sea. And we know that in Gen. i. 21. תנין ha-tannin ha-gefolim, which we translate great whales, includes all sea-monsters, or vast aquatic animals. Calmet who, without hesitation, adopts this sentiment, says, "I see no necessity to have recourse to allegory here. After having exhibited the effects of the sovereign power of God in the heavens, in the clouds, in the vast collection of waters in the sea, it was natural enough for Job to speak of the production of fishes." The intelligent Dr. Sherlock gives another interpretation. After strongly expressing his disapprobation of the opinion that Job should descend, after speaking of the creation of the heavens and their host, to the formation of snakes and adders, he supposes "that Job here intended to oppose that grand religious system of Sabeism which prevailed in his time, and to which, in other parts of this book, he alludes; a system which acknowledged two opposite independent principles by which the universe was governed; and paid divine adoration to the celestial luminaries. Suppose, therefore, Job to be acquainted with the fall of man, and the part ascribed to the serpent of the introduction of evil, see how aptly the parts cohere. In opposition to the idolatrous practice of the time, he asserts God to be the Maker of all the host of heaven. By his spirit he garnished the heavens. In opposition to the false notion of two independent principles, he asserts God to be the Maker of him who was the author of evil, His hand hath formed the crooked serpent; you see how properly the garnishing of the heavens, and the forming of the serpent, are joined together. That this is the ancient traditionary explication of this place we have undeniable evidence from the translation of the Septuagint, who render the latter part of this verse, which relates to the serpent, in this manner:—προσκαμαί δὲ θάνατον θανάτου naosatan, By a decree he destroyed the apostate dragon. The Syriac and Arabic versions are to the same effect: They say, And his hand slew the flying serpent.

"These translators apply the place to the punishment inflicted on the serpent; and it comes to the same thing; for the punishing the serpent is as clear an evidence of God's power over the author of evil, as the creating him. We need not wonder to see so much concern in this book to maintain the supremacy of God, and to guard it against every false notion; for this was the theme, the business, of the author." Bp. Sherlock, on Prophecy, Diss. ii.

From the contradictory opinions on this passage, the reader will no doubt feel cautious what mode of interpretation he adopts, and the absolute necessity of admitting no texts of doubtful interpretation as vouchers for the essential doctrines of Christianity. Neither metaphors, allegories, similes, nor figurative expressions of any kind, should ever be adduced or appealed to as proofs of any article in the Christian faith. We have reason to be thankful that this is at present the general opinion of the most rational divines of all sects and parties; and that the allegory and metaphors are every where vanishing from the horizon of the church. Scriptural Christianity is prevailing with a strong hand, and going forward with a firm and steady step.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXVII.

Verse 1. Continued his parable] After having delivered the preceding discourse, Job appears to have paused to see if any of his friends chose to make any reply: but, finding them all silent, he resumed his discourse, which is here called מְשָׁלוֹ meshalo, his parable, his authoritative weighty discourse; from מַשָּׁל meshal, to exercise rule, authority, dominion, or power. Parkhurst. And it must be granted that, in this speech, he assumes great boldness, exhibits his own unsullied character, and treats his friends with little ceremony.

Verse 2. Who hath taken away my judgment] Who has turned aside my cause, and has not permitted it to come to a hearing, where I might have justice done to me; but has abandoned me to the harsh and uncharitable judgment of my enemies. There appears to be a great want of reverence in these words of Job: he speaks with a degree of irritation, if not bitterness, which cannot be justified. No man should speak thus of his Maker.

Verse 3. All the while my breath is in me] As Job appears to allude to the creation of Adam, whom God made out of the dust of the earth, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, so that he became a living soul, the whole of Job's assertion here may be no more than a periphrasis for, As long as I live and have my understanding. Indeed נִשְׁמַתִּי nishmati, may be rendered, my mind or understanding, and רֹאחַ אֱלֹהִים ruach Eloah, the breath of God, the principle of animal life; that same that he breathed into Adam; for it is there said, Gen. ii. 7. He breathed into his nostrils, נִשְׁמַת חַיִּים nishmat chayim, the breath of lives, or that principle from which animal and spiritual life proceeds; in consequence of which he became לֹא נֶפֶשׁ לֵב-nephesh chayah, an intelligent or rational animal.

Verse 4. My lips shall not speak wickedness] As I have hitherto lived in all good conscience before God, as he knoweth; so will I continue to live.

Verse 5. God forbid] לֹא הִלֵּילָהּ halilah li, far be it from me that I should justify you; that I should now, by any kind of acknowledgment of wickedness or hypocrisy, justify your harsh judgments. You say that God afflicts me for my crimes: I say, and God knows its truth, that I have not sinned so as to draw down any such judgment upon me. Your judgment, therefore, is pronounced at your own risk.

Verse 6. My righteousness I hold fast] I stand firmly on this ground; I have endeavoured to live an upright life, and my afflictions are not the consequence of my sins.

My heart shall not reproach me] I shall take care so to live that I shall have a conscience void of offence before God and man. Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God, 1 John iii. 21. This seems to be Job's meaning.

Verse 7. Let mine enemy be as the wicked] Let my accuser be proved a lying and perjured man, because he has laid to my charge things which he cannot prove, and which are utterly false.

Verse 8. What is the hope of the hypocrite] The word חָנֵף chaneeph, which we translate, most improperly, hypocrite, means a wicked fellow, a defiled, polluted wretch, a rascal, a knave, a man who sticks at nothing in order to gain his ends. In this verse it means a dishonest man, a rogue, who by overreaching, cheating, &c. has amassed a fortune.

When God taketh away his soul] Could he have had any well-grounded hope of eternal blessedness, when he was acquiring earthly property by guilt and deceit? And of what avail will this property be when his soul is summoned before the judgment-seat. A righteous man yields up his soul to God; the wicked does not, because he is afraid of God, of death, and of eternity. God, therefore, takes the soul away, forces it out of the body. Mr. Blair gives us an affecting picture of the death of a wicked man. Though well known, I shall insert it as a striking comment on this passage:—

crité, though he hath gained, when God taketh away his soul?

9 * Will God hear his cry when trouble cometh upon him?

10 † Will he delight himself in the Almighty; will he always call upon God?

11 I will teach you ‡ by the hand of God: that which is with the Almighty will I not conceal.

12 Behold, all ye yourselves have seen it; why then are ye thus altogether vain?

1. 15. Jer. 14. 12. Ezekiel 8. 18. Micah 3. 4. John 9. 31. James 4. 3.—See Chap. 22. 26, 27.—m Or, being in the hand, &c.

How shocking must thy summons be, O death, To him that is at ease in his possessions; Who, counting on long years of pleasure here, Is quite unfurnished for that world to come! In that dread moment, how the frantic soul Raves round the walls of her clay tenement; Runs to each avenue, and shrieks for help, But shrieks in vain! How wishfully she looks On all she's leaving, now no longer hers! A little longer, yet a little longer, Oh, might she stay to wash away her stains, And fit her for her passage! Mournful sight! Her very eyes weep blood; and every groan She heaves is big with horror. But the foe, Like a stanch murderer, steady to his purpose, Pursues her close, through every lane of life: Nor misses once the track, but presses on; Till forc'd at last to the tremendous verge, At once she sinks to everlasting ruin. The Grave.

The Chaldee has:—What can the detractor expect, who has gathered together mammon dishekar, the mammon of unrighteousness, when God plucks out his soul? The Septuagint:—τίς γὰρ ἐστί τις ἐλπίς ἀνθρώπου, οὗ ἐσθλὸς; ἢ οὐκ ἀπὸ ἀσεβειῶν ἐστὶν ἡ ἐλπίς; For what is the hope of the ungodly that he should wait for? shall he, by hoping in the Lord, be, therefore, saved? Mr. Goode translates differently from all the versions:—

Yet what is the hope of the wicked that he should prosper, That God should keep his soul in quiet?

I believe our version gives as true a sense as any; and the words appear to have been in the eye of our Lord, when he said, "For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" Matt. xvi. 26.

Verse 11. I will teach you by the hand of God] Relying on divine assistance, and not speaking out of my own head, or quoting what others have said, I will teach you what the mind of the Almighty is; and I will conceal nothing. Job felt that the good hand of his God was upon him; and that, therefore, he should make no mistake in his doctrines. In this way the Chaldee understood the words בְּיַד אֱלֹהִים el, by the hand of God, which it translates בְּנוֹבַחַת binebuaht Elaha, by the prophecy of God. Those who reject the literal meaning, which conveys a very good sense, may adopt the translation of Mr. Goode, which has much to recommend it:—"I will teach you concerning the dealings of God."

Verse 12. Ye yourselves have seen it] Your own experience and observation have shown you that the righteous are frequently in affliction, and the wicked in affluence.

Why then are ye thus altogether vain? The original is very emphatical: הָבֵל הָבֵל hebel teheballu, and well expressed by Mr. Goode:—“Why then should ye thus babble babbings?” If our language would allow it, we might say vanitize vanity.

Verse 13. This is the portion of a wicked man] Job now commences his promised teaching; and what follows is a description of the lot or portion of the wicked man and of tyrants. And this remuneration shall they have with God in general; though the hand of man be not laid upon them. Though he does not at all times show his displeasure against the wicked, by reducing them to a state of poverty and affliction: yet he often does it, so that men may see it: yet, at other times, he seems to pass them by, reserving their judgment for another world, that men may not forget that there is a day of judgment and perdition for ungodly men, and a future recompense for the righteous.

Verse 14. If his children be multiplied] As numerous families were supposed to be a proof of the benediction of the Almighty, Job shows that this is not always the case; for the offspring of the wicked shall be partly cut off by violent deaths, and partly reduced to great poverty.

Verse 15. Those that remain of him] שְׁרִיט seridav, his remains, whether meaning himself personally, or his family.

Shall be buried in death] Shall come to utter and remediless destruction. Death shall have his full conquest over them, and the grave its complete victory. These are no common dead. All the sting, all the wound, and all the poison, of sin, remains: and so evident are God's judgments in his and their removal, that even widows shall not weep for them: the public shall not bewail him; for, when the wicked perish there is shouting.

Mr. Goode, following the Chaldee, translates: entombed in corruption, or in the pestilence. But I see no reason why we should desert the literal meaning. Entombed in corruption gives no nervous sense, in my judgment; for in corruption are the high and the low, the wicked and the good, entombed: but buried in death, is much more nervous and expressive. Death itself is the place where he shall lie; he shall have no redemption, no resurrection to life. Death shall ever have dominion over him. The expression is very similar to that in Luke xvi. 22, as found in several versions and MSS. The rich man died and was buried in 17 He may prepare it, but the just shall put it on, and the innocent shall divide the silver.

19 The rich man shall lie down, but he shall not be gathered: he openeth his eyes, and he is not.

hell; and lifting up his eyes, being in torment, he saw, &c. See my note there.

Verse 16. Though he heap up silver] Though he amass riches in the greatest abundance, he shall not enjoy them. Unsanctified wealth is a curse to its possessor. Money, of all earthly possessions, is the most dangerous, as it is the readiest agent to do good or evil. He that perverts it is doubly cursed, because it affords him the most immediate means of sinful gratification; and he can sin more in an hour through this, than he can in a day or week by any other kind of property. On the other hand, they who use it aright, have it in their power to do the most prompt and immediate good. Almost every kind of want may be speedily relieved by it. Hence, he who uses it as he ought, is doubly blessed; while he who abuses it is doubly cursed.

Verse 17. The just shall put it on] Money is God's property. “The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord;” and though it may be abused for a time by unrighteous hands, God, in the course of his providence, brings it back to its proper use; and often the righteous possess the inheritance of the wicked.

Verse 18. He buildeth his house as a moth] With great skill, great pains, and great industry; but the structure, however skilful, shall be dissolved; and the materials, however costly, shall be brought to corruption. To its owner it shall be only a temporary habitation, like that which the moth makes in its larve or caterpillar state, during its change from a chrysalis to a winged insect.

As a booth that the keeper maketh] A shed which the watchman, or keeper of a vineyard, erects to cover him from the scorching sun, while watching the ripening grapes, that they may be preserved from depredation. Travelers in the East have observed, that such booths or sheds are made of the lightest and most worthless materials; and, after the harvest or vintage is in, they are quite neglected, and by the winter rains, &c. are soon dissolved and destroyed.

Verse 19. The rich man shall lie down] In the grave.

But he shall not be gathered] Neither have a respectable burial among men, nor be gathered with the righteous in the kingdom of God.

He openeth his eyes] In the morning of the resurrection.

And he is not] He is utterly lost and undone for ever. This seems to be the plain sense of the passage; and so all the versions appear to have understood it; but Reiske and some others, by making ḥayasaph, an Arabic word, signifying, not the idea of gathering, but care, anxiety, &c. have quite altered this sense of the passage: and Mr. Goode, who copies them, translates thus: Let the rich man lie down, and care not. I see no manner of occasion to resort to this interpretation, which, in my judgment, gives a sense inferior to that given above, or to the following: The rich man shall lie down, go to his rest fully persuaded that his property is in perfect safety. But he shall not be gathered, or, he shall not gather, make any farther addition to his stores; he openeth his eyes in the morning, when he is not; marauders in the night have stripped him of all his property, as in the case of Job himself; a case quite probable, and not unfrequent in Arabia, when a hostile tribe makes a sudden incursion, and carries off an immense booty. But I prefer the first meaning, as it is obtained without crucifying the text. Coverdale translates: When the rich man dyeth, he carrieth nothing with him: he is gone in the twinkling of an eye.

Verse 20. Terrors take hold on him as waters] They come upon him as an irresistible flood; and he is overwhelmed as by a tempest in the night, when darkness partly hides his danger, and deprives him of discerning the way to escape.

Verse 21. The east wind carrieth him away] Such as is called by Mr. Goode a levanter, the euroclydon; the eastern storm of Acts xxvii. 14.

Verse 22. God shall cast upon him] Or rather the storm mentioned above shall incessantly pelt him, and give him no respite; nor can he by any means escape from its fury.

Verse 23. Men shall clap their hands at him] These two verses refer to the storm which is to sweep away the ungodly: therefore, the word God in ver. 22. and men in this verse, should be omitted. Ver. 22. "For it shall fall upon him, and not spare: flying from its power, he shall continue to fly. Ver. 23. It shall clap its hands against him, and hiss וַיִּשְׂרוֹק va-yisrok, shriek, him out of his place." Here the storm is personified, and the wicked actor is hissed and driven by it from off the stage. It seems it was an ancient method to clap the hands against and hiss a man from any public office, who had acted improperly in it. The populace, in European countries, express their disapprobation of public characters who have not pleased them in the same manner, to the present day, by hisses, groans, and the like.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXVIII.

Verse 1. Surely there is a vein for the silver] This chapter is the oldest and finest piece of natural history in the world; and gives us very important information on several curious subjects: and could we ascertain the precise meaning of all the original words, we might, most probably, find out allusions to several useful arts which we are apt to think are of modern, or comparatively modern, invention.

The word ḥay mota, which we here translate vein, signifies, literally, a going out, i. e. a mine, or place dug in the earth whence the silver ore is extracted. And this ore lies generally in veins, or loads, running in certain directions.

A place for gold where they fine it] This should rather be translated, A place for gold which they refine. Gold ore has also its peculiar mine, and requires to be refined from earthy impurities.

Verse 2. Iron is taken out of the earth] This most useful metal is hidden under the earth, and men have found out the method of separating it from its ore.

Brass is molten out of the stone.] As brass is a factitious metal, copper must be the meaning of the Hebrew word נְחֹשֶׁת nechushah: literally, the stone is poured out for brass. If we retain the common translation, perhaps the process of making brass may be that to which Job refers; for this metal is formed from copper melted with the stone calamine; and thus the stone is poured out to make brass.

Verse 3. He setteth an end to darkness] As it is likely, Job still refers to mining, the words above may be understood as pointing out the persevering industry of man in penetrating into the bowels of the earth in order to seek for metals and precious stones. Even the stones that lay hidden in the bowels of the earth he has digged for and brought to light: and has penetrated in directions in which the solar light could not be transmitted, so that he appears to have gone to the region of the shadow of death. Mr. Goode translates:—“Man delveth into the region of darkness; and examineth, to the uttermost limit, the stones of darkness and death-shade.”

Verse 4. The flood breaketh out from the inhabitant] This passage is very difficult. Some think it refers to mining: others, to navigation. If it refer to the former, it may be intended to point out the waters that spring up when the miners have sunk down to a considerable depth, so that the mine is drowned, and they are obliged to give it up. Previously to the invention of the steam-engine this was generally the case: hence ancient mines may be reopened, and worked to great advantage; because we have means now to take off the water, which the ancient workers had not. When, therefore, floods break out in those shafts, they are abandoned, and thus they are,

Forgotten of the foot] No man treads there any more. The waters increase ^{וַיִּלְדּוּ} dallu, they are elevated, they rise up to a level with the spring, or till they meet with some fissure by which they can escape; and then ^{וַיִּמְנוּ} me-enosh nau, they are moved or carried away from men, the stream is lost in the bowels of the earth.

Mr. Peters thinks that both this verse, and verse 26. of chap. ix. refer to navigation, then in a state of infancy; for the sea is not so much as mentioned; but ^{נָחַל} nachal, a torrent or flood, some river or arm of the sea, perhaps, of a few leagues over, which, dividing the several nations, must interrupt their hospitality and commerce with each other, unless by the help of navigation. According to this opinion the verse may be translated and paraphrased thus:—*The flood, rivers and arms of the sea, separateth from the stranger, ^{וַיִּפְּרֹק מֵעַם גֵּר} meivak gar, divides different nations and peoples: they are forgotten of the foot, they cannot walk over these waters, they must embark in vessels; then, they dwindle away, ^{וַיִּלְדּוּ} dallu, from the size of men, that is, in proportion to their departure from the land they lessen on the sight; ^{וַיִּנָּח} nau, they are tossed up and down, namely, by the action of the waves. This receives some countenance from the Psalmist's fine description, Psa. cvii. 26, 27. of a ship in rough sea: *They mount up to heaven; they go down again to the depths: their soul is melted because of trouble. They reel to and fro, ^{וַיִּנָּח} yannu (the same word as above) they stagger like a drunken man. Mr. Goode's translation is singular:

He breaketh up the veins from the matrix,
Which, though thought nothing of under the foot,
Are drawn forth, are braided among mankind.

This learned man thinks that it applies solely to mining, of which I cannot doubt; and, therefore, adopt the first interpretation: but as to agreement among translators it will be sought in vain. I shall just add Coverdale: With the rpper of water pattery he a sunder the strange people, that knoweth no good neighbourheade; such as are rude, unmannerly, and boysterous.

Verse 5. The earth, out of it cometh bread] Or the earth, ^{מִמֶּנָּה} mimmennah, from itself, by its own vegetative power, it sends out bread, or the corn of which bread is made.

And under it is turned up as it were fire.] It seems as if this referred to some combustible fossil, similar to our stone coal, which was dug up out of the earth in some places of Arabia. The Chaldee gives a translation conformable to a very ancient opinion which supposed the centre of the earth to be a vast fire, and the place called hell. “The earth from which food proceeds, and under which is gehenna; whose cold snow is converted into the likeness of fire: and the garden of Eden which is the place whose stones are sapphires,” &c. The Vulgate has: The land from which bread has been produced has been destroyed by fire. If this be the meaning of the original, there is probably an allusion to the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah; and the seventh and eighth verses may be supposed to refer to that catastrophe, there being no place left tangible or visible where those cities once stood; neither fowl nor beast could discern a path there, the whole land being covered with the lake Asphaltites.

Verse 6. The stones—the place of sapphires] In the language of mineralogists, the gangue, matrix, or bed in which the sapphire is found. For a description of this stone, see on ver. 16.

Dust of gold] Or rather, gold dust.

Verse 7. There is a path which no fowl knoweth] The instinct of birds is most surprising. They traverse vast forests, &c. in search of food, at a great distance from the place which they have chosen for their general residence; and return in all weathers without ever missing their track; they also find their own nest without ever mistaking another of the same kind for it. Birds of passage also, after tarrying in a foreign clime for six or seven months, return to their original abode over kingdoms and oceans, without missing their way, or deviating in the least from the proper direction; without even a single object of sight to direct their peregrinations. In such cases even the keen scent of the vulture, and the quick-piercing sight of the eagle would be of no use. It is possible that Job may here refer to undiscovered mines and minerals: that notwithstanding man had already discovered much, yet much remained undiscovered, especially in the internal structure and contents of the earth. Since his time innumerable discoveries have been made—and yet how little do we know! Our various conflicting and contradictory theories of the earth are full proofs of our ignorance, and strong evidences of our folly. The present dogmatical systems of geology itself are almost the ne plus ultra of brain-sick visionaries, and system-mad mortals. They talk as confidently of the structure of the globe, and the manner and time in which all was formed, as if they had examined every part from the centre to the circumference; though not a soul of man has ever penetrated two miles in perpendicular depth into the bowels of the earth.

And with this scanty, almost no knowledge, they pretend to build systems of the universe, and blaspheme the revelation of God! Poor souls! All these things are to them a path which no fowl knoweth, which the vulture's eye hath not seen, on which the lion's whelps have not trodden, and by which the fierce lion hath not passed. The wisdom necessary to such investigations is out of their reach; and they have not simplicity of heart to seek it where it may be found.

One of the Chaldee Targums gives a strange turn to this verse:—"The path of the tree of life Sammael, (Satan) though flying like a bird, hath not known; nor hath the eye of Eve beheld it. The children of men have not walked in it; nor hath the serpent turned toward it."

Verse 9. He putteth forth his hand upon the rock] Still there appears to be a reference to mining. Man puts his hand upon the rock; he breaks that to pieces, in order to extract the metals which it contains.

He overturneth the mountains] He excavates, undermines, or digs them away, when in search of the metals contained in them: this is not only poetically, but literally, the case in many instances.

Verse 10. He cutteth out rivers among the rocks] He cuts canals, adits, &c. in the rocks, and drives levels under ground, in order to discover loads or veins of ore. These are often continued a great way under ground; and may be poetically compared to rivers, channels, or canals.

His eye seeth every precious thing] He sinks those shafts, and drives those levels, in order to discover where the precious minerals lie, of which he is in pursuit.

Verse 11. He bindeth the floods] Prevents the risings of springs from drowning the mines; and conducts rivers and streams from their wanted course, in order to bring forth to light what was hidden under their beds. The binding or restraining the water, which, at different depths, annoys the miner, is both difficult and expensive; in some cases it may be drawn off by pipes or canals into neighbouring water courses; in others it is conducted to one receptacle or reservoir, and thence drawn off. In Europe it is generally done by means of steam engines. What method the ancients had in mining countries, we cannot tell: but they dug deep in order to find out the riches of the earth. PLINY says nervously, Imus in viscera terre; et in sede manium opes querimus. "We descend into the bowels of the earth; and seek for wealth even in the abodes of departed spirits." The manes or ghosts of the dead, or spirits presiding over the dead, were supposed to have their habitation in the centre of the earth: or in the deepest pits and caves. OVID, speaking of the degeneracy of men in the iron age, Mel. lib. 1. ver. 137. says:

*Nec tantum segetes alimentaque debita dives Pascebatur humus; sed itum est in viscera terre:
Quasque reconderat, Stygiisque admovent umbris, Effodiuntur opes irritamenta malorum.
Jamque nocens ferrum, ferroque nocentius aurum
Proderat: prodit bellum, quod pugnat utroque;
Sanguineque manu crepitantia concutit arma.*

Nor was the ground alone required to bear Her annual income to the crooked share;
But greedy mortals rummaging her store,
Digg'd from her entrails first the precious ore;
And that alluring ill to sight displayed,
Which next to hell the prudent gods had laid.
Thus cursed steel, and more accursed gold,
Gave mischief birth, and made that mischief bold;
And double death did wretched man invade,
By steel assailed, and by gold betrayed. Dryden.

By binding the floods from overflowing, some have supposed that there is an allusion to the flux and reflux of the sea. In its flowing it is so bound, has its bounds assigned by the Most High, that it does not drown the adjacent country; and in its ebbing the parts which are ordinarily covered with the water are brought to view.

Verse 12. But where shall wisdom be found] It is most evident that the terms wisdom and understanding are used here in a widely different sense from all those arts and sciences which have their relation to man, in his animal and social state; and from all that reason and intellect by which man is distinguished from all other animals. Now as these terms חכמה chokmah, wisdom, and בינה binah, understanding or discernment, are applied often in the Sacred Writings in their common acceptations, we must have recourse to what Job says of them, to know their meaning in this place. In ver. 28. he says, The fear of the Lord is wisdom, and to depart from evil is understanding. We know that the fear of the Lord is often taken for the whole of that religious reverence and holy obedience which God prescribes to and where is the place of understanding?

man in his word, and which man owes to his Maker. Hence the Septuagint render חכמה chokmah, wisdom, by Θεοσεβία, divine worship; and as to a departure from evil, that is necessarily implied in a religious life; but it is here properly distinguished, that no man might suppose that a right faith, and a proper performance of the rites of religious worship, is the whole of religion. No. They must not only worship God in the letter, but also in the spirit; they must not only have the form, but also the power of godliness: and this will lead them to worship God in spirit and truth, to walk in his testimonies, and abstain from every appearance of evil. Hence they will be truly happy; so that wisdom is another word for happiness. Now these are things which man by study and searching could never find out; they are not of an earthly origin. The spirit of a man, human understanding, may know the things of a man, those which concern him in his animal and social state; but the spirit of God alone knows the things of God; and, therefore, wisdom, all true religion, must come by divine revelation, which is the mode of its attainment. Wisdom finds out the thing, and understanding uses and applies the means: and then the great end is obtained.

Verse 13. Man knoweth not the price thereof] It is of infinite value; and is the only science which concerns both worlds. Without it, the wisest man is but a beast: with it, the simplest man is next to an angel.

Neither is it found in the land of the living.] The world by wisdom, its wisdom, never knew God. True religion came by divine revelation: that alone gives the true notion of God, his attributes, ways, designs, judgments, providences, &c., whence man came, what is his duty, his nature, and his end. Literature, science, arts, &c. &c. can only avail man for the present life; nor can they contribute to his true happiness, unless tempered and directed by genuine religion.

Verse 14. The depth saith, It is not in me] Men may dig into the bowels of the earth, and there find gold, silver, and precious stones: but these will not give them true happiness.

The sea saith, It is not with me.] Men may explore foreign countries, and by navigation connect as it were the most distant parts of the earth, and multiply the comforts and luxuries of life: but every voyage and every enjoyment proclaim, true happiness is not here.

Verse 15. It cannot be gotten for gold] Genuine religion and true happiness are not to be acquired by earthly property. Solomon made gold and silver as plenty as the stones in Jerusalem, and had all the delights of the sons of men; and yet he was not happy: yea, he had wisdom, was the wisest of men; but he had not the wisdom of which Job speaks here; and, therefore to him all was vanity and vexation of spirit. If Solomon, as some suppose, were the author of this book, the sentiments expressed here are such as we might expect from this deeply experienced and wise man.

Verse 16. The gold of Ophir] Gold is five times mentioned in this and verses 17 and 19, and four of the times in different words. I shall consider them all at once.

1. סָגוֹר SEGOR, from סָגַר sagar, to shut up. Gold in the mine, or shut up in the ore. Native gold washed by the streams out of the mountains, &c. unwrought gold.

Verse 16. 2. כֶּתֶם KETHEM, from כָּתַם cattham, to sign or stamp; gold made current by being coined, or stamped with its weight and value; what we would call standard or sterling gold.

Verse 17. 3. זָהָב ZAHAB, from זָהַב zahab, to be clear, bright, or resplendent; the untarnishing metal: the only metal that always keeps its lustre. But probably here it means gold chased, or that in which precious stones are set; burnished gold.

4. פָּז PAZ, from פָּזַז paz, to consolidate, joined here with כֵּל keley, vessels, ornaments, instruments, &c. hammered or wrought gold: gold in the finest forms, and most elegant utensils. This metal is, at once, the brightest, most solid, and most precious, of all the metals yet discovered; of which we have now no less than thirty in our catalogues.

In these verses there are also seven kinds of precious stones mentioned: onyx, sapphire, crystal, coral, pearls, rubies, and topaz. These I shall also consider in the order of their occurrence.

Verse 16. 1. שֹׁהַם shoham, the ONYX, from שֹׁהַם shoham, a man's nail, hoof of a horse, because in colour it resembles both. This stone is a species of chalcedony; and consists of alternate layers of white and brown chalcedony, under which it generally ranges. In the Vulgate it is called sardonyx, compounded of sard and onyx. Sard is also a variety of chalcedony, of a deep reddish brown colour; of which, and alternate layers of milk-white chalcedony, the sardonyx consists. A most beautiful block of this mineral sardonyx, from Iceland, now lies before me.

2. סַפִּיר saphir, the SAPPHIRE stone, from סַפִּיר saphir, to count, number; probably from the number of golden spots, with which it is said the sapphire of the ancients abounded. PLINY says, Hist. Nat. lib. xxxvii. cap. 8., Sapphirus aureis punctis collucet: cæruleæ et sapphiri, raræque cum purpurâ: optime apud Medos, nusquam tamen perlicida. "The sapphire glitters with golden spots. Sapphires are sometimes of an azure, never of a purple, colour."

18 No mention shall be made of coral, or of pearls: for the price of wisdom is above rubies.

Or,

Those of Media are the best; but there are none transparent."

What we call the sapphire is a variety of the perfect corundum: it is in hardness inferior only to the diamond. It is of several colours, and from them it has obtained several names. 1. The transparent or translucent is called the white sapphire. 2. The blue is called the oriental sapphire. 3. The violet blue, the oriental amethyst. 4. The yellow, the oriental topaz. 5. The green, the oriental emerald. 6. That with pearly reflections, the opalescent sapphire. 7. When transparent with a pale, reddish, or bluish, reflection, it is called the girasol sapphire. 8. A variety which, when polished, shows a silvery star of six rays in a direction perpendicular to the axis, is called asteria. When the meaning of the Hebrew word is collated with the description given by Pliny, it must be evident that a spotted opaque stone is meant; and, consequently, not what is now known by the name sapphire. I conjecture, therefore, that lapis lazuli, which is of a blue colour, with golden like spots, formed by pyrites of iron, must be intended. The lapis lazuli is that from which the beautiful and unfading colour called ultramarine is obtained.

Verse 17. 3. זְעֻצֻיִּים zecucith, CRYSTAL, or glass, from זָכָח, to be pure, clear, transparent. Crystal or crystal of quartz is a six-sided prism, terminated by six-sided pyramids. It belongs to the siliceous class of minerals: it is exceedingly clear and brilliant, inasmuch that this property of it is become proverbial, as "clear as crystal."

Verse 18. 4. רָמּוֹת ramoth, CORAL, from רָאָם raam, to be exalted or elevated; probably from this remarkable property of coral, "it always grows from the tops of marine rocky caverns with the head downwards." Red coral is found in the Mediterranean, about the isles of Majorca and Minorca, on the African coasts, and in the Ethiopic ocean.

5. גַּבִּישׁ gabish, PEARLS, from גָּבַשׁ gabash, in Arabic, to be smooth, to shave off the hair; and hence גַּבִּישׁ gabish, the pearl, the smooth round substance: and also hail or hailstones, because of their resemblance to pearls. The pearl is the production of a shell-fish of the oyster kind, found chiefly in the East Indies, and called berberis: but pearls are occasionally found in the common oyster, as I have myself observed, and in the muscle also. They are of a brilliant sparkling white, perfectly round in general, and formed of coats in the manner of an onion. Out of one oyster I once took six pearls. When large, fine, and without spots, they are valuable. I have seen one that formed the whole body of a Hindoo idol, Creshnu, more than an inch in length, and valued at 300 guineas.

Verse 18. 6. פִּנִּינִים peninim, RUBIES, from פָּנָה he turned, looked, beheld. The oriental ruby is blood-red, rose-red, or with a tinge of violet. It has occasionally a mixture of blue, and is generally in the form of six-sided prisms. It is a species of the sapphire; and is sometimes chatoyant in its appearance, i. e. has a curious kind of reflection, similar to the cat's eye: and as this is particularly striking, and changes as you turn the stone, hence probably the name peninim, which is derived from פָּנָה panah, to turn, look, behold, &c.

But some learned men are of opinion that the magnet or loadstone is meant; and it is thus called, because of the remarkable property it has of turning north and south. And this notion is rendered the more likely, because it agrees with another word in this verse, expressive of a different property of the magnet, viz. its attractive influence: for the Hebrew words מֶשֶׁע חֲכָמָה מִפִּנִּינִים mesheec chochmah mipeninim, which we render, the price of wisdom is above rubies, is literally, The attraction of wisdom is beyond the peninim, the loadstone: for all the gold, silver, and precious stones, have strong influence on the human heart, attracting all its passions strongly; yet the attraction of wisdom, that which ensures a man's happiness in both worlds, is more powerful and influential, when understood, than all of these, and even the loadstone, for that can only attract iron; but, through desire of the other, a man having separated himself from all those earthly entanglements, seeketh and intermeddleth with all wisdom. The attractive property of the loadstone must have been observed from its first discovery: and there is every reason to believe that the magnet and its virtues were known in the East long before they were discovered in Europe.

7. פִּידָתִי piddath, the TOPAZ. This word occurs only in Exod. xxviii. 17. xxxix. 10. Ezek. xxviii. 13. and in the present place: in all of which (except that of Ezekiel, where the Septuagint is all confusion,) the Septuagint and Vulgate render the word always topazius, τῶπαζις the TOPAZ. This stone is generally found in a prismatic form, sometimes limpid and nearly transparent; or of various shades of yellow, green, blue, lilac, and red.

I have thus given the best account I can of the stones here mentioned, allowing that they answer to the names by which we translate them. But, on this point, there is great uncertainty, as I have already had occasion to observe in other parts of this work. Beasts, birds, plants, metals, precious stones, unguents, different kinds of grain, &c. are certainly mentioned in the Sacred Writings: but whether we know what the different Hebrew terms signify is more than we can certainly affirm. Of some there is little room to doubt; of others conjecture must, in the present state of our knowledge, supply the place of certainty. See PHILIPS' Elementary Introduction to MINERALOGY; an accurate work, which I feel pleasure in recommending to all students in the science.

Verse 19. The topaz of Ethiopia The country called Cush, which we call Ethiopia, is supposed to be that which extends from the eastern coast of the Red sea, and stretches toward Lower Egypt. Diodorus Siculus says, that the topaz was found in great abundance, as his description intimates, in an island in the Red sea, called Ophiodes, or the Isle of Serpents. Hist. lib. iii. p. 121. His account is curious, but I greatly doubt its correctness. It seems too much in the form of a legend: but the reader may consult the place.

Verse 20. Whence then cometh wisdom? Nearly the same words as in ver. 12. where see the note.

Verse 22. Destruction and death say, we have heard the fame thereof אַבְדוֹן וְמוֹת אַבְדוֹן Abaddon va-maveth, the destroyer, and his offspring death. This is the very name that is given to the devil in Greek letters Αβδων, Rev. ix. 11. and it is there rendered by the Greek word Απολλων, Apollyon, a word exactly of the same meaning. No wonder death and the devil are brought in here as saying, they had heard the fame of wisdom, seeing ver. 23. defines it to be, the fear of the Lord, and a departure from evil; things point blank contrary to the interests of Satan, and the extension of the empire of death.

Verse 23. God understandeth the way thereof It can only be taught by a revelation from himself. Instead of אֵינִי הֵבִיין, understandeth, six MSS. have אֵינִי הֵבִיין, disposed or established. This reading is also supported by the Septuagint; 'Ο Θεος εὖ συνεστήσατο αὐτῆς τὴν ὁδόν', 'God hath well established her way'; falsely rendered bene cognovit, hath well known, in the Latin version of the Septuagint in the London Polyglott; but bene constituit, well established, in the Complutensian, Antwerp, and Paris Polyglotts.

Verse 24. For he looketh to the ends of the earth His knowledge is unlimited, and his power infinite.

Verse 25. To make the weight for the winds God has given an atmosphere to the earth, which, possessing a certain degree of gravity perfectly suited to the necessities of all animals, plants, vegetables, and fluids, should be the cause, in his hand, of preserving animal and vegetative life through the creation: for by it the blood circulates in the veins of animals; and the juices in the tubes of vegetables. Without this pressure of the atmosphere, there could be no respiration; and the elasticity of the particles of air included in animal and vegetable bodies, without this superincumbent pressure, would rupture the vessels in which they are contained, and destroy both kinds of life. So exactly is this weight of the winds, or atmospheric air, proportioned to the necessities of the globe, that we find it in the mean neither too light to prevent the undue expansion of animal and vegetable tubes, nor too heavy to compress them so as to prevent due circulation. See at the end of the chapter.

24 For he looketh to the ends of the earth, and ^r seeth under the whole heaven;

25 ^a To make the weight for the winds; and he weigheth the waters by measure.

26 When he ^r made a decree for the rain, and a way for the lightning of the thunder;

sion of animal and vegetable tubes, nor too heavy to compress them so as to prevent due circulation. See at the end of the chapter.

And he weigheth the waters by measure. He has exactly proportioned the aqueous surface of the earth to the terrene parts, so that there shall be an adequate surface to produce, by evaporation, moisture sufficient to be treasured up in the atmosphere for the irrigation of the earth, so that it may produce grass for cattle, and corn for the service of man. It has been found, by a pretty exact calculation, that the aqueous surface of the globe is to the terrene parts as one to three; or, that three-fourths of the surface of the globe is water, and about one-fourth earth. And other experiments on evaporation, or the quantity of vapours which arise from a given space in a given time, show that it requires such a proportion of aqueous surface to afford moisture sufficient for the other proportion of dry land. Thus God has given the waters by measure, as he has given the due proportion of weight to the winds.

Verse 26. When he made a decree for the rain When he determined how that should be generated; viz. By the heat of the sun, evaporation is produced: the particles of vapour, being lighter than the air on the surface, ascend into the atmosphere, till they come to a region where the air is of their own density; there they are formed into thin clouds, and become suspended. When, by the sudden passages of lightning, or by winds strongly agitating these clouds, the particles are driven together and condensed, so as to be weightier than the air in which they float, then they fall down in the form of rain; the drops being greater or less according to the force, or momentum, or suddenness, of the agitation by which they were driven together, as well as to the degree of rarity in the lower regions of the atmosphere through which they fall.

A way for the lightning of the thunder אֵיךְ יֵצֵא הַקוֹל וְהַחֶזֶז וְהַחֶזֶז וְהַחֶזֶז ve-derec le-chaziz koloth. קול, signifies voice of any kind; and koloth is the plural, and is taken for the frequent claps or rattlings of thunder: in chaz, signifies to notch, indented, or serrate, as in the edges of the leaves of trees: חֶזֶז chaziz, must refer to the zig-zag form which lightning assumes in passing from one cloud into another. We are informed that "this is a frequent occurrence in hot countries." Undoubtedly it is; for it is frequent in cold countries also: I have seen this phenomenon in England, in the most distinct manner, for hours together, at a few seconds of interval between each flash. Verse 27. Then did he see it, and declare it]. When he had finished all his creative operations, and tried and proved his work, חָקַר chakarrah, investigated and found it to be very good; then he gave the needful revelation to man: for,

Verse 28. Unto man he said] אֵלֶּיךָ אָדָם le Adam, unto man, he said:—This probably refers to the revelation of his will which God gave to Adam after his fall. He had before sought for wisdom in a forbidden way. When he and Eve saw that the tree was pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise, they took and did eat, Gen. iii. 6. Thus they lost all the wisdom that they had, by not setting the fear of the Lord before their eyes; and became foolish, wicked, and miserable. Hear then what God prescribes as a proper remedy for this dire disease:—The fear of the Lord, that is wisdom: it is thy only wisdom now to set God always before thy eyes, that thou may not again transgress.

Depart from evil is understanding.]—Depart from the evil within thee, and the evil without thee: for thy own evil, and the evil that is now, through thee, brought into the world, will conspire together to sink thee into ruin and destruction. Therefore, let it be thy constant employment to shun and avoid that evil which is every where diffused through the whole moral world by thy offence; and labour to be reconciled to him by righteousness and true holiness, that thou may escape the bitter pains of an eternal death. See the note on verse 12.

From what has been observed on ver. 25, 26. and from the doctrine of the atmosphere in general, I can safely draw the following conclusions:

1. From the gravity and elasticity of the air, we learn that it closely invests the earth, and all bodies upon it, and binds them down with a force equal to 2160 pounds on every square foot. Hence it may properly be termed the bell or girdle of the globe.

2. It prevents the arterial system of animals and plants from being too much distended by the impetus of the circulating juices, or by the elastic power of the air so plenteously contained in the blood, and in the different vessels both of plants and animals.

3. By its gravity it prevents the blood and juices from oozing through the pores of the vessels in which they are contained; which, were it not for this circumstance, would infallibly take place. Persons who ascend high mountains, through a want of a sufficiency of pressure in the atmosphere, become relaxed, and spit blood. Animals under an exhausted receiver swell, vomit, and discharge their faeces.

4. It promotes the mixture of contiguous fluids; for, when the air is extracted from certain mixtures, a separation takes place by which their properties, when in combination, are essentially changed.

5. To this principle we owe winds in general, so essential to navigation, and so necessary to the purification of the atmosphere. The air is put into motion by any alteration of its equilibrium.

6. Vegetation depends entirely on the gravity and elasticity of the air. Various experiments amply prove that plants in vacuo, never grow.

7. Without air there could be no evaporation from the sea and rivers; and, consequently, no rain: nor could the clouds be suspended, so necessary to accumulate and preserve, and afterward to distil, these vapours in the form of dew, rain, snow, and hail, upon the earth.

8. Without air all the charms of vocal and instrumental sounds would become extinct; and even language itself would cease.

9. Without it heat could not be evolved, nor could fire exist: hence a universal rigour would invest the whole compass of created nature.

10. Without air, animal life could never have had a being: hence God created the firmament or atmosphere before any animal was produced. And without its continual influence animal life cannot be preserved; for it would require only a few moments of a total privation of the benefits of the atmosphere to destroy every living creature under the whole heaven.

11. It has been found, by repeated experiments, that a column or rod of quicksilver, about twenty-nine inches and a half high, and one inch in diameter, weighs about fifteen pounds; and such a column is suspended in an exhausted tube by the weight of the atmosphere: hence it necessarily follows, that a column of air, one square inch in diameter, and as high as the atmosphere, weighs about fifteen pounds at a medium. Thus it is evident that the atmosphere presses with the weight of fifteen pounds on every square inch; and, as a square foot contains one hundred and forty-four square inches, every such foot must sustain a weight of incumbent atmospheric air equal to two thousand one hundred and sixty pounds, as has been before stated. And from this it will follow, that a middle-sized man, whose surface is about fifteen square feet, constantly sustains a load of air equal to thirty-two thousand four hundred pounds! But this is so completely counterbalanced by the air pressing equally in all directions, and by the elasticity of the air included in the various cavities of the body, that no person in a pure and healthy state of the atmosphere feels any inconvenience from it; so accurately has God fitted the weight to the winds.

12. Though it may appear more curious than useful; yet from the simple fact which I have completely demonstrated myself by experiment, that the atmosphere presses with the weight of fifteen pounds on every square inch, we can tell the quantum of pressure on the whole globe, and weigh the whole atmosphere to a pound!

The polar and equatorial circumference of the earth is well known. Without, therefore, entering too much into detail, I may state that the surface of the terraqueous globe is known to contain about five thousand, five hundred, and seventy-five BILLIONS of square FEET: hence, allowing fifteen pounds to each square inch, and two thousand, one hundred, and sixty pounds to each square foot, the whole surface must sustain a pressure from the atmosphere equal to twelve TRILLIONS, and forty-two thousand millions of POUNDS! or six thousand and twenty-one BILLIONS of TONS! And this weight is the weight of the whole atmosphere from its contact with every part of the earth's surface to its utmost highest extent!

Experiments also prove that the air presses equally in all directions, whether upwards, downwards, or laterally; hence the earth is not incommoded with the enormous weight, because its zenith and nadir, north and south pressure, being perfectly equal, counterbalance each other! This is also the case with respect to the human body, and to all bodies on the earth's surface.

To make the calculations in the preceding page more satisfactory, it may be necessary to add the following observations:

A bulk of atmospheric air, equal to one quart, when taken near the level of the sea, at a temperature of 50° Fahrenheit, weighs about 16 grains; and the same bulk of rain water, taken at the same temperature, weighs about 14621 grains: hence rain water is about 914 times specifically heavier than air.

I have already shown that the pressure of the atmosphere is equal to about 15lbs. troy, on every square inch; and that this pressure is the same in all directions; and thence shown that on this datum the whole weight of the atmosphere may be computed. I shall restate this from a computation of the earth's surface in square miles, which is recommended to me as peculiarly accurate. A square mile contains 27,878,400 square feet. The earth's surface, in round numbers, is 200,000,000, or two hundred millions of square miles. Now, as from the preceding data it appears that there is a pressure of 19440 pounds troy on every square yard; therefore the pressure or weight of the whole atmosphere, circumsfused round the whole surface of the earth amounts to 12,043,468,800, 000,000,000, or twelve TRILLIONS, forty-three thousand, four hundred and sixty-eight BILLIONS, eight hundred thousand MILLIONS of pounds.

It has been suggested that my computation of 15 square feet for the surface of a middle-sized man is too much; I will, therefore, take it at 14 square feet. From this computation, which is within the measure, it is evident that every such person sustains a weight of air equal, at a medium, to about 30,240lbs. troy, or 24,882½lbs. avoirdupoise, which make 1777 stone, 4lbs. equal to eleven TONS, two HUNDRED and eighteen pounds and a half.

Though we cannot tell to what height the atmosphere extends, the air growing more and more rare as we ascend in it; yet we can ascertain, as above, the quantum of weight in the whole of this atmosphere, which the terraqueous globe sustains equally diffused over its surface, as well as over the surfaces of all bodies existing on it. At first view, however, it is difficult for minds not exercised in matters of philosophy to conceive how such an immense pressure can be borne by animal beings. Though this has been already explained, let the reader farther consider that, as fishes are surrounded by water, and live and move in it (a much denser medium than our atmosphere); so all human beings, and all other animals, are surrounded by air, and live and move in it. A fish taken out of the water will die in a very short time; a human being, or any other animal, taken out of the air, or put in a place whence the air is extracted, will die in a much shorter time. Water gravitates toward the centre of the earth; and so does air. Hence, as a fish is pressed on every side by that fluid, so are all animals on the earth's surface by atmospheric air. And the pressure in both cases, on a given surface, is as has been stated above; the air contained in the vessels and cells of animal bodies, being a sufficient counterpoise to the air without.

Having said thus much on the pressure of the atmosphere, as intimated by Job, the reader will permit me to make the following general reflections, of which he may make that use he may judge best.

It is generally supposed that former times were full of Barbaric ignorance; and that the system of philosophy which is at present in repute, and is established by experiments, is quite a modern discovery. But nothing can be more false than this; as the Bible plainly discovers to an attentive reader that the doctrine of statics, the circulation of the blood, the rotundity of the earth, the motions of the celestial bodies, the process of generation, &c. were all known long before Pythagoras, Archimedes, Copernicus, or Newton were born.

It is very reasonable to suppose that God implanted the first principles of every science in the mind of his first creature; that Adam taught them to his posterity, and that tradition continued them for many generations with their proper improvements. But many of them were lost in consequence of wars, captivities, &c. Latter ages have rediscovered many of them, principally by the direct or indirect aid of the Holy Scriptures; and others of them continue hidden, notwithstanding the accurate and persevering researches of the moderns.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXIX.

Verse 2. Oh that I were as in months past] Job seems here to make an apology for his complaints, by taking a view of his former prosperity, which was very great, but was now entirely at an end. He shows that it was not removed because of any bad use he had made of it; and describes how he behaved himself before God and man; and how much, for justice, benevolence, and mercy, he was esteemed and honoured by the wise and good.

Preserved me] Kept, guarded, and watched over me.

Verse 3. When his candle shined upon my head] Alluding most probably to the custom of illuminating festival or assembly rooms by lamps pendant from the ceiling. *These shone literally on the heads of the guests.

By his light I walked through darkness] His light (prosperity and peace) continued to illuminate my way. If adversity came, I had always the light of God to direct me. Almost all the nations of the world have represented their great men as having a nimbus or divine glory about their heads, which signified not only the honour they had, but was also an emblem of the inspiration of the Almighty.

Verse 4. The days of my youth] The original word rather means in the days of my winter, חרפי charaphi from חרף charaph, to strip, or make bare. Mr. Harmer supposes the rainy season is intended, when the fields, &c. parched up by long drought, are revived by the plentiful showers. Mr. Goode thinks the word, as found in the Arabic, which means top or summit, and which he translates perfection, is that which should be preferred. Others think the autumnal state is meant, when he was loaded with prosperity, as the trees are with ripe fruit.

The secret of God was upon my tabernacle] חסדו אלוהי be-sod eloah, the secret assembly of God, meaning probably the same thing that is spoken of in the beginning of this book, the sons of God, the devout people, presenting themselves before God. It is not unlikely that such a secret assembly of God Job had in his own house; where he tells us, in the next verse, The Almighty was with him, and his children were about him.

Mr. Goode translates differently:—When God fortified my tent over me; supposing that butter, and^g the rock poured^h me out rivers of oil;

7 When I went out to the gate through the city, when I prepared my seat in the street!

8 The young men saw me, and hid themselves; and the aged arose and stood up.

9 The princes refrained talking, andⁱ laid their hand on their mouth.

10^k The nobles held their peace, and their^l tongue cleaved to the roof of their mouth.

11 When the ear heard me, then it blessed me; and when the eye saw the Hebrew סוד sod, is the Arabic سد sud, a barrier or fortification. Either will make a good sense.

Verse 6. Washed my steps with butter] See the note on chap. xx. 17.

Verse 7. When I went out to the gate] Courts of justice were held at the gates or entrances of the cities of the East; and Job, being an emir, was supreme magistrate; and here he speaks of his going to the gate to administer justice.

I prepared my seat in the street] I administered judgment openly, in the most public manner; and none could say that I, in any case, perverted justice. Mr. Goode translates:—“As I went forth the city rejoiced at me, as I took my seat abroad.”

Verse 8. The young men saw me, and hid themselves] From all classes of persons I had the most marked respect. The young, through modesty and bashfulness, shrunk back, and were afraid to meet the eye of their prince: and the aged rose from their seats when I entered the place of judgment. These were the elders of the people, who also sat with the judge, and assisted in all legal cases.

Verse 9. The princes refrained talking] They never ventured an opinion in opposition to mine; so fully were they persuaded of the justice and integrity of my decision.

Verse 10. The nobles held their peace] PRINCES שרים sarim, and NOBLES נגידים negidim, must have been two different classes of the great men of Idumæa. שר sar, PRINCE, director, or ruler, was probably the head of a township; or, what we would call a magistrate of a particular district. נגיד negid, a NOBLE, or one of those who had the privilege of standing before, or in the presence of, the chief ruler. The participle נגיד negid, is repeatedly used to signify before, in the presence of, publicly, openly. And, on this account, it is most likely that the noun means one of those nobles or counsellors, who were always admitted to the royal presence. Mr. Goode thinks that renowned speakers or eminent orators is meant; and others have embraced the same opinion. Job here intimates that his judgment was so sound, his decisions so accredited, and his reasoning powers so great, that every person paid him the utmost deference.

Verse 11. When the ear heard me] This and 14 ^a I put on righteousness, and it clothed me: my judgment was as a robe and a diadem.

the six following verses present us with a fine exhibition of a man full of benevolence and charity, acting up to the highest dictates of those principles, and rendering the miserable of all descriptions happy, by the constant exercise of his unconfined philanthropy.

Verse 12. Because I delivered the poor that cried. This appears to be intended as a refutation of the charges produced by Eliphaz, chap. xxii. 5—10, to confute which Job appeals to facts, and to public testimony.

Verse 15. I was eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame. Alluding probably to the difficulty of travelling in the Arabian deserts. I was eyes to the blind; those who did not know the way, I furnished with guides. I was feet to the lame; those who were worn out, and incapable of walking, I set forward on my camels, &c.

Verse 16. The cause which I knew not I searched out. When any thing difficult occurred I did not give it a slight consideration: I examined it to the bottom, (whatever pain, time, and trouble, it cost me) that I might not pronounce a hasty judgment.

Verse 17. I brake the jaws of the wicked. A metaphor taken from hunting. A beast of prey had entered into the fold, and carried off a sheep. The huntsman comes, assails the wicked beast, breaks his jaws, and delivers the spoil out of his teeth. See the case 1 Sam. xvii. 34—37.

Verse 18. I shall die in my nest. As I endeavoured to live soberly and temperately, fearing God and departing from evil, endeavouring to promote the welfare of all around me, it was natural for me to conclude that I should live long, be very prosperous, and see my posterity multiply as the sand on the seashore.

Verse 19. My root was spread out by the waters. A metaphor taken from a healthy tree growing beside a rivulet where there is plenty of water; which, in consequence, flourishes in all seasons; its leaf does not wither, nor its fruit fade. See Psa. i. 3. Jer. xvii. 8.

Verse 20. My glory was fresh in me. My vegetative power was great; my glory; my splendid blossom, large and mellow fruit, were always in season; and in every season.

My bow was renewed. I was never without means to accomplish all my wishes, I had prosperity every where.

Verse 21. Unto me men gave ear. The same idea as in ver. 9—11.

Verse 22. My speech dropped upon them. It descended as refreshing dew; they were encouraged, comforted, and strengthened, by it.

Verse 23. They waited for me as for the rain. The idea continued. They longed as much to hear me speak, to receive my counsel and my decisions, as the thirsty land does for refreshing showers.

They opened their mouth wide. A metaphor taken from ground chapped with long drought.

The latter rain. The rain that falls a little before harvest, in order to fill and perfect the grain. The former rain is that which falls about seed-time, or in spring, in order to impregnate and swell the seed, and moisten the earth to produce its nourishment.

Verse 24. I laughed on them, they believed it not. Similar to that expression in the Gospel, Luke xxiv. 41. And while they believed not for joy, and wondered, he said.—Our version is sufficiently perspicuous, and gives the true sense of the original; only it should be read in the indicative and not in the subjunctive mood. I laughed on them—they believed it not. We have a similar phrase: The news was too good to be true.

The light of my countenance. This evidence of my benevolence and regard. A smile is, metaphorically, the light of the countenance.

They cast not down. They gave me no occasion to change my sentiments or feelings toward them. I could still smile upon them; and they were then worthy of my approbation. Their change he refers to in the beginning of the next chapter.

Verse 25. I chose out their way, and sat

chief—as a king in the army] I cannot see, with some learned men, that our version of the original is wrong. I have not seen it mended, and I am sure I cannot improve it. The whole verse seems to me to point out Job in his civil, military, and domestic, life.

As supreme magistrate, he chose out their way, adjusted their differences, and sat chief, presiding in all their civil assemblies.

As captain general, he dwelt as a king in the midst of the troops, preserving order and discipline, and seeing that his fellow-soldiers were provided with necessaries for their warfare, and the necessaries of life.

As a man, he did not think himself superior to the meanest offices in domestic life, to relieve or support his fellow-creatures: he went about comforting the mourners, visiting the sick and afflicted, and ministering to their wants. Noble Job! Look at him, ye nobles of the earth, ye lieutenants of counties, ye generals of armies, and ye lords of provinces. Look at JOB! Imitate his active benevolence, and be healthy and happy. Be as guardian angels in your particular districts, blessing all by your example and your bounty. Send your hunting horses to the plough, your game cocks to the dung-hill; and, at last, live like men and Christians!

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXX.

Verse 1. But now they that are younger than I have me in derision.] Compare this with chap. xxix. 8. where he speaks of the respect he had from the youth, while in the days of his prosperity. Now he is no longer affluent; and they are no longer respectful.

Dogs of my flock.] Persons who were not deemed sufficiently respectable to be trusted with the care of those dogs which were the guardians of my flocks. Not confidential enough to be made shepherds, ass-keepers, or camel-drivers, nor even to have the care of the dogs by which the flocks were guarded. This saying is what we call an expression of sovereign contempt.

Verse 2. The strength of their hands profit me] He is speaking here of the fathers of these young men. What was the strength of their hands to me? Their old age also has perished. The sense of which I believe to be this: I have never esteemed their strength even in their most vigorous youth; nor their conduct nor their counsel even in old age. They were never good for any thing either in young or old. As their youth was without profit, so their old age was without honour. See Calmet.

Mr. Goode contends that the words are Arabic, and should be translated according to their meaning in that language, and the first clause of the third verse, joined to the latter clause of the second, without which no good meaning can be elicited, so as to keep properly close to the letter. I shall give the Hebrew text, Mr. Goode's Arabic, and its translation.

The Hebrew text is this:

עלימו אבד כלח
aleymo abad calach

בחסר ובכפן גלמוד be-cheser u-be-caphon galmud

326

The Arabic version this:—

عليهم ابد كالع
بحسر و جوع جلمود

Which he translates thus:

With whom crabbed looks are perpetual,
From hunger and flinty famine.

This translation is very little distant from the import of the present Hebrew text; if it may be called Hebrew, when the principal words are pure Arabic, and the others constructively so.

Verse 3. Fleeing into the wilderness.] Seeking something to sustain life even in the barren desert. This shows the extreme of want, when the desert is supposed to be the only place where any thing to sustain life can possibly be found.

Verse 4. Who cut up mallows by the bushes.] מלוח malnach, which we translate mallows, comes from מלך melech, salt; some herb or shrub of a salt nature, sea-purslane, or the salsaria, salsola, or saltwort. Bochart says it is the αλμας of the Greeks, and the halimus of the Romans. Some translate it nettles. The Syriac and Arabic omit the whole verse. The halimus, or atriplex halimus, grows near the sea in different countries; and is found in Spain, America, England, and Barbary. The salsaria salsola, or saltwort, is an extensive genus of plants, several common to Asia, and not a few indigenous to a dry and sandy soil.

And juniper roots for their meat.] רתם rethamim. This is variously translated juniper, broom, furze, gorze, or whin. It is supposed to derive its name from the toughness of its twigs, as רתם retham signifies to bind: and this answers well enough to the broom. Genista quoque vinculi usum præstat:—The broom serves for bands, says PLINY, Hist. Nat. lib. xxiv. c. 9. But how can it be said that the roots of this shrub were eaten? I do not find any evidence from Asiatic writers that the roots of the juniper-tree were an article of food; and some have supposed, because of this want of evidence, that the word לֶחָמֶם lechamem, for their bread, should be understood thus, to bake their bread, because it is well known that the wood of the juniper gives an intense heat, and the coals of it endure a long time; and therefore, we find coals of juniper, חֲמֵל רֶחֱמִים gacheley rethamin, used Ps. cxx. 4. to express severe and enduring punishment. But that the roots of the juniper were used for food in the northern countries, among the Goths, we have a positive testimony from Olaus Magnus, himself a Goth and archbishop of Upsal, in lib. xii. c. 4. in his Hist. De Gentibus Septentrionalibus. Speaking of the great number of different trees in their woods, he says, "There is a great plenty of beech-trees in all the northern parts, the virtue whereof is this: that being cut between the bark and the wood they send forth a juice that is good for drink. The fruit of them in famine serves for bread, and their bark for clothing. Likewise also the berries of the juniper; yea, even the roots of this tree are eaten for bread, as holy Job testifies, though it is difficult to come at them by reason of their prickles; in these prickles, or thorns, live coals will last a whole year. If the inhabitants do not quench them, when winds arise, they set the woods on fire, and destroy all the circumjacent fields." In this account both the properties of the juniper-tree, referred to by Job and David, are mentioned by the Gothic prelate. They use its berries and roots for food, and its wood for fire.

Verse 5. They were driven forth] They were persons whom nobody would employ; they were driven away from the city; and, if any of them appeared, the hue and cry was immediately raised up against them. The last clause Mr. Goode translates:—"They slunk away from them like a thief," instead of, They cried after them. &c.

Verse 6. To dwell in the cliffs of the valleys] They were obliged to take shelter in the most dangerous, out-of-the-way, and unfrequented places. This is the meaning.

Verse 7. Among the bushes they brayed] They cried out among the bushes, seeking for

Under the nettles] חֲרָלִי charul, the briers or brambles, under the brush-wood in the thickest parts of the underwood; they huddled together like wild beasts.

Verse 8. Children of fools] Children of nabal; children without a name; persons of no consideration, and descendants of such.

Viler than the earth.] Rather, Driven out of the land; persons not fit for civil society.

Verse 9. Now am I their song] I am the subject of their mirth, and serve as a proverb or by-word. They use me with every species of indignity.

Verse 10. They abhor me] What a state must civil society be in when such indignities were permitted to be offered to the aged and afflicted!

Verse 11. Because he hath loosed my cord] Instead of יִיְתְרִי yithri, my cord, which is the keri or marginal reading, יִיְתְרוֹ yithro, his cord, is the reading of the text in many copies; and this reading directs us to a metaphor taken from an archer, who, observing his butt, sets his arrow on the string, draws it to a proper degree of tension; and then, loosing his hold, the arrow flies at the mark. He hath let loose his arrow against me; it has hit me, and I am wounded. The Vulgate understood it in this way:—Pharetram enim suam aperuit. So, also, the Septuagint:—Ἀνοίξας γὰρ φαρετραν αὐτοῦ; he hath opened his quiver.

They have also let loose the bridle] When they perceived that God had afflicted me, they then threw off all restraints; like headstrong horses, swallowed the bit, got the reins on their own neck, and ran off at full speed.

Verse 12. Upon my right hand rise the youth] The word יְרֵחַח pirechach, which we translate youth, signifies properly buds, or the buttons of trees. Mr. Goode has younglings. Youngers would be better were it not too colloquial.

They push away my feet] They trip up my heels, or they in effect trample me under their feet. They rush upon and overwhelm me. They are violently incensed against me. They roll themselves upon me, וְגָלְלוּ bith galgalu, velut unda impellit undam, as waves of the sea which wash the sand from under the feet, and then swamp the man to the bottom, see ver. 14.

my excellence: they endeavour to destroy both my reputation and my property.

Verse 18. Is my garment changed] There seems to be here plain allusions to the effect of his cruel disease: the whole body being enveloped with a kind of elephantine hide formed by innumerable incrustations from the ulcer-ated surface.

seizes me as a strong armed man; it has throttled me, and cast me in the mud. This is probably an allusion to two persons struggling;
the stronger seizes the other by the throat, brings him down, and treads him in the dirt.

Verse 20. I cry unto thee] I am persecuted by man, afflicted with sore disease, and apparently forsaken of God.

I stand up] Or, as some translate: — "I persevere, and thou lookest on upon me." Thou seest my desolate, afflicted state; but thine eye doth not affect thy heart. Thou leavest me unsupported to struggle with my adversities.

Verse 21. Thou art become cruel to me]
Thou appearest to treat me with cruelty. I cry for mercy, trust in thy goodness, and am still permitted to remain under my afflictions.

Thou opposest thyself] Instead of helping, thou opposest me; thou appearest as my enemy.

Verse 22. Thou liftest me up to the wind] Thou hast so completely stripped me of all my substance, that I am like chaff lifted up by the wind; or as a straw, the sport of every breeze:
and at last carried totally away, being dissipated into particles by the continued agitation.

Verse 23. Thou wilt bring me to death] This must be the issue of my present affliction: to God alone it is possible that I should survive it.

To the house appointed for all living.] Or to the house ^{תמו} moad, the rendezvous, the place of general assembly of human beings: the great devourer in whose jaws all that have lived, now live, and shall live, must necessarily meet.

O great man-eater!
Whose every day is carnival; not sated yet!
Unheard of epicure! without a fellow!
The voracious gluttons do not always cram!
Some intervals of abstinence are sought
To edge the appetite: thou seekest none.
Methinks the countless swarms thou hast devour'd,
And thousands that each hour thou gobblest up,
This, less than this, might gorge thee to the full.
But, oh! rapacious still, thou gap'st for more;
Like one, whole days defrauded of his meals,
On whom lank hunger lays her skinny hand,
And whets to keenest eagerness his cravings,
As if diseases, massacres, and poisons, Famine, and war, were not thy caterers. The Grave.

tive to the just translation and true meaning of this verse, is it not evident that it is in the mouth of Job a consolatory reflection? As if he had said, Though I suffer here, I shall not suffer hereafter. Though he add stroke to stroke, so as to destroy my life, yet his displeasure shall not proceed beyond the grave.

Though they cry in his destruction.] Mr. Goode translates:—Surely there, in its ruin, is freedom. In the sepulchre there is freedom from calamity, and rest for the weary.

Verse 25. Did not I weep for him that was in trouble? Mr. Goode translates much nearer the sense of the original ^ו likshah yom. "Should I not then weep for the ruthless day?" May I not lament that my sufferings are only to terminate with my life? Or, did I not mourn for those who suffered by times of calamity?

Was not my soul grieved for the poor? Did I not relieve the distressed according to my power; and did I not sympathize with the sufferer?

Verse 27. My bowels boiled] This alludes to the strong commotion in the bowels which every humane person feels at the sight of one in misery.

Verse 28. I went mourning without the sun] ^{חמ} chammah, which we here translate the sun, comes from a root of the same letters, which signifies to hide, protect, &c. and may be translated, I went mourning without a protector or guardian; or, the word may be derived from ^{חם} cham, to be hot, and here it may signify fury, rage, anger; and thus it was understood by the Vulgate:—Mærens incedebam, sine furore, I went mourning without anger; or, as Calmet translates, Je marchois tout triste, mais sans me laisser aller à l'emportement; "I walked in deep sadness, but did not give way

Verse 30. My skin is black] By continual exposure to the open air, and parching influence of the sun.

My bones are burned with heat.] A strong expression to point out the raging fever that was continually preying upon his vitals.

Verse 31. My harp also is turned to mourning] Instead of the harp, my only music is my own plaintive cries.

And my organ] What the ^{עוגב} uggab we know not; it was most probably some sort of pipe or wind-instrument. His harp ^{קנור} kinnor, and his pipe ^{עוגב} uggab, were equally mute, or only used for mournful ditties.

This chapter is full of the most painful and pathetic sorrow; but nevertheless tempered with a calmness and humiliation of spirit, which did not appear in Job's lamentations previously to the time in which he had that remarkable revelation mentioned in the 19th chapter. After he was assured that his Redeemer was the living God, he submitted to his dispensations, kissed the rod, and mourned not without hope, though in deep distress, occasioned by his unremitting sufferings. If the groaning of Job was great, his stroke was certainly heavy.

CHAPTER XXXI.

Job makes a solemn protestation of his chastity and integrity, 1—12. Of his humanity, 13—16. Of his charity and mercy 17—23. Of his abhorrence of covetousness and idolatry, 24—32. And of his readiness to acknowledge his errors, 33, 34. And wishes for a full investigation of his case, being confident that this would issue in the full manifestation of his innocence, 35—40.

and I am, therefore, bound not to look upon any thing with a delighted or covetous eye, by which my conscience may be defiled, or my God dishonoured.

Why then should I think upon a maid? ומה חשבתי על בתולה u-mah ethbonen al bethulah. And why should I set myself to contemplate (or think upon) Bethulah? That Bethulah may here signify an idol, is very likely. Sanchoniatho observes, that Ouranos first introduced Baithulia when he erected animated stones, or rather, as Bochart observes, ANointed stones, which became representatives of some deity. I suppose that Job purges himself here from this species of idolatry. Probably the Baithulia were at first emblems only of the tabernacle; for idolatry always supposes a pure and holy worship, of which it is the ape. For more on the subject of the Baithulia, see the notes on Gen. xviii.

Verse 2. For what portion of God is there from above? Though neither in this, nor in any other respect, I have wickedly departed from God, yet what reward have I received?

Verse 3. Is not destruction to the wicked? If I had been guilty of such secret hypocritical proceedings, professing faith in the true God, while in eye and heart an idolater, would not such a worker of iniquity be distinguished by a strange and unheard of punishment.

Verse 4. Doth not he see my ways? Can I suppose that I could screen myself from the eye of God, while guilty of such iniquities?

Verse 5. If I have walked with vanity? If I have been guilty of idolatry, or the worshipping of a false god; for thus my shava, which we here translate vanity, is used Jer. xviii. 15. compare with Psa. xxxi. 6. Hos. xii. 11. and Jonah ii. 8. And it seems evident that the whole of Job's discourse here is a vindication of himself from all idolatrous dispositions and practices.

most—for every step of my foot, for every thought of my heart, for every look of mine eye, and for every act of my hands.

Verse 8. Let me sow, and let another eat Let me be plagued both in my circumstances and in my family.

My offspring be rooted out. It has already appeared probable that all Job's children were not destroyed in the fall of the house mentioned chap. i. 18, 19.

Verse 9. If mine heart have been deceived by a woman The Septuagint add, αὐτοῦ ἐρεπον, another man's wife.

Verse 10. Let my wife grind unto another Let her work at the hand-mill, grinding corn; which was the severe work of the meanest slave. In this sense the passage is understood both by the Syriac and Arabic. See Exod. xi. 5. and Isa. xlvii. 2; and see at the end of the chapter.

And let others bow down upon her. Let her be in such a state as to have no command of her own person; her owner disposing of her person as he pleases. In Asiatic countries, slaves were considered so absolutely the property of their owners that they not only served themselves of them in the way of scortation and concubinage, but they were accustomed to accommodate their guests with them! Job is so conscious of his own innocence that he is willing it should be put to the utmost proof; and, if found guilty, that he may be exposed to the most distressing and humiliating punishment: even to that of being deprived of his goods, bereaved of his children, his wife made a slave, and subjected to all indignities in that state.

Verse 11. For this is a heinous crime Mr. Goode translates—

For this would be a premeditated crime,
And a profligacy of the understanding.
See also ver. 28.

That is, it would not only be a sin against the individuals more particularly concerned, but a sin of the first magnitude against society; and one of which the civil magistrate should take particular cognizance, and punish as justice requires.

terer and fornicator waste their substance on the unlawful objects of their impure affections.

Verse 13. The cause of my man-servant] In ancient times slaves had no action at law against their owners; they might dispose of them as they did of their cattle, or any other property.
The slave might complain; and the owner might hear him if he pleased, but he was not compelled to do so. Job states that he had admitted them to all civil rights; and, far from preventing their case from being heard, he was ready to permit them to complain even against himself, if they had a cause of complaint, and to give them all the benefit of the law.

Verse 15. Did not he that made me—make him?] I know that God is the Judge of all;
that all shall appear before him in that state where the king and his subject, the master and his slave, shall be on an equal footing, all civil distinctions being abolished for ever. If then I had treated my slaves with injustice, how could I stand before the judgment-seat of God?
I have treated others as I wish to be treated.

Verse 17. Or have eaten my morsel myself alone] Hospitality was a very prominent virtue among the ancients in almost all nations:
friends and strangers were equally welcome to the board of the affluent. The sapper was their grand meal: it was then that they saw their friends; the business and fatigues of the day being over, they could then enjoy themselves comfortably together. The supper was called cena on this account: or, as Plutarch says, Το μὲν γὰρ δεῖπνον φασι κοῖνα, διὰ τὴν κοινωνίαν καλεῖσθαι καὶ αὐτοὺς γὰρ ἤρισαν ἐπεικέαι οἱ παλαιοὶ Ῥωμαῖοι, συνδεῖπνον οὖν τοῖς φίλοις. The ancient Romans named supper CENA, (κοῖνα) which signifies communion, (κοινωνία), or fellowship; for, although they dined alone, they supped with their friends.
PLUT. Symp. lib. viii. prob. 6. p. 687. But Job speaks here of dividing his bread with the hungry; Or have eaten my morsel myself alone.
And he is a poor despicable caitiff who would eat it alone, while there was another at hand full as hungry as himself.

Verse 18. This is a very difficult verse, and is variously translated. Take the following instances:—

Nam à pueris educavit me commiseratio; jam inde ab utero matris mee illa me deduxit.—Houbigant.

"For commiseration educated me from my childhood;
And she brought me up even from my mother's womb."

This is agreeable to the Vulgate.

"Behold from my youth calamity hath quickened me;
Even from my mother's womb have I distributed it."

This is Mr. Goode's version, and is widely different from the above.

For mercy grew up with me from my youth;
And compassion from my mother's womb.

ΟΤΙ ΕΚ ΝΕΟΤΗΤΟΣ ΜΟΥ ΕΞΕΤΡΕΦΘΗ ΩΣ ΠΑΤΗΡ, ΚΑΙ ΕΚ ΓΑΣΤΡΟΣ ΜΗΤΡΟΣ ΜΟΥ ΩΔΗΓΗΣΑ.—Septuagint. "For from my youth I nourished them as a father:
and I was their guide from my mother's womb."

The Syriac—"For from my childhood he educated me in distresses, and from the womb of my mother in groans." The Arabic is nearly the same.

The general meaning may be gathered from the above; but who can reconcile such discordant translations?

Verse 20. If his loins have not blessed me.
This is a very delicate touch: the part that was cold and shivering is now covered with warm woollen. It feels the comfort; and, by a fine prosopopœia, is represented as blessing him who furnished the clothing.

Verse 21. If I have lifted up my hand against the fatherless] I have at no time oppressed the orphan, nor given in behalf of the rich and powerful a decision against the poor, when I saw my help in the gale; when I was sitting chief on the throne of judgment, and could have done it without being called to account.

There are sentiments very like these in the poem of Lebeid, one of the authors of the Moallakhat. I shall quote several verses from the elegant translation of Sir Wm. Jones, in which the character of a charitable and bountiful chief is well described.

Ver. 73.—Oft have I invited a numerous company to the death of a camel bought for slaughter, to be divided by lot with arrows of

Ver. 80.—He acts with greatness of mind, and nobleness of heart ; he sheds the dew of his liberality on those who need his assistance ;

spoils, the prizes of his valour.

Verse 22. Let mine arm fall] Mr. Goode is at home in the translation of this verse :

" May my shoulder-bone be shivered at the blade,
And mine arm be broken off at the socket."

Let judgment fall particularly on those parts which have either done wrong, or refused to do right when in their power.

Verse 23. Destruction from God was a terror]
I have ever been preserved from outward sin through the fear of God's judgments ; I knew his eye was continually upon me, and I could—

" Never in my Judge's eye, my Judge's anger dare."

Verse 24. Gold my hope] For the meaning of zahab, polished gold, and ketem, stamped gold, see on chap. xxviii. 15—17.

Verse 26. If I beheld the sun when it shined]
In this verse Job clears himself of that idolatrous worship, which was the most ancient and most consistent with reason of any species of idolatry ; viz. Sabeism, the worship of the heavenly bodies ; particularly the Sun and Moon, Jupiter and Venus ; the two latter being the morning and evening stars, and the most resplendent of all the heavenly bodies, the sun and moon excepted.

Job, says Calmel, points out three things

1. The worship of the sun and moon ; much used in his time, and very anciently used in every part of the East : and in all probability that from which idolatry took its rise.

2. The custom of adoring the sun at its rising, and the moon at her change ; a superstition which is mentioned in Ezek. viii. 16.
and in every part of profane antiquity.

3. The custom of kissing the hand ; the form of adoration and token of sovereign respect.

Adoration, or the religious act of kissing the hand, comes to us from the Latin ; ad, to, and os, oris, the mouth. The hand lifted up to the mouth, and there saluted by the lips.

Verse 28. For I should have denied the God that is above.] Had I paid divine adoration to them, I should have thereby denied the God that made them.

Verse 29. If I rejoiced] I did not avenge myself on my enemy ; and I neither bore malice nor hatred to him.

Verse 30. Neither have I suffered my mouth to sin] I have neither spoken evil of him, nor wished evil to him. How few of those called Christians can speak thus concerning their enemies ; or those who have done them any mischief ?

Verse 31. If the men of my tabernacle said]
I believe the Targum gives the best sense here :
" If the men of my tabernacle have not said,
Who hath commanded that we should not be satisfied with his flesh ?" My domestics have had all kindness shown them ; they have lived like my own children, and have been served with the same viands as my family. They have never seen flesh come to my table, when they have been obliged to live on pulse.

Mr. Goode's translation is nearly to the same sense :

" If the men of my tabernacle do not exclaim,
Who hath longed for his meat without fulness ?"

" Where is the man that has not been satisfied with his flesh ?" i. e. fed to the full with provisions from his table. See Prov. xxiii. 20.

family, domestics, and friends. The stranger, he who was to me perfectly unknown, and the traveller who was on his journey to some other district, found my doors ever open to receive them, and was refreshed with my bed and my board.

Verse 33. If I covered my transgressions as Adam] Here is a most evident allusion to the fall: Adam transgressed the commandment of his Maker, and he endeavoured to conceal it; first, by hiding himself among the trees of the garden; "I heard thy voice, and went and hid myself." Secondly, by laying the blame on his wife: "The woman gave me and I did eat." And, thirdly, by charging the whole directly on God himself: "The woman which thou gavest me, to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat." And it is very likely that Job refers immediately to the Mosaic account, in the book of Genesis. The spirit of this saying is this: When I have departed at any time from the path of rectitude, I have been ready to acknowledge my error; and have not sought excuses or palliatives for my sin.

Verse 34. Did I fear a great multitude] Was I ever prevented by the voice of the many from decreeing and executing what was right? When many families or tribes espoused a particular cause, which I found, on examination, to be wrong, did they put me in fear, so as to prevent me from doing justice to the weak and friendless? Or, in any of these cases, was I ever, through fear, self-seeking, or favour, prevented from declaring my mind, or constrained to keep my house, lest I should be obliged to give judgment against my conscience? Mr. Goode thinks it an imprecation upon himself, if he had done any of the evils which he mentions in the preceding verses. He translates thus:

"Then let me be confounded before the assembled multitude, And let the reproach of its families quash me!

Yea, let me be struck dumb! let me never appear abroad."

I am satisfied that the 38th, 39th, and 40th verses should come in either here, or immediately after the 25th; and that Job's words should end with the 37th, which, if the others were inserted in their proper places, would be the 40th. See the reasons at the end of the chapter.

Verse 35. Oh that one would hear me!] I wish to have a fair and full hearing: I am grievously accused; and have no proper opportunity of clearing myself, and establishing my own innocence.

Behold, my desire is] Or, הן הן hen tavi, "There is my pledge." I bind myself, on a great penalty, to come into court and abide the issue.

¹ Exod. 23. 2.—^k Ch. 33. 6.—^m Or, behold my sign is, that the Almighty will answer me.—^m Ch. 13. 22.

The Almighty would answer me] That he would call this case immediately before himself; and oblige my adversary to come into court, to put his accusations into a legal form, that I might have the opportunity of vindicating myself in the presence of a judge who would hear dispassionately my pleadings, and bring the cause to a righteous issue.

And that mine adversary had written a book] That he would not indulge himself in vague accusations, but would draw up a proper bill of indictment, that I might know to what I had to plead, and find the accusation in a tangible form.

Verse 36. Surely I would take it upon my shoulder] I would be contented to stand before the bar as a criminal, bearing upon my shoulder the board to which the accusation is affixed. In a book of Chinese punishments, now before me, containing drawings, representing various criminals brought to trial, in trial, and after trial, charged with different offences; in almost all of them a board appears on which the accusation or crime of which they are accused, or for which they suffer, is fairly written. Where the punishment is capital, this board appears fastened to the instrument, or stuck near the place, of punishment. In one case, a large heavy plank, through which there is a hole to pass the head (or rather a hole fitting the neck, like that in the pillory,) with the crime written upon it, rests on the criminal's shoulders; and this he is obliged to carry about for the weeks or months during which the punishment lasts: It is probable that Job alludes to something of this kind; when he intimates he would bear about with him during the interim between accusation and the issue in judgment; and, far from considering this a disgrace, would clasp it as dearly as he would adjust a crown or diadem to his head; being fully assured from his innocence, and the evidence of it, which would infallibly appear on the trial, that he would have the most honourable acquittal.

Verse 37. I would declare unto him the number of my steps] I would show this adversary the different stations I had been in, and the offices which I had filled in life, that he might trace me through the whole of my civil, military, and domestic life, in order to get evidence against me.

As a prince would I go near] Though carrying my own accusation, I would go into the presence of my judge, as the nagid, נגיד, chief, or sovereign commander and judge of the people and country; and would not shrink from having my conduct investigated by even the meanest of my subjects.

1. Job wishes to be brought to trial, that he might have the opportunity of vindicating himself. O that I might have a hearing !

2. That his adversary, Eliphaz and his companions, whom he considers as one party, and joined together in one, would reduce their vague charges to writing, that they might come before the court in a legal form. O that my adversary would write down the charge !

3. That the Almighty ^א Shaddai, the all-sufficient God, and not man, should be the judge, who would not permit his adversaries to attempt, by false evidence, to establish what was false ; nor suffer himself to cloak with a hypocritical covering what was iniquitous in his conduct. O that the Almighty might answer for me ; take notice of, or be judge in the cause !

4. To him he purposes cheerfully to confess all his ways, who could at once judge if he prevaricated, or concealed the truth.

5. This would give him the strongest encouragement : he would go boldly before him, with the highest persuasion of an honourable acquittal.

Verse 38. If my land cry] The most careless reader may see that the introduction of this and the two following verses here, disturbs the connexion ; and that they are most evidently out of their place. Job seems here to refer to that law, Lev. xxxv. 1—7. by which the Israelites were obliged to give the land rest every seventh year, that the soil might not be too much exhausted by perpetual cultivation, especially in a country which afforded so few advantages to improve the arable ground by manure. He, conscious that he had acted according to this law, states that his land could not cry out against him, nor its furrows complain. He had not broken the law, nor exhausted the soil.

Verse 39. If I have eaten the fruits thereof without money] I have never been that narrow-minded man, who, through a principle of covetousness, exhausts his land, putting himself to no charges, by labour and manure, to strengthen it ; or defrauding those of their wages who were employed under him. If I have eaten the fruits of it, I have cultivated it well to produce those fruits : and this has not been without money, for I have gone to expenses on the soil, and remunerated the labourers.

Or have caused the owners thereof to lose their life] Coverdale translates, For if I have greved any of the plowmen. They have not panted in labour without due recompense.

Verse 40. Let thistles grow instead of wheat] What the word mn choach means, which we translate thistles, we cannot tell : but as mn chach, seems to mean hold, catch as a hook, to hitch, it must signify some kind of hooked thorn, like the brier : and this is possibly its meaning.

In Isa. v. 2. 4. we translate it wild-grapes ; and Bishop Lowth, poisonous berries : but Hasselquist, a pupil of the famous Linnæus, in his voyages, pag. 289, is inclined to believe that the solanum incanum, or hoary nightshade, is meant, as this is common in Egypt, Palestine, and the East. Others are of opinion that it means the aconite, which ^{ביש} beesh, in Arabic denotes : this is a poisonous herb, and grows luxuriantly on the sunny hills among the vineyards ; according to Celsus in Hieroboticon.

^{ביש} Beesh, is not only the name of an Indian poisonous herb, called the napellus mosis, but ^{ביש מוש} beesh moosh, or ^{نارۃ البیض} farut al beesh, is the name of an animal, resembling a mouse, which lives among the roots of this very plant. “May I have a crop of this, instead of barley, if I have acted improperly either by my land or my labourers.”

The words of Job are ended.] That is, his defence of himself against the accusation of his friends, as they are called. He spoke afterward, but never to them : he only addresses God, who came to determine the whole controversy.

These words seem very much like an addition by a later hand. They are wanting in many MSS. of the Vulgate, two in my own possession ; and in the Editio Princeps of this version.

I suppose that at first they were inserted in rubric by some scribe, and afterward taken into the text. In a MS. of my own of the twelfth or thirteenth century, these words stand in rubric, actually detached from the text ; while in another MS. of the fourteenth century they form a part of the text.

In the Hebrew text they are also detached : the hemistichs are complete without them ; nor indeed can they be incorporated with them. They appear to me an addition of no authority. In the first edition of our Bible, that by Coverdale, 1535, there is a white line between these words and the conclusion of the chapter ; and they stand, forming no part of the text, thus :

Here ende the wordes of Job.

Just as we say, in reading the Scriptures, Here ends such a chapter : or Here ends the first lesson, &c.

On the subject of the transposition, mentioned above, I have referred to the reasons at the end of the chapter.

Dr. Kennicott, on this subject, observes, chapters xxix. xxx. and xxxi. contain Job's animated self-defence, which was made necessary by the reiterated accusations of his friends. This defence now concludes with six lines (in the Hebrew Text) which declare, that if he had enjoyed his estates covetously, or procured them unjustly, he wished them to prove barren and unprofitable. This part, therefore, seems naturally to follow ver. 25. where he speaks of his gold, and how much his hand had gotten. The remainder of the chapter will then consist of these four regular parts, viz.

Elihu's disapprobation both CHAP. XXXII. of Job and his three friends.

1. His piety to God, in his freedom from idolatry, ver. 26—28.

2. His benevolence to men, in his charity both of temper and behaviour, 29—32.

3. His solemn assurance that he did not conceal his guilt, from fearing either the violence of the poor, or the contempt of the rich, ver. 33, 34.

4. (Which must have been the last article, because conclusive of the work) he infers that being thus secured by his integrity he may appeal safely to God himself. This appeal he, therefore, makes boldly: and in such words as, when rightly translated, form an image, which, perhaps, has no parallel. For where is there an image so magnificent or so splendid as this? Job thus conscious of innocence, wishing even God himself to draw up his indictment, [rather his adversary Eliphaz and companions to draw up this indictment, the Almighty to be Judge,] that very indictment he would bind round his head; and with that indictment, as his crown of glory, he would, with the dignity of a prince, advance to his trial! Of this wonderful passage I add a version more just and more intelligible than the present:

Ver. 35. "O that one would grant me a hearing! Behold my desire is that the Almighty would answer me; And, as plaintiff against me, draw up the indictment. With what earnestness would I take it on my shoulders! I would bind it upon me as a diadem. The number of my steps would I set forth unto him! Even as a prince would I approach before him!"

I have already shown that Eliphaz and his companions, not God, are the adversary or plaintiff of whom Job speaks. This view makes the whole clear and consistent, and saves Job from the charge of presumptuous rashness. See also Kennicott's Remarks, p. 163.

It would not be right to say that no other interpretation has been given of the first clause of ver. 10. than that given above. The manner in which Coverdale has translated the 9th and 10th verses is the way in which they are generally understood:—If my heart hath lusted after my neighbour's wife, or if I have laped away at his dore; O then let my wife be another man's harlot, and let other lye with her.

In this sense the word grind is not unfrequently used by the ancients. Horace represents the Divine Cato commending the young men whom he saw frequenting the stews, because they left other men's wives undefiled!

*Virtute esto, inquit sententia Dia Catonis Nam simul ac venas inflavit tetra libido
Huc juvenes æquum est descendere, non alienas Fermolere uxores. Sat. lib. 1. s. 2. ver. 32.*

When awful Cato saw a noted spark
From a night collar stealing in the dark:
Well done, my friend, if lust thy heart inflame,
Indulge it here, and spare the married dame.

Francis.

Such were the morals of the holiest state of heathen Rome, and even of Cato, the purest and severest censor of the public manners! O tempora! O mores!

I may add from a scholiast:—Molere vetus verbum est pro adulterare, subagitare, quo verbo in deponenti significatione utitur alibi, Ausonius iniquis, Epigr. 7. ver. 6. de crispa impudica et detestabili:

*Deglubit, fellat, mollitur, per utranque cavernam.
Qui enim coit, quasi molere et terere videtur.*

Hinc etiam molitores dicti sunt, subactores, ut apud eundem, Epigr. xc. ver. 3.

Cum dabit uxori molitor tuus, et tibi adulter.

Thus the rabbins understand what is spoken of Samson grinding in the prison-house; quod ad ipsum Palestini certatim suas uxores adduxerunt, suscipiendæ ex eo prolis, causa ob ipsius robur.

In this sense St. Jerom understands Lam. v. 13. They took the young men to grind. Adolescentibus ad impudicitiam sunt abusi, ad concubitum, scilicet, nefandum. Concerning grinding of corn, by portable mill-stones or querns; and that this was the work of females alone, and they the meanest slaves; see the note on Exod. xi. 5. and on Judg. xvi. 21.

The Greeks use μύλλας to signify a harlot; and μύλλα, to grind, and also coeo, inco, in the same sense in which Horace, as quoted above, alienas FERMOLERE uxores.

So Theocritus, Idyll. iv. ver. 53.

*Εἶπα γὰρ μοι Κορυδαῖν, τὸ γερουσιον ἢ ἔτι μύλλαι
Τῆναν τὰν κυανοθρὺν ἐροῦν ἔδα, τὰς ποτ' ἐκυσθῆ;*

*Dic age mihi, Corydon, senectio ille num. adhuc mollit
Illi nigro supercilio scortillum quod olim deperibat?*

Hence the Greek paranomasia, μύλλαδ' αμύλλειν, scortam molere. I need make no apology for leaving the principal part of this note in a foreign tongue. To those for whom it is designed it will be sufficiently plain. If the above were Job's meaning, how dreadful is the wish, or imprecation in verse the tenth!

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXII.

Verse 1. These three men ceased to answer Job] They supposed that it was of no use to attempt to reason any longer with a man who justified himself before God. The truth is, they failed to convince Job of any point, because they argued from false principles: and, as we have seen, Job had the continual advantage of them. There were points on which he might have been successfully assailed; but they

3 Also against his three friends was his wrath kindled, because they had found no answer; and yet had condemned Job.

4 Now Elihu had ^ewaited till Job had spoken, because they were ^felder than he.

5 When Elihu saw that there was no answer in the mouth of these three men, did not know them. Elihu, better acquainted both with human nature and the nature of the divine law, and of God's moral government of the world, steps in, and makes the proper discriminations; acquits Job on the ground of their accusations; but condemns him for his too great self-confidence, and his trusting too much in his external righteousness; and without duly considering his frailty and imperfections, his incautiously arraigning the providence of God of unkindness in its dealings with him. This was the point on which Job was particularly vulnerable; and which Elihu very properly clears up.

Because he was righteous in his own eyes.] The Septuagint, Syriac, Arabic, and Chaldee all read, "Because he was righteous in their eyes;" intimating, that they were now convinced that he was a holy man, and that they had charged him foolishly. The reading of these ancient versions is supported by a MS. of the thirteenth century in Dr. Kennicott's collections; which instead of בְּעֵינָיו be-einaiv, in his eyes, has בְּעֵינֵיהֶם be-eineyhem, in their eyes. This is a reading of considerable importance, but it is not noticed by De Rossi. Symmachus translates nearly in the same way: Δια τον αυτον δικαιον φαινεσθαι εν αυταις; Because he appeared more righteous than themselves.

Verse 2. Then was kindled the wrath] This means no more than that Elihu was greatly excited, and felt a strong and zealous desire to vindicate the justice and providence of God, against the aspersions of Job and his friends.

Elihu, the son of Barachel the Buzite] Buz was the second son of Nabor, the brother of Abram, Gen. xx. 21.

Of the kindred of Ram] Kemuel was the third son of Nabor; and is called in Genesis, (see above,) the father of Aram, which is the same as Ram. A city of the name of Buz is found in Jer. xxv. 23. which probably had its name from this family; and, as it is mentioned with Dedan and Tema, we know it must have been a city in Idumea, as the others were in that district. Instead of the kindred of Ram, the Chaldee has of the kindred of Abraham. But still the question has been asked, Who was Elihu?—I answer, He was "the son of Barachel the Buzite, of the kindred of Ram;" this is all we know of him. But this Scriptural answer will not satisfy those who are determined to find out mysteries where there are none. Some make him a descendant of Judah:

then his wrath was kindled.

6 And Elihu the son of Barachel the Buzite answered and said, I am ^gyoung, ^hand ye are very old; wherefore I was afraid, and ⁱdurst not show you mine opinion.

7 I said, Days should speak, and multitude of tears should teach wisdom.

8 But there is a spirit in man; and ^kthe inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding.

^g feared.—^h 1 Kings 3. 12. & 4. 29. Ch. 35. 11. & 38. 36. Prov. 2. 6. Eccles. 2. 26. Dan. 1. 17. & 2. 21. Matt. 14. 25. Jas. 1. 5.

St. Jerom, Bede, Lyranus, and some of the rabbins, make him Balaam the son of Beor the magician; Bishop Warburton makes him Ezra the scribe; and Dr. Hodges makes him the second person in the glorious Trinity, the Lord Jesus Christ, and supposes that the chief scope of this part of the book was to convict Job of self-righteousness, and to show the necessity of the doctrine of justification by faith! When these points are proved, they should be credited.

Because he justified himself rather than God.] Literally, he justified his soul, נִפְשׁוֹ naphsho, before God. He defended not only the whole of his conduct, but also his motives, thoughts, &c.

Verse 3. They had found no answer] They had condemned Job; and yet could not answer his arguments on the general subject, and in vindication of himself.

Verse 6. I am young] How young he was, or how old they were, we cannot tell; but there was no doubt a great disparity in their ages; and among the Asiatics the youth never spoke in the presence of the elders, especially on any subject of controversy.

Verse 7. Days should speak] That is, men are to be reputed wise and experienced in proportion to the time they have lived. The Easterns were remarkable for treasuring up wise sayings; indeed the principal part of their boasted wisdom consisted in proverbs and maxims on different subjects.

Verse 8. But there is a spirit in man] Mr. Goode translates:

"But surely there is an affluence in mankind, And the inspiration of the Almighty actuateth them."

Coverdale thus:

Every man (no doute) hath a mynde; but it is the inspiration of the Allmightie that gebereth understanding.

I will now show my own opinion; and first give the original text: רוח היא באנוש תשכח שרי רוח הוא ruach *h*ia beenosh, ve-nishmat shaddai tebinem. "The spirit itself is in miserable man, and the breath of the Almighty causeth them to understand." How true is it that in God we live, move, and have our being! The spirit itself is in man as the spring or fountain of his apimal existence; and, by the affluence of this spirit they become capable of understanding and reason, and consequently discerning divine truth. The animal and intellectual lives are here stated to be from God; and this appears to be an allusion to man's creation, Gen. ii. 7. "And God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of lives," נִשְׁמַת חַיִּים nishmat chayim, i. e.

9 ¹ Great men are not always wise; neither do they aged understand judgment.

10 Therefore I said, Hearken to me; I also will show mine opinion.

11 Behold, I waited for your words; I gave ear to your ^m reasons, while ye searched out ^a what to say.

animal and intellectual; and thus he became a living soul. נפש חיה nephesh chayyah, a rational animal.

When man fell from God, the Spirit of God was grieved, and departed from him; but was restored as the enlightener and corrector, in virtue of the purposed incarnation and atonement of our Lord Jesus: hence, he is the true light that lighteneth every man that cometh into the world. John i. 9. That afflatus is therefore still continued to נוש enosh, man in his wretched fallen state; and it is by that Spirit, the רוח Ruah Elohim, "the Spirit of the merciful or covenant God," that we have any conscience, knowledge of good and evil, judgment in divine things, and, in a word, capability of being saved. And when, through the light of that Spirit, convincing of sin, righteousness, and judgment, the sinner turns to God through Christ, and finds redemption in his blood, the remission of sins; then it is the office of that same Spirit to give him understanding of the great work that has been done in and for him; for the Spirit itself (αὐτο το πνευμα, Rom. viii. 16. the same words in Greek as the Hebrew רוח ruah hia, of Elihu), beareth witness with his spirit that he is a child of God." It is the same Spirit which sanctifies, the same Spirit that seals, and the same Spirit that lives and works in the believer, guiding him by its counsel, till it leads him into glory. In this one saying, independently of the above paraphrase, Elihu spoke more sense and sound doctrine than all Job's friends did in the whole of the controversy.

Verse 9. Great men are not always wise] This is a true saying, which the experience of every age, and every country, increasingly verifies. And it is most certain that, in the case before us, the aged did not understand judgment; they had a great many wise and good sayings, which they had collected, but showed neither wisdom nor discretion in applying them.

Verse 11. I waited for your words; I gave ear to your reasons] Instead of תבניתעם tebuniteyem, your reasons, תענותים tecunoteyem, your arguments, is the reading of nine of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. The sense, however, is nearly the same.

searching up and down for words. A fine irony, which they must have felt.

Verse 12. Yea, I attended unto you] Instead of ויעינם ve-adeem, and unto you, one MS. reads the above letters with points, which cause it to signify, And your testimonies; which is the reading of the Syriac, Arabic, and Septuagint.

Behold, there was none of you that convinced Job] Confuted Job. They spoke multitudes of words, but were unable to overthrow his arguments.

Verse 13. We have found out wisdom] We, by dint of our own wisdom and understanding, have found out the true system of God's providence; and have been able to account for all the sufferings and tribulations of Job. Had they been able to confute Job, they would have triumphed over him in their own self-sufficiency.

God thrusteth him down, not man.] This is no accidental thing that has happened to him: he is suffering under the just judgments of God, and therefore he must be the wicked man which we supposed him to be.

Verse 14. He hath not directed] I am no party in this controversy; I have no party feeling in it: he has not spoken a word against me, therefore I have no cause of irritation. I shall speak for truth, not for conquest or revenge. Neither will I answer him with your speeches; your passions have been inflamed by contradiction, and you have spoken foolishly with your lips.

Verse 15. They were amazed] Mr. Goode translates, "They (the speeches) are dissipated; they no longer produce effect: the words have flitted away from them." Your words being without proper reference and point, are scattered into thin air: there is nothing but sound in them; they are quite destitute of sense. But I prefer the words as spoken of Job's friends. They took their several parts in the controversy as long as they could hope to maintain their ground: for a considerable time they had been able to bring nothing new; at last, weary of their own repetitions, they gave up the contest.

Verse 16. When I had waited] I waited to hear if they had any thing to reply to Job; and, when I found them in effect speechless, then I ventured to come forward.

אֶחָד a-neh cheleki, "I will recite my portion." We have already seen that the Book of Job is a sort of drama, in which several persons have their different parts to recite. Probably the book was used in this way, in ancient times, for the sake of public instruction. Eliphaz, Zophar, and Bildad, had recited their parts; and Job had responded to each: nothing was brought to issue. Elihu, a by-stander, perceiving this, comes forward and takes a part, when all the rest had expended their materials: yet, Elihu, though he spoke well, was incapable of closing the controversy; and God himself appears, and decides the case.

Verse 18. I am full of matter] מלֵּם millim, "I am full of words," or sayings; i. e. wise sentences, and ancient opinions.

The spirit within me constraineth me.] How similar to the words of St. Paul, The love of Christ constraineth us. Elihu considered himself under the influence of that spirit of God, which gives understanding, and felt anxiously concerned for the welfare both of Job and his friends.

Verse 19. My belly is as wine which hath no vent] New wine in the state of effervescence.

Like new bottles.] Bottles, or rather bags, made of goat-skins. The head and shanks being cut off, the animal is cased out of the skin. The skin is then properly dressed; the anus and four shank holes properly tied up; and an aperture left at the neck, or in some other place, for the liquor to be poured in, and drawn out. One of these now lies before me, well tanned and beautifully ornamented, and capable of holding many gallons. They are used not only to carry wine and water, but for butter, and also for various dry goods. I have mentioned this in another place. When the wine is in a state of fermentation, and the skin has no vent, these bottles or bags are ready to burst; and if they be old, the new wine destroys them, breaks the old stitching, or rends the old skin. Our Lord makes use of the same figure, Matt. ix. 17. where see the note.

Verse 20. I will open my lips, and answer.] In the preceding verse Elihu compares himself to a skin-bottle, in which the wine was in a state of fermentation, and the bottle ready to burst for want of vent. He carries on the metaphor in this verse: the bottle must be opened to save it from bursting; I will open my mouth.

Verse 21. Let me not—accept any man's person] I will speak the truth without fear or favour.

Neither let me give flattering titles] I will not give epithets to any man, that are not descriptive of his true state. I will not beguile him by telling him he is what he is not. עֲנֵנִי ecanneh, from עָנָה canah, is generally supposed to signify to surname, to put a name to, or upon name, as the French word surnom implies. It means to give proud titles to persons who are worthless. It is well known that the Arabs make court to their superiors, by carefully avoiding to address them by their proper names; instead of which they salute them with some title or epithet expressive of respect. SCOTT. See below. Titles, expressive of office, ecclesiastical, civil, or military, are always proper, and never forbidden; because they serve for distinction: but the Asiatic titles are in general bombastically and infinitely complimentary. The reader will find several specimens at the end of this chapter.

Verse 22. My Maker would soon take me away.] Were I to copy this conduct while under the influence which I now feel, God might justly consume me as in a moment. He is my Maker; he made me to know truth, to tell truth, and to live according to truth; for he is the God of truth. I shall, therefore, through his help, speak the truth; the whole truth; and nothing but the truth.

We find from the above that vain titles of ceremony expressive of the most eminent qualities, were given to worthless men, from time immemorial; and no wonder, for hypocrisy entered into man at the same time that sin entered into the world.

Of the flattering titles, used in the East, I shall give a few specimens ^{قواعد السلطنة شاه جهان} Kooyid us Sullanel SHAH JEHAN, or, "The Rules observed during the Reign of the Mogul Emperor Shah Jehan."

Speaking of the emperor, he is entitled,—
"The SUN which illuminates the firmament in the universe of royalty and dominion; the MOON which irradiates the sky of monarchy and felicity; the KING who in pomp resembles Gem-sheed. His hand is boundless as the ocean, in bestowing bounties, being the KEY of the gates of kindness and liberality!"

Again:—

"The SUN of the Heavén of Prosperity and Empire, the Shadow of God, the Asylum of the Universe, the splendour of whose instructive front causes light and gladness to the world and to mankind."

"The just and vigilant Monarch; The Asylum of Truth, the Refuge of the World; the Diffuser of Light, the Solver of all human Difficulties."

"The Lord of the Age, who is endowed with such perfect excellence, both in internal and external qualifications, that on all occasions he holds fast the thread of good counsel, prudence, and purity of morals."

"The faculty of apprehension is possessed by him in such a degree, that before the matter has scarcely obtained utterance, he compre-hends the purport, and gives answers with the tongue of inspiration."

Addresses to persons of distinction.

"Let them convey to the presence of glorious empire, the Sultan, in pomp like Solomon, the centre of the universe, powerful as heaven."

"Let them who kiss the carpet of the palace, in pomp like heaven, convey this letter to his majesty, whose sight is as creative as alchymy, king of kings, the asylum of the world."

"To the exalted presence, which gratifies the desires of all people, the most beneficent of the age, the vizier, protector of the universe, may the Almighty perpetuate his good fortune!"

"May this letter be dignified in the presence of Naweeb, Saheb, diffuser of benefits, of exalted pomp, the respectable, the discriminator of ranks; may his power increase!"

"Let them convey this to the perusal of his excellency; conversant in realities and mysteries; the support of excellencies; the cream of his contemporaries; and the cherisher of the poor!"

These are a specimen of the flattering titles given in the East to persons in eminent stations. Their kings they clothe in all the attributes of the Deity, when both in their private and public character they are corrupt and unholy, rascals in grain, and the ruthless oppressors of suffering humanity.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Elihu offers himself in God's stead to reason with Job in meekness and sincerity, 1—7. Charges Job with irreverent expressions, 8—12. Vindicates the providence of God, and shows the various methods which he uses to bring sinners to himself, by dreams and visions, 13—15. By secret inspirations, 16—18. By afflictions, 19—22. By messengers of righteousness, 23. And by the great atonement, 24. How and from what God redeems men, and the blessings which he communicates, 25—30. Job is exhorted to listen attentively to Elihu's teaching, 31—33.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXIII.

Verse 3. My words shall be of the uprightness] As God has given me his spirit, from that spirit alone will I speak; therefore, all my words shall be of uprightness, knowledge, and truth.

Knowledge clearly.] דַּאֵת בָּרַר daat barur, pure science. I shall lay down no false positions, and I shall have no false consequences.

Verse 4. The spirit of God hath made me] Another plain allusion to the account of the creation of man, Gen. ii. 7. as the words נִשְׁמַת הַיְיָ nishmat, the breath or breathing of God, and תְּחַיֵּינִי techaiyeni, hath given me life, prove: "He breathed into his nostrils the breath of lives, and he became a living soul."

Verse 6. I am according to thy wish in God's stead: I also am formed out of the clay.] Mr. Goode, and before him none other that I have seen, has, most probably, hit the true meaning:

Behold, I am thy fellow.

I too was formed by God out of the clay.

The word נִכְרַח kepica, which we translate according to thy wish; and which, if Hebrew, would mean, like to thy mouth; he considers as pure Arabic, (with a Hebrew postfix) كفو كفو, signifying fellow, equal, like. Taken in this way, the passage is very plain; only לֹא le-el, by or through God, must be added to the last clause of the verse, instead of the first, as Mr. Goode has properly done.

Verse 7. My terror shall not make thee afraid] This is an allusion to what Job had said, chap. ix. 34. Let him take his rod away from me, and let not his fear terrify me. Being thy equal, no fear can impose upon thee so far as to overawe thee; so that thou shouldest not be able to conduct thy own defence. We are on equal terms; now prepare to defend thyself.

Verse 8. Surely thou hast spoken] What Elihu speaks here, and in the three following verses, contains, in general, simple quotations from Job's own words, or the obvious sense of them; as the reader may see by referring to the margin, and also to the notes on those passages.

Verse 11. He putteth my feet in the stocks] See the note on chap. xiii. 27.

thou hast not been able to justify those charges. And were there nothing else against thee, these irreverent speeches are so many proofs that thou art not clear in the sight of God.

Verse 13. Why dost thou strive against him? Is it not useless to contend with God? Can he do any thing that is not right? As to his giving thee any account of the reasons why he deals thus and thus with thee or any one else, thou needest not expect them: he is Sovereign, and is not to be called to the bar of his creatures. It is sufficient for thee to know that "he is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind."

Verse 14. For God speaketh once] Yet, though he will not be summoned to the bar of his creatures, nor condescend to detail the reasons of his conduct, which they could not comprehend; yet he acts so in the main; that the operation of his hand, and the designs of his counsel, may sufficiently appear, provided men had their eyes open upon his ways, and their hearts open to receive his influence.

Elihu having made the general statement that God would not come to the bar of his creatures to give account of his conduct, shows the general means which he uses to bring men to acquaintance with themselves, and with him; which he states in the six following particulars, which may be collected from verses 15 to 24.

Verse 15. I.—In a dream—when deep sleep falleth upon men] Many, by such means, have had the most salutary warnings: and to decry all such, because there are many vain dreams, would be nearly as much wisdom as to deny the Bible, because there are many foolish books, the authors of which supposed they were under a divine influence while composing them.

II.—In a vision of the night—in slumberings upon the bed] Visions, or images presented to the imagination, during slumber, when men are between sleeping and waking; or, when awake, and in bed, they are wrapt up in deep contemplation, the darkness of the night having shut out all objects from their sight, so that the mind is not diverted by images of earthly things impressed on the senses. Many warnings in this way have come from God: and the impression they made, and the good effect produced, were the proofs of their divine origin. To deny this would be to call into doubt the testimony of the best, wisest, and holiest men in all ages of the church. Of one of these visions we have a remarkable account in chap. iv. of this book, verses 12—21. And this vision seems to have taken place in the night season, when Eliphaz awoke from a deep sleep. There is this difference between the accidents of the dream and the vision: the former takes place when deep sleep falleth upon men; the latter, in the night, in or after slumberings upon the bed.

Verse 16. Then he openeth the ears of men, and sealeth, &c.] III.—By secret inspirations. A dream or a vision, simply considered, is likely to do no good; it is the opening of the understanding, and the pouring in of the light, that make men wise to salvation. Serious alarms, holy purposes, penitential pangs for past sins, apprehension of death and judgment, discoveries of God's justice, of Christ's love, of the world's vanity, of heaven's excellence, &c. &c. &c. are often used by the divine spirit to withdraw men from their evil purpose, and to hide pride from man, ver. 17. And of all these openings of the ear of the heart, and sealing instructions upon the conscience, we have numerous examples in the history of the church, in the experience of good men, and even in the civil and providential history of all nations.

Verse 18. He keepeth back his soul from the pit] By the above means, how many have been snatched from an untimely death. By taking the warning thus given, some have been prevented from perishing by the pit, some sudden accident; and others from the sword of the assassin, or nocturnal murderer. It would be easy to give examples, numerous examples, in all these kinds: but the knowledge of the reader may save this trouble to the commentator.

Verse 19. He is chastened also with pain upon his bed, &c.] IV.—AFFLICTIONS, are a fourth means which God makes use of to awaken and convert sinners. In the hand of God these were the cause of the salvation of David, as himself testifies: Before I was afflicted I went astray, Psa. cxix. 67, 71, 75.

The multitude of his bones] By such diseases, especially those of a rheumatic kind, when to the patient's apprehension every bone is diseased, broken, or out of joint.

Some render the passage, When the multitude of his bones is yet strong; meaning those sudden afflictions which fall upon men when in a state of great firmness and vigour. The original וְרוּב צְרוּרֵי עֲצָתוֹ ve-rob atsomav etan may be translated, And the strong multitude of his bones. Even the strong multitude of his bones is chastened with pain upon his bed: the place of rest and ease affording him no peace, quiet, or comfort.

The bones may be well termed multitudinous, as there are no less than 10 in the cranium, or skull; upper jaw, 13; lower jaw, 1; teeth, 32; tongue, 1; vertebrae, or back-bone, 24; ribs, 24;

Verse 20. His life abhorreth bread] These expressions strongly and naturally point out that general nausea or loathing which sick persons feel in almost every species of disorder.

Verse 21. His flesh is consumed away] As in atrophy, marasmus, and consumptive complaints in general.

Verse 22. His soul draweth near unto the grave] נפש nephesh, soul, is here taken for the immortal spirit, as it is distinguished from תני חַיַּית, the animal life. The former draws near to the pit, נַחַשׁ שַׁחַקַּת, corruption; perhaps he meant dissipation, considering it merely as the breath. The latter draws near לַמֵּתִים la-memetim, to the dead; i. e. to those who are already buried. Mr. Goode translates it the Destinies; and supposes the same is meant among the HEBREWS by the Memitim, as among the GREEKS by their Morai; the LATINS, by their Parce; the GOTHIC, by their Fatal Sisters; the SCANDINAVIANS, by their goddess Hela; and the ARABIANS, by Azrael, or the angel of death. I think, however, the signification given above is more natural.

Verse 23. If there be a messenger with him, an interpreter, &c. V.—THE MESSENGERS of righteousness: this is a FIFTH method, אֶחָד אֶחָד יֵשׁ yesh alai maleach melits, if there be over him an interpreting, or mediatorial angel or messenger. Verse 24. Then he is gracious unto him] He exercises mercy toward fallen man, and gives command for his respite and pardon.

an atonement. It is this that gives efficacy to all the preceding means; without which they would be useless, and the salvation of man impossible. I must think that the redemption of a lost world, by Jesus Christ, is not obscurely signified in verses 23, 24.

While the whole world lieth in the wicked one, and all hastening to the bottomless pit, God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life. Jesus Christ, the great sacrifice, and head of the church, commissions his messengers, apostles, and their successors, to show men the righteousness of God, and his displacement at sin; and at the same time his infinite love, which commands them to proclaim deliverance to the captives, and that they who believe on him shall not perish, shall not go down to the pit of destruction; for he has found out an atonement: and whoever comes to him, through his Christ, shall have everlasting life, in virtue of that atonement or ransom-price.

Should it be objected against my interpretation of אֶלֶף aleph, that it cannot be translated chief or head, because it is without the vau shurek, אֶלֶף aleph, which gives it this signification; I would answer, that this form of the word is not essential to the signification given above, as it occurs in several places without the vau shurek, where it most certainly signifies a chief, a leader, captain, &c. e. g. Zech. ix. 7. Jer. xiii. 21. and Gen. xxxvi. 30., in the first of which we translate it a governor, the second, captain, and in the third, duke. And although we translate אֶלֶף aleph an ox, or beeve; and it most certainly has this meaning in several places; yet in this signification it is written without the vau shurek in Prov. xiv. 4. Psa. viii. 7. Isa. xxx. 24., and in Deut. vii. 13. xxviii. 4. 18. 51; which all show that this letter is not absolutely necessary to the above signification.

Verse 25. His flesh shall be fresher than a child's] He shall be born a new creature.

He shall return to the days of his youth] He shall be born again, and become a child of God, through faith in Christ Jesus.

Verse 26. He shall pray unto God] Being now adopted into the heavenly family, and become a new creature; he shall have the spirit of prayer, which is indeed the very breath and language of the new or spiritual life.

He will be favourable unto him] He shall manifest his good will to him; he shall live under the influences of divine grace.

He shall see his face with joy] He shall know

And his life shall see the light.] He shall walk in the light, as Christ is in the light; always enjoying a clear sense of his acceptance through the blood of the Lamb. See another mode of paraphrase of these verses at the end of the chapter.

Verse 29. Lo, all these things worketh God] God frequently uses one, or another, or all these means, to bring men, גִּבֹּר gaber, stout-hearted men who are far from righteousness, to holiness and heaven.

Verse 33. If not] Then I will proceed: listen carefully, keep silence, and I will teach thee what true wisdom is.

Job was silent; none of his friends chose to intermeddle farther; and in the next chapter Elihu addresses both Job and them.

THERE are some various readings in the MSS. and versions on certain words in the concluding verses of this chapter, which it will be necessary to mention, as they, if adopted, will lead to a somewhat different paraphrase to that given, especially of verses 26, 27, and 28.

Verse 26. For כִּרְקָר sidekato, his righteousness, one MS and the Chaldee have כִּרְקָר ke-tsdekato, according to his righteousness.

Verse 28. For נֶפֶשׁ nephesho, his soul, which is the keri reading, and that which our translation has followed, נֶפֶשׁ my soul, is the reading of many MSS. early editions, the Complutensian, Antwerp, and London Polyglotts, the Jerusalem Targum, the Chaldee, the Vulgate, and Coverdale.

For חַיָּתוֹ chaito, his life, many MSS. early editions, the Complutensian, Antwerp, and London Polyglotts, the Jerusalem Targum, Chaldee, Vulgate, and Coverdale, read חַיָּתוֹ chaiti, my life. Both of these are properly the kethib or textual readings in the best editions; but are directed by the Masora to be changed for the keri readings, or those inserted in the margin.

For שֵׁשׁ בָּאוֹר beaor tireh, shall see the light, six of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. have עֶשְׂרִים teheye, and twenty-one have כָּאוֹר ke-aur, thus, כָּאוֹר חַיָּתוֹ ke-aur teheye, shall be as the light. The whole verse, by these various readings, will stand thus:—"He will deliver my soul from going into the pit, and my life shall be as the light." But if, with the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic, we read חַיָּתוֹ chaito, in the imperative mood, then the verse will read thus:—"DELIVER THOU MY SOUL from going down to the pit, and my life shall be as the light."

On the 26th, 27th, 28th, and 29th verses, the following paraphrase has been recommended.

Verse 26. He (Jesus Christ, the head and ransom-price,) shall pray unto God; (shall make intercession for the transgressors, for he is the mediator between God and man.) And he (God the Father) will be favourable (יִרְצֶהוּ yirsetehu, he will manifest his good will toward him.) And he shall see his face (פָּנָיו panaiv, his faces, God the Father, Son, and Spirit,) with joy (בְּרִצְוֹן be-teruah, with exultation or triumph) for he will render unto man his righteousness (יָשֶׁב לֵעֲנוֹשׁ יִצְדִּיק yasheb le-enosh tsidkatho, "he will restore to wretched man his righteousness;" i. e. he will create the soul anew, and restore to the fallen spirit that righteousness and true holiness which it has lost; and bring it again to its original state of perfection, through the grand atonement mentioned ver. 24.)

But when is it that wretched miserable man shall be brought to this state of salvation? This is answered in Verse 27. When God looking upon men, sees any of them, saying, I have sinned and perverted that which is right, and it hath profited me nothing; (has afforded nothing equal to my wishes, and the tribulation which I sustained in seeking happiness in forbidden things;) Redeem my soul from going down to destruction, and my life shall see the light; or shall be as the light. This is the prayer of the penitent, which God has promised to hear.

This is one of the best, the deepest, the most spiritual, and most important chapters which the reader has yet met with in the Book of Job. It is every way important, and full of the most useful information. It is a grand exhibition of the way of salvation as revealed to patriarchs and prophets.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

Elihu begins with an exhortation to Job's friends, 1-4. Charges Job with accusing God of acting unrighteously, which Elihu shows is impossible, 5-12. Points out the power and judgments of the Almighty, 13-30. Shows how men should address God, and how irreverently Job has acted, 31-37.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXIV.

Verse 3. The ear trieth words] I do not think with Calmet, that the inward ear, or judgment, is meant simply. The Asiatics valued themselves on the nice and harmonious collection of words, both in speaking and in writing: and perhaps it will be found here, that Elihu labours as much for harmonious versification, as for pious and weighty sentiments. To connect sense with sound, was an object of general pursuit among the Hebrews, Arabic, and Persian poets: and so fond are the latter of euphony, that they often sacrifice both sense and sentiment to it; and some of the Greek poets are not exempt from this fault.

Verse 4. Let us choose to us judgment] Let us not seek the applause of men. nor contend for victory. Let our aim be to obtain correct views and notions of all things; and let us labour to find out what is good.

Verse 5. Job hath said, I am righteous] Job had certainly said the words attributed to him by Elihu, particularly in chap. xxvii. 2, &c. but it was in vindication of his aspersed character that he had asserted his own righteousness; and in a different sense to that in which Elihu appears to take it up. He asserted that he was righteous quoad the charges his friends had brought against him. And he never intimated that he had at all times a pure heart, and had never transgressed the laws of his Maker. It is true, also, that he said, God hath taken away my judgment; but he most obviously does not mean to charge God with injustice, but to show that he had dealt with him in a way wholly mysterious, and not according to the ordinary dispensations of his providence; and that he did not interpose in his behalf, while us know among ourselves what is good.

5 For Job hath said, I am righteous; and ^d God hath taken away my judgment.

his friends were overwhelming him with obloquy and reproach.

Verse 6. Should I lie against my right?] Should I acknowledge myself the sinner which they paint me, and thus lie against my right to assert and maintain my innocence?

My wound is incurable without transgression.] If this translation is correct, the meaning of the place is sufficiently evident. In the tribulation which I endure, I am treated as if I were the worst of culprits; and I labour under incurable maladies and privations, though without any cause on my part for such treatment. This was all most perfectly true: it is the testimony which God himself gives of Job, that he was a perfect, and upright man, fearing God and eschewing evil; and that Satan had moved the Lord against him, to destroy him, WITHOUT A CAUSE. See chap. i. 1. and ii. 3.

The Chaldee translates thus:

"On account of my judgment I will make the son of man a liar, who sends forth arrows without sin."

Mr. Goode thus:

"Concerning my cause I am slandered; He hath reversed, my lot without a trespass."

The latter clause is the most deficient חַטִּי מִכִּי Miss Smith's translation of which is the best I have met with:—"A man cut off, without transgression." The word חַטִּי chatsi, which we translate my wound, signifies more literally, my arrow; and if we take it as a contracted noun, חַטִּי chatsi for חַטִּים chatsim, it means calamities. חַטִּי anush, which we translate incurable, may be the noun enosh, wicked, miserable man; and then the whole may be read thus:—a man of calamities without transgression. I suffer the punishment of an enemy to God, while free from transgression of this kind.

Verse 7. Drinketh up scorning like water? This is a repetition of the charge made against Job by Eliphaz, ch. xv. 16. It is a proverbial expression, and seems to be formed as a metaphor from a camel drinking, who takes in a large draught of water, even the most turbid, (on its setting out on a journey in a caravan,) that it may serve it for a long time. Job deals largely in scorning. He fills his heart with it.

Verse 8. Which goeth in company with the workers of iniquity] This is an allusion to a caravan; all kinds of persons are found there; but yet a holy and respectable man might be found in that part of the company where profit-gates assembled. But surely this assertion of Elihu was not true; and the words literally translated will bear a less evil meaning; "Job makes a track לחבר le-cheber aruch, to join fellowship with the workers of iniquity;" i. e. Job's present mode of reasoning, when he says, "I am righteous, yet God hath taken away my judgment," is according to the assertion of sinners, who say, "There is no profit in serving God; for, if a man be righteous, he is not benefited by it, for God does not vindicate a just man's cause against his oppressors." By adopting so much of their creed, he intimates that Job is taking the steps that lead to fellowship with them. See ver. 9.

Verse 10. Far be it from God] Rather, wickedness, far be that from God: and from iniquity the Almighty. The sense is sufficiently evident without the paraphrase in our version.

Verse 11. For the work of a man shall he render] God ever will do justice; the righteous shall never be forsaken, nor shall the wicked ultimately prosper.

Verse 13. Who hath given him a charge] Who is it that governs the world? Is it not the earth? or who hath disposed the whole world?

14 If he set his heart upon man, if he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath;

15 All flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again unto dust.

16 If now thou hast understanding, hear this; hearken to the voice of my words.

17 Shall even he that hateth right govern? and wilt thou condemn him that is most just?

18 Is it fit to say to a king, Thou art wicked? and to princes, Ye are ungodly?

19 How much less to him that accepteth not the person of princes, nor regardeth the rich more than the poor? for they all are the work of his hands.

God? Who disposes of all things in it? Is it not the Almighty, by his just and merciful providence? the government of the world shows the care, the justice, and the mercy of God.

Verse 14. If he set his heart upon man] I think this and the following verse should be read thus; "If he set his heart upon man, he will gather his soul and breath to himself; for, all flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again unto dust." He on whom God sets his heart, that is, his love, though his body shall perish and turn to dust like the rest of men, yet his soul will God gather to himself.

Verse 17. Shall—he that hateth right govern?] Or, shall he who hateth judgment lie under obligation? It is preposterous to suppose that he who lives by no rule, should impose rules upon others. God, who is the fountain of all justice and righteousness, binds man by his laws;—and wilt thou, therefore, pretend to condemn him who is the sum of righteousness?

Verse 18. Is it fit to say to a king, Thou art wicked?] The sentence is very short, and is thus translated by the VULGATE, Qui dicit regi, Apostata? Qui vocat duces impius? "Who says to a king, Apostate? Who calls leaders impious?" literally, Who calls a king Belial? Who calls princes wicked? Civil governors should be treated with respect; no man should speak evil of the ruler of the people. This should never be permitted. Even where the man cannot be respected, because his moral conduct is improper, even there the office is sacred, and should be revered. He who permits himself to talk against the man, would destroy the office and authority if he could.

Verse 19. That accepteth not] If it be utterly improper to speak against a king or civil governor, how much more so to speak disrespectfully of God, who is not influenced by human caprices or considerations, and who regards the rich and the poor alike, being equally his creatures, and equally dependent on his providence and mercy for their support and salvation.

Verse 20. In a moment shall they die] Both are equally dependent on the Almighty for their breath and being; the mighty as well as the poor. If the great men of the earth have abused their power, he sometimes cuts them off by the most sudden and unexpected death; and even at midnight when in security, and least capable of defence, they are cut off by the people whom they have oppressed, or by the invisible hand of the angel of death. This appears to be spoken in reference to Eastern tyrants, who seldom die a natural death.

Verse 22. There is no darkness] In this life; no shadow of death in the other world: no annihilation in which the workers of iniquity may hide themselves, or take refuge.

Verse 23. For he will not lay upon man] The meaning appears to be this. He will not call a man a second time into judgment; he does not try a cause twice: his decisions are just, and his sentence without appeal.

Mr. Goode translates:

"Behold, not to man hath he entrusted the time
Of coming into judgment with God."

Man's time is not in his own hand: nor is his lot cast or ruled by his own wisdom and power. When God thinks best, he will judge for him; and, if oppressed or calumniated, he will bring forth his righteousness as the light, and do him justice on his adversaries.

Verse 24. He shall break in pieces] In multitudes of cases, God depresses the proud, and raises up the humble and meek. Neither their strength nor number can afford them security.

Verse 25. He knoweth their works] He knows what they have done: and what they are plotting to do.

He overturneth them in the night] In the revolution of a single night the plenitude of power on which the day closed is annihilated.

Verse 26. He striketh them as wicked men] At other times he executes his judgments more openly; and they are suddenly destroyed in the sight of the people.

Verse 27. Because they turned back] This is the reason why he has dealt with them in judg-men ^d without number, and set others in their stead.

25 Therefore he knoweth their works, and he overturneth them in the night, so that they are ^e destroyed.

ment. They had departed from him in their hearts, their moral conduct, and their civil government. He is speaking of corrupt and tyrannical rulers. And they did not, would not understand any of his ways.

Verse 28. So that they cause the cry of the poor] They were cruel and oppressive: the poor cried through their distresses, and against their oppressors; and God heard the cry of the poor. Nothing so dreadful appears in the court of heaven against an unfeeling, hard-hearted, and cruel man of power, as the prayers, tears, and groans of the poor!

In times of little liberality, when some men thought they did God service by persecuting those who did not exactly receive their creed, nor worship God in their way; a certain great man in Scotland grievously persecuted his tenants, because they had religious meetings in private houses out of the order of the establishment; though he never molested them when they spent their time and their money in the alehouse. A holy, simple woman, one of those people, went one morning to the house of the great persecutor, and desired to speak with him. The servant desired to know her message, and he would deliver it; for she could not be admitted. She told him she could deliver her message to none but his master; said it was a matter of great importance, and concerned himself intimately, and alone.

The servant having delivered this message, and stated that the woman appeared to have something particular on her mind, his worship condescended to see her. "What is your business with me?" said he, in a haughty overbearing tone. To which she answered—"Sir, we are a hantle o' puir folk at —, wha are strivin to sairve God accordin to our ain conscience, and to get our sauls sav'd; yee persecute us; and I am come to beg yee to let us alane; and in yee diinna, we'll pray yee deed." This rhetoric was irresistible: his lordship did not know what influence such people might have in heaven. He did not like to put such prayers to the proof, wisely took the old woman's advice, and e'en let them alane. He was safe, they were satisfied, and God had the glory. When the poor refer their cause to God, he is a terrible avenger. Let the potsherd strive with the potsherd of the

29 When he giveth quietness, who then can make trouble? and when he hideth his face, who then can behold him? whether it be done against a nation, or against a man only:

30 That the hypocrite reign not, lest the people be ensnared.

31 Surely it is meet to be said unto God, I have borne chastisement, I will not offend any more:

earth; but wo to that man that contendeth with his Maker.

Verse 29. When he giveth quietness, who then can make trouble?] How beautiful is this sentiment, and how true! he ever acts as a sovereign; but his actions are all wise and just. If he give quietness, who dares to give trouble. And, if he give to every human being the right to worship himself according to their conscience, for the director of which he gives both his word and his Spirit, who shall dare to say to another, "Thou shalt worship God in my way, or not at all;" or, through a pretended liberality, say, "Thou shalt be tolerated to worship him so and so; and even that toleration be shackled and limited?"

Reader, thou hast as much right to tolerate another's mode of worship as he has to tolerate thine; or, in other words, neither of you have any such right at all. The pretension is as absurd as it is wicked.

If, however, there be any thing in the religious practice of any particular people that is inimical, by fair construction, to the peace of the country, then the civil power may interfere, as they ought to do in all cases of insurrection: but let no such inference be drawn when not most obviously flowing from the practice of the people, and principles they profess; and when solemnly disclaimed by the persons in question. Whatever converts sinners from the error of their ways, must be good to society, and profitable to the state.

Whether it be done against a nation.] He defends and supports a nation or an individual, howsoever weak, against their enemies, howsoever numerous and powerful. He destroys nations or individuals who have filled up the measure of their political or moral iniquity, though all other nations and individuals stand up in their support.

Verse 30. That the hypocrite reign not.] The Vulgate translates, Who causes a wicked man to reign because of the sins of the people. This was precisely the defence which Heliage, the oppressive ruler of the Babylonian Irak, under the calif Abdul Malec, made, when he found the people in a state of insurrection. See at the end of the chapter.

God.] This is Elihu's exhortation to Job: Humble thyself before God, and say, "I have suffered—I will not offend."

Verse 32. That which I see not.] "What I do not know teach thou me; wherein I have done iniquity, I will do so no more."

Verse 33. According to thy mind? he will recompense it.] Mr. Goode renders the whole passage thus:

Then in the presence of thy tribes,
According as thou art bruised shall he make it whole.
But it is thine to choose, and not mine;
So, what thou determinest, say.

This may at least be considered a paraphrase on the very obscure original. If thou wilt not thus come unto him, he will act according to justice, whether that be for or against thee. Choose what part thou wilt take, to humble thyself under the mighty hand of God; or still to persist in thy supposed integrity. Speak, therefore; the matter concerns thee, not me: but let me know what thou art determined to do.

Verse 34. Let men of understanding tell me.] I wish to converse with wise men: and, by men of wisdom, I wish what I have said to be judged.

Verse 35. Job hath spoken without knowledge.] There is no good in arguing with a self-willed, self-conceited man. Job has spoken like a man destitute of wisdom and discretion.

Verse 36. My desire is, that Job may be tried unto the end.] אֲבִי יִיבַחֵנִי אֵלֶיךָ Abi yibbacheni alaych, "My father, let Job be tried." So the Vulgate, Pater, mi, probetur Job. But it may be as in the common translation, I wish Job to be tried; or, as Mr. Goode renders it, Verily, let Job be pursued to conquest for replying like wicked men.

This is a very harsh wish: but the whole chapter is in the same spirit: nearly destitute of mildness and compassion. Who could suppose that such arguings could come out of the mouth of the loving Saviour of mankind? The reader will recollect, that a very pious divine has supposed Elihu to be Jesus Christ!

Verse 37. He addeth rebellion unto his sin.] An ill-natured, cruel, and unfounded assertion; borne out by nothing which Job had ever said or intended: and, indeed, more severe than the most inveterate of his friends, (so called,) had ever spoken.

Mr. Goode makes this virulent conclusion still more virulent and uncharitable, by translating thus:

"For he would add to his transgressions apostasy; He would clap his hands in the midst of us; Yea, he would tempest his words up to God."

There was no need of adding a caustic here; the words in the tamest translation are tart enough. Though Elihu began well and tolerantly, he soon got into the spirit, and under the mistake, of those who had preceded him in this "tempest of words."

When Hegiage was informed that the people were in a state of mutiny because of his oppressive government, before they broke into open acts of hostility he mounted on an eminence, and thus harangued them:

"God has given me dominion over you: if I exercise it with severity, think not that by putting me to death your condition will be mended: From the manner in which you live you must be always ill-treated, for God has many executors of his justice; and when I am dead he will send you another, who will probably execute his orders against you with more rigour. Do you wish your prince to be moderate and merciful? Then exercise righteousness, and be obedient to the laws. Consider that your own conduct is the cause of the good or evil treatment which you receive from him. A prince may be compared to a mirror; all that you see in him is the reflection of the objects which you present before him."

The people immediately dropped their weapons, and quietly returned to their respective avocations. This man was one of the most valiant, eloquent, and cruel rulers of his time: he lived toward the close of the 7th century of the Christian era. He is said to have put to death 120,000 people; and to have had 50,000 in his prisons at the time of his decease.

Yet this man was capable of generous actions. The following anecdote is given by the celebrated Persian poet Jami, in his Baharistan: Hegiage, having been separated from his attendants one day in the chase, came to a place where he found an Arab feeding his camels. The camels starting at his sudden approach, the Arab lifted up his head, and in wrath said, Who is this who with his fine clothes comes into the desert to frighten my camels? The curse of God light upon him! The governor approaching the Arab, saluted him very civilly, with the salam, Peace be unto thee! The Arab, far from returning the salutation, said, I wish thee neither peace, nor any other blessing of God. Hegiage, without seeming to heed what he had said, asked him very civilly "To give him a little water to drink." The Arab, in a surly tone, answered, If thou desirest to drink, take the pains to alight, and draw for thyself; for I am neither thy companion nor thy slave. The governor accordingly alighted; and, having drank, asked the Arab, "Who dost thou think the greatest and most excellent of men?" The prophet sent by God, said the Arab, and thou mayest burst with spleen. "And what thinkest thou of Aaly?" replied Hegiage. No tongue can declare his excellence, returned the Arab. "What," said Hegiage, "is thy opinion of the calif Abdul Malec?" I believe him to be a very bad prince, replied the Arab. "For what reason?" said Hegiage. Because, said the Arab, he hath sent us for governor the most execrable wretch under heaven. Hegiage finding himself thus characterized, was silent: but his attendants coming up, he rejoined them, and ordered them to bring the Arab with them.

The next day Hegiage ordered him to be set at table with himself, and bade him "eat freely." The Arab, ere he tasted, said his usual grace, "God grant that the end of this repast may be no worse than the beginning!" While at meat the governor asked him, "Dost thou recollect the discourse we had together yesterday?" The Arab replied, God prosper thee in all things!—but, as to the secret of yesterday, take heed that thou disclose it not to-day. "I will not," said Hegiage; "but thou must choose one of these two things: either acknowledge me for thy master, and I will retain thee about my person—or else I will send thee to Abdul Malec, and tell him what thou hast said of him." There is a third course, replied the Arab, preferable to those two. "Well, what is that?" said the governor. "Why, send me back to the desert, and pray God that we may never see each other's face again." Cruel and vindictive as Hegiage was, he could not help being pleased with the frankness and courage of the man; and not only forgave him the preceding insults, but ordered him 10,000 pieces of silver, and sent him back to the desert according to his wish.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXV.

Verse 2. My righteousness is more than God's? This would, indeed, be a blasphemous saying; but Job never said so, neither directly, nor constructively; and it would be much better to translate the words, tsadeki me-El, I am righteous before God. And Job's meaning most certainly was, "Whatever I am in your sight, I know that in the sight of God I am a righteous man; and he had a right to assume this character, because God himself had given it to him."

cannot profit thee, nor do I find that it is of any benefit to myself." Or perhaps Elihu makes here a general assertion which he afterward endeavours to exemplify. Thou hast been reasoning how it may profit thee; and thou hast said, "What profit shall I have in righteousness more than in sin."

Verse 4. I will answer thee] I will show thee the evil of a sinful way, and the benefit of righteousness; and supply what thy friends have omitted in their discourses with thee.

Verse 5. Look unto the heavens] These heavens and their host, God has created: the bare sight of them is sufficient to show thee that God is infinitely beyond thee in wisdom and excellence.

Behold the clouds] ענני shechakim, the æthers. Vulgate, cæthera; from ענן shachak, to contend, fight together, the agitated or conflicting air and light: the strong agitation of these producing both light and heat. Look upon these, consider them deeply, and see and acknowledge the perfections of the Maker.

Verse 6. If thou sinnest] God is not benefited by thy righteousness, nor injured by thy iniquity, howsoever multiplied it may be.

Verse 8. Thy wickedness may hurt] It is better to translate this literally:

"To a man like thyself is thy wickedness:
And to the son of man, thy righteousness."

That is—

Thou mayest injure thyself and others by thy wickedness:
And thou mayest benefit both by thy righteousness:
But God thou canst neither hurt nor profit.

Verse 9. By reason of the multitude] Or rather, "From among the multitude," the oppressed clamour; צעקו zaiku, they shout, צעקו shavou, because of the mighty.

The wicked rich oppress the wicked poor: these cry aloud because of their oppressors; but they have no relief, because they call not upon God.

Verse 10. Where is God my Maker] They have no just apprehension of his being: they do not consider themselves his creatures; or that he who created them still preserves them,

9 ^b By reason of the multitude of oppressions they make the oppressed to cry: they cry out by reason of the arm of the mighty.

10 But none saith, ⁱ Where is God my Maker, ^k who giveth songs in the night;

11 Who ^l teacheth us more than the beasts of the earth, and maketh us wiser than the fowls of heaven?

12 ^m There they cry, but none giveth answer, because of the pride of evil men.

and would make them happy if they would pray unto him.

Who giveth songs in the night] This is variously translated. "Before whom the high angels give praise in the night." CHALDEE.

"Who sets the night-watches." SEPTUAGINT.

"Gives meditations in the night." SYRIAC and ARABIC.

"And that shyneth upon us that we might praye him in the night." COVERDALE.

A holy soul has continual communion with God: night and day its happiness is great; and God, from whom it comes, is the continual subject of its songs of praise.

Verse 11. Who teacheth us more than the beasts] The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib: but Israel doth not know me; my people do not consider. Isai. i. Beasts, birds, fowls, and in many cases pond fishes, know and seem thankful to the hand that feeds them: while man, made much more noble than they, gifted with the greatest powers, privileged with the most important benefits, considers not the Lord, nor discerns the operation of his hand. Quadrupeds, reptiles, and fowls, have more gratitude to their masters than man has to his God.

Verse 12. There they cry] They bewail their calamities, but sorrow not for the cause of them; they cry against their oppressors, but they call not upon God.

Because of the pride of evil men.] Or מעי mi-peney, from the face, presence, or influence, of the pride of wicked men. They cry for deliverance from the pride of wicked men; but they are not heard, because they cry not to God.

Verse 13. Surely God will not hear vanity] He will not attend to such vain cries: they cry from their oppressions; but they cry not to God.

Verse 14. Thou sayest thou shalt not see him] Several MSS. have Thou shalt not see me; and the Septuagint, and one other, Thou shalt not see us: but without points עמנו the original may be read see HIM, or see us; the third person singular, or the first person plural.

Verse 15. But—because it is not so] Rather, But now because he visiteth not in his anger. This is more literal than the versions generally proposed: and the sense of the place appears to be this—Because vengeance is not speedily executed on an evil work, therefore are the hearts of the children of men set in them to do iniquity. Verse 16. Therefore doth Job open his mouth in vain] God will execute vengeance when it may best serve the ends of his justice, providence, and mercy. The delay of judgment is no proof that it shall not be executed; nor is the deferring of mercy any proof that God has forgotten to be gracious.

He multiplieth words without knowledge.] However this may apply to Job, it most certainly applies very strongly and generally to the words not only of Job's three friends, but to those also of Elihu himself. The contest is frequently a strife of words.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXVI.

Verse 1. Elihu also proceeded] Mr. Heath gives a good summary of this chapter. Elihu goes on to lay before Job the impropriety of his behaviour toward God, and desires him to consider how vain it will prove. That God Almighty will never yield the point; that he will administer impartial justice to all men, ver. 2—6. That the general course of his providence is to favour the righteous; and that, though he may sometimes correct them in love; yet, if they submit patiently to his fatherly corrections, they shall enjoy all manner of prosperity. But if they be stubborn, and will not submit, they will only draw down greater proofs of his displeasure, ver. 7—16. He tells him that had he followed the former course he had probably, before now, been restored to his former condition; whereas, by persisting in the latter course, he was in a fair way of becoming a signal example of divine justice, ver. 17. 18. He, therefore, warns him to use the present opportunity, lest God should cut him off while he was in a state of rebellion against him: for with God neither wealth, power, nor any other argument that he could use, would be of any avail, ver. 18—26. That God was infinitely powerful, there was no resisting him; and infinitely wise, as sufficiently appeared by his works; there was, therefore, no escaping out of his hands. That his purity was so great that the sun, in his presence, was more dim than the smallest ray of light when compared to that grand luminary: that his holiness was manifest by his aversion from iniquity, and his goodness in supplying the wants of his creatures.

Verse 2. That I have yet to speak on God's behalf.] I have other proofs to allege in behalf of God's justice and providence.

Verse 3. I will fetch my knowledge from afar] לְמֵרָחֹק le-merachok, from the distant place, meaning probably both remote antiquity and heaven; see below. I will show thee that all antiquity and experience are on my side. I can bring proofs from the remotest ages and from the most distant countries, to demonstrate that God is infinitely wise, and can do nothing foolish or erroneous; that he is infinitely powerful, and can bring all the purposes of his wisdom to effect; that he is infinitely good, and can will nothing and can do nothing that is not good in itself, and well calculated to do good to his creatures. And I shall show that his operations in the heavens and on the earth prove and demonstrate the whole.

And will ascribe righteousness to my Maker.] By proving the above points the righteous conduct of God, and his gracious government of the world, will be fully established.

That Elihu brings his knowledge from afar, from every part of the creation, as well as from the divine nature, is evident from the end of the chapter: 1. The omnipotence of God. God is great. 2. The eternity of God. We know him not, the number of his years cannot be found out, ver. 26. 3. From the economy of God in the atmosphere, in dews, rain, vapour, and the irrigation of the earth. He maketh small the drops, &c. ver. 27, 28. 4. In the thunder and lightning, by which he performs such wonders in the atmosphere, and executes such judgments in the world. Also who can understand the noise of his tabernacle. He spreadeth his light upon it. He judgeth the people, &c. ver. 29—33.

Verse 4. My words shall not be false] My words shall be truth without falsity.

He that is perfect in knowledge is with thee.] "The perfection of knowledge is with thee." Thou art a sensible, well-informed man, and shall be able to judge of what I say.

Verse 5. God is mighty, and despiseth not any] He reproaches no man for his want of knowledge. If any man lack wisdom, he may come to God, who giveth liberally, and upbraideth not. I prefer this to the passive sense, will not be despised.

He is mighty] Literally, "he is mighty in strength of heart." He can never be terrified nor alarmed.

Verse 6. He preserveth not the life] He will not give life to the wicked; all such forfeit life by their transgressions.

But giveth right] Justice will he give to the afflicted or humble, עֲנִיִּים anim.

Verse 7. He withdraweth not his eyes] Exactly similar to those words of David, Psa. xxxiv. 15. "The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous."

But with kings are they on the throne] I think the words should be read thus: "But with kings upon the throne shall he place them; and they shall be exalted for ever." The word וַיִּשְׁבְּחֵם vayishibeyhem, he will establish or place them, should be added to the first clause, as I have done; and then the sense becomes much clearer. Instead of לַנֶּצַח la-netsach, for ever, perhaps to victory would be a better sense: But with kings upon the throne will he place them; and they shall be exalted or triumph to victory. This is precisely the same idea, and conveyed in nearly the same words, as that of our Lord, To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne. Rev. iii. 21. Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his father, to him be glory, &c. Rev. i. 5, 6.

Verse 8. And if they be bound in fetters] These are means which God uses, not of punishment, but of correction.

Verse 9. He showeth them their work] He shows them the exceeding sinfulness of sin.

and their transgressions that they have exceeded.

10 ^h He openeth also their ear to discipline, and commandeth that they return from iniquity.

11 If they obey and serve him, they shall spend their days in prosperity, and their years in pleasures:

12 But if they obey not, ^k they shall perish by the sword, and they shall die without knowledge.

13 But the hypocrites in heart ^l heap up wrath; they cry not when he bindeth them.

14 ^m They ⁿ die in youth, and their life is among the ^o unclean.

That they have exceeded.] יִתְגַּבְּרוּ yithgabaru, that they have strengthened themselves, and did not trust in the living God; and, therefore, they would not help themselves when trouble came.

Verse 10. He openeth also their ear] He gives them to understand the reason why they are thus corrected; and commands them to return from those iniquities which have induced him to treat them with afflictions and distresses.

Verse 11. If they obey and serve him] There may appear in the course of providence to be some exceptions to this general rule; but it is most true, that this is literally or spiritually fulfilled to all the genuine followers of God. Every man is happy, in whatsoever circumstances, whose heart is unreservedly dedicated to his Maker.

Verse 12. But if they obey not] This also is a general rule from which, in the course of providence, there are only few, and those only apparent deviations. Instead of they shall perish by the sword, the meaning of the Hebrew בִּשְׁלַח יִקְרָו be-selach yeaboru, is, "By a dart they shall pass by." They shall be in continual dangers, and often fall before they have lived out half their days. Mr. Goode translates: They pass by as an arrow. The VULGATE: Transibunt per gladium, "They shall pass away by the sword."

Verse 13. But the hypocrites in heart] תַּנְפִּי chenphey, the profligates, the impious, those who have neither the form, nor the power, of godliness. The hypocrite is he who has the form, but not the power, though he wishes to be thought as inwardly righteous, as he is outwardly correct; and he takes up the profession of religion only to serve secular ends. This is not the meaning of the word in the Book of Job, where it frequently occurs.

They cry not] "Though he binds them, yet they cry not." They are too obstinate to humble themselves even under the mighty hand of God.

Verse 14. They die in youth] Exactly what the Psalmist says: "Bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days," Psa. lv. 2, 3. Literally, the words of Elihu are, "They shall die in the youth of their soul."

kedoshim, among the whores, harlots, prostitutes, and sodomites. In this sense the word is used, though it signifies consecrated persons: but we know that, in idolatry, characters of this kind were consecrated to Baal and Ashtaroth, Venus, Priapus, &c. Mr. Goode translates, the rabble. The Septuagint: Their life shall be wounded by the angels.

Verse 15. And openeth their ears in oppression.] He will let them know for what end they are afflicted; and why he permits them to be oppressed. The word ^h yigel might be translated, he shall make them exult, or sing with joy, in oppression; like the three Hebrews in the burning fiery furnace.

Verse 16. Even so would he have removed thee] If thou hadst turned to, obeyed, and served him, thy present state would have been widely different from what it is.

Verse 17. But thou hast fulfilled the judgment of the wicked] As thou art acting as the wicked; so God deals with thee as he deals with them.

Elihu is not a whit behind Job's other friends. None of them seems to have known any thing of the permission given by God to Satan to afflict and torment an innocent man.

Verse 20. Desire not the night] Thou hast wished for death (here called night;) desire it not: leave that with God. If he hear thee, and send death, thou mayest be cut off in a way at which thy soul would shudder.

Verse 21. Regard not iniquity] It is sinful to entertain such wishes; it is an insult to the providence of God. He sends affliction: he knows this to be best for thee; but thou hast preferred death to affliction, thereby setting thy wisdom against the wisdom of God. Many, in affliction, long for death: and yet they are not prepared to appear before God! What madness is this! If he take them at their wish, they are ruined for ever. Affliction may be the means of their salvation: the wished-for death their eternal destruction.

Verse 22. God exalteth by his power] He has brought thee low, but he can raise thee up. Thou art not yet out of the reach of his mercy. Thy affliction is a proof that he acts toward thee as a merciful parent. He knows what is best to be done: He teaches thee how thou shouldst suffer and improve. Why sin against his kindness? Who can teach like him!

Verse 23. Who hath enjoined him his way?] Has God taken instructions from any man how he shall govern the world?

Thou hast wrought iniquity?] Who can prove, in the whole compass of the creation, that there is one thing imperfect, superabundant, or out of its place? Who can show that there is, in the course of the divine providence, one unrighteous, cruel, or unwise act? All the cunning and wickedness of man have never been able to find out the smallest flaw in the work of God.

Verse 24. Remember that thou magnify his work] Take this into consideration; instead of fretting against the dispensations of divine providence, and quarrelling with thy Maker; attentively survey his works: consider the operation of his hands, and see the proofs of his wisdom in the plan of all; of his power, in the production and support of all; and of his goodness, in the end for which all have been made, and to which every operation in nature most obviously tends: and then magnify his work. Speak of him as thou shalt find: let the visible works of thy Maker prove to thee his eternal power and Godhead; and let nature lead thee to the Creator.

Verse 25. Every man may see it] He who says he can examine the earth with a philosophic eye, and the heavens with the eye of an astronomer, and yet says he cannot see in them a system of infinite skill and contrivance, must be ignorant of science, or lie against his conscience, and be utterly unworthy of confidence or respect.

We know him not.] He is unsearchable.
Neither can the number of his years be searched out.] He is eternal.

These three propositions are an ample foundation for endless disquisition. As to paraphrase and comment they need none in this place; they are too profound, comprehensive, and sublime.

Verse 27. He maketh small the drops of water.] This appears simply to refer to evaporation: and perhaps it would be better to translate נִשְׁתָּרַף yegorâ, "he exhales:" detaches the smallest particles of the aqueous mass from the surface in order to form clouds, as reservoirs for the purpose of furnishing rain for the watering of the earth. God is seen in little things as well as great things; and the inconceivably little, as well as the stupendously great, are equally the work of Omnipotence.

They pour down rain.] These exceedingly minute drops or vapour become collected in clouds: and then, when agitated by winds, &c. many particles being united, they become too heavy to be sustained by the air in which they before were suspended; and so fall down in rain, which is either a mist, a drizzle, a shower, a storm, or a water-spout; according to the influence of different winds, or the presence and quantum of the electric fluid. And all this is proportioned לְמִדַּת הָעֶדֶן le-edo, "to its vapour;" to the quantity of the fluid evaporated and condensed into clouds.

Verse 28. Which the clouds do drop.] That in proportion to the evaporation, will be clouds, or masses of volatilized and suspended vapour; and in proportion to this, will be the quantum of rain, which, in different forms, will fall upon the earth.

There is a remarkable addition to this verse in the Septuagint. I shall insert the whole verse:—βρονταὶ παλαιαμῶνα, ἰσχυροὶ δὲ νεφέλαι ἀμυνήτω βροτῶν ἄνθρωποις ἐπιπνευσίν, οὐδὲν δὲ καὶ τῶν ζῴων ἐπὶ τοὺς πασὶν οὐκ ἐξίσταται σου ἡ διανοία, οὐδὲ διαλλάσσεται, σου ἡ καρπία ἀπὸ σαματός. The rains descend, and the clouds cover with their shadows multitudes of men; he hath appointed to animals to know the order of their dwellings. At the contemplation of these things is not thy mind transported, and thy heart ready to part from thy body?

Verse 29. Can any understand the spreadings of the clouds.] Though the vapour appear to be fortuitously raised, and subject, when suspended in the atmosphere, to innumerable accidents; to different winds and currents which might drive it all to the sandy deserts, or direct its course so that it should fall again into the great deep from which it has been exhaled, without watering and refreshing the earth: yet so does the good and wise provi-

29 Also can any understand the spreadings of the clouds, or the noise of his tabernacle?

30 Behold, he^k spreadeth his light upon it, and covereth^l the bottom of the sea.

dence of God manage this matter, that every part of the arable terrene surface receives an ample supply; and in every place where requisite, it may be truly said, that "the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and water the earth, and cause it to bring forth and bud, that it may minister seed to the sower, and bread to the eater."

In Egypt, where there is little or no rain, the earth is watered by the annual inundation of the Nile; there, because this system of evaporation is not necessary, it does not exist: Who can account for this economy! How are these clouds so judiciously and effectually spread through the atmosphere, so as to supply the wants of the earth, of men, and of cattle? I ask with Elihu, Who can understand the spreadings of these clouds? And I should like to see that volunteer in the solution of paradoxes, who would step forward, and say, I am the man.

The noise of his tabernacle.] By the tabernacle we may understand the whole firmament, or atmospheric expansion; the place where the Almighty seems more particularly to dwell; whence he sends forth the rain of his strength, and the thunder of his power.

The noise must refer to the blowing of winds and tempests; or to the claps, peals, and rattling of thunder, by means of the electric fluid.

Verse 30. He spreadeth his light upon it.] Or, as Mr. Goode translates,—He throweth forth from it his flash. These two verses may both have an allusion to the sudden rarefaction of that part of the atmosphere whence the thunder proceeds, by the agency of the electric fluid; the rushing in of the air on each side to restore the equilibrium, which the passage of the fire had before destroyed. The noise produced by this sudden rushing in of the air, as well as that occasioned by the ignition of the hydrogen gas, which is one of the constituents of water, is the thunder of his tabernacle, viz. the atmosphere, where God appears, in such cases, to be manifesting his presence and his power.

Elihu says, that God spreadeth his light upon it. This is spoken in reference to the flashes and coruscations of lightning in the time of thunder-storms; when, even in a dark night, a sudden flash illuminates for a moment the surface of the earth under that place.

He covereth the bottom of the sea.] He doth whatsoever it pleaseth him, in the heavens above, in the earth beneath, and in all deep places. Yet the depths of the sea are as much under his control and influence as the atmosphere, and its whole collection of vapours, meteors, and galvanic and electric fluids.

32 ° With clouds he covereth the light: and commandeth it not to shine by the cloud that cometh between.

° Psa. 147. 8.—P 1 Kings 18. 41, 45.

He makes storms, tempests, winds, hurricanes, tornadoes, thunder and lightning, drought and inundation, the instruments of his justice, to punish rebellious nations.

He giveth meat in abundance. Though by these he punishes offenders, yet through the same, as instruments, he provides for the wants of men and animals in general. Storms, tempests, and hurricanes, agitate the lower regions of the atmosphere, disperse noxious vapours, and thus render it fit for respiration: and, without these, it would soon become a stagnant, putrid, and deadly mass, in which neither animals could live, nor vegetables thrive. And by dews, rains, snow, frosts, winds, cold, and heat, he fructifies the earth, and causes it to bring forth abundantly, so that every thing living is filled with plenteousness.

Some critics translate this latter clause thus:

He passeth sentence again.—I cannot see this meaning in the original words. Not one of the versions has so understood them; nor does this translation, supposing even that the Hebrew would bear it, give so fine and so elegant an idea as that of the common version. I feel always reluctant to give a sense in any case that is not supported in some of its parts by any of the ancient versions; and more especially when it is contrary to the whole of them; and still more particularly when opposed to the Arabic, which, in the Book of Job, containing so many Arabisms, I consider to be of very great importance.

Verse 32. With clouds he covereth the light] על כמים כסה אור, which Mr. Goode translates, He brandisheth the blaze athwart the concave. The Vulgate, with which all the other versions less or more agree, has In manibus abscondit lucem, "In his hands he hideth the light;" or, more literally, "By the hollow of his hands, (מים, copayim,) he concealeth the light," (אור, aur,) the fountain of light: viz. the sun.

And commandeth it not to shine by the cloud that cometh between] I am afraid this is no translation of the original. Old Coverdale is better: And at his commandement it commeth againe; which is a near copy of the Vulgate. Here again Mr. Goode departs from all the versions, both ancient and modern, by translating thus, And launcheth his penetrating bolt. Dr. Stock, in my opinion, comes nearer the original and the versions in his translation:

And giveth charge as to what it shall meet.

which we should only recur in desperate necessity, has furnished Mr. Goode and Reiske with the above translation. For my own part I must acknowledge an extreme difficulty both here and in the concluding verse; on which I am unwilling to lay a correcting hand. I think something of the doctrine of eclipses is here referred to: the defect of the solar light, by the interposition of the moon. So, in the time of an eclipse, God is represented as covering the body of the sun with the hollow of his hand, and thus obscuring the solar light; and then removing his hand, so as to permit it to reilluminate the earth.

Mr. Goode gets his translation by dividing the words in a different manner from the present text. I shall give both:

Hebrew—ויצו עליה במפגע

Va-yitsur aleyah bemaphgeyā.

Mr. Goode—ויצו ליהב מפגע

"Ve-yezvo liabhe mapegio."

Of which, he learnedly contends, And launcheth his penetrating bolt, is the literal sense. The change here made to produce the above meaning is not a violent one: and I must leave the reader to judge of its importance.

Verse 33. The noise thereof showeth concerning it, the cattle also concerning the vapour.] I think this translation very unhappy. I shall give each hemistich in the original:

יגיד קולו רע

Yagid alaiw reo.

מקנה אף על קולה

Mikneh aph al ôvelah.

I think this may be translated without any violence to any word in the text,

Its loud noise, (or his thunder,) shall proclaim concerning him,

A magazine of wrath against iniquity.

This is literal; and gives, in my opinion, a proper meaning of the passage; and one in strict connexion with the context. And it is worthy of remark, that every wicked man trembles at the noise of thunder, and the flash of lightning; and considers this a treasury of divine wrath; emphatically called among us The artillery of the skies: and wherever the noise is heard it is considered the voice of God. Thus the thunder declares concerning him. The next chapter, which is a continuation of the subject here, confirms and illustrates this meaning. For יגיד yagid, Houbigant reads יניח yanich, and for מקנה mikneh, מניח mi-kenath; and translates thus: He agitates with himself, his thunder, from the indignation of his wrath against iniquity.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Elihu continues to set forth the wisdom and omnipotence of God, as manifested in the thunder and lightning, 1–5. In the snows and frosts, 6–8. In various meteors; and the end for which they are sent, 9–13. Job is exhorted to consider the wondrous works of God in the light, in the clouds, in the winds, in heat and cold, in the formation of the heavens, and the changes in the atmosphere, 14–22. NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXVII.

Verse 1. My heart trembleth] This is what the Septuagint has anticipated: see under ver. 23. of the preceding chapter. A proper consideration of God's majesty in the thunder and lightning is enough to appal the stoutest heart, confound the wisest mind, and fill all with humility and devotion. This, to the middle of ver. 5. should be added to the preceding chapter, as it is a continuation of the account of the thunder and lightning given at the conclusion of that chapter. Our present division is as absurd as it is unfortunate.

Verse 2. Hear attentively] "Hear with hearing." The words seem to intimate that there was actually at that time a violent storm of thunder and lightning, and that the successive peals were now breaking over the house, and the lightning flashing before their eyes. The storm continued till Elihu had finished; and out of that storm the Almighty spoke.—See the beginning of the succeeding chapter.

The noise of his voice] The sudden clap.

And the sound that goeth out] The peal, or continued rattling, pounding, and thumping, to the end of the peal. The whole is represented as the voice of God himself; and the thunder as immediately issuing from his mouth.

Verse 3. He directeth it under the whole heaven] He directeth it, the lightning, under the whole heaven, in the twinkling of an eye, from east to west. And its light, the reflection of the flash, not the lightning, unto the ends of the earth; so that a whole hemisphere seems to see it at the same instant.

Verse 4. After it a voice roareth] After the flash has been seen the peal is heard; and this will be more or fewer seconds after the peal, in proportion to the distance of the thunder cloud from the ear. Lightning traverses any space without any perceivable succession of time: nothing seems to be any obstacle to its progress. A multitude of persons taking hands, the first and the last connected with the electric machine, all feel the shock in the same instant; and were there a chain as conductor to go round the globe, the last would feel the shock in the same moment as the first. But, as sound depends on the undulations of the air for its propagation, and is known to travel at the rate of only 1142 feet in a second; consequently if the flash were only 1142 feet from the spectator, it would be seen one second, or one swing of the pendulum, before the sound could reach the ear, though the clap and the flash take place in the same instant; and if twice this distance two seconds, and so on. It is of some consequence to know that lightning, at a considerable distance, suppose six or eight seconds of time, is never known to burn, kill, or do injury. When the flash and the clap immediately succeed each other, then there is strong ground for apprehension, as the thunder cloud is near. If the thunder cloud be a mile and a half distant, it is, I believe, never known to kill man or beast, or do any damage to buildings, either by throwing them down, or burning them. Now its distance may be easily known by means of a pendulum clock, or watch that has seconds. When the flash is seen, count the seconds till the clap is heard. Then compute:—If only one second is counted, then the thunder cloud is within 1142 feet, or about 380 yards; if two seconds, then its distance is 2284 feet, or 761 yards; if three seconds, then 3426 feet or 1142 yards; if four seconds, then the cloud is distant 4568 feet, or 1522 yards; if five seconds, then the distance is 5710 feet, or 1903 yards; if six seconds, then the distance is 6852 feet, or 2284 yards, one mile and nearly one third; if seven seconds, then the distance of the cloud is 7994 feet, or 2665 yards, or one mile and a half, and 25 yards. Beyond this distance lightning has not been known to do any damage: the fluid being too much diffused, and partially absorbed, in its passage over electric bodies; i. e. those which are not fully impregnated by the electric matter, and which receive their full charge when they come within the electric attraction of the lightning. For more on the rain produced by thunder storms, see on chap. xxxviii. 25. This scale may be carried on at pleasure, by adding to the last sum, for every second, 1142 feet, and reducing to yards and miles as above, allowing 1760 yards to one mile.

He thundereth with the voice of his excellency] וְהוּא גֵּעוֹן-וּ, of his majesty: nor is there a sound in nature more descriptive of, or more becoming, the majesty of God, than that of thunder. We hear the breeze in its rustling, the rain in its pattering, the hail in its rattling, the wind, in its hollow howlings, the cataract in its dash, the bull in his bellowing, the lion in his roar; but we hear God, the Almighty, the Omnipresent, in the contiguous peal of thunder! The sound, and this sound only, becomes the majesty of Jehovah.

And he will not stay them] וְהוּא לֹא יִשְׁכַּח וְהוּא לֹא יִשְׁכַּח ye-akobem, and he bath not limited or circumscribed them. His lightnings lighten the world; literally the whole world. The electric fluid is diffused through all nature, and every where art can exhibit it to view. To his thunder and lightning, therefore, he has assigned no limits. And when his voice soundeth, when the lightning goes forth,—who shall assign its limits, and who can stop its progress? It is, like God, IRRESISTIBLE.

Verse 5. God thundereth marvellously with his voice] This is the conclusion of Elihu's description of the lightning and thunder: and here only should chap. xxxvi. have ended. He began chap. xxxvi. 29. with the noise of God's [Great things doeth he] This is the beginning of a new paragraph; and relates particularly to the phenomena which are afterward mentioned. All of them wondrous things; and in many respects, to us incomprehensible.

Verse 6. For he saith to the snow, Be thou on the earth.] Snow is generally defined, "A well known meteor, formed by the freezing of the vapours in the atmosphere." We may consider the formation of snow thus:—A cloud of vapours being condensed into drops, these drops becoming too heavy to be suspended in the atmosphere, descend; and, meeting with a cold region of the air, they are frozen, each drop shooting in several points. These still continuing their descent, and meeting with some intermitting gales of a warmer air, are a little thawed, blunted, and again; by falling into colder air, frozen into clusters, or so entangled with each other, as to fall down in what we call flakes.

Snow differs from hail and hoar-frost in being crystallized: this appears on examining a flake of snow with a magnifying glass; when the whole of it will appear to be composed of fine spicula or points diverging like rays from a centre. I have often observed the particles of snow to be of a regular figure, for the most part beautiful stars of six points, as clear and transparent as ice. On each of these points are other collateral points, set at the same angles as the main points themselves, though some are irregular, the points broken, and some are formed of the fragments of other regular stars. I have observed snow to fall sometimes entirely in the form of separate regular six-pointed stars, without either clusters, or flakes: and each so large as to be the eighth of an inch in diameter.

The lightness of snow is owing to the excess of its surface when compared with the matter contained under it.

Its whiteness is owing to the small particles into which it is divided: for take ice, opaque almost to blackness, and pound it fine, and it becomes as white as snow.

The immediate cause of the formation of snow is not well understood: it has been attributed to electricity; and hail is supposed to

owe its more compact form to a more intense electricity, which unites the particles of hail more closely than the moderate electricity does those of snow. But rain, snow, hail, frost, ice, &c. have all one common origin; they are formed out of the vapours, which have been exhaled by heat from the surface of the waters.

Snow, in northern countries, is an especial blessing of providence; for, by covering the earth, it prevents corn and other vegetables from being destroyed by the intense cold of the air in the winter months; and especially preserves them from cold piercing winds. It is not a fact that it possesses in itself any fertilizing quality, such as nitrous salts, according to vulgar opinion: its whole use is covering the vegetables from intense cold, and thus preventing the natural heat of the earth from escaping, so that the intense cold cannot freeze the juices in the tender tubes of vegetables, which would rupture those tubes, and so destroy the plant.

Mr. Goode alters the punctuation of this verse, and translates thus:

Behold, he saith to the snow, Be!
On earth then falleth it.
To the rain,—and it falleth:
The rains of his might.

By the small rain, we may understand drizzling showers: by the rain of his strength, sudden thunder-storms, when the rain descends in torrents; or violent rain from dissipating water-spouts.

Verse 7. He sealeth up the hand of every man] After all that has been said, and much of it, most learnedly, on this verse, I think that the act of freezing is probably intended: that when the earth is bound up by intense frost, the hand, ^ו yad, labour, of every man is sealed up; he can do no more labour in the field, till the south wind blow, by which a thaw takes place. While the earth is in this state of rigidity, the beasts go into their dens, and remain in their places, ver. 8. some of them sleeping out the winter in a state of torpor, and others of them feeding on the stores which they had collected in autumn. However, the passage may mean no more than by the severity of the rains beasts are drawn to their coverts; and man is obliged to intermit all his labours. The mighty rains are past. Who would have thought that on this verse, as its scriptural foundation, the doctrine of chiromancy is built! God has so marked the hand of every man by the lines thereon exhibited, that they tell all the good or bad fortune they shall have during life: and he has done this that all men, by a judicious examination of their hands, may know his work! And on this John Taismier, a famous mathematician, lawyer, musician, and poet laureat of Cologne, has written a large folio volume, with more hands in it than fell to the lot of Briareus: printed at Cologne, 1683.

Verse 9. Out of the south cometh the whirlwind] See the note on chap. ix. 9. What is rendered south here, is there rendered chambers. Mr. Goode translates here the utmost zone. The Chaldees: "From the supreme chamber the commotion shall come; and from the cataracts of Arcturus the cold." What the whirlwind מִטָּחַף suphah, is, we know not. It might have been a wind peculiar to that district; and it is very possible that it was a scorching wind, something like the simoom.

Verse 10. By the breath of God frost is given] The freezing of water, though it is generally allowed to be the effect of cold, and has been carefully examined by the most eminent philosophers, is still involved in much mystery; and is a very proper subject to be produced among the great things which God doeth, and which we cannot comprehend, ver. 5. Water, when frozen, becomes solid, and increases considerably in bulk. The expansive power in freezing is so great that, if water be confined in a gun-barrel, it will split the solid metal throughout its whole length. Bombshells have been filled with water, and plugged tight, and exposed to cold air, when they have been rent, though the shell has been nearly two inches thick! Attempts have been made to account for this: but they have not, as yet, been generally successful. The breath of God freezes the waters; and that breath thaws them. It is the work of omnipotence: and there, for the present, we must leave it.

The breadth of the waters is straitened.] This has been variously translated:—psu mutsak, which we here render straitened, we translate ver. 18. melled. Mr. Goode thinks that the idea of a mirror is implied, or something molten; and, on this ground, it may be descriptive of the state of water formed into ice. He, therefore, translates:

By the blast of God the frost congealeth,
And the expanse of the waters into a mirror.

I have only to observe that in the act of freezing, wind or air is necessary; for it has been observed that water, which lay low in ponds, did not freeze till some slight current of air fell on and ruffled the surface, when it instantly shot into ice.

Verse 11. By watering he wearieth the thick cloud] Perhaps it would be better to say the brightness (בְּרִי beri) dissipates the cloud; or, if we follow our version, by watering the earth, he wearieth, weareth out, or emptieth the thick cloud; causes it to pour down all its contents upon the earth, that they may cause it to bring forth and bud. The Vulgate understood it differently: Frummentum desiderat nubes; et nubes spargunt lumen suum. "The grain desireth the clouds; and the clouds scatter abroad his light."

Verse 12. And it is turned round about by his counsels] The original is difficult:—מִמְסִיבֵי מִתְחַבְּלֵי וְהִלֵּךְ מִתְחַבְּלֵי מִתְחַבְּלֵי ve-hu mesiboth mithaphec be-tachbulotav; which has been thus paraphrased: And he (the sun) makes revolutions, (causes the heavenly bodies to revolve round him,) turning round himself (turning round his own axis) by his attachments, the attractive and repulsive influences, by which the heavenly bodies revolve round him, and by which, as if strongly tied to their centre בְּחַבְּלֵי be-chabul, with a cable or rope, they are projected to their proper distances, and prevented from coming too near, or flying off too far.

What they may do whatsoever he commandeth them.] That men may perform his will, availing themselves of the influences of the sun, moon, times, seasons, &c. to cultivate the earth for the sustenance of themselves and their cattle.

Upon the face of the world in the earth.] אֶרֶץ תֵּבֵל al pency tebel aretsah, over the surface of the habitable world. Perhaps the above exposition may appear to be too far fetched; and possibly the passage refers only to the revolutions of the seasons, and the operations connected with them.

Verse 13. He causeth it to come] The Vulgate translates the text thus: Sive in una tribu, sive in terra sub, sive in quocunque loco misericordie sue eas jusserit invenire: "Whether in one tribe, or whether in his own land, or in whatsoever place of his mercy, he has commanded them to come." In the preceding verse it is said, that God conducts the clouds according to the orders of his counsels, whithersoever he pleases: and here it is added that, when he designs to heap favours upon any land, he commands the clouds to go thither, and pour out on it their fertilizing showers. See Calmel.

The Vulgate certainly gives a good sense, and our common version is also clear and intelligible; but there are doubts whether the Hebrew will bear this meaning. Here it is stated that God sends the rain either for correction, לְשֶׁבֶט le-shebet, which signifies rod, staff, tribe, and here taken as the symbol of correction; he sends rain sometimes as a judgment, inundating certain lands, and sweeping away their produce by irresistible floods; or for his land, לְאֶרֶצוֹ le-aretso, his own land, Palestine, the place of his favoured people; or for mercy, לְחַסֵּד le-chesed; when a particular district has been devoured by locusts, or cursed with drought. God, in his mercy, sends fertilizing rains to such places to restore the ears which the caterpillars have eaten, and to make the desert bloom and blossom like the garden of the Lord. Some think that Job refers to the curse brought upon the old world by the waters of the deluge. Now, although God has promised that there shall no more be a flood of waters to destroy the whole earth ; yet we know he can, very consistently with his promise, inundate any particular district ; or, by a superabundance of rain, render the toil of the husbandman in any place vain. Therefore, still his rain may come for judgment, for mercy, or for the especial help of his people or church.

Verse 14. Hearken unto this] Hear what I say on the part of God.

Stand still] Enter into deep contemplation on the subject.

Verse 15. Dost thou know when God disposed them] Dost thou know the laws by which they are governed ; and the causes which produce such and such phenomena ?

And caused the light of his cloud to shine ?] Almost every critic of note understands this of the rainbow, which God gave as a sign that the earth should no more be destroyed by water. See Gen. ix. 13. and the note there.

Verse 16. Dost thou know the balancings of the clouds ?] How are the clouds suspended in the atmosphere ? Art thou so well acquainted with the nature of evaporation, and the gravity of the air at different heights, to support different weights of aqueous vapour, so as to keep them floating for a certain portion of time, and then let them down to water the earth :—Dost thou know these things so as to determine the laws by which they are regulated ?

monstrated. Much, satisfactorily, has been said on this subject ; But is it yet beyond doubt ? I fear not. But, supposing this question to be set at rest—is it demonstrated that cold is only a quality ; the mere absence of heat ? If it be demonstrated that there is such a substance as caloric ; is it equally certain that there is no such substance as frigid ? But how do our garments keep us warm ? By preventing the too great dissipation of the natural heat. And why is it that certain substances, worked into clothing, keep us warmer than others ? Because they are bad conductors of caloric. Some substances conduct off the caloric, or natural heat, from the body ; others do not conduct it at all, or imperfectly : hence those keep us warmest, because they, being bad conductors of caloric, do not permit the natural heat to be thrown off. In these things we know a little, after endless cares, anxieties, and experiments !

But is the question yet satisfactorily answered, why the north wind brings cold, and the south wind heat ? If it be so to my readers, it is not so to me. Yet I know the reasons which are alleged.

Verse 18. Hast thou with him spread out the sky] Wert thou with him when he made the expanse : fitted the weight to the winds ; proportioned the aqueous to the terrene surface of the globe ; the solar attraction to the quantum of vapours necessary to be stored up in the clouds, in order to be occasionally deposited in fertilizing showers upon the earth ? and then, dost thou know how gravity and elasticity should be such essential properties of atmospheric air, that without them, and their due proportions, we should neither have animal nor vegetable life ?

Strong—as a molten looking-glass] Like a molten mirror. The whole concave of heaven, in a clear day or brilliant night, being like a mass of polished metal, reflecting or transmitting innumerable images.

Verse 19. Teach us what we shall say unto him] Thou pretendest to be so very wise, and to know every thing about God, pray make us as wise as thyself, that we may be able to approach with thy boldness the sovereign of the world ; and maintain our cause with thy confidence before him. As for our parts we are ignorant, and on all these subjects are enveloped with darkness. Mr. Goode translates,

" Teach us how we may address him
When arrayed in robes of darkness. "

It is a strong and biting irony, howsoever we take it.

Verse 20. Shall it be told him that I speak] Shall I dare to whisper, even before God ? And

If a man speak, surely he shall be swallowed up.

suppose any one were to accuse me before him for what I have spoken of him, though that has been well intended, how should I be able to stand in his presence! I should be swallowed up in consternation, and consumed with the splendour of his majesty.

But in what state art thou? What hast thou been doing? Thou hast arraigned God for his government of the world; thou hast found fault with the dispensations of his providence; thou hast even charged him with cruelty! What will become of THEE!

Verse 21. And now men see not the bright light] Mr. Goode gives the sense clearer:

"Even now we cannot look at the light
When it is resplendent in the heavens,
And a wind from the north hath passed along and cleared them."

Elihu seems to refer to the insufferable brightness of the sun. Can any man look at the sun shining in his strength, when a clear and strong wind has purged the sky from clouds and vapours! Much less can any man gaze on the majesty of God. Every creature must sink before him. What execrably dangerous folly in any man to attempt to arraign his conduct!

Verse 22. Fair weather cometh out of the north] Is this any version of the original צָהָב מִצָּפוֹן metsaphon zahab ye-ethel; which is rendered by almost every version, ancient and modern, thus, or to this sense: "From the north cometh gold." Calmet justly remarks, that in the time of Moses, Job, and Solomon, and for a long time after, gold was obtained from Colchis, Armenia, Phasis, and the land of Ophir, which were all north of Judea and Idumea; and are in the Scriptures ordinarily termed the north country. "But what relation can there be between gold cometh out of the north, and with God is terrible majesty?" Answer: Each thing has its properties, and proper characteristics, which distinguish it; and each country has its advantages. Gold, for instance, comes from the northern countries; so praises offered to the Supreme God should be accompanied with fear and trembling: and as this metal is from the north, and northern countries are the places whence it must be procured; so terrible majesty belongs to God, and in him alone such majesty is eternally resident."

As צָהָב zahab, which we translate gold, see chap. xxviii. 16. comes from a root that signifies to be clear, bright, resplendent, &c. Mr. Goode avails himself of the radical idea, and translates it splendour:—

"Splendour itself is with God; Insufferable majesty."

But he alters the text a little to get this meaning; particularly in the word צָהָב ye-ethel, which we translate cometh, and which he contends is the pronoun nnx itself; the yod y as a performative here, being, as he thinks, an interpolation. This makes a very good sense: but none of the ancient versions understood the place thus; and none of the MSS. countenance this very learned-critic's emendation.

Verse 23. Touching the Almighty, we cannot find him out] This is a very abrupt exclamation, and highly descriptive of the state of mind in which Elihu was at this time: full of solemnity, wonder, and astonishment, at his own contemplation of this "great First Cause, least understood." The ALMIGHTY! we cannot find him out.

Excellent in power and in judgment] We must not pretend to comprehend his being, the mode of his existence, the wisdom of his counsels, nor the mysteries of his conduct.

He will not afflict] לֹא יַעֲנֶה la yeaneh; he will not answer. He will give account of none of his matters to us. We cannot comprehend his motives, nor the ends he has in view.

Verse 24. Men do therefore] Therefore, men should, עֲנֹשִׁים enoshim, wretched, miserable, ignorant, sinful men, should fear him.

He respecteth not any] No man is valuable in his sight on account of his wisdom: for what is his wisdom when compared with that of the Omniscient! Whatever good is in man, God alone is the author of it. Let him, therefore, that glorieth, glory in the Lord.

THUS ends the speech of Elihu! A speech of a widely different description, on the whole, from that of the three friends of Job who had spoken so largely before him. In the speeches of Eliphaz, Zophar, and Bildad, there is little besides a tissue of borrowed wise sayings, and ancient proverbs and maxims, relative to the nature of God, and his moral government of the world. In the speech of Elihu every thing appears to be original: he speaks from a deep and comprehensive mind, that had profoundly studied the subjects on which he discoursed. His descriptions of the divine attributes, and of the wonderful works of God, are correct, splendid, impressive, and inimitable. Elihu, having now come nearly to a close, and knowing that the Almighty would appear and speak for himself, judiciously prepares for, and announces his coming by the thunder and lightning of which he has given so terrific and majestic a description in this and the preceding chapter. The evidences of the divine presence throng on his eyes and mind: the incomprehensible glory and excellency of God confound all his powers of reasoning and description! He cannot arrange his words by reason of darkness: and he concludes with stating, that to poor weak man God must for ever be incomprehensible; and to him a subject of deep religious fear and reverence. Just then, the terrible majesty of the Lord appears!—Elihu is silent! The rushing mighty wind, for which the description of the thunder and lightning had prepared poor, confounded, astonished Job, proclaims the presence of Jehovah; and out of this whirlwind God answers for, and proclaims himself! Reader, canst thou not conceive something of what these men felt? Art thou not astonished, perplexed, confounded, in reading over these descriptions of the thunder of God's power! Prepare then to hear the voice of God himself out of this whirlwind!

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

The Lord answers Job out of a whirlwind, and challenges him to answer, 1—3. He convinces him of ignorance and weakness, by an enumeration of some of his mighty works; particularly of the creation of the earth, 4—7. The sea and the deeps, 8—18. The light, 19—21. Snow, hail, thunder, lightning, rain, dew, ice, and hoar-frost, 22—30. Different constellations, and the ordinances of heaven influencing the earth, 31—33. Show his own power and wisdom in the atmosphere, particularly in the thunder, lightnings, and rain, 34—38. His providence in reference to the brute creation, 39—41.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXVIII.

Verse 1. The Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind] It is not סופח suphah, as in the preceding chapter, verse 9; but סערה searah, which signifies something turbulent, tumultuous, or violently agitated; and here may signify what we call a tempest, and was intended to fill Job's mind with solemnity, and an awful sense of the majesty of God. The Chaldee has a whirlwind of grief, making the whole rather allegorical than real: impressing the sense on Job's imagination.

Verse 2. Who is this that darkeneth counsel] As if he had said, Who art thou who pretendest to speak on the deep things of God, and the administration of his justice and providence, which thou canst not comprehend; and leavest my counsels and designs the darker for thy explanations.

Verse 3. Gird up now thy loins] I will not confound thee with my terrors; dismiss all fearful apprehensions from thy mind; now act like a man, כנר ke-geber, like a hero: stand and vindicate thyself. For I will demand of thee,—I will ask thee a series of questions more easy of solution than those which thou hast affected to discuss already; and then thou shalt have the opportunity of answering for thyself.

The most impressive and convincing manner of arguing is allowed to be that by interrogation, which the Almighty here adopts. The best orations delivered by the ancients were formed after this manner. That celebrated oration of Cicero against Cataline, which is allowed to be his master-piece, begins with a multitude of short questions, closely pressed upon each other. See the end of the chapter.

foundations of the earth?] Thou hast a limited and derived being: thou art only of yesterday, what canst thou know? Didst thou see me create the world?

Verse 5. Who hath laid the measures thereof] Who hath adjusted its polar and equatorial distances from the centre?

Who hath stretched the line] Who hath formed its zones and its great circles; and adjusted the whole of its magnitude and gravity to the orbit in which it was to move, as well as its distance from that great centre about which it was to revolve? These questions show the difficulty of the subject; and that there was an unfathomable depth of counsel and design in the formation of the earth.

Verse 6. Whereupon are the foundations thereof fastened?] How does it continue to revolve in the immensity of space? What supports it? Has it foundations like a building, and finished with a key-stone to keep the mighty fabric in union?

Verse 7. When the morning stars sang together] This must refer to some intelligent beings who existed before the creation of the visible heavens and earth: and it is supposed that this and the following clause speak of the same beings;—that by the sons of God and the morning-stars, the angelic host is meant; as they are supposed to be first, though perhaps not chief, in the order of creation.

For the latter clause the Chaldee has All the troops of angels. Perhaps their creation may be included in the term heavens, Gen. i. 1. In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth. These witnessed the progress of the creation; and, when God had finished his work, celebrated his wisdom and power in the highest strains.

Verse 8. Who shut up the sea with doors] Who gathered the waters together into one place, and fixed the sea its limits so that it cannot overpass them to inundate the earth?

When it brake forth as if it had issued out of the womb?] This is a very fine metaphor. The sea is represented as a newly born infant issuing from the womb of the void and formless chaos: and the delicate circumstance of the liquor amnii which bursts out previously to the birth of the foetus. The allusion to the birth of a child is carried on in the next verse.

Verse 9. When I made the cloud the garment] Alluding to the cloth in which the new-born infant is first received. The cloud was the same to the newly-raised vapour, as the above recipient to the new-born child.

And thick darkness a swaddling-band for it.] Here is also an allusion to the first dressings of the new-born child: it is swathed in order to support the body, too tender to bear even careful handling without some medium between the hand of the nurse and the flesh of the child. "The image," says Mr. Goode, "is exquisitely maintained: the new-born ocean is represented as issuing from the womb of chaos; and its dress is that of the new-born infant."

There is here an allusion also to the creation, as described in Genesis i. Darkness is there said to be on the face of the DEEP. Here it is said, the thick darkness was a swaddling-band for the new-born SEA.

Verse 10. And brake up for it my decreed place] This refers to the decree, Gen. i. 9. "Let the waters under the heavens be gathered together unto one place."

And set bars and doors] And let the dry land appear. This was the bars and doors of the sea: the land being every where a barrier against the encroachments and inundations of the sea, and great rivers, bays, creeks, &c. the doors by which it passes into the interior of continents, &c.

Verse 11. Hitherto shalt thou come] Thus far shall thy flux and reflux extend. The tides are marvellously limited and regulated, not only by the lunar and solar attraction, but by the quantum of time also which is required to remove any part of the earth's surface from under the immediate attractive influence of the sun and moon. And this regulation takes place by means of the rotation of the earth round its own axis, which causes one thousand and forty-two miles of its equator to pass from under any given point in the heavens in one hour; and about five hundred and eighty miles in the meridian of London: so that the attracted fluid parts are every moment passing from under the direct attractive influence; and thus the tides cannot be raised to any extraordinary height.

11 And said, Hitherto shalt thou come, but no farther: and here shall ^o thy proud waves ^p be staid.

12 Hast thou^r commanded the morning since thy days; and caused the dayspring to know his place;

ⁿ Ch. 26. 10.—^o Heb. the pride of thy waves.—^p Psal. 89. 9. & 93. 4.—^r Psal. 74. 16. & 148. 5.

The attraction of the sun and moon, and the gravitation of its own parts to its own centre, which prevent too great a flux on the one hand, and too great a reflux on the other; or, in other words, too high a tide, and too deep an ebb: are also some of those bars and doors by which its proud waves are stayed, and prevented from coming farther; all being regulated by these laws of attraction, by the sun and moon, gravitation of its own parts from the sun and moon, and the diurnal motion round its own axis, by which the fluid parts, easily yielding to the above attraction, are continually moving from under the direct attracting influence. Here a world of wisdom and management was necessary, in order to proportion all these things to each other, so as to procure the great benefits which result from the flux and reflux of the sea; and prevent the evils which must take place, at least occasionally, were not those bars and doors provided. It is well known that the spring tides happen at the change and full of the moon, at which time she is in conjunction with and opposition to the sun. As these retire from their conjunction, the tides neap till about three days after the first quadrature, when the tides begin again to be more and more elevated, and arrive at their maximum about the third day after the opposition. From this time the tides neap as before till the third day after the last quadrature; and afterward their daily elevations are continually increased till about the third day after the conjunction, when they recommence their neaping; the principal phenomena of the tides always taking place at or near the same points of every lunar synodic revolution.

Verse 12. Hast thou commanded the morning] This refers to dawn or morning twilight, occasioned by the refraction of the solar rays by means of the atmosphere; so that we receive the light by degrees, which would otherwise burst at once upon our eyes, and injure, if not destroy, our sight; and by which even the body of the sun himself becomes evident several minutes before he arises above the horizon.

Caused the dayspring to know his place] This seems to refer to the different points in which daybreak appears during the course of the earth's revolution in its orbit: and which variety of points of appearing depends on this annual revolution. For as the earth goes round the sun every year in the ecliptic, one half of which is on the north side of the equinoctial, and the other half on its south side, the sun appears to change his place every day. These are matters which the wisdom of God alone could plan; and which his power alone could execute.

It may be just necessary to observe, that the dawn does not appear, nor the sun rise exactly in the same point of the horizon, two successive days in the whole year; as he declines forty-three degrees north, and forty-three degrees south of east; beginning on the 21st of March, and ending on the 22d of December; which variations not only produce the places of rising and setting, but also the length of day and night. And by this declination north and south, or approach to and recession from the tropics of Cancer and Capricorn, the solar light takes hold of the ends of the earth, ver. 13. enlightens the arctic and antarctic circles in such a way as it would not do were it always on the equinoctial line; these tropics taking the sun twenty-three and a half degrees north, and as many south of this line.

Verse 13. That the wicked might be shaken out of it? The meaning appears to be this: as soon as the light begins to dawn upon the earth, thieves, assassins, murderers, and adulterers, who all hate and shun the light, fly like ferocious beasts to their several dens and hiding places; for such do not dare to come to the light lest their works be manifest, which are not wrought in God. To this verse the fifteenth appears to belong, as it connects immediately with it, which connexion the introduction of the fourteenth verse disturbs. And from the wicked, such as mentioned above, their light is withholden; they love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil; and as they prowl after their prey in the night-season, they are obliged to sleep in the day, and thus its light is withholden from them. And the high arm shall be broken; or, as Mr. Goode translates, The roving of wickedness is broken off. They can no longer pursue their predatory and injurious excursions.

Verse 14. It is turned as clay to the seal The earth, like soft clay, is capable of modifying itself in endless ways, and assuming infinite forms. As a proof of this, see the astonishing variety of plants, flowers, and fruits, and the infinitely diversified hues, odours, tastes, consistency, and properties, of its vegetable productions.

There seems to be an allusion here to the sealing of clay; which I believe has been, and is now, frequent in the East. Six of those Eastern seals, for sealing clay, made of brass, the figures and characters all in relief, the interstices being entirely perforated and cut out, so that the upper side of the seal is the same as the lower, now lie before me. They seem to have been used for stamping pottery, as some of the fine clay still appears in the interstices.

And they stand as a garment.] The earth receiving these impressions from the solar light and heat, plants and flowers spring up, and decorate its surface as the most beautiful stamped garment does the person of the most sumptuously dressed female.

Mr. Goode translates the whole verse thus: "Canst thou cause them to bend round as clay to the mould, so that they are made to set like a garment?"

He supposes that reference is here made to the rays of light; but, take his own words:—"The image, as it appears to me, is taken directly from the art of pottery, an image of very frequent recurrence in Scripture; and in the present instance admirably forcible in painting the ductility with which the new light of the morning bends round like clay to the mould, and accompanies the earth in every part of its shape so as to fit it, as we are expressly told in the ensuing metaphor, like a garment, as the clay fits the mould itself." Mr. Goode supposes, that a mould in which the pottery is formed, not a seal by which it is impressed, is referred to here. In this sense I do not see the metaphor consistent, nor the allusion happy. It is well known that the rays of light never bend. They may be reflected at particular angles, but they never go out of a straight course. A gun might as well be expected to shoot round a corner, as a ray of light to go out of a straight line, or to follow the sinuous or angular windings of a tube, canal, or adit. But if we take in the sun as he advances in his diurnal voyage, or rather the earth, as it turns round its own axis from west to east, the metaphor of Mr. Goode will be correct enough; but we must leave out bending and ductility, as every part of the earth's surface will be at least successively invested with the light.

Verse 16. Hast thou entered into the springs of the sea? Of these springs, inlets, or outlets of the sea, we know just as much as Job. There was prevalent among philosophers an opinion that through a porous bottom fresh matter was constantly oozing, by which the sea was supplied with new materials. But through such pores these materials might as well ooze out as ooze in.

Walked in the search of the depth? Hast thou walked from the shallow beach through the great ocean's bed, till thou hast arrived at its profoundest depths? In other words, Dost thou know the depths of the sea? Job, we may presume, did not. No man since him has found them out. In multitudes of places they are unfathomable by any means hitherto used by man.

Verse 17. Have the gates of death been opened unto thee? Dost thou know in what the article of death consists? This is as inexplicable as the question, What is animal life?

The doors of the shadow of death?] מַדְבָּר tsal-maveth; the intermediate state; the openings into the place of separate spirits. Here two places are distinguished; מַדְבָּר maveth, death, and מַדְבָּר tsal-maveth, the shadow of death. It will not do to say, death is the privation of life:—for what then would be the shadow of that privation.

Verse 18. The breadth of the earth? At that time the circumference of the globe was not known, because the earth itself was supposed to be a vast extended plain, bordered all round with the ocean and the sky.

Verse 19. Where light dwelleth? What is the source of light? Yea, what is light itself? It is not in the sun, for light was before the sun;—but, What is light? It is, no doubt, a substance;—but of what kind? and of what are its particles? As to darkness, What is it? Is it philosophical to say, It is the mere privation of light? I shall think philosophy has made some advances to general accuracy and perfection when it proves to us what cold is, and what darkness is, leaving mere privations out of the question.

Verse 20. Shouldest take it to the bound thereof? Or, as Mr. Goode translates, “That thou shouldest lay hold of it in its boundary.” That thou shouldest go to the very spot where light commences, and where darkness ends; and see the house where each dwells. Here darkness and light are personified; each as a real intelligent being, having a separate existence, and local dwelling. But poetry animates every thing. It is the region of fictitious existence.

I believe this verse should be translated thus:—“For thou canst take us to its boundary; for thou knowest the paths to its house.” This is a strong irony; and there are several others in this divine speech. Job had valued himself too much on his knowledge; and a chief object of this august speech is to humble his “knowing pride,” and to cause him to seek true wisdom and humility where they are to be found.

Verse 21. Knowest thou? This is another strong and biting irony; and the literal translation proves it: “Thou knowest, because thou wast then born! and the number of thy days is great,” or multitudinous; רבים rabbim, multitudes.

Verse 22. The treasures of the snow? The places where snow is formed; and the cause of that formation. See on chap. xxxvii. 6.

Treasures of the hail? It is more easy to account for the formation of snow than of hail. Hail, however, is generally supposed to be drops of rain frozen in their passage through cold regions of the air; and the hail is always in proportion to the size of the rain drop from which it was formed. But this meteor does not appear to be formed from a single drop of water, as it is found to be composed of many small spherules frozen together, the centre sometimes soft like snow; and at other times formed of a hard nucleus, which in some cases has been of a brown colour, capable of ignition and explosion. In the description given of snow in chap. xxxvii. 6. it has been stated that both snow and hail owe their formation to electricity: the hail being formed in the higher regions of the air where cold is intense, and the electric matter abundant. By this agency it is supposed that a great number of aqueous particles are brought together and frozen; and in their descent collect other particles, so that the density of the substance of the hailstone grows less and less from the centre, this being formed first, in the higher regions; and the surface being collected in the lower. This theory is not in all cases supported by fact, as in some instances the centre has been found soft and snow-like, when the surface has been hard.

Hail is the only meteor of this kind, from which no apparent good is derived. Rain and dew invigorate, and give life to the whole vegetable world; frost by expanding the water contained in the earth, pulverizes and renders the soil fertile; snow covers and defends vegetables from being destroyed by too severe a frost; but hail does none of these. It not only does no good, but often much harm; always some. It has a chilling, blasting effect in spring and summer, and cuts the tender plants, so as to injure or totally destroy them. In short, the treasures of hail are not well known: and its use, in the creation has not yet been ascertained. But frost is God's universal plough, by which he cultivates the whole earth.

Verse 23. Reserved against the time of trouble לֵעֵת לְעֵת-צָר le-ét-tsar, to the season of strictness: i. e. the season when the earth is constricted or bound by the frost.

Against the day of battle and war? Hailstones being often employed as instruments of God's displeasure against his enemies, and the enemies of his people. There is probably an allusion here to the plague of hail sent on the Egyptians. See Exod. ix. 23. and the notes there for more particulars concerning hailstones, remarkable showers of them, &c. There may be also a reference to Josh. x. 10, 11. where a destructive shower of what are called hailstones fell upon the Canaanitish kings who fought against Israel. See the notes there also.

Verse 24. By what way is the light parted? Who can accurately describe the cause and operation of a thunder-cloud; the cause, nature, and mode of operation of the lightning itself? Is it a simple element, or compound substance? What is its velocity? and why not conductive by every kind of substance, as it is known to exist in all? In short to be diffused through every portion of nature. How is it parted? How does it take its zig-zag form? This is the curious, indescribable, and unknown parting. Are all the causes of positive and negative electricity found out? What are its particles, and how do they cohere, and in what order are they propagated? Much has been said on all these points; and how little of that much satisfactorily!

Scattereth the east wind upon the earth? קידם kadim, the eastern storm, euroclydon, or levanter.

Verse 25. Divided a water-course The original תעלה tealah, from עלה alah, to ascend, may signify rather a cloud, or clouds in general, where the waters are stored up. I cannot see how the overflowings or torrents of water can be said to ascend any other way than by evaporation: and it is by this divine contrivance that the earth is not only irrigated, but even dried; and by this means too much moisture is not permitted to lie upon the ground; which would not only be injurious to vegetation, but even destroy it. But query, may not a water-spout be intended?

A way for the lightning of thunder "A path for the bolt of thunder." God is represented as directing the course even of the lightning: he launches the bolt, and makes the path in which it is to run. To grasp, manage, and dart the thunderbolt or lightning, was a work which heathenism gave to Jupiter, its supreme god. None of the inferior deities was capable of this. But who can thunder with a voice like the Almighty! He is THE THUNDERER.

Verse 26. To cause it to rain on the earth It is well known that rain falls copiously in thunder-storms. The flash is first seen, the clap is heard, and last the rain descends. The lightning travels all lengths in no perceivable succession of time. Sound is propagated at the rate of 1142 feet in a second. Rain travels still more slowly, and will be seen, sooner or later, according to the weight of the drops, and the distance of the cloud from the place of the spectator. Now the flash, the clap, and the rain take place all in the same moment; but are discernible by us in the succession already mentioned, and for the reasons given above; and more at large in the note on chap. xxxvi. 29, &c.

But how are these things formed? The lightning is represented as coming immediately from the hand of God. The clap is the effect of the lightning, which causes a vacuum in for the lightning of thunder;

26 To cause it to rain on the earth, where no man is; on the wilderness wherein there is no man;

that part of the atmosphere through which it passes; the air rushing in to restore the equilibrium, may cause much of the noise that is heard in the clap. An easy experiment on the air-pump illustrates this:—Take a glass receiver open at both ends; over one end tie a piece of sheep's bladder wet, and let it stand till thoroughly dry. Then place the open end on the plate of the air-pump, and exhaust the air slowly from under it. The bladder soon becomes concave, owing to the pressure of the atmospheric air on it, the supporting air in the receiver being partly thrown out. Carry on the exhaustion, and the air presses at the rate of fifteen pounds on every square inch. See on chap. xxviii. The fibres of the bladder being no longer capable of bearing the pressure of the atmospheric column upon the receiver, are torn to pieces with a noise equal to the report of a musket; which is occasioned by the air rushing in to restore the equilibrium. Imagine a rapid succession of such experiments, and you have the peal of thunder; the rupture of the first bladder being the clap. But the explosion of the gases, (oxygen and hydrogen) of which water is composed, will also account for the noise. See below.

But how does the thunder cause rain? By the most accurate and incontestable experiments it is proved that water is a composition of two elastic airs, or gases, as they are called, oxygen, and hydrogen. In 100 parts of water there are 88½ of oxygen, and 11½ of hydrogen. Pass a succession of electric sparks through water by means of a proper apparatus, and the two gases are produced in the proportions mentioned above.

To decompose water by galvanism.—Take a narrow glass tube three or four inches long; fit each end with a cork penetrated by a piece of slender iron wire, and fill the tube with water. Let the ends of the two wires within the tube be distant from each other about three quarters of an inch, and let one be made to communicate with the top, the other with the bottom of a galvanic pile, in action. On making this communication, bubbles of air will be formed, and ascend to the top of the tube, the water decreasing as it is decomposed.

The oxygen and hydrogen formed by this experiment, may be recomposed into the same weight of water. Take any quantity of the oxygen and hydrogen gases in the proportions already mentioned; ignite them by the electric spark, and they produce a quantity of water equal in weight to the gases employed. Thus, then, we can convert water into air, and reconvert this air into water; and the proportions hold as above. I have repeatedly seen this done, and assisted in doing it; but cannot, in this place, describe every thing in detail.

Now, to the purpose of this note: the rain descending after the flash and the peal. The electric spark or matter of lightning passing through the atmosphere, ignites and decomposes the oxygen and hydrogen; which explode, and the water which was formed of these two, falls down in the form of rain. The explosion of the gases, as well as the rushing in of the circumambient air to restore the equilibrium, will account for the clap and peal; as the decomposition and ignition of them will account for the water or rain which is the attendant of a thunder-storm. Thus by the lightning of thunder God causes it to rain on the earth. How marvellous, and instructive are his ways!

Verse 27. To satisfy the desolate and waste] The thunder cloud not only explodes over inhabited countries, that the air may be purified, and the rain sent down to fertilize the earth; but is conducted over deserts where there is no human inhabitant; and this to cause the bud of the tender herb to spring forth; for there are beasts, fowls, and insects, that inhabit the desert and the wilderness, and must be nourished by the productions of the ground. Every tribe of animals was made by the hand of God, and even the lowest of them is supported by his kind providence.

Verse 28. Hath the rain a father?] Or, Who is the father of the rain? We have seen above one part of the apparatus by which God produces it. Other causes have been mentioned on chap. xxxvi. 27, &c.

The drops of dew?] יִתְחַבָּן yithchaban, the sphericles, the small round drops or globules. Dew is a dense moist vapour, found on the earth in spring and summer mornings, in form of a misting rain. Dr. Hutton defines it: "A thin, light, insensible mist or rain descending with a slow motion, and falling while the sun is below the horizon. It appears to differ from rain, as less from more. Its origin and matter are doubtless from the vapours and exhalations that rise from the earth and water." Various experiments have been instituted to ascertain whether dew arises from the earth, or descends from the atmosphere; and those pro and con have alternately preponderated. The question is not yet decided; and we cannot yet tell any more than Job which hath begotten the drops of dew, the atmosphere or the earth. Is it water deposited from the atmosphere, when the surface of the ground is colder than the air?

Verse 29. Out of whose womb came the ice?] Ice is a solid, transparent, and brittle body, formed of water by means of cold. Some philosophers suppose, that ice is only the re-establishment of water in its natural state; that the mere absence of fire is sufficient to account for this re-establishment; and that the fluidity of water is a real fusion, like that of metals, exposed to the action of fire; and differing only in this, that a greater portion of fire is necessary to one than the other. Ice, therefore, is supposed to be the natural state of water; so that in its natural state water is solid;

ice? and the hoary frost of heaven, who hath gendered it?

30 The waters are hid as with a stone, and the face of the deep is frozen.

31 Canst thou bind the sweet influ-and becomes fluid only by the action of fire, as solid metallic bodies are brought into a state of fusion by the same means.

Ice is lighter than water, its specific gravity being to that of water as eight to nine. This rarefaction of ice is supposed to be owing to the air-bubbles produced in water by freezing; and which being considerably large, in proportion to the water frozen, render the body so much specifically lighter: hence ice always floats on water. The air-bubbles, during their production, acquire a great expansive power, so as to burst the containing vessels, be they ever so strong. See examples in the note on chap. xxxvii. 10.

The hoary frost of heaven, who hath gendered it?] Hoar-frost is the congelation of dew, in frosty mornings, on the grass. It consists of an assemblage of little crystals of ice, which are of various figures, according to the different disposition of the vapours, when met and condensed by the cold. Its production is owing to some laws with which we are not yet acquainted. Of this subject, after the lapse and experience of between two and three thousand years, we know about as much as Job did. And the question, What hath engendered the hoar-frost of heaven? is, to this hour, nearly as inexplicable to us as it was to him! Is it enough to say that hoar-frost is water deposited from the atmosphere at a low temperature, so as to produce congelation.

Verse 30. The waters are hid as with a stone] Here is a reference to freezing in the winter, as we may learn from some of the constellations mentioned below, which arise above our horizon, in the winter months.

The word יִתְחַבָּן yithchaban, is understood by the versions in general, as implying hardening, or congelation; and we know in some intense frosts the ice becomes as hard as a stone; and even the face of the deep, the very seas themselves, not only in the polar circles, but even in northern countries, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, and parts of Germany, are really frozen, and locked up from all the purposes of navigation for several months in winter.

Verse 31. Canst thou bind the sweet influences of Pleiades] The Pleiades are a constellation in the sign Taurus. They consist of six stars visible to the naked eye: to a good eye, in a clear night, seven are discernible; but with a telescope ten times the number may be readily counted. They make their appearance in the spring. Orion may be seen in the morning, toward the end of October; and is visible through November, December, and January; and hence, says Mr. Goode, it becomes a correct and elegant synecdoche for the winter at large. The Pleiades are elegantly opposed to Orion, as the vernal renovation of nature is opposed to its wintry destruction: the mild and open benignity of spring, to the severe and icy inactivity of winter.

I have already expressed my mind on these supposed constellations, and must refer to my notes on chap. ix. 9. &c., and to the learned notes of Dr. Hales and Mr. Mason Goode, on these texts. They appear certain, where I am obliged to doubt; and from their view of the subject, make very useful and important deductions. I find reluctance in departing from the ancient versions. In this case, these learned men follow them: I cannot, because I do not see the evidence of the ground-work; and I dare not draw conclusions from premises which seem to me precarious, or which I do not understand. I wish, therefore, the reader to examine and judge for himself.

Coverdale renders the 31st and 32d verses thus:

Hast thou brought the ^W stars together? Or art thou able to break the circle of heaven? Canst thou bring forth the morning star, or the evening star, at convenient time and converse them home again?

Verse 32. Mazzaroth in his season? This is generally understood to mean the signs of the zodiac. מַזְזָרוֹת Mazzaroth, according to Parkhurst, comes from מַזַּר mazar, to corrupt; and he supposes it to mean that pestilential wind in Arabia called Smim, the season of which is the summer heats.

Verse 33. Knowest thou the ordinances of heaven? Art thou a thorough astronomer?
Art thou acquainted with all the laws of the planetary system? Canst thou account for the difference of their motions, and the influence by which they are retained and revolve in their orbits? And canst thou tell what influence, or dominion, they exercise on the earth? Sir Isaac Newton has given us much light on many of these things: but to his system, which is most probably the true one, gravity is essential; and yet what this gravity is, he could neither explain nor comprehend: and his followers are not one whit wiser than he. No man has yet fully found out the ordinances of heaven, and the dominion thereof on the earth.

Verse 34. Canst thou lift up thy voice to the clouds? Canst thou produce lightning and thunder, that water may be formed, and poured down upon the earth?

Thunder is called קוֹלוֹת koloth, voices: for it is considered the voice of God—here then Job's voice, קוֹל kol-cha, is opposed to the voice of JEHOVAH!

have already seen that the lightning is supposed to be immediately in the hand and under the management of God. The great god of the heathen, Jupiter Brontes, is represented with the forked lightnings and thunderbolt in his hand.
He seems so to grasp the bickering flame that, though it struggles for liberty, it cannot escape from his hold. Lightnings—How much like the sound of thunder is the original word: בְּרָקִים Brakeem! Here are both sense and sound.

Here we are? Will the winged lightnings be thy messengers, as they are mine?

Verse 36. Who hath put wisdom in the inward parts? Who has given לִשְׁכֵּוֹ la-secevi, to the contemplative person, understanding? Even the most sedulous attention to a subject, and the deepest contemplation, are not sufficient to investigate truth, without the inspiration of the Almighty, which alone can give understanding.
But who has given man the power to conceive and understand? A power which he knows he has, but which he cannot comprehend. Man knows nothing of his own mind, nor of the mode of its operations. This mind we possess, these operations we perform;—and of both do we know any thing? If we know not our own spirit, how can we comprehend that spirit which is infinite and eternal.

Mr. Goode thinks, that this verse is a continuation of the subject above, relative to the lightnings; and therefore translates thus:

Who putteth understanding into the volleys?
And who giveth to the shafts discernment?

All the versions, except the Septuagint, which trifles here, understand the place as we do. Either makes a good sense. The Septuagint, has, "Who hath given the knowledge of weaving to women; or the science of embroidery?" Instead of understanding to the heart, the Vulgate has understanding to the cock; that it might be able to distinguish and proclaim the watches of the night.

Verse 37. Who can number the clouds? Perhaps the word סָפָר saphar, which is commonly rendered to number, may here mean, as in Arabic, to irradiate, as Mr. Goode contends; and may refer to those celestial and inimitable tinges which we sometimes behold in the sky.

Bottles of heaven? The clouds: it is an allusion to the girbabs, or bottles made of skin, in which they are accustomed to carry their water from wells and tanks.

Verse 38. When the dust groweth into hardness? i. e. Who knows how the dust, the elementary particles of matter, were concreted;

and how the clouds, the several parts of the earth, continue to cohere? What is the principle of cohesion among the different particles of matter, in all metals and minerals? Even water, in a solid form constitutes a part of several gems, called thence water of crystallization. Who can solve this question? How is it that 90 parts of alumine, 7 of silex, and 1-2 of oxide of iron, constitute the oriental ruby? and that 90 parts of silex, and 19 of water, form the precious opal? And how can 46 parts of silex, 14 of alumine, 28 of carbonate of lime, 6.5 of sulphate of lime, 3 of oxide of iron, and 2 of water, enter into the constitution, and form the substance, of the lapis lazuli? How do these solids and fluids of such differing natures grow into hardness, and form this curious mineral!

Take another example from that beautiful, precious stone, the emerald. Its analysis shows it to be composed of glucine 13, silex 64.5, alumine 16, lime 1.6, and oxide of chrome 3.25. Now, how can these dusts, utterly worthless in themselves, grow into hardness, combine, and form one of the most beautiful, and, next to the diamond, the most precious of all the gems? The Almighty and infinitely wise God has done this in a way only known to, and comprehensible by himself.

Verse 39. Wilt thou hunt the prey for the lion? Rather the lioness, or strong lion. Hast thou his instinct? Dost thou know the habits and haunts of such animals as he seeks for his food? Thou hast neither his strength, his instinct, nor his cunning.

In the best Hebrew Bibles the thirty-ninth chapter begins with this verse; and begins properly, as a new subject now commences, relating to the natural history of the earth, or the animal kingdom: as the preceding chapter does to astronomy and meteorology.

Verse 40. When they couch in their dens Before they are capable of trusting themselves abroad.

Abide in the covert Before they are able to hunt down the prey by running. It is a fact that the young lions, before they have acquired strength and sufficient swiftness, lie under cover, in order to surprise those animals which they have not fleetness enough to overtake in the forest. And from this circumstance the כִּפְרִים kepirim, young lions, or lion's whelps, have their name: the root is כָּפַר capar, to cover or hide.—See the note on chap. iv. 11. where six different names are given to the lion, all expressing some distinct quality or state.

Verse 41. Who provideth for the raven This bird is chosen, perhaps, for his voracious appetite, and general hunger for prey, beyond most other fowls. He makes a continual cry, and the cry is that of hunger. He dares not frequent the habitations of men, as he is considered a bird of ill omen, and hated by all.

This verse is finely paraphrased by Dr. Young —

"Fond man! the vision of a moment made!
Dream of a dream, and shadow of a shade:
What worlds hast thou produc'd, what creatures fram'd,
What insects cherish'd, that thy God is blam'd?
When pain'd with hunger, the wild raven's brood Calls upon God, importunate for food,
Who hears their cry? Who grants their hoarse request,
And stills the clamours of the craving nest?"

On which he has this note: "The reason given why the raven is particularly mentioned as the care of providence is, because by her clamorous and importunate voice she particularly seems always calling upon it; thence καρῶσα, a καρᾶξ, is to ask earnestly.—Eliau. lib. ii. c. 48. And since there were ravens on the banks of the Nile, more clamorous than the rest of that species, those probably are meant in this place."

THE commencement of Cicero's oration against Catiline; to which I have referred on ver. 3., is the following:

Quousque tandem abutere, Catilina, patientia nostra? Quamdiu etiam furor iste tuus nos eludet? Quem ad finem sese effrenata jactabit audacia? Nihilne te nocturnum presidium palatii?—Nihil urbes vigilie.—Nihil timor populi.—Nihil concursus bonorum omnium.—Nihil hic munitissimus habendi senatus locus,—Nihil horum ora, vultusque moverunt?—Patere tua consilia non sentis?—Constrictum jam omnium horum conscientia teneri conjurationem tuam non vides? "How long wilt thou, O Catiline, abuse our patience?—How long shall thy madness out-brave our justice?—To what extremities art thou resolved to push thy unbridled insolence of guilt?—Canst thou behold the nocturnal arms that watch the palatium,—the guards of the city,—the consternation of the citizens,—all the wise and worthy clustering into consultation,—this impregnable situation of the seat of the senate,—and the reproachful looks of the fathers of Rome?—Canst thou behold all this, and yet remain undaunted and unabashed?—Art thou insensible that thy measures are detected? Art thou insensible that this senate, now thoroughly informed, comprehend the whole extent of thy guilt?—Show me the senator ignorant of thy practices during the last and preceding night?—Of the place where you met,—the company you summoned, and the crime you concerted.—The senate is conscious,—the consul is witness to all this!—Yet, O, how mean and degenerate! NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXIX.

Verse 1. Knowest thou the time] To know the time, &c. only, was easy, and has nothing extraordinary in it : but the meaning of these questions is, to know the circumstances, which have something peculiarly expressive of God's providence, and make the questions proper in this place. Pliny observes, that the hind with young, is by instinct directed to a certain herb, named seselis, which facilitates the birth. Thunder also, which looks like the more immediate hand of providence, has the same effect. Psa. xxix. 9. The voice of the Lord maketh the hinds to calve. See Dr. Young. What is called the wild goat, yaâl, from ya'al, to ascend, go, or mount up, is generally understood to be the ibex or mountain goat, called yaâl, from the wonderful manner in which it mounts to the tops of the highest rocks. It is certain, says Johnston, there is no crag of the mountains so high, prominent, or steep, but this animal will mount it in a number of leaps, provided only it be rough, and have protuberances large enough to receive its hoofs in leaping. This animal is indigenous to Arabia, is of amazing strength and agility, and considerably larger than the common goat. Its horns are very long, and often bend back over the whole body of the animal ; and it is said to throw itself from the tops of rocks or towers, and light upon its horns, without receiving any damage. It goes five months with young.

When the hinds do calve?] The hind is the female of the stag, or cervus elaphus, and goes eight months with young. They live to thirty-five or forty years. Incredible longevity has been attributed to some stags. One was taken by Charles VI. in the forest of Senlis, about whose neck was a collar with this inscription, Cæsar hoc mihi donavit, which led some to believe that this animal had lived from the days of some one of the twelve Cæsars, emperors of Rome.

I have seen the following form of this inscription:

*Tempore quo Cæsar Romæ dominatus in altâ, Aureolo jussit collum signare moniti;
Ne depascentem, quisquis me graminis, lædat.
Cæsaris heu causa! perititâ parcor vitæ!*

Which has been long public in the English ballad strain, thus:

"When Julius Cæsar reigned king,
About my neck he put this ring;
That whomsoever should me take,
Would save my life for Cæsar's sake."

Here is eloquence! here is nature! and, in thus speaking her language, the true orator pierces with his lightnings the deepest recesses of the heart. The success of this species of oratory is infallible in the pulpit, when the preacher understands how to manage it.

Verse 3. They bow themselves] In order to bring forth their young ones.

They cast out their sorrows.] חבלים cheblyhem; the placenta, after-birth, or umbilical cord: So this word has been understood.

Verse 4. In good liking] After the fawns have sucked for some time, the dam leads them to the pastures, where they feed on different kinds of herbage, but not on corn, for they are not born before harvest time in Arabia and Palestine: for the stag does not feed on corn, but on grass, moss, and the shoots of the fir, beech, and other trees; and, therefore, the word bar, here translated corn, should be translated the open field or country. See Parkhurst. Their nurseries bound away.—Mr. Goode. In a short time they become independent of the mother, leave her, and return no more. The spirit of the questions in these verses appears to be the following: Understandest thou the cause of breeding of the mountain-goats, &c.? Art thou acquainted with the course and progress of the parturition, and the manner in which the bones do grow, and acquire solidity in the womb? See Mr. Goode's observations.

Houbigant's version appears very correct: (Knowest thou) "how their young ones grow up, increase in the fields, and, once departing, return to them no more."

Verse 5. Who hath sent out the wild ass free?] אִשָּׁא פֶּרֶה which we translate wild ass, is the same as the ovos asinos of the Greeks, and the onager of the Latins; which must not, says Buffon, be confounded with the zebra: for this is an animal of a different species from the ass. The wild ass is not striped like the zebra, nor so elegantly shaped. There are many of those animals in the deserts of Libya and Numidia: they are of a gray colour; and run so swiftly that no horses but the Arab barbs can overtake them. Wild asses are found in considerable numbers in East and South Tartary, in Persia, Syria, the islands of the Archipelago, and throughout Mauritania. They differ from tame asses only in their independence and liberty, and in their being stronger and more nimble; but in their shape they are the same. See on chap. vi. 5.

brayer, the same animal, but called thus because of the frequent and peculiar noise he makes. But Mr. Goode supposes this to be a different animal from the wild ass, (the jichta or equus hemionas), which is distinguished by having solid hoofs, a uniform colour, no cross on the back, and the tail hairy only at the tip. The ears and tail resemble those of the zebra; the hoofs and body those of the ass; and the limbs those of the horse. It inhabits Arabia, China, Siberia, and Tartary, in grassy saline plains or salt wastes, as mentioned in the following verse.

Verse 6. [Whose house] Habitation, or place of resort.

The barren land] melechah מלחה, the salt land, or salt places, as in the margin. See above.

Verse 7. [He scorneth the multitude] He is so swift that he cannot be run or hunted down.
See the description in ver. 5.

Verse 8. [The range of the mountains] The mountains and desert places are his peculiar places of pasture; and he lives on any thing that is green, on any kind of vegetable production.

Verse 9. [Will the unicorn be willing to serve thee] The "fine, elegant animal like a horse, with one long, rich curled horn growing out of his forehead," commonly called the unicorn, must be given up as fabulous. The heralds must claim him as their own; place him in their armorial bearings as they please, to indicate the unreal actions, fictitious virtues, and unfought martial exploits of mispraised men. It is not to the honour of the royal arms of Great Britain that this fabulous animal should be one of their supporters.

The animal in question, called reim רימ, is undoubtedly the rhinoceros, who has the latter name from the horn that grows on his nose.
The rhinoceros is known by the name of reim in Arabia to the present day. He is allowed to be a savage animal, showing nothing of the intellect of the elephant. His horn enables him to combat the latter with great success; for, by putting his nose under the elephant's belly, he can rip him up. His skin is like armour; and so very hard as to resist sabres, javelins, lances, and even musket balls; the only penetrable parts being the belly, the eyes, and about the ears.

Or abide by thy crib?] These and several of the following expressions are intended to point out his savage, untameable nature.

Verse 10. [Canst thou bind the unicorn—in the furrow] He will not plough, nor draw in the yoke with another; nor canst thou use him singly to harrow the ground.

10 Canst thou bind the unicorn with his band in the furrow? or will he harrow
the valleys after thee?

11 Wilt thou trust him because his strength is great? or wilt thou leave thy labour to him?

12 Wilt thou believe him, that he will bring home thy seed, and gather it into thy barn?

13 Gavest thou the goodly wings unto the peacocks? or wings and feathers unto the ostrich?

f Numb. 23. 22. Deut. 33. 17.—g Or, the feathers of the stork and ostrich.

Verse 12. [That he will bring home thy seed] Thou canst make no domestic nor agricultural use of him.

Verse 13. [The goodly wings unto the peacocks?] I believe peacocks are not intended here; and the Hebrew word rennanim רננים, should be translated ostriches; and the term chasidah חסידה, which we translate ostrich, should be, as it is elsewhere, translated stork.
And perhaps the word netsah נטשא, rendered here feathers, should be translated hawk, or pelican.

The Vulgate has Penna struthionis similis est pennis herodii, et accipitris; "the feather of the ostrich is like to that of the stork and the hawk." The Chaldee has, "The wing of the wild cock, who crows; and claps his wings, is like to the wing of the stork and the hawk." The Septuagint, not knowing what to make of these different terms, has left them all untranslated, so as to make a sentence without sense.
Mr. Goode has come nearest both to the original and to the meaning, by translating thus:

"The wing of the ostrich tribe is for flapping;
But of the stork and falcon for flight."

Though the wings of the ostrich, says he, cannot raise it from the ground; yet by the motion here alluded to, by a perpetual vibration, or flapping; by perpetually catching, or drinking in the wind, (as the term ne-elashah נעלהש implies, which we render goodly), they give it a rapidity of running beyond that possessed by any other animal in the world. Adanson informs us, that when he was at the factory in Padore, he was in possession of two tame ostriches; and to try their strength, says he, "I made a full grown negro mount the smallest, and two others the largest. This burden did not seem to me at all disproportioned to their strength.
At first they went a pretty high trot; and when they were heated a little, they expanded their wings, as if it were to catch the wind, and they moved with such fleetness as to seem to be off the ground. And I am satisfied that those ostriches would have distanced the fleetest race-horses that were ever bred in England."

As to netsah נטשא, here translated falcon, Mr.
Goode observes, that the term ynet naz ינת נז, is used generally by the Arabian writers to signify both falcon and hawk. And there can be little doubt that such is the real meaning of the Hebrew word; and that it imports various species of the falcon family, as jer-falcon, goss-hawk, and sparrow hawk.

"The argument drawn from natural history advances from quadrupeds to birds; and of birds those only are selected for description which are most common to the country in which the scene lies, and at the same time are most singular in their properties. Thus the ostrich is admirably contrasted with the stork and the eagle, as affording us an instance of a winged animal totally incapable of flight, but endued with an unrivalled rapidity of running, compared with birds whose flight is proverbially fleet, powerful, and persevering. Let man, in the pride of his wisdom, explain or arraign this difference of construction.

“Again, the ostrich is peculiarly opposed to the stork and to some species of the eagle in another sense, and a sense adverted to in the verses immediately ensuing: for the ostrich is well known to take little or no care of its eggs, or of its young; while the stork ever has been, and ever deserves to be, held in proverbial repute for its parental tenderness. The Hebrew word חסידה chasidah, imports kindness, or affection: and our own term stork, if derived from the Greek στοργή storgé, as some pretend, has the same original meaning” Goode’s Job.

Verse 14. Which leaveth her eggs in the earth] This want of parental affection in the ostrich is almost universally acknowledged. Mr. Jackson, in his Account of Morocco, observes: The ostrich, having laid her eggs, goes away, forgetting or forsaking them; and if some other ostrich discover them, she hatches them as if they were her own; forgetting probably whether they are or are not; so deficient is the recollection of this bird. This illustrates verse 15. And forgetteth that the foot may crush them, or that the wild beast may break them. The poet seems well acquainted with every part of the subject on which he writes; and facts incontestable confirm all he says. For farther illustration see the account from Dr. Shaw at the end of the chapter.

Verse 16. She is hardened against her young] See before, and the extracts from Dr. Shaw at the end of the chapter. She neglects her little ones, which are often found half-starved, straggling, and moaning about like so many deserted orphans, for their mother.

Verse 17. God hath deprived her of wisdom] Of this foolishness we have an account from the ancients; and here follow two instances: “1st, It covers its head in the reeds, and thinks itself all out of sight because itself cannot see. So Claudian:

Stat lumine clauso
Ridendum revoluta caput: creditque latere
Quæ non ipsa videt.

“2. They who hunt them draw the skin of an ostrich’s neck on one hand, which proves a sufficient lure to take them with the other. They have so little brain that Heliogabalus had six hundred heads for his supper. Here we may observe, that our judicious as well as sublime author just touches the great points of distinction in each creature, and then hastens to another. A description is exact when you cannot add but what is common to another thing; nor withdraw, but something peculiarly belonging to the thing described. A likeness is lost in too much description, as a meaning often in too much illustration.” Dr. Young.

Verse 18. She lifteth up herself] When she raiseth up herself to run away. Proofs of the fleetness of this bird have already been given. It neither flies nor runs distinctly, but has a motion composed of both; and, using its wings as sails, makes great speed. So Claudian:

Vasta ubi Libyæ venantum vocibus ales
Cum premitur, calidus cursu, transmittit arenas, Inque modum veli sinuatis flamine pennis Palcevolenta volat.

Xenophon says Cyrus had horses that could overtake the goat and the wild ass; but none that could reach this creature. A thousand golden ducats, or a hundred camels, was the stated price of a horse that could equal their speed.—Dr. Young.

Verse 19. Hast thou given the horse strength?] Before I proceed to any observations, I shall give Mr. Goode’s version of this, perhaps, inimitable description:—

- Ver. 19. Hast thou bestowed on the horse mettle?
Hast thou clothed his neck with the thunder flash?
- Ver. 20. Hast thou given him to launch forth as an arrow?
Terrible is the pomp of his nostrils.
- Ver. 21. He paweth in the valley, and exulteth.
Boldly he advanceth against the clashing host:
- Ver. 22. He mocketh at fear, and trembleth not:
Nor turneth he back from the sword.
- Ver. 23. Against him rattleth the quiver,
The glittering spear, and the shield:
- Ver. 24. With rage and fury he devoureth the ground;
And is impatient when the trumpet soundeth.
- Ver. 25. He exclaimeth among the trumpets, Alas!
And scenteth the battle afar off,
The thunder of the chieftains, and the shouting.

In the year 1713, a letter was sent to the GUARDIAN, which makes No. 86 of that work, containing a critique on this description, compared with similar descriptions in Homer and Virgil. I shall give the substance of it here: “The great Creator, who accommodated himself to those to whom he vouchsafed to speak, hath put into the mouths of his prophets such sublime sentiments and exalted language as must abash the pride and wisdom of man. In the Book of Job, the most ancient poem in the world, we have such paintings and descriptions as I have spoken of, in great variety. I shall at present make some remarks on the celebrated description of the horse in that holy book, and compare it with those drawn by Homer and Virgil.

“Homer hath the following similitude of a horse twice over in the Iliad, which Virgil hath copied from him; at least he hath deviated less from Homer, than Mr. Dryden hath from him.

Hom. II. vi. ver. 506. and II. xv. ver. 263.

Freed from his keepers, thus with broken reins,
The wanton courser prances o'er the plains;
Or in the pride of youth o'erleaps the mound,
And snuffs the female in forbidden ground:
Or seeks his watering in the well-known flood,
To quench his thirst, and cool his fiery blood:
He swims luxuriant in the liquid plain,
And o'er his shoulders flows his waving mane;
He neighs, he snorts, he bears his head on high:
Before his ample chest the frothy waters fly.

"Virgil's description is much fuller than the foregoing, which, as I said, is only a simile;
whereas Virgil professes to treat of the nature of the horse."

Tum, si qua sonum procul arma dederē,
Sare loco nescit: micat auribus, et tremat artus;

At duplex agitur per lumbos spina, cavatque
Tellurem, et solido graviter sonant ungula cornu.

Virgil, Georg. iii. ver. 83.

Which is thus admirably translated:

The fiery courser, when he hears from far,
The sprightly trumpets, and the shouts of war,
Pricks up his ears; and trembling with delight,
Shifts pace, and paws, and hopes the promis'd fight.
On his right shoulder his thick mane reel'd
Rattles at speed, and dances in the wind.
His horny hoofs are jetty black and round;
His chin is double; starting with a bound,
He turns the turf, and shakes the solid ground.
Fire from his eyes, clouds from his nostrils flow;
He bears his rider headlong on the foe.

"Now follows that on the Book of Job, which, under all the disadvantages of having been written in a language little understood, of being expressed in phrases peculiar to a part of the world whose manner of thinking and speaking seems to us very uncouth; and, above all, of appearing in a prose translation, is nevertheless so transcendently above the heathen descriptions; that hereby we may perceive how faint and languid the images are which are formed by mortal authors when compared with those which are figured, as it were, just as they appear in the eye of the Creator. God, speaking to Job, asks him:—

[To do our translators as much justice as possible, and to help the critic, I shall throw it in the hemistich form, in which it appears in the Hebrew, and in which all Hebrew poetry is written.]

Ver. 19. Hast thou given to the horse strength?
Hast thou clothed his neck with thunder?
Ver. 20. Canst thou make him afraid as a grasshopper?
The glory of his nostrils is terrible!
Ver. 21. He paweth in the valley, and rejoiceth in strength:
He goeth on to meet the armed men.
Ver. 22. He mocketh at fear, and is not affrighted:
Neither turneth he back from the sword.
Ver. 23. Against him rattleth the quiver,
The glittering spear, and the shield.
Ver. 24. He swalloweth the ground with rage and fierceness;
Nor doth he believe that it is the sound of the trumpet.
Ver. 25. He saith among the trumpets, He-ach! [pot.
And from afar he scenteth the battle,
The thunder of the captains, and the shouting.

"Here are all the great and sprightly images that thought can form of this generous beast, expressed in such force and vigour of style as would have given the great wits of antiquity new laws for the sublime, had they been acquainted with these writings.

"I cannot but particularly observe that whereas the classical poets chiefly endeavour to paint the outward figure, lineaments, and motions, the sacred poet makes all the beauties to flow from an inward principle in the creature he describes; and thereby gives great spirit and vivacity to his description. The following phrases and circumstances are singularly remarkable:

"Hast thou clothed his neck with thunder?"
Homer and Virgil mention nothing about the neck of the horse but his mane. The sacred author, by the bold figure of thunder, not only expresses the shaking of that remarkable beauty in the horse, and the flakes of hair, which naturally suggest the idea of lightning; but likewise the violent agitation and force of the neck, which in the oriental tongues had been flatly expressed by a metaphor less bold than this.

"Verse 20. Canst thou make him afraid as a grasshopper?" There is a two-fold beauty in this expression, which not only marks the courage of this beast, by asking if he can be scared; but likewise raises a noble image of his swiftness, by insinuating, that if he could be frightened, he would bound away with the nimbleness of a grasshopper.

"The glory of his nostrils is terrible." This is more strong and concise than that of Virgil, which yet is the noblest line that ever was written without inspiration.

Collectumque premens volvit sub naribus ignem:

Geor. iii. ver. 85.

And in his nostrils rolls collected fire."

"Ver. 21. He rejoiceth in his strength."
"Ver. 22. He mocketh at fear."
"Ver. 24. Neither believeth he that it is the sound of the trumpet."
"Ver. 25. He saith among the trumpets, Ha! Ha!"

are signs of courage, as I said before, flowing from an inward principle. There is a peculiar beauty in his not believing it is the sound of the trumpet: that is, he cannot believe it for joy: but when he was sure of it, and is among the trumpets, he saith, Ha! Ha! He neighs, he rejoices.

"His docility is elegantly painted in his being unmoved at the rattling quiver, the glittering spear and the shield, ver. 23. and is well imitated by Oppian, (who undoubtedly read Job as Virgil did) in his Poem upon Hunting.

Πως μὲν γὰρ τὸ μαχίστιν ἄρσιος ἐκλυσεν ἰσώως

P 2 Sam. 6: 15.

"He swalloweth the ground, ver. 24. is an expression for prodigious swiftness, in use among the Arabians, Job's countrymen, to the present day. The Latins have something like it:

Latuniquē fugā consumere campum. Nemesian.

'In flight the extended champaign to consume.'

Carpere prata fugā. Virg. Georg. iii. ver. 142.

'In flight to crop the meads.'

campumque volatu

Cum rapere, pedum vestigia queras.

'When in their flight, the champaign they have snatch'd,
No track is left behind.'

"It is indeed the boldest and noblest of images for swiftness; nor have I met with any thing that comes so near it, as Mr. Pope's in Windsor Forest

'Th' impatient courser pants in every vein,
And pawing, seems to beat the distant plain;
Hills, vales, and floods, appear already crost;
And ere he starts, a thousand steps are lost.'

"He smelleth the battle afar off, and what follows about the shouting, is a circumstance expressed with great spirit by Lucan:

'So when the ring with joyful shouts resounds,

'With rage and pride th' imprison'd courser bounds;

He frets, he foams, he rends his idle rein,

Springing o'er the fence, and headlong seeks the plain.'

This judicious and excellent critique has left me little to say on this sublime description of the horse: I shall add some cursory notes only.
In verse the 19th, we have the singular image, clothed his neck with thunder. How thunder and the horse's neck can be well assimilated to each other, I confess I cannot see. The author of the preceding critique seems to think, that the principal part of the allusion belongs to the shaking of this remarkable beauty (the mane) in a horse; and the flakes of hair, which naturally suggest the idea of lightning. I am satisfied, that the floating mane is here meant.
The original רעקת raemah, which Bochart and other learned men translate as above;
How much the mane of a horse shaking and waving in the wind adds to his beauty and stateliness, every one is sensible; and the Greek and Latin Poets, in their description of a horse, take notice of it. Thus, Homer,

Αυτί δὲ χεῖραι.

Ωμοῖς ἀιστοῦται. ILLAD, vi. ver. 509.

His mane dishevell'd o'er his shoulders flies.

And Virgil,

Ludentque per colla, per armos. En. xi. ver. 497.

The verb רעם raam, signifies to toss, to agitate; and may very properly be applied to the mane, for reasons obvious to all. Virgil has seized this characteristic in this fine line:
Georg. iii. ver. 86.

Densa juba et dextro jactata recumbit in armo,

His toss'd thick mane on his right shoulder falls.

Naturally, the horse is one of the most timid of animals; and this may be at once accounted for, from his small quantity of brain. Perhaps there is no animal of his size that has so little.
He acquires courage only from discipline; for naturally he starts with terror and affright at any sudden noise. It requires much discipline to bring him to hear the noise of drums and trumpets, and especially to bear a pair of kettle-drums placed on each side his neck, and beaten there, with the most alarming variety of sounds.

Query, Does the Sacred Text allude to any thing of this kind? I have been led to form this thought from the following circumstance.
In some ancient MSS. of the Shah Nameh, a most eminent-heroic poem, by the poet Ferdoosy, the Homer of India, in my own collection, adorned with paintings, representing regal interviews, animals, battles, &c. there appear in some places, representations of elephants, horses, and camels, with a pair of drums, something like our kettledrums, hanging on each side the animal's neck, and beaten by a person on the saddle, with two plectrums, or drumsticks; the neck itself being literally clothed with the drums, and housings on which they are fixed. Who is it then that has framed the disposition of such a timid animal, that by proper discipline it can bear those thundering sounds, which at first would have scared it to the uttermost of distraction? The capacity to receive discipline and instruction is as great a miracle of the wisdom of God, as the formation of the bodies of the largest, smallest, or most complex animals is of his power. I leave this observation without laying any stress upon it.
On such difficult subjects conjecture has a lawful range.

Verse 21. He paweth in the valley] יחפר yachperu, they dig in the valley, i. e. in his violent galloping, in every pitch of his body, he scoops up sods out of the earth. Virgil has seized this idea also, in his cavat-tellurem-ungula. He scoops out the ground with his hoofs. See before.

Verse 25. He saith among the trumpets, Ha, ha!] The original is peculiarly emphatical:— האח He-ach! a strong, partly nasal, partly guttural sound, exactly resembling the first note which the horse emits in neighing. The strong guttural sounds in this hemistich are exceedingly expressive: האח ורעקת ירם חמחח Heach! u-merachok ya-ri-ach, mil-chamah. "Heach! for, from afar, he scenteth the battle."

The reader will perceive that Mr. Goode has given a very different meaning to verse 20 from that in the present text, Canst thou make him afraid as a grasshopper? by translating the Hebrew thus:

Hasst thou given him to launch forth as an arrow?

The word arah arabab, which we translate locust, or grasshopper, and which he derives from רבא rabah, the aleph being merely for-ideas of rapidity and córuscation.^b This is the principal alteration which this learned man has made in the text.

I shall conclude on this subject by giving Coverdale's translation:—Hast thou given the horse its strength, or lerned him to bow down his neck with feare; that he letteth himself be droghen forth like a gresshopper, where as the stoute nyepenge that he maketh is fearfull? He breaketh the grounde with the boffes of his fete chearfully in his strength, and runneth to mete the harness men. He layeth aside all feare, his stomack is not abated, nether starteth he aback for eny swerde. Though the qubers rattle upon him, though the speare and shilde glistre: yet tussbeth he in fearfully, and beateth upon the grounde. He feareth not the noyse of the trompettes, but as soone as he heareth the shawmes blowe, Tush (sayeth he) for he smelleth the batell asafarre of, the noyse, the captaynes, and the shoutinge.

Verse 26. Doth the hawk fly by thy wisdom] The hawk is called 31 nets, from its swiftness in darting down upon its prey: hence its Latin name, nisus, which is almost the same as the Hebrew. It may probably mean the fulcon. Dr. Shaw observes. The flight of a strong falcon is wonderfully swift. A falcon belonging to the duke of Cleves flew out of Westphalia into Prussia in one day; and, in the county of Norfolk, a hawk has made a flight at a woodcock of near thirty miles in an hour. Thuanus says, A hawk flew from London to Paris in one night. It was owing to its swiftness that the Egyptians in their hieroglyphics made it the emblem of the wind.

Stretch her wings toward the south?] Most of the falcon tribe pass their spring and summer in cold climates; and wing their way toward warmer regions on the approach of winter. This is what is here meant by stretching her wings toward the south. Is it through thy teaching that this or any other bird of passage knows the precise time for taking flight; and the direction in which she is to go in order to come to a warmer climate? There is much of the wisdom and providence of God to be seen in the migration of birds of passage. This has been remarked before. There is a beautiful passage in Jeremiah, chap. viii. 7. on the same subject:—the stork in the heavens knoweth her appointed times; and the turtle, and the crane, and the swallow, observe the time of their coming; but my people know not the judgment of the Lord.

Verse 27. Doth the eagle mount up] The eagle is said to be of so acute a sight, that when she is so high in the air that man cannot see her, she can discern a small fish in the water! See on ver. 29.

Verse 28. Upon the crag of the rock] שן סלע shen selâ, the tooth of the rock; i. e. some projecting part, whither adventurous man himself dares not follow her.

And the strong place.] וצורה u-metsudah. Mr. Goode translates this word ravin, and joins it to ver. 29. thus: And thence espieth the ravin: her eyes trace the prey afar off.

Verse 29. Her eyes behold afar off.] The eagle was proverbial for her strong and clear sight. So Horace, lib. i. sat. iii. ver. 25.

*Cum tua perovides oculis mala lippis inunctis,
Cur in amicorum vitis tam cernis acutum,
Quam aut aquila, aut serpens Ephyraurus?*

For, wherefore, while you carelessly pass by Your own worst vices with unheeding eye,
Why so sharp-sighted in another's fame,
Strong as an eagle's ken, or dragon's beam? Francis.

So Ælian, lib. i. cap. 42. and Homer, Iliad xvii. alls the eagle εὔστατος—εὐστατος αἰετὸς, the most quick-sighted of all fowls under heaven.

Verse 30. Her young ones also suck up blood] The eagle does not feed her young with carrion, but with prey newly slain, so that they may suck up blood.

Where the slain are, there is she.] These words are quoted by our Lord, Whosoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together, Matt. xxiv. 28. It is likely, however, that this was a proverbial mode of expression: and our Lord adapts it to the circumstances of the Jewish people, who were about to fall a prey to the Romans. See the notes there.

In the preceding notes I have referred to Dr. Shaw's account of the ostrich as the most accurate and authentic yet published. With the following description I am sure every intelligent reader will be pleased.

"In commenting, therefore, upon these texts it may be observed, that when the ostrich is full grown, the neck, particularly of the male, which before was almost naked, is now very beautifully covered with red feathers. The plumage likewise upon the shoulders, the back, and some parts of the wings, from being hitherto of a dark grayish colour, becomes now as black as jet; while the rest of the feathers retain an exquisite whiteness. They are, as described ver. 13. the very feathers and plumage of the stork; i. e. they consist of such black and white feathers as the stork, called from thence חסידה chasideh, is known to have. But the belly, the thighs, and the breast, do not partake of this covering; being usually naked, and, when touched, are of the same warmth as the flesh of quadrupeds.

"Under the joint of the great pinion, and sometimes under the lesser, there is a strong pointed excrescence, like a cock's spur; with which it is said to prick and stimulate itself, and thereby acquire fresh strength and vigour whenever it is pursued. But nature seems rather to have intended that, in order to prevent the suffocating effects of too great a plethora, a loss of blood should be consequent thereupon, especially as the ostrich appears to be of a hot constitution, with lungs always confined, and consequently liable to be preternaturally inflamed upon these occasions.

"When these birds are surprised by coming suddenly upon them while they are feeding in some valley, or behind some rocky or sandy eminence in the deserts, they will not stay to be curiously viewed and examined. Neither are the Arabs ever dexterous enough to overtake them, even when they are mounted upon their jinse, or horses, as they are called, of family. They, when they raise themselves up for flight, (ver. 18.) laugh at the horse and his rider. They afford him an opportunity only of admiring at a distance the extraordinary agility and the stateliness of their motions, the richness of their plumage, and the great propriety there was of ascribing to them (ver. 13.) an expanded quivering wing. Nothing certainly can be more beautiful and entertaining than such a sight! The wings, by their repeated, though unwearied vibrations, equally serving them for sails and oars, while their feet, no less assisting in conveying them out of sight, are in no degree sensible of fatigue.

"By the repeated accounts which I have had from my conductors, as well as from Arabs of different places, I have been informed that the ostrich lays from thirty to fifty eggs. Ælian mentions more than eighty; but I never heard of so large a number. The first egg is deposited in the centre; the rest are placed as convenient as possible round about it. In this manner it is said to lay, deposit, or trust (ver. 14.) her eggs in the earth, and to warm them in the sand, and forgetteth, (as they are not placed like those of some other birds upon trees, or in the clefts of rocks, &c.) that the foot (of the traveller) may crush them, or that the wild beasts may break them.

"Yet, notwithstanding the ample provision which is hereby made for a numerous offspring, scarce one quarter of these eggs are ever supposed to be hatched: and of those that are, no small share of the young ones may perish with hunger, from being left too early by their dams to shift for themselves. For in these, the most barren and desolate recesses of the Sahara, where the ostrich chooses to make her nest, it would not be enough to lay eggs and hatch them, unless some proper food was near at hand, and already prepared for their nourishment. And, accordingly, we are not to consider this large collection of eggs as if they were all intended for a brood; they are, the greatest part of them, reserved for food: which the dam breaks and disposes of according to the number and the cravings of her young ones.

"But yet, for all this, a very little share of that strong, or natural affection, which so strongly exerts itself in most other creatures, is observable in the ostrich. For, upon the least distant noise, or trivial occasion, she forsakes her eggs, or her young ones, to which, perhaps, she never returns; or if she do, it may be too late either to restore life to the one, or to preserve the lives of the other. Agreeably to this account, the Arabs meet sometimes with whole nests of these eggs undisturbed; some of which are sweet and good, others are addle and corrupted; others again have their young ones of different growths, according to the time it may be presumed they have been forsaken by the dam. They oftener meet a few of the little ones, no bigger than well-grown pullets, half-starved, straggling and moaning about, like so many distressed orphans, for their mother. And in this manner the ostrich may be said (ver. 16.) to be hardened against her young ones as though they were not hers; her labour (in hatching and attending them so far,) being in vain without fear, or the least concern of what becomes of them afterward. This want of affection is also recorded Lam. iv. 3. The daughter of my people, says the prophet, is cruel, like the ostriches in the wilderness.

"Neither is this the only reproach that may be due to the ostrich; she is likewise inconsiderate and foolish in her private capacity; particularly in the choice of food, which is frequently highly detrimental and pernicious to it; for she swallows every thing greedily and indiscriminately, whether it be pieces of rags, leather, wood, stone, or iron. When I was at Oran, I saw one of these birds swallow, without any seeming uneasiness or inconvenience, several leaden bullets, as they were thrown upon the floor, scorching hot from the mould; the inner coats of the œsophagus and stomach being probably better stocked with glands and juices, than in other animals with shorter necks. They are particularly fond of their own excrement, which they greedily eat up as soon as it is voided. No less fond are they of the dung of hens and other poultry. It seems as if their optic as well as olfactory nerves were less adequate and conducive to their safety and preservation than in other creatures. The divine providence in this, no less than in other respects, (ver. 17.) having deprived them of wisdom, neither hath it imparted to them understanding.

"Those parts of the Sahara which these birds chiefly frequent, are destitute of all manner of food and herbage, except it be some few tufts of coarse grass; or else a few other solitary plants, of the laureola, apocynum, and some other kinds, each of which is equally destitute of nourishment: and in the Psalmist's phrase (cxix. 6.) even withereth afore it be plucked up. Yet these herbs, notwithstanding their dryness, and want of moisture in their temperature, will sometime have both their leaves and their stalks studded all over with a great variety of land snails; which may afford them some little refreshment. It is very probable, likewise, that they may sometimes seize upon lizards, serpents, together with insects and reptiles of various kinds. Yet still, considering the great voracity and size of this camel-bird, it is wonderful, not only how the little ones, after they are weaned from the provisions I have mentioned, should be brought up and nourished, but even how those of fuller growth, and much better qualified to look out for themselves, are able to subsist.

"Their organs of digestion, and particularly the gizzards, (which, by their strong friction, will wear away iron itself,) show them indeed to be granivorous; but yet, they have scarce ever an opportunity to exercise them in this way, unless when they chance to stray (which is very seldom,) toward those parts of the country which are sown and cultivated. For these, as they are much frequented by the Arabs at the several seasons of grazing, ploughing, and gathering in the harvest; so they are little visited by, as indeed they would be an improper abode for, this shy, timorous bird; a lover (εραστής,) of the deserts. This last circumstance in the behaviour of the ostrich is frequently alluded to in the Holy Scriptures, particularly Isai. xiii. 21. and xxxiv. 13. and xliii. 20. Jer. i. 39. where the word (ננך jaanah) instead of being rendered the ostrich, as it is rightly put in the margin, is called the owl; a word used likewise instead of jaanah, or the ostrich, Lev. xi. 16. and Deut. xiv. 15.

"While I was abroad, I had several opportunities of amusing myself with the actions and behaviour of the ostrich. It was very diverting to observe with what dexterity and equivoise of body it would play and frisk about on all occasions. In the heat of the day particularly, it would strut along the sunny side of the house with great majesty. It would be perpetually fanning and priding itself with its quivering expanded wings; and seem at every turn to admire and be in love with its shadow. Even at other times, whether walking about, or resting itself upon the ground, the wings would continue these fanning, vibrating motions, as if they were designed to mitigate and assuage that extraordinary heat wherewith their bodies seem to be naturally affected.

"Notwithstanding these birds appear tame and tractable to such persons of the family as were more known and familiar to them, yet they were often very rude and fierce to strangers, especially the poorer sort, whom they would not only endeavour to push down, by running furiously upon them; but would not cease to peck at them violently with their bills, and to strike them with their feet; whereby they were frequently very mischievous. For the inward claw, or hoof, rather, as we may call it, of this avis bisulca, being exceedingly strong-pointed and angular; I once saw an unfortunate person who had his belly ripped open by one of these strokes. While they are engaged in these combats and assaults, they sometimes make a fierce, angry, and hissing noise, with their throats inflated, and their mouths open; at other times, when less resistance is made, they have a chuckling or cackling voice, as in the poultry kind: and thereby seem to rejoice and laugh, as it were, at the timorousness of their adversary. But, during the lonesome part of the night, (as if their organs of voice had then attained a quite different tone,) they often made a very doleful and hideous noise; which would be sometimes like the roaring of a lion; at other times it would bear a nearer resemblance to the hoarser voices of other quadrupeds, particularly of the bull and the ox. I have often heard them groan, as if they were in the greatest agonies; an action beautifully alluded to by the prophet Micah, (i. 8.) where it is said, I will make a mourning like the jaanah, or ostrich. Jaanah, therefore, and ננין rinonim, the names by which the ostrich is known in the Holy Scriptures, may very properly be deduced from נן onah and נן ronan, words which the lexicographi explain by exclamare, or clamare fortiter; for the noise made by the ostrich being loud and sonorous, exclamare, or, clamare fortiter, may, with propriety enough, be attributed to it; especially as those words do not seem to denote any certain or determined mode of voice or sound peculiar to any one particular species of animals, but such as may be applicable to them all, to birds as well as to quadrupeds and other creatures." Shaw's Travels, page 451. edit. 4to. 1757.

The subjects in this chapter have been so various and important, that I have been obliged to extend the notes and observations to an unusual length; and yet much is left unnoticed which I wished to have inserted: but I have made the best selection I could; and must request those readers who wish for more information, to consult zoological writers.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XL.

Verse 1. Moreover the Lord answered] That is, the Lord continued his discourse with Job. Answered, does not refer to any thing said by Job, or any question asked.

I think it very likely that this whole piece from the beginning of this first verse to the end of the fourteenth, was originally the ending of the poem. Mr. Heath has noticed this, and I shall lay his words before the reader: "The former part of this chapter is evidently the conclusion of the poem; the latter part whereof seems to be in great disorder, whether it has happened from the carelessness of the transcriber, or, (which appears most probable,) from the skins of parchment composing the roll having by some accident changed their places. It is plain, from the seventh verse of the forty-second chapter, that Jehovah is the last speaker in the poem. If, then, immediately after the end of the thirty-ninth chapter we subjoin the fifteenth verse of the fortieth chapter, and place the fourteen first verses of the fortieth chapter immediately after the sixth verse of the forty-second chapter, and by that means make them the conclusion of the poem, all will be right: and this seventh verse of the forty-second chapter will be in its natural order. The action will be complete by the judgment of the Almighty; and the catastrophe of the poem will be grand and solemn." To these reasons of Mr. Heath, Dr. Kennicott has added others, which the reader may find at the end of the chapter. Without taking any farther notice of this transposition in this place, I will continue the notes in the present order of the verses.

Verse 2. He that reproveth God, let him answer it.] Let the man who has made so free with God and his government, answer to what he has now heard.

are rolled round with strong filleting, so that not one feature can be seen, not even the protuberance of the nose. On the outside of these involutions, a human face is ordinarily painted;
but as to the real face itself, it is emphatically bound in secret; for those rollers are never intended to be removed.

Verse 14. Thine own right hand can save thee. It is the prerogative of God alone to save the human soul.* Nothing less than unlimited power, exerted under the direction and impulse of unbounded mercy, can save a sinner. This is most clearly asserted in this speech of Jehovah. When thou canst extend an arm like God, i. e. an uncontrollable power;—when thou canst arm thyself with the lightning of heaven, and thunder with a voice like God;—when thou canst deck thyself with the ineffable glory, beauty, and splendour of the supreme majesty of Jehovah;—when thou canst dispense thy judgments over all the earth, to abase the proud, and tread down the wicked;—when thou canst, as having the keys of hell and death, blend the high and the low in the dust together; then I will acknowledge to thee that thy own right hand can save thee. In other words, salvation belongeth unto the Lord: no man can save his own soul by works of righteousness which he has done, is doing, or can possibly do, to all eternity! Without Jesus, every human spirit must have perished everlastingly. Glory be to God for his unspeakable gift!

Verse 15. Behold now behemoth. The word behemoth, is the plural of behemah, which signifies cattle in general, or gramivorous animals, as distinguished from chayot, all wild or carnivorous animals, see Gen. i. 24. The former seems to intend kine, horses, asses, sheep, &c. and all employed in domestic or agricultural matters: the latter, all wild and savage beasts, such as lions, bears, tigers, &c. but the words are not always taken in these senses.

In this place it has been supposed to mean some animal of the beeeve kind. The Vulgate retains the Hebrew name; so do the Syriac and Arabic. The Chaldee is indefinite, translating creature, or animal. And the Septuagint is not less explicit, translating by beast, beast or wild beast; and old Coverdale, the ruell beaste.

Verse 4. Behold, I am vile. I acknowledge my inward defilement. I cannot answer thee.

I will lay mine hand upon my mouth. I cannot excuse myself, and I must be dumb before thee.

Verse 5. Once have I spoken. See ch. xlii. 3, &c.

I will proceed no farther. I shall attempt to justify myself no longer: I have spoken repeatedly; and am confounded at my want of respect for my Maker, and at the high thoughts which I have entertained of my own righteousness. All is impurity in the presence of thy majesty.

Verse 7. Gird up thy loins. See chap. xxxviii. 1—3. Some think that this and the preceding verse have been repeated here from chap. xxxviii. 1—3, and that several of the words there, here, and chap. xlii. 3. have been repeated, in after times, to connect some false gatherings of the sheets of parchment on which the end of this poem was originally written. See on ver. 1. and at the end of the chapter.

Verse 8. Wilt thou condemn me? Rather than submit to be thought in the wrong, wilt thou condemn my conduct in order to justify thyself? Some men will never acknowledge themselves in the wrong. God may err, but they cannot, seems to be their impious maxim. Unwillingness to acknowledge a fault frequently leads men, directly or indirectly, to this sort of blasphemy. There are three words most difficult to be pronounced in all languages, I AM WRONG.

Verse 9. Hast thou an arm like God? Every word from this to the end of verse 14 has a wonderful tendency to bumble the soul: and it is no wonder that at the conclusion of these sayings Job fell in the dust confounded, and ascribed righteousness to his Maker.

Verse 10. Deck thyself now with majesty. Act like God, seeing thou hast been assuming to thyself perfections that belong to him alone.

Verse 13. Hide them in the dust together. Blend the high and the low, the rich and the poor, in one common ruin. Show them that thou art supreme, and canst do whatsoever thou pleasest.

Bind their faces in secret. This seems to refer to the custom of preserving mummies: the whole body is wrapped round with strong swaths of linen or cotton cloth. Not only the limbs, but the very head, face, and all, perhaps as near to the truth as any of them. From the name, therefore, or the understanding had of it by the ancient versions, we can derive no assistance relative to the individuality of the animal in question; and can only hope to find what it is by the characteristics it bears in the description here given of it.

These having been carefully considered, and deeply investigated, both critics and naturalists have been led to the conclusion, that either the elephant, or the hippopotamus or river-horse, is the animal in question: and, on comparing the characteristics between these two, the balance is considerably in favour of the hippopotamus. But even here there are still some difficulties, as there are some parts of the description which do not well suit even the hippopotamus; and, therefore, I have my doubts whether either of the animals above is that in question, or whether any animal now in existence be that described by the Almighty.

Mr. Goode supposes, and I am of the same opinion, that the animal here described is now extinct. The skeletons of three lost genera have actually been found out: these have been termed palæotherium, anoplotherium, and mastodonton or mammoth. From an actual examination of a part of the skeleton of what is termed the mammoth, I have described it in my note on Gen. i. 24.

As I do not believe that either the elephant or the river-horse is intended here, I shall not take up my reader's time with any detailed description. The elephant is well known; and, though not an inhabitant of these countries, has been so often imported in a tame state, and so frequently occurs in exhibitions of wild beasts, that multitudes, even of the common people, have seen this tremendous, docile, and sagacious animal. Of the hippopotamus, or river-horse, little is generally known but by description, as the habits of this animal will not permit him to be caught or tamed. His amphibious nature prevents his becoming a constant resident on dry land.

The hippopotamus inhabits the rivers of Africa and the lakes of Ethiopia; feeds generally by night; wanders only a few miles from water; feeds on vegetables and roots of trees, but never on fish; lays waste whole plantations of the sugar-cane, rice, and other grain. When angered or wounded, it will attack boats and men with much fury. It moves slowly and heavily; swims dexterously; walks deliberately and leisurely over head into the water; and pursues his way, even on all fours, on the bottom; but cannot remain long under the water, without rising to take in air. It sleeps in reedy places; has a tremendous voice. between the lowing of an ox, and the roaring of the elephant. Its head is large, its mouth very wide, its skin is thick and almost devoid of hair, and its tail is naked and about a foot long. It is nearly as large as the elephant, and some have been found seventeen feet long. Mr. Goode observes: "Both the elephant and hippopotamus, are naturally quiet animals; and never interfere with the grazing of others of different kinds, unless they be irritated. The behemoth, on the contrary, is represented as a quadruped of a ferocious nature; and formed for tyranny, if not rapacity: equally lord of the floods and of the mountains: rushing with rapidity of foot, instead of slowness or stateliness: and possessing a rigid and enormous tail, like a cedar-tree; instead of a short naked tail, of about a foot long, as the hippopotamus, or a weak, slender, hog-shaped tail, as the elephant."

The mammoth, for size, will answer the description in this place, especially verse 19. He is the chief of the ways of God. That to which the part of a skeleton belonged, which I examined, must have been, by computation, not less than twenty-five feet high, and sixty feet in length! the bones of one toe I measured, and found them three feet in length! One of the very smallest grinders of an animal of this extinct species, full of processes on the surface more than an inch in depth, which shows that the animal had lived on flesh, I have just now weighed, and found it, in its very dry state, four pounds eight ounces, avoirdupois: the same grinder of an elephant I have weighed also, and find it just two pounds. The mammoth, therefore, from this proportion, must have been as large as two elephants and a quarter. We may judge by this of its size; elephants are frequently ten and eleven feet high; this will make the mammoth at least twenty-five, or twenty-six feet high: and as it appears to have been a many-toed animal, the springs which such a creature could make must have been almost incredible: nothing by swiftness could have escaped its pursuit. God seems to have made it as the proof of his power; and had it been prolific, and not become extinct, it would have depopulated the earth. Creatures of this kind must have been living in the days of Job: the behemoth is referred to here, as if perfectly and commonly known.

He eateth grass as an ox. This seems to be referred to as if something remarkable in this animal; that, though from the form of his teeth, he must have been carnivorous, yet he ate grass as an ox. He lived both on animal and vegetable food.

Verse 16. His strength is in his loins. This refers to his great agility, notwithstanding his bulk; by the strength of his loins he was able to make vast springs, and make astonishing bounds.

Verse 17. He moveth his tail like a cedar. Therefore, it was neither the elephant, who has a tail like that of a hog, nor the hippopotamus, whose tail is only about a foot long.

The sinews of his stones. I translate with Mr. Goode, and for the same reasons, the sinews of his haunches, which is still more characteristic; as the animal must have excelled in leaping.

Verse 18. His bones are as strong pieces of brass;—bars of iron. The tusk I have mentioned above is uncommonly hard, solid, and weighty for its size.

Verse 19. He is the chief of the ways of God.

He that made him.] No power of man or beast can overcome him. God alone can overcome him, and God alone could make his sword (of extinction) approach to him.

Verse 20. The mountains bring him forth food.] It cannot therefore be the hippopotamus, as he is seldom found far from the rivers where he has his chief residence.

Where all the beasts of the field play.] He frequents those places where he can have most prey. He makes a mock of all the beasts of the field. They can neither resist his power, nor escape from his agility. All this answers to what we know of the mammoth, but not at all to the hippopotamus.

Verse 21. He lieth under the shady trees.]
This and the following verses refer to certain habits of the behemoth, with which we are, and must be, unacquainted.

Verse 22. The willows of the brook compass him.] This would agree well enough with the hippopotamus.

Verse 23. Behold, he drinketh up a river.]
A similar mode of expression, and of precisely the same meaning as that in chap. xxxiv. 24.
He swalloweth the ground with fierceness. No river can stop his course: he wades through all; stems every tide and torrent; and hurries not as though he were in danger.

He trusteth that he can draw up Jordan.]
Even when the river overflows its banks, it is no stoppage to him: though the whole impetuosity of its stream rush against his mouth, he is not afraid. Mr. Goode has seized the true idea in his translation of this verse:

"If the stream rage, he revileth not;
He is unmoved, though Jordan rush against his mouth."

From this mention of Jordan it is probable that the behemoth was once an inhabitant of the mountains, marshes, and woods, of the land of Palestine.

Verse 24. He taketh it with his eyes.] He looks at the sweeping tide, and defies it.

His nose pierceth through snares.] If fences of strong stakes be made in order to restrain him, or prevent him from passing certain boundaries, he tears them in pieces with his teeth; or, by pressing his nose against them, breaks them off. If other parts of the description would answer, this might well apply to the elephant, the nose here meaning the pro-boscis, with which he can split trees, or even tear them up from the roots!

Thus ends the description of the behemoth;
what I suppose to be the mastodonton, or mammoth, or some creature of this kind, that God made as the chief of his works, exhibited in various countries for a time, cut them off from their shadow; the willows of the brook compass him about.

a river, and hasteth not: he trusteth

the earth, but by his providence preserves many of their skeletons, that succeeding ages might behold the mighty power which produced this chief of the ways of God, and admire that providence which rendered the race extinct, that otherwise would, in all probability, have extinguished every other race of animals!

I am not unapprised of the strong arguments produced by learned men to prove, on the one hand, that behemoth is the elephant; and, on the other, that he is the hippopotamus, or river-horse: and I have carefully read all that Bochart, that chief of learned men, has said upon the subject. But I am convinced that an animal now extinct, probably of the kind already mentioned, is the creature pointed out and described by the inspiration of God in this chapter.

On ver. 30. of the preceding chapter we have seen, from Mr. Heath's remarks, that the fourteen first verses were probably transposed.
In the following observations Dr. Kennicott appears to prove the point.

"It will be here objected, that the poem could not possibly end with this question from Job; and, among other reasons, for this in particular; because we read in the very next verse,
That after the Lord had spoken these words unto Job, &c. If, therefore, the last speaker was not Job, but The Lord, Job could not originally have concluded this poem as he does at present.

"This objection I hold to be exceedingly important; and, indeed, to prove decisively that the poem must have ended at first with some speech from God.

"And this remark leads directly to a very interesting inquiry: What was at first the conclusion of this poem? This may, I presume, be pointed out and determined, not by the alteration of any one word, but only by allowing a dislocation of the fourteen verses, which now begin the fortieth chapter. Chapters xxxviii.
xxxix. xl. and xli. contain a magnificent display of the divine power and wisdom in the works of the Creator; specifying the lion, raven, wild-goat, wild-ass, unicorn, peacock, ostrich, horse, hawk, eagle, behemoth, and leviathan.

"Now, it must have surprised most readers to find that the description of these creatures is strangely interrupted at chap. xl. 1; and as strangely resumed afterward at chap. xl. 15.
And, therefore, if these fourteen verses will connect with, and regularly follow, what now ends the poem, we cannot much doubt that these fourteen verses have again found their true station, and should be restored to it.

"The greatness of the supposed transposition is no objection: because so many verses as would fill one piece of vellum in an ancient roll, might be easily sewed in before or after its proper place. In the case before us, the twenty-five lines, in the first fourteen verses of chapter xl. seem to have been sewed in improperly after chap. xxxix. 30. instead of after chap. xlii. 6. That such large parts have been transposed in rolls, (to make which the parts are sewed together,) is absolutely certain: and that this has been the case here is still more probable for the following reason:

"The lines here supposed to be out of place are twenty-five, and contain ninety-two words; which might be written on one piece, or page, of vellum. But the MS. in which these twenty-five lines made one page must be supposed to have the same, or nearly the same, number of lines in each of the pages adjoining. And it would greatly strengthen this presumption if these twenty-five lines would fall in regularly at the end of any other set of lines, nearly of the same number:—if they would fall in after the next set of twenty-five, or the second set, or the third, or the fourth, &c. Now, this is actually the case here; for the lines after these twenty-five being one hundred or one hundred and one, make just four times twenty-five. And, therefore, if we consider these one hundred and twenty-five lines as written on five equal pieces of vellum; it follows, that the fifth piece might be carelessly sewed up before the other four.

"Let us also observe the present disorder of the speeches, which is this. In chapters xxxviii. and xxxix. God first speaks to Job. The end of chap. xxxix. is followed by, And the Lord answered Job and said, while yet Job had not replied. At chap. xl. 3–5. Job answers; but he says, he had then spoken twice, and he would add no more; whereas, this was his first reply, and he speaks afterwards. From chap. xl. 15. to xli. 34. are now the descriptions of behemoth and leviathan; which would regularly follow the descriptions of the horse, hawk, and eagle. And from chap. xlii. 1. to xlii. 6. is now Job's speech; after which we read in ver. 7. After the Lord had spoken these words unto Job!

"Now, all these confusions are removed at once if we only allow that a piece of vellum containing the twenty-five lines, (chap. xl. 1–14.) originally followed chap. xlii. 6. For then, after God's first speech, ending with leviathan, Job replies. Then God—to whom Job replies the second time, when he added no more. And then God addresses him the third; when Job is silent, and the poem concludes; upon which the narrative opens regularly, with saying,—After the Lord had spoken these words unto Job, &c. chap. xlii. ver. 7." Kenicot's remarks, p. 161.

The reader will find much more satisfaction if he read the places as above directed. Having ended chap. xxxix. proceed immediately to ver. 15. of chap. xl.; go on regularly to the end of ver. 6. of chap. xlii. and immediately after that add the fourteen first verses of chap. xl. We shall find then that the poem has a consistent and proper ending, and that the concluding speech was spoken by JEHOVAH.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XLI.

Verse 1. Canst thou draw out leviathan] We come now to a subject not less perplexing than that over which we have passed; and a subject on which learned men are less agreed than on the preceding. What is leviathan? The Hebrew word לָוִיָּאֵת, leviathan, is retained by the Vulgate and the Chaldee. The Septuagint have Ἀζύς, de' Drakontā; Canst thou draw out the DRAGON? The Syriac and Arabic have the same. A species of whale has been supposed to be the creature in question: but the description suits no animal but the crocodile, or alligator; and it is not necessary to seek elsewhere. The crocodile is a natural inhabitant of the Nile, and other Asiatic and African rivers. It is a creature of enormous voracity and strength, as well as fleetness in swimming. He will attack the largest animals, and even men, with the most daring impetuosity. In proportion to his size he has the largest mouth of all monsters. The upper jaw is armed with forty sharp, strong teeth, and the under jaw with thirty-eight. He is clothed with such a coat of mail as cannot be pierced; and can in every direction resist a musket ball. The Hebrew לָוִיָּאֵת, levi in ten, signifies the coupled dragon; but what this is we know not, unless the crocodile be meant.

2 Canst thou^d put a hook

With a hook]. That crocodiles were caught with a baited hook, at least one species of crocodile, we have the testimony of Herodotus, lib. ii. c. 70. Ἐρῶσαν γὰρ τὸν σποδὸν δειλασθὲν ἀπὸ ἀγκίστρων, μετὰ τε μέσῳ τοῦ ποταμοῦ, κ. τ. κ. "They take the back or chine of a swine, and bait a hook with it, and throw it into the midst of the river; and the fisherman stands at some distance on the shore holding a young pig, which he irritates, in order to make it squeak. When the crocodile hears this, he immediately makes toward the sound; and, finding the baited hook in his way, swallows it, and is then drawn to land, when they dash mud into his eyes, and blind him; after which he is soon despatched." In this way it seems leviathan was drawn out by a hook: but it was undoubtedly both a difficult and dangerous work, and but barely practicable in the way in which Herodotus relates the matter.

Or his tongue with a cord] It is probable that when the animal was taken, they had some method of casting a noose round his tongue, when opening his mouth; or piercing it with some barbed instrument. Thevenot says that, in order to take the crocodile, they dig holes on the banks of the river, and cover them with sticks. The crocodiles fall into these, and cannot get out. They leave them there for several days without food, and then let down nooses which they pitch on their jaws, and thus draw them out. This is probably what is meant here.

Verse 2. Canst thou put a hook into his nose? Canst thou put a ring in his nose, and lead him about as thou dost thine ox? In the East they frequently lead the oxen and buffaloes with a ring in their noses.

Bore his jaw through with a thorn? Some have thought that this means, Canst thou deal with him as with one of those little fish which thou stringest on a rush by means of the thorn at its end? Or, perhaps, it may refer to those ornaments with which they sometimes adorned their horses, mules, camels, &c.

Verse 3. Will he make many supplications? There are several allusions in these verses to matters of which we know nothing.

Verse 4. Will he make a covenant? Canst thou hire him as thou wouldest a servant,—who is to be so attached to thy family as to have his ear bored, that he may abide in thy house for ever? Is not this an allusion to the law? Exod. xxi. 1—6.

Verse 5. Wilt thou play with him? Is he such a creature as thou canst tame; and of which thou canst make a pet, and give as a plaything to thy little girls; נִרְדֵּי נֶאֱרֹטֵיכָה נֶאֱרֹטֵיכָה probably alluding to the custom of catching birds, tying a string to their legs, and giving them to children to play with; a custom execrable as ancient, and disgraceful as modern!

Verse 6. Shall thy companions make a banquet? Canst thou and thy friends feast on him as ye were wont to do on a camel sacrificed for this purpose? Or, Canst thou dispose of his flesh to the merchants, to buyers, as thou wouldest do that of a camel, or an ox? It is certain, according to Herodotus, lib. ii. c. 70. that they killed and ate crocodiles at Apollonopolis and Elephantis, in Egypt.

Verse 7. Canst thou fill his skin with barbed irons? This refers to some kind of harpoon work, similar to that employed in taking whales, and which they might use for some other kinds of animals; for the skin of the crocodile could not be pierced. Herrera says that he saw a crocodile defend itself against thirty men; and that they fired six balls at it without being able to wound it. It can only be wounded under the belly.

Verse 8. Lay thine hand upon him? Mr. Heath translates, "Be sure thou strike home. Mind thy blow: rely not upon a second stroke."

Mr. Goode translates:

"Make ready thy hand against him.
Dare the contest; be firm."

He is a dangerous animal; when thou attackest him, be sure of thy advantage; if thou miss, thou art ruined. Depend not on other advantages, if thou miss the first. Kill him at once, or he will kill thee.

Verse 9. Behold, the hope? If thou miss thy first advantage, there is no hope afterward: the very sight of this terrible monster would dissipate thy spirit, if thou hadst not a positive advantage against his life, or a place of sure retreat to save thine own.

Verse 10. None is so fierce that dare stir him up? The most courageous of men dare not provoke the crocodile to fight; or attempt to rouse him when, sated with fish, he takes his repose among the reeds: and the strongest of men cannot match him.

Who then is able? If thou canst not stand against the crocodile, one of the creatures of my hand; how canst thou resist me, who am his maker? This is the use which God makes of the formidable description which he has thus far given of this terrible animal.

Verse 11. Who hath prevented me? Who is it that hath laid me under obligation to him? Do I need my creatures? All under the heavens is my property.

Verse 12. I will not conceal his parts? This is most certainly no just translation of the original. The Vulgate is to this effect: I will not spare him; nor yield to his powerful words, framed for the purpose of entreaty. Mr. Goode applies it to leviathan:

"I cannot be confounded at his limbs and violence:
The strength and structure of his frame."

The Creator cannot be intimidated at the most formidable of his own works: man may, and should, tremble; God cannot.

Verse 13. Who can discover the face of his garment? Who can rip up the hide of this terrible monster? Who can take away his covering, in order to pierce his vitals?

Verse 15. His scales are his pride] They are impenetrable, as we have already seen.

Verse 16. One is so near to another] It has already been stated, that a musket ball, fired at him in any direction, cannot make a passage through his scales.

Verse 18. By his neesings a light doth shine] It is very likely that this may be taken literally. When he spouts up the water out of his nostrils, the drops form a sort of iris, or rainbow. We have seen this effect produced when, in certain situations and state of the atmosphere, water was thrown up forcibly, so as to be broken into small drops, which has occasioned an appearance like the rainbow.

The eyelids of the morning.] It is said that, under the water, the eyes of the crocodile are exceedingly dull; but, when he lifts his head above water, they sparkle with the greatest vivacity. Hence the Egyptians, in their hieroglyphics, made the eyes of the crocodile the emblem of the morning. Ανατολήν λεγοντες δυο οφθαλμους κροκοδειλου ζωογραφουσι. HORAPP. Egypt. Ieroglyph. lib. i. c. 65. This is a most remarkable circumstance, casts light on ancient history, and shows the rigid correctness of the picture drawn above.

Verse 19. Out of his mouth go burning lamps] Dr. Young, in his paraphrase, has a sensible note on this passage: This is nearer the truth than at first view may be imagined. The crocodile, according to naturalists, lying long under water, and being there forced to hold its breath, when it emerges, the breath long repressed is hot, and bursts out so violently, that it resembles fire and smoke. The horse does not repress his breath by any means so long, neither is he so fierce and animated; yet the most correct of poets ventures to use the same metaphor concerning him, voluit sub naribus ignem. By this I would caution against a false opinion of the boldness of Eastern metaphors, from passages ill understood.

Verse 22. In his neck remaineth strength] Literally, "strength has its dwelling in his Verse 23. The flakes of his flesh] His muscles are strongly and firmly compacted.

Verse 24. Hard as a piece of the nether millstone.] Which is required to be harder than that which runs above.

Verse 25. By reason of breakings they purify themselves.] No version, either ancient or modern, appears to have understood this verse: nor is its true sense known. The Septuagint has, "When he turns himself he terrifies all the quadrupeds on the earth." The original is short and obscure: משרים ויחטאו mis-hebarim yithchattau. Mr. Goode takes the plural termination im, from the first word; of which he makes the noun yam, the sea; and thus translates it, They are confounded at the tumult of the sea. In this I can find no more light than in our own. Mr. Heath has, For very terror they fall to the ground. The translations of it are as unsatisfactory as they are various. I shall give both the verses from Coverdale:

His hart is as harde as a stone; and as fast as the stythpe (anvil) that the hammer man smyteth upon: when he goeth the mightiest off all are as afraid, and the waibes hebp. The dull swell in the waters proclaims his advance; and when this is perceived the stout-hearted tremble.

by any kind of weapon, and that he cannot be resisted by any human strength.

A young crocodile seen by M. Maillet, twelve feet long, and which had not eaten a morsel for thirty five days, its mouth having been tied all that time, was nevertheless so strong, that with a blow of its tail it overturned a bale of coffee, and five or six men with the utmost imaginable ease! What power then must lodge in one twenty feet long, well fed, and in health.

Verse 30. Sharp stones are under him] So hard and impenetrable are his scales that splinters of flint are the same to him as the softest reeds.

Verse 31. He maketh the deep to boil like a pot] This is occasioned by strongly agitating the waters at or near the bottom; and the froth which arises to the top, from this agitation, may have the appearance of ointment. But several travellers say that the crocodile has a very strong scent of musk, and that he even imparts this smell to the water through which he passes: and, therefore, the text may be taken literally. This property of the crocodile has been noticed by several writers.

Verse 32. He maketh a path to shine after him] In certain states of the weather, a rapid motion through the water disengages many sparks of phosphoric fire. I have seen this at sea; once particularly, in a fine clear night, with a good breeze, in a fast sailing vessel, I leaned over the stern and watched this phenomenon for hours. The wake of the vessel was like a stream of fire: millions of particles of fire were disengaged by the ship's swift motion through the water, nearly in the same way as by the electric cushion and cylinder: and all continued to be absorbed at a short distance from the vessel. Whether this phenomena takes place in fresh water, or in the Nile, I have had no proper opportunity of observing.

that does not fear and fly him. Hence the Chaldee renders it all the offspring of fishes.

Calmet supposes that by the children of pride the Egyptians are meant; that the crocodile is called their king, because he was one of their principal divinities. That the kings of Egypt were called Pharaoh, which signifies a crocodile. That the Egyptians were proverbial for their pride, as may be seen in Ezek. xxxii. 12. And it is very natural to say that Job, wishing to point out a cruel animal, adored by the Egyptians, and considered by them as their chief divinity, should describe him under the name of king of all the children of pride.

Houbigant considers the leviathan למלך the coupled dragon, to be emblematical of Satan;—“He lifts his proud look to God, and aspires to the high heavens; and is king over all the sons of pride.” He is, in effect, the governor of every proud, haughty, impious man. What a king! What laws! What subjects!

Others think that by the sons of pride is meant MEN; and that it is with the design to abate their pride, and confound them in the high notions they have of their own importance, that God produces and describes an animal of whom they are all afraid, and whom none of them can conquer.

After all, what is leviathan? I have strong doubts whether either whale or crocodile be meant. I think even the crocodile overrated by this description. He is too great, too powerful, too important in this description. No beast, terrestrial or aquatic, deserves the high character here given; though that character only considers him as unconquerably strong, ferociously cruel, and wonderfully made. Perhaps leviathan was some extinct mammoth of the waters, as behemoth was of the land. However, I have followed the general opinion by treating him as the crocodile throughout these notes: but could not finish without stating my doubts on this subject: though I have nothing better to offer in the place of the animal in behalf of which almost all learned men and critics argue, and concerning which they generally agree. As to its being an emblem either of Pharaoh, or the devil, I can say little more than, I doubt. The description is extremely dignified; and, were we sure of the animal, I have no doubt we should find it in every instance correct. But after all that has been said, we have yet to learn what leviathan is!

CHAPTER XLII.

Job humbles himself before God, 1—6. God accepts him; censures his three friends; and commands Job to offer sacrifices for them, that he might pardon and accept them, as they had not spoken what was right concerning their Maker, 7—9. The Lord turns Job's captivity; and his friends visit him, and bring him presents, 10, 11. Job's affluence becomes double to what it was before, 12. His family is also increased, 13—15. Having lived one hundred and forty years after his calamities, he dies, 16, 17.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XLII.

Verse 2. I know that thou canst do every thing] Thy power is unlimited; thy wisdom is infinite.

Verse 3. Who is he that hideth counsel] These are the words of Job; and they are a repetition of what Jehovah said, chap. xxxviii. 2. Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge? Job now having heard the Almighty's speech, and heard and received his reproof, echoes back his words, "Who is he that hideth counsel without knowledge?" Alas I am the man: I have uttered what I understood not; things too wonderful for me, that I knew not.

God had said, chap. xxxviii. 3. "Gird up now thy loins like a man; I will demand of thee, and answer thou me." In allusion to this, Job exclaims to his Maker, ver. 4. Hear, I beseech thee, and I will speak; I will ask of thee, and declare thou unto me. I acknowledge my ignorance; I confess my foolishness and presumption; I am ashamed of my conduct; I lament my imperfections; I implore thy mercy; and beg thee to show me thy will, that I may ever think, speak, and do, what is pleasing in thy sight.

Things too wonderful] I have spoken of thy judgments, which I did not comprehend.

Verse 5. I have heard of thee] I have now such a discovery of thee as I have never had before. I have only heard of thee by tradition, or from imperfect information; now, the eye of my mind clearly perceives thee: and, in seeing thee I see myself; for the light that discovers thy glory and excellence, discovers my meanness and vileness.

Verse 6. I abhor myself] Compared with thine, my strength is weakness, my wisdom folly, and my righteousness impurity.

"I loathe myself when thee I see;
And into nothing fall."

Repent] I am deeply distressed on account of the imaginations of my heart, the words of my tongue, and the acts of my life. I roll myself in the dust, and sprinkle ashes upon my head. Job is now sufficiently humbled at the feet of Jehovah; and, having earnestly and piously prayed for instruction, the Lord, in a finishing speech, which appears to be contained in the fourteen first verses of chap. xl. perfects his teaching on the subject of the late controversy, which is concluded with, When thou canst act like the Almighty (which is, in effect, what the questions and commands amount to in the preceding verses of that chapter,) Then will I also confess unto thee, that thy own right hand can save thee. In the fifth verse of the speak; ^eI will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me.

5 I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth thee:

6 Wherefore I ^fabhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes.

7 ¶ And it was so, that after the LORD had spoken these words unto Job, the LORD said to Eliphaz the Temanite,

^c Ch. 38. 2.—^d Psal. 40. 5. & 131. 1. & 139. 6.—^e Ch. 38. 3. & 40. 7.—^f Ezra 9. 6. Ch. 40. 4.

fortieth chapter, Job says, Once have I spoken. This must refer to the declaration above, in the beginning of this chapter (xlii.) and he goes on to state, chap. xl. 5. Yea, twice; but I will proceed no farther. This second time is that in which he uses these words: after which he spoke no more; and the Lord concluded with the remaining part of these fourteen verses, viz. from ver. 7. to 14. inclusive. Then the thread of the story in the form of a narration is resumed in this chapter (lxii.) at ver. 7.

Verse 7. After the LORD had spoken these words] Those recorded at chap. xl. 7—14. He said to Eliphaz, who was the eldest of the three friends, and chief speaker: Ye have not spoken of me—right. Mr. Peters observes, "It will be difficult to find any thing in the speeches of Eliphaz and his companions which should make the difference here supposed, if we set aside the doctrine of a future state; for, in this view, the others would speak more worthily of God than Job, by endeavouring to vindicate his providence in the exact distribution of good and evil in this life; whereas Job's assertion chap. ix. 22, "This is one thing, therefore I said it, He destroyeth the perfect and the wicked," which is the argument on which he all along insists, would, upon this supposition, be directly charging God that he made no distinction between the good and the bad. But now, take the other life into the account, and the thing will appear in quite a contrary light; and we shall easily see the reason why God approves of the sentiments of Job, and condemns those of his friends. For supposing the friends of Job to argue that the righteous are never afflicted without remedy here, nor the wicked prosperous on the whole, in this life; (which is a wrong representation of God's providence,) and Job to argue on the other hand, that the righteous are sometimes afflicted here, and that without remedy, but shall be rewarded in a life to come; and that the wicked prosper here, but shall be punished hereafter, which is the true representation of the divine proceedings; and here is a very apparent difference in the drift of the one's discourse, and of the others'. For Job, in this view, speaks worthily of God; and the rest unworthily. The best moral argument that mankind have ever had to believe in a life to come, is that which Job insists on; that good and evil are, for the most part, dealt out here, promiscuously. On the contrary, the topic urged by his friends, and which they push a great deal too far, that God rewards and punishes in this world, tends, in its consequence, like that other opinion which was held by the Stoics in after times, that virtue is its own

My wrath is kindled against thee, and against thy two friends; for ye have not spoken of me the thing that is right, as my servant Job hath.

8 Therefore take unto you now ^g seven bullocks and seven rams, and ^h go to my servant Job, and offer up for yourselves a burnt-offering; and my servant Job shall ⁱ pray for you: for ^k him will I accept: lest I deal with you after your folly, in that ye have not spoken of me the thing which is right, like my servant Job.

9 ¶ So Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite went, and did according as the LORD commanded them: the reward, to sap the very foundation of that proof we have from reason, of another life. No wonder, therefore, that the sentiments of the one are approved, and those of the other condemned.

Verse 8. Take seven bullocks and seven rams] From this it appears that Job was considered a priest, not only in his own family, but also to others. For his children, he offered burnt-offerings, chap. i. 5. and now he is to make the same kind of offerings, accompanied with intercession, in behalf of his three friends: This is a full proof of the innocence and integrity of Job; a more decided one could not be given, that the accusations of his friends, and their bitter speeches, were as untrue as they were malevolent. God thus clears his character, and confounds their devices.

Verse 10. The Lord turned the captivity of Job] The Vulgate has: Dominus quoque conversus est ad penitentiam Job; "And the LORD turned Job to repentance." The Chaldee: "The WORD of the LORD (כִּימְרָא מֵימְרָא דַּיָּאִי, meymra dayai), turned the captivity of Job." There is a remark which these words suggest, which has been rarely, if at all, noticed. It is said that the Lord turned the captivity of Job when he prayed for his friends. He had suffered much through the unkindness of these friends: they had criticised his conduct without feeling or mercy; and he had just cause to be irritated against them; and that he had such feeling toward them, several parts of his discourses sufficiently prove. God was now about to show Job his mercy; but mercy can be shown only to the merciful. Job must forgive his unfeeling friends, if he would be forgiven by the Lord: he directs him, therefore, to pray for them, ver. 8. He who can pray for another, cannot entertain enmity against him. Job did so; and, when he prayed for his friends, God turned the captivity of Job. Forgive, and ye shall be forgiven.

Some suppose that Job, being miraculously restored, armed his servants and remaining friends, and fell upon those who had spoiled him; and not only recovered his own property, but also spoiled the spoilers; and thus his sub-

LORD also accepted ¹ Job.

10 ^m And the LORD turned the captivity of Job, when he prayed for his friends: also the LORD ⁿ gave Job ^o twice as much as he had before.

11 Then came there unto him ^p all his brethren, and all his sisters, and all they that had been of his acquaintance before, and did eat bread with him in his house: and they bemoaned him, and comforted him over all the evil that the LORD had brought upon him: every man also gave him a piece of money, and every one an ear-ring of gold.

12 So the LORD blessed ^r the latter end of Job more than his beginning:

^m Psal. 14. 7. & 126. 1.—ⁿ Heb. added all that had been to Job unto the double.—^o Isaiah 40. 2.—^p See Ch. 19. 13. ^r Ch. 6. 7. James 5. 11.

stance became double of what it was before. Of this I do not see any intimation in the Sacred Text.

Verse 11. Then came there unto him all his brethren] "Job being restored to his former health and fortunes, the author," says Mr. Heath, "presents us with a striking view of human friendship. His brethren who, in the time of his affliction, kept at a distance from him; his kinsfolk who ceased to know him; his familiar friends, who had forgotten him; and his acquaintance, who had made themselves perfect strangers to him; those to whom he had showed kindness, and who yet ungratefully neglected him—on the return to his prosperity, now come and condole with him, desirous of renewing former familiarity; and, according to the custom of the Eastern countries, where there is no approaching a great man without a present, each brings him a kesitah, each a jewel of gold." See ver. 12.

A piece of money] כֶּסֶתָה kesitah, signifies a lamb; and it is supposed that this piece of money had a lamb stamped on it, as that quantity of gold was generally the current value for a lamb. See my note on Gen. xxxiv. 19, where the subject is largely considered. The Vulgate, Chaldee, Septuagint, Arabic, and Syriac, have one lamb, or sheep: so it appears that they did not understand the kesitah, as implying a piece of money of any kind; but a sheep or a lamb.

Ear-ring of gold.] Literally a nose jewel. The Septuagint translate, τετραδραχμον χρυσου, a tetradrachm of gold, or golden daric; but by adding και ασσημους, unstamped, they intimate that it was four drachms of uncoined gold.

Verse 12. The LORD blessed the latter end of Job] Was it not in consequence of his friends' bringing him a lamb, sheep, or other kind of cattle, and the quantity of gold mentioned, that his stock of sheep was increased so speedily to 14,000, his camels to 6000, his oxen to 2000, and his she-asses to 1000?

Mr. Heath takes the story of the conduct of Job's friends by the worst handle, see ver. 11. Is it not likely that they themselves were the cause of his sudden accumulation of property?

for he had ^sfourteen thousand sheep, and six thousand camels, and a thousand yoke of oxen, and a thousand she-

13 ¶ ^tHe had also seven sons and three daughters.

and that they did not visit him, nor seek his familiarity, because he was now prosperous; but because they saw that God had turned his captivity, and miraculously healed him? This gave them full proof of his innocence; and they no longer considered him an anathema, or devoted person, whom they should avoid and detest; but one who had been suffering under a strange dispensation of divine providence, and who was now no longer a suspicious character, but a favourite of heaven, to whom they should show every possible kindness. They, therefore, joined hands with God to make the poor man live; and their presents were the cause, under God, of his restoration to affluence. This takes the subject by the other handle: and I think, as far as the text is concerned, by the right one.

He had fourteen thousand sheep] The reader, by referring to chap. i. 3. will perceive that the whole of Job's property was exactly doubled.

Verse 13. Seven sons and three daughters.] This was the same number as before: and so the Vulgate, Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic read: but the Chaldee doubles the sons, and he had fourteen sons, and three daughters.

Verse 14. The name of the first, Jemima] יְמִימָה yemima, days upon days.

Kezia] קִזְיָה Kelsiah, cassia, a well known aromatic plant. And,

Keren-happuch.] קֶרֶן הַחֲפֻּץ keren happuch; the inverted or flowing horn, cornucopia, the horn of plenty. The Chaldee will not permit these names to pass without a comment, to show the reasons of their impositions:—He called the first Jemimah, because she was as fair as the day; the second Ketsiah, because she was as precious as cassia; the third Keren-happuch, because her face was as splendid as the emerald. Cardamarden's Bible, 1566, has the Hebrew names.

The Vulgate has, "He called the name of one Day, of the second Cassia, and of the third The Horn of Antimony."

The versions, in general, preserve these names, only the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic, translate Jemimah, DAY; and the former for Keren-happuch has. Ἀμάλθαια κερας, the horn of Amalthea. This refers to an ancient fable. Amalthea was the nurse of Jupiter, and fed him with goat's milk when he was young. The goat having by accident her horn struck off, Jupiter translated the animal to the heavens, and gave her a place among the constellations, which she still holds; and made the horn the emblem of plenty; hence it is always pictured or described as filled with fruits, flowers, and the necessities and luxuries of life. It is very strange how this fable got into the Septuagint.

15 And in all the land were no women found so fair as the daughters of Job: and their father gave them inheritance among their brethren.

16 ¶ After this ^ulived Job a hundred and forty years, and saw his sons, and his sons' sons, even four generations.

17 So Job died, being old and ^vfull of days.

^u Ch. 5. 28. Prov. 3. 16.—^v Gen. 25. 8.

Coverdale is singular:—"The first he called Dape, the seconde Boberte, the thirde, All plenteuousnes."

Verse 15. Gave them inheritance among their brethren.] This seems to refer to the history of the daughters of Zelophehad, given Num. xxvii. 1—8. who appear to have been the first who were allowed an inheritance among their brethren.

Verse 16. After this lived Job a hundred and forty years] How long he had lived before his afflictions, we cannot tell. If we could rely on the Septuagint, all would be plain, who add here, τα δε παρ' α την εχθρον, διακουσα τισσαρ' αουτα; And all the years that Job lived were two hundred and forty. This makes him one hundred years of age when his trial commenced. Coverdale has, After this lived Job forty peates, omitting the hundred! So also in Beck's Bible, 1549. From the age, as marked down in the Hebrew text, we can infer nothing relative to the time when Job lived. See the subscription at the end of the Arabic.

Verse 17. Job died, being old and full of days.] He had seen life in all its varieties: he had risen higher than all the men of the East, and sunk lower in affliction, poverty, and distress, than any other human being that had existed before, or has lived since. He died, when he was satisfied with life: this the word שב' seba implies. He knew the worst and the best of human life: and in himself the whole history of providence was exemplified and illustrated; and many of its mysteries unfolded.

We have now seen the end of the life of Job, and the end or design which God had in view by his afflictions and trials; in which he has shown us that he is very pitiful, and of tender mercy, James v. 11. and to discern this end of the Lord should be the object of every person who reads or studies it. Laus in excelsis Deo!

Both in the Arabic and Septuagint, there is a considerable and important addition at the end of the seventeenth verse, which extends to many lines: of this, with its variations, I have given a translation in page 715 of the preface.

At the end of the Syriac version we have the following subscription:

"The book of the righteous and renowned Job is finished, and contains 2553 verses."

At the end of the Arabic is the following:

"It is completed by the assistance of the Most High God. The author of this copy would record that this book has been translated into Arabic from the Syrian language."—"Glory be to God, the giver of understanding!"—"The Book of Job is completed: and his age was two hundred and forty years."—"Praise be to God for ever!"

So closely does the Arabic translator copy the Syriac, that in the Polyglotts one Latin version serves for both, with the exception of a few marginal readings at the bottom of the column, to show where the Syriac varies.

Masoretic Notes.

Number of verses, one thousand and seventy; Middle verse chap. xxii. 16; Sections eight.

At the close of a book I have usually endeavoured to give some account of the author, or of him who was its chief subject. But the Book of Job is so unique in its subject and circumstances, that it is almost impossible to say any thing satisfactorily upon it, except in the way of notes on the text. There has been so much controversy on the person and era of Job, that he has almost been reduced to an ideal being; and the book itself considered rather as a splendid poem on an ethic subject, than a real history of the man whose name it bears.

The author, as we have already seen in the preface, is not known. It has been attributed to Job himself; to Elihu, one of his friends; to Moses; to some ancient Hebrew, whose name is unknown; to Solomon; to Isaiah, the prophet; and to Ezra, the scribe.

The time is involved in equal darkness: before Moses, in the time of the Exodus, or a little after; in the days of Solomon; during the Babylonish captivity; or even later; have all been mentioned as probable eras.

How it was originally written, and in what language, have also been questions on which great and learned men have divided. Some think it was originally written in prose, and afterward reduced to poetry: the substance of the different speeches being retained, but much added by way of embellishment. Theodore, bishop of Mopsuestia, in Cilicia, a writer of the fourth century, distinguishes between Job and the author of the book that goes under his name; whom he accuses of a vain ostentation of profane sciences; of writing a fabulous and poetical history; of making Job speak things inconsistent with his religion and piety; and more proper to give offence than to edify. As Theodore had only seen the Book of Job in the Greek version, it must be owned that he had too much ground for his severe criticism; as there are, in that version, several allusions to the mythology of the Greeks, some of which are cursorily mentioned in the notes. Among these may be reckoned the names of constellations, in chapters ix. and xxxviii. and the naming Keren-happuc, one of Job's daughters, the horn of Amalthea, chap. xlii. 14.

We need not confound the time of Job and the time of the author of the book that goes under his name. Job may have been the same as Jobab, 1 Chron. i. 35—44. and the fifth in descent from Abraham; while the author or poet, who reduced the memoirs into verse, may have lived as late as the Babylonish captivity.

As to the language, though nervous and elevated, it is rather a compound of dialects, than a regular language. Though Hebrew be the basis; yet many of the words, and frequently the idiom, are pure Arabic; and a Chaldee phraseology is, in many places, apparent.

Whoever was the author, and in whatsoever time it may have been written, the Jewish and Christian church have ever received it as a canonical book, recommended by the inspiration of the Almighty. It is, in many respects, an obscure book, because it refers to all the wisdom of the East. If we understood all its allusions, I have little doubt that the best judges would not hesitate to declare it the Idumean Encyclopedia. It most obviously makes continual references to sciences the most exalted and useful, and to arts the most difficult and ornamental. Of these the notes have produced frequent proofs.

The author was well acquainted with all the wisdom and learning of the ancient world, and of his own times; and as a poet, he stands next to David and Isaiah; and as his subjects have been more varied than theirs, he knew well how to avail himself of this circumstance; and has pressed into his service all the influence and beauties of his art, to make the four persons whom he brings upon the stage, keep up each his proper character, and maintain the opinions which they respectively undertook to defend. "The history," says Calmet, "as to the substance and circumstances, is exactly true. The sentiments, reasons, and arguments, of the several persons, are very faithfully expressed; but it is very probable that the terms and turn of expressions, are the poet's, or the writer's, who-soever he may be."

The authority of this book has been as much acknowledged as its divine inspiration. The prophet Ezekiel is the first who quotes it, chap. xiv. 14—20. where he mentions Job with Noah and Daniel in such a way as makes his identity equal with theirs: and of their personal existence no one ever doubted.

The apostle James, chap. v. 11. mentions him also, and celebrates his patience; and refers so particularly to the termination and happy issue of his trials, as leaves us no room to doubt that he had seen his history, as here stated, in the book that bears his name. St. Paul seems also to quote him; compare Rom. ii. 11. For there is no respect of persons with God, with Job xxxiv. 19. God accepteth not the persons of princes, nor regardeth the rich more than the poor: for they are all the work of his hands.

1 Tim. vi. 7. For we brought nothing into this world; and it is certain we can carry nothing out. Job i. 21. Naked came I out of my mother's womb; and naked shall I return thither. Heb. xii. 5. My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him. Job v. 17. Happy is the man whom God correcteth; therefore despise not thou the chastening of the Almighty. A similar saying is found Prov. iii. 11. probably all coming from the same source. See the comparisons from the writings of Solomon, in the preface, p. viii.

Job is to be found in the ancient martyrologies, with the title of prophet, saint, and martyr: and the Greek church celebrates a festival in his honour, on the fifth of May; and the corrupt churches of Arabia, Egypt, Ethiopia, Russia, and Muscovy, follow it in their worship of Saint Job!

But no church has proceeded so far both to honour and disgrace this excellent man as the church of Rome. I shall quote the words of Dom. Calmet, one of the most learned and judicious divines that church could ever boast. "The Latins keep his festival on the tenth of May. This, next to the Maccabees, brothers and martyrs, is the first saint to whom the western church has decreed public and religious honours : and we know not of any saint among the patriarchs and prophets, to whom churches have been consecrated, or chapels dedicated in greater number, than to this holy man. We see abundance of them, particularly in Spain and Italy. And he is invoked principally against the leprosy, itch, foul disease, and other distempers which relate to these." See Baillet's Lives of the Saints.

Calmet goes on to say, that "there are several reputable commentators who maintain that Job was afflicted with this scandalous disease; among whom are, Vatablus, Cyprian Cistere, Bolducius, and Pineda, in their commentaries on Job; and Desganges in Epist. Medicin. Hist. De Lue Venered. The Latin church invokes Saint Job in diseases of this nature; and lazaretos and hospitals, wherein care is taken of persons who have this scandalous distemper upon them, are for the most part dedicated to him." See Calmet's Dissertation sur la maladie de Job, and his Dictionary under the article Jos.

The conduct of this church, relative to this holy man, forms one of the foulest calumnies ever inflicted on the character of either saint or sinner: and to make him the patron of every diseased prostitute and debauchee through the whole extent of the papal dominions and influence, is a conduct the most execrable; and little short of blasphemy against the holiness of God. As to their lazaretos, hospitals, and chapels, dedicated to this eminent man on these scandalous grounds; better raze them from their foundations, carry their materials to an unclean place, or transport them to the valley of the son of Hinnom, and consume them there; and then openly build others dedicated ad fornicantem Jovem, in conjunction with Baal Peor and Ashtaroth, the Priapus and Venus of their predecessors!

If those of that communion should think these reflections severe, let them know that the stroke is heavier than the groan; and let them put away from among them what is a dishonour to God, a disgrace to his saints, and their own inevitable reproach. Of the disease under which Job laboured enough has been said in the notes; On this head many writers have run into great extravagance. Bartholinus and Calmet state, that he was afflicted with twelve several diseases: the latter specifies them. Pineda enumerates thirty-one or thirty-two; and St. Chrysostom says he was afflicted with all the maladies of which the human body is capable; that he suffered them in their utmost extremities; and, in a word, that on his one body all the maladies of the world were accumulated! How true is the saying: "Over-doing is un doing." It is enough to say, that this great man was afflicted in his property, family, body, and soul; and perhaps none before, or since his time, to a greater degree in all these kinds.

On Job's character his own words are the best comment. Were we to believe his mistaken and uncharitable friends, he, by assertion and innuendo, was guilty of almost every species of crime: but every charge of this kind is rebutted by his own defence: and the character given to him by the God whom he worshipped, frees him from even the suspicion of guilt.

His patience, resignation, and submission to the divine will, are the most prominent parts of his character which are presented to our view. He bore the loss of every thing which a worldly man values, without one unsanctified feeling, or murmuring word. And it is in this respect that he is recommended to our notice, and to our imitation. His waitings relative to the mental agonies through which he passed, do not at all affect this part of his character. He bore the loss of his goods, the total ruin of his extensive and invaluable establishment, and the destruction of his hopes in the awful death of his children without uttering a reprehensible word, or indulging an irreligious feeling.

If, however, we carefully examine our translation of this poem, we shall find many things in Job's speeches that appear to be blemishes in his character. Even his own concessions appear to be heavy taxes on the high reputation he has had for patience, and humble submission to the divine will. In several cases these apparent blemishes are so contrasted with declarations of the highest integrity and innocence that they amount nearly to contradictions. Dr. Kennicott has examined this subject closely, and has thought deeply upon it; and strongly asserts that this apparent inconsistency arises from a misapprehension of Job's words in some cases, and mistranslation of them in others.

I shall take a large quotation on this subject, from his "Remarks on Select Passages of Scripture."

"The integrity, or righteousness, of Job's character being resolutely maintained by Job himself: and the whole poem turning on the multiplied miseries of a man eminently good; the grand difficulty through the poem seems to be—how these positions can consist with the several passages where Job is now made to own himself a very grievous sinner. This matter, as being of great moment, should be carefully examined.

"In chap. vii. 20, 21, he says:—I have sinned; What shall I do unto thee, O thou Preserver of men? Why dost thou not pardon my transgression, and take away mine iniquity?

"In chap. ix. 20. If I justify myself, mine own mouth shall condemn me: If I say, I am perfect, it shall also prove me perverse. I know that thou wilt not hold me innocent. 30. If I wash myself with snow-water, 31. Yet shalt thou plunge me in the ditch, and my own clothes shall abhor me. Lastly, in xlii. 6. I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes.

"Whereas he says in chap. x. 7. Thou knowest that I am not wicked. 13—15. I will maintain my own ways before him. 18. I know that I shall be justified. xxiii. 10. He knoweth the way that I take; when he hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold. 11. My foot hath held his steps: his way have I kept, and not declined. And lastly, in chap. xxvii. 5. Till I die I will not remove my integrity from me. 6. My righteousness I hold fast; I will not let it go: my heart shall not reproach me so long as I live.

"And now, if any one ascribing these contraries to Job's inconsistency with himself, should pronounce him right in owing himself a great sinner, and wrong, in pleading his own integrity, he will soon see it necessary to infer the contrary. Had Job really been, and owned himself to be a great sinner; his great sufferings had been then accounted for, agreeably to the maxims of his friends; and all difficulty and dispute had then been at an end. But as the whole poem turns on Job's uncommon goodness, and yet uncommon misery: so this goodness or innocence, this righteousness or integrity, is not only insisted upon by Job, but expressly admitted by God himself, both in the beginning of this book, and at the end of it. See chap. i. 8, 21; ii. 3; and xlii. 7, 8.

"That Job did not here plead guilty, or contradict the asseveration of his innocence, appears farther from the subsequent speeches. So Bildad, who spoke next, understood him, chap. viii. 6. So Zophar understood him, chap. xi. 34. So Eliphaz, to whom he spoke the former words, understood him likewise, chap. xv. 13, 14. And, lastly, Elihu, after hearing all the replies of Job to his friends, tells him, (chap. xxxiii. 8, 9.) Surely thou hast spoken in mine hearing, and I have heard the voice of thy words; saying, I am clean, without transgression; I am innocent, neither is there iniquity in me.

"If, therefore, this inconsistency in Job's declaration concerning himself cannot have obtained in this book at first; it must arise from some misrepresentation of the true sense. And as it relates to Job's confession of guilt, expressed in the three chapters, viii. ix. and xlii. on these passages I shall make a few remarks, in hopes of removing one of the greatest general difficulties which now attend this poem.

"As to the first instance;—Job appears, at least from our English version of chap. vii. 20. to be confessing his sins to God, whereas he is really speaking there in reply to Eliphaz; and 'tis obvious that the same words, applied thus differently, must carry very different ideas. Who does not see the humility and sorrow with which Job would say, I have sinned against thee, O God? and yet see the resentment and force with which he would say to Eliphaz, I have sinned, you say,—but granting this, What is it to you? to (or against) thee, O Eliphaz, what crime have I committed! That Job, in other places, repeats ironically, and confutes by quoting the saying of his friends, will appear hereafter.

"Eliphaz had been attempting to terrify him by the recital of a vision, and the long speech of a spirit, chap. iv. 12—21. Job in reply, (chap. vi. 15—27,) complains of the cruel treatment he had begun to experience from his nominal friends, and false brethren: and, (chap. vii. 14,) particularly complains that he (Eliphaz) had terrified him with dreams and visions. Job then goes on, (chap. vii. 17, &c.) What is a miserable man like myself that thou makest so much of him! (1 Sam. xxvi. 24.) That thou testest thy heart upon him; that with such officious affection thou visitest him every morning, and art trying him every moment! How long will it be till thou depart from me; and leave me at liberty to breathe, and even swallow down my spite! You say I must have been a sinner;—what then? I have not sinned against THEE! O thou spy upon mankind! Why hast thou set up me as a butt, or mark to shoot at? Why am I become a burden unto thee? Why not rather overlook my transgression, and pass by mine iniquity? I am now sinking to the dust! to-morrow, perhaps, I shall be sought in vain!

"As the first part of this difficulty arose from Job's first reply to Eliphaz; the second part of the same difficulty arises from Job's first reply to Bildad, in chap. ix. when Job is now made to say as follows: (verses 2 and 4.) How shouldest thou be just with God? Who hath hardened himself against him, and prospered? Ver. 20. If I justify myself, my own mouth shall condemn me; with many other self-accusatory observations, which have been already quoted from verses 28, 30, and 31. Now this chapter, which in our present version of it is very unintelligible, will perhaps recover its original meaning, and prove beautifully consistent upon these two principles,—That from verses 2 to 22, Job is really exposing his friends, by ironically quoting some of their absurd maxims: and that in verses 28 and 31 he is speaking not to God, but in reply to Bildad.

"Thus, in ver. 2. I know it is so of a truth: i. e. Verily I perceive that with you the matter stands thus; As, how shall man be just with God; and again, God is omnipotent: which is granted, and enlarged upon.

"Verses 15 and 16 strongly confirm the idea of Job's irony on the maxims of his friends, thus:—Whom (God,) I am not to answer, you say, even though I were righteous; but I am to make supplication to my Judge. Nay; If I have called to God, and he hath really answered me, I am not to believe that he hath heard my voice; Because, &c. So again as to verses, 20, 21, 22; If I justify myself, then you say, My own mouth proves me wicked! If I say I am perfect; then it proves me perverse: And even supposing that I am perfect and upright; yet am I not to know it. In short, my soul loatheth my very life; i. e. I am almost tired to death with such nonsense.

"Whereas the one sole, true conclusion, is this, which, therefore, I resolutely maintain: 'God destroyeth the perfect and the wicked.' And as to verses 28 and 31. the whole embarrassment attending them is removed, when we consider them as directed to Bildad; who, by the vehemence of his speech, hath shown that he would continue to insist upon Job's guilt. If I wash myself in snow-water, and make my hands ever so clean; yet wilt thou (Bildad) plunge me in the ditch, &c.

"Let us proceed, therefore, to the third and last part of this general difficulty, which arises at present from Job's confession in chap. xlii. 5. I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes. But repent of what? and why abhor himself? He was, at that instant, in the very situation he had been earnestly wishing, and often praying for: and was it possible for him not to seize that favourable moment? What he had so often wished was, that God would appear, and permit him to ask the reason for his uncommon sufferings. See chap. x. 2; xlii. 3. and 18 to 23: xix. 7; xxiii. 3—10; xxxi. 35—37, &c. And now, when God does appear, we see that Job, immediately attentive to this matter, resolves to put the question, and declares this resolution: Hear, I beseech thee, and I will speak; I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me. I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth thee. What now becomes of Job's question? Does he put any? Far, at present, are the next words from any such meaning, at least in our present version; for there the verse expresses nothing but sorrow for sin, which sets the poem at variance with itself. It also loses all sight of the question, for which the poem had been preparing, and which Job himself declares he would now put.

Add, that in the first of these two lines, the verb does not signify, I abhor myself; that the first hemistich is evidently too short; and that the second is not properly in dust, but by al, upon dust and ashes.

"It is therefore submitted to the learned, whether the restoration of two letters, which, at the same time that they lengthen the line, will remove the inconsistency, and give the very question here wanted, be not strongly and effectually recommended by the exigence of the place. As כֵּן עַל אֵל ken is properly therefore, and מֵהַ מַּח al mah (x. 2.) is wherefore, מֵהַ mah was easily dropped before כֵּן ken; it not being recollected that כֵּן ken here is connected not with the preposition before it, but with the verb after it; and signifies hoc modo. The true reading, therefore, and the true sense, I humbly conceive to stand thus:

Hear, I beseech thee, and I will speak;
I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me.
I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear;
But now mine eye seeth thee.

Wherefore (עַל מֵהַ) am I thus become loathsome;
And scorched up, upon dust and ashes?

"See chap. vii. 5. 'My flesh is clothed with worms, and clods of dust; my skin is broken (נִשְׁחָטָה) and become loathsome.' See also chap. xxx. 30. 'My skin is black upon me, and my bones are burnt with heat;' and ii. 8. x. 2. xvi. 15."

So far Dr. Kennicott in vindication of Job; and the reader will do justice to his learning and ingenuity. Allowing his general positions to be true, he has, in my opinion, pushed his consequences too far. Job certainly was not a grievous sinner; but a most upright man. This point is sufficiently proved: but that he accuses himself of nothing wrong, of no inward evil, is certainly not correct. He thought too highly of himself; he presumed too much on what was without: but, when God shone upon his heart, he saw that he was vile, and therefore might most properly loathe himself. There are multitudes who are decent and correct in their outward behaviour, whose hearts may be deceitful and desperately wicked. Even the Pharisees made clean the outside of the cup and platter. Job was a very righteous and upright man; but at the time in question he was not cleansed from all inward sin. This removes all contradiction from what he asserts, and from what he concedes. With this abatement, Dr. Kennicott's criticism may fairly stand. When a man sees himself in the sight of God, he sees what, by his own discernment, wisdom, and reason, he had never seen before. His mind might have been previously deeply imbued with the principles of justice, righteousness, and truth; his whole conduct regulated by them, and he be conscious to himself that he had not wickedly departed from the laws imposed on him by these principles. But when the light that maketh manifest, shines through the inmost recesses of the heart, and vibrates through the soul, then spiritual wickedness becomes evident, and the deceitfulness of the heart is discovered. That light refers every thing to the divine standard, the holiness of God; and the man's own righteousness in this comparison is found to be imperfection itself, and little short of impurity. Job appears to have been in this state; he thought himself rich, and increased in goods, and to have need of nothing: but when God shone in upon his heart, he found himself to be wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked: and he was now as ready to confess his great vileness, as he was before to assert and vindicate the unimpeachable righteousness of his conduct. Here was no contradiction. His friends attacked him on the ground of his being a bad and wicked man! This charge he repels with indignation; and dared them to the proof. They had nothing to allege but their system, and their suspitions: he who suffers, must have sinned. Job being conscious that this was false as applied to him; knowing his own innocence, boldly requires on their ground to know Why God contended with him? God answers for himself; humbles the self-confident, yet upright man; shines into his heart, and then he sees that he is vile. When a beam of the solar light is admitted into an apartment, we see ten thousand atoms or motes dancing in that beam. These are no particles of light, nor did the light bring them there; they were there before, but there was not light sufficient to make them manifest. Just so, when the light of God visits the soul of a sincere man, who has been labouring in all his outward conduct to stand approved of God; he is astonished at his inward impurity, loathes himself, and is ready to think that many devils have suddenly entered into him. No: all the evils thou seest were there before, but thou hadst not light sufficient to make them manifest. Shall it be said after this, that the conduct of divine providence cannot be vindicated in suffering an upright man to become a butt for the malice of Satan for so long a time, and for no purpose? The greatest, the most important purposes were accomplished by this trial. Job became a much better man than he ever was before: the dispensations of God's providence were illustrated and justified; Satan's devices unmasked; patience crowned and rewarded; and the church of God greatly enriched, by having bequeathed to it the vast treasure of divine truth which is found in the BOOK OF JOB.
